in Heaven to justify us in being dishonest with our brethren. We must meet our obligations to our brethren, to our families, to the world. We must deal honestly and conscientiously in all these things. If we do not, the spirit of the Lord will withdraw from us, and when the spirit of the Lord withdraws from us we complain, we find fault, we are not happy, and we are not satisfied. We cannot afford to sacrifice the presence of the spirit of the Lord, because we cannot be Latter-day Saints unless we enjoy it and are directed by it constantly. It seems to be a difficult thing to do to meet our temporal obligations to the Lord. Our hearts are naturally set upon the things of this world. We can see temporal blessings a little plainer than we can see the spiritualities of the kingdom, for they are here before us, and we enjoy them. We are inclined to gather the things of this world around us and to treasure them up, while the spiritual things, and eternal life with our families and friends hereafter, pertain to the future. They are a little a head of us, and if we do not have the spirit of the Lord strongly in our hearts, there is more or less a question of doubt and misgiving about them. All these things, however, vanish when we discharge the duties that devolve upon us as Latter-day Saints. And we expect to look after every man, through the Presidents, the Bishops, and the Apostles, and see to it that all who have been entrusted with the authority and power of God, shall come to the mark and do their duties faithfully and well, that they with their families may be saved. We want you to be saved; but if you do not want the salvation that is offered through the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, why make the profession that you do? There is no salvation in professions alone, or in promises and covenants, nor is there any salvation in the blessings that are put upon us under the hands of the servants of God, unless we do the will of God. I want to bear that testimony to the people, and ask that from this time forward we serve the Lord with all our hearts, so that when the Son of Man appears upon the earth, we will be numbered among the wise virgins of my text—which I have not read; you can hunt it for yourselves.

We feel encouraged in our labors, although we are all the time trying to stir the people up. Yet in our councils the Lord has manifested to us that the Latter-day Saints are improving, that they are gaining strength and power, increasing in numbers, spreading abroad and becoming more firmly established on the earth, and that prosperity and success are attending upon them. The best days that we have ever had are the days in which we live now. The kingdom is the Lord's and He will take care of it. It is our business, my brethren and sisters, to see that we take care of ourselves. The Lord will take care of the kingdom, and no power on earth can prevail against it. As suggested this morning, if it was secure when it was organized seventy years ago, with only six members, what shall we say of it when it numbers over a quarter of a million? We certainly feel encouraged. We feel as though we were on the Lord's side, and that the Lord is on our side. We know He is, for He talks to us and directs us in all things pertaining to this kingdom. He sustains His servant the Prophet, and magnifies him in the eyes of the people. The will of God is known, and the keys and authority of God are always present. The Lord has established His work, and He will preserve it. God bless you, my brethren and sisters, and may His spirit fill your hearts that we may rejoice exceedingly in this conference, is my prayer through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE DEAD.

Elder Samuel A. Walton, who left the Louisiana Conference in April, 1899, on account of sickness, died on the 10th of last February. His home was at Auburn, Uintah county, Wyo. He suffered from a severe attack of pneumonia, being confined to his bed but three days, when the spirit took its flight. As a missionary he was humble and faithful; as a son and brother he was a true and lovable man. He will be missed by a host of friends in the South and at home. May God comfort his loved ones, who know the Heavenly Father does all things well.

On the 12th day of May, 1900, Sister Cordelia Marshall, whose home was at Gladesborough, Carroll vounty, Va., was called from this life to the Great Beyond. She was baptized in August, 1898, and was a faithful Latter-day Saint, and remained so to the end. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss. Elders J. H. Lines and W. F. Ostler were present to take charge of the funeral services.

Sister Elizabeth Cowart, of Hillsdale, Pearl River county, Miss., passed away from this earth May 6th. Sister Cowart was a faithful member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Her life and character since her baptism has been one of emulation. Many a meal has she prepared for the Elders, who have always found the latch string of her door on the outside. She leaves a good and God-fearing husband and nine children, who will miss her from the family circle. All belong to the church, and will allow no Satanic influence to hold them from living the gospel. May the Lord bless and comfort the grief-stricken family. Elder J. W. Vance.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT GEO. Q. CANNON.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

PRESIDENT GEO. Q. CANNON.

President Cannon was born in Liverpool, Jan. 11, 1827. His parents were natives of the Isle of Man. Their progenitors were traceable as natives of the island for several previous centuries. While not classed with the wealthy from a worldly point, they were endowed with even greater riches—honesty, integrity and devotion to principle, which secured to them the respect and confidence of the people who knew them. The possession of these excellent traits, coupled with humility, are important factors conducing to man's obedience to the Gospel. In later years, when Apostle John Taylor and his associates bore the Gospel message to England, the parents of Geo. Q. Cannon were readily found among those who knew the "voice of the Good Shepherd," and straightway hearkened thereunto. Early in life Brother Geo. Q. was a devoted reader of the Bible. developing a strong desire to learn more than he could understatnd by a literal reading of the Scriptures. He knew enough, however, through reading the Bible and making comparison between its teaching and that of modern sectarian churches, that the latter were destitute even of the true "form of godliness;" much less did they enjoy the gifts and powers of the Holy Ghost. In his youth he yearned to witness the mighty deeds performed by the Savior and his Apostles.

With such a preparation of heart, Geo. Q. Cannon readily accepted the Gospel as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

In 1842 the family started for Nauvoo. On the way Brother Geo. Q.'s mother passed from this life, and was buried in the sea. Two years later his father died, leaving a family of orphan children. Leonora Cannon, aunt of Geo. Q., had moved to Canada and become the wife of Elder John Taylor, of whose family Brother Cannon became practically a member, after reaching Nauvoo.

Upon the arrival of the Cannon family there, Geo. Q. recognized in an instant in the midst of a large number of people the Prophet, Joseph Smith. Soon after this Brother Cannon worked for his uncle, Elder Taylor, in the printing establishment and there learned the printer's trade, with which he has had so much to do in later years. When the Saints were exiled from their beautiful city and homes in Illinois in 1846, Elder Cannon accompanied the main body to winter quarters. Here he remained until the next year, when he wended his way with the exiled Saints across the dreary plains to the Salt Lake valley.

He arrived there Oct. 3, 1847, and thus became literally one of Utah's early,(and history has proven), best and noblest pioneers. He and his uncle, John Taylor, who was proprietor of an old-fashioned saw mill—the first established in the valley, labored hard to upbuild the barren waste, which today blossoms as a rose.

Geo. Q. was physically, mentally and spiritually an industrious young man, which grand quality, essential to greatness, has characterized him to the present moment, and will remain to the end of time and throughout eternity. During the early settlement of Utah, food, as well as all other commodities, was very scarce. For weeks at a time, much of the provisions upon which many subsisted, consisted of thistle roots, weeds and the wild sago root. In all these trials Elder Cannon was a practical participant; for weeks at a time his appetite was never satisfied.

In 1849 he was called to go to California and from there he went on a mission to the Sandwich Islands. When the Hawaiian mission was inauguarted, it was not contemplated so much to reach the natives as to preach the Gospel to the white population. The Elders found the opportunities of preaching to the whites very limited, and most of them favored returning home. Here was emphasized a most prominent trait in the character of President Geo. Q. Cannon. He had been sent to declare the plan of salvation. The message is to all the world, without regard to race or nationality. The natives, like the whites, were in darkness, and President Cannon determined that he would not return home, but remain and establish the Gospel among the inhabitants of the islands. He informed his associates that he would stay if he had to remain alone and labor without baptizing a soul. Four Elders remained with him, and the result of their labors is well known. In three and one-half years they baptized nearly 4,000 souls. Brother Cannon also translated the Book of Mormon into the Hawaiian language. From that time a permanent and prosperous mission has existed upon the islands, and thousands of the natives have embraced the Gospel.

Subsequently a sugar plantation was procured and has been successfully managed by the Elders, who have performed missions upon these islands. Early in his missionary work among the natives, President Cannon, in answer to prayer and faithful desire to preach the plan of life to the natives, received by gift from God power to understand what the natives said in their conversation. This was the gift of interpretation, and soon after he was also able to speak the language, with great accuracy.

Elder Cannon returned to California from the Islands in 1854. For some time he assisted Apostle Parley P. Pratt in the preparation of Elder Pratt's very interesting Autobiography. Returning to his home in Salt Lake City, he became one of the Presidents of the 30th Quorum of Seventies, which position he filled with credit and ability. He was soon called on a second mission to the Islands, but before the time of starting was appointed to assist Elder Parley P. Pratt in the publication of a paper in California. Upon reaching California he was appointed to preside over the missions there and in Oregon, while Brother Pratt returned to Utah.

Brother Cannon edited the Western Standard, which contains some of his choicest productions in defense of the Latter-day work. He also printed in the Hawaiian language the Book of Mormon, which he previously translated. This work, with the personal supervision of missionary labors, called for the best mental and physical energies of President Cannon. These he devoted with cheerfulness and great efficiency, to the perfect satisfaction of the general authorities of the Church. In those days missionary work in California, through pulpit and press, was attended with great difficulties, and it is safe to say that no one was better qualified by humility, faith and energy for such a labor than was Elder Geo. Q. Cannon.

When Johnson's army came to Utah, President Cannon, in obedience to counsel, closed up the affairs of the mission and returned home, reaching Salt Lake City Jan. 19, 1858. He was appointed adjutant general in the army, organized to defend the people against invasion. He served with ability. After this he was appointed by President Young to take a printing apparatus, press and material and publish the Deseret News. This labor occupied his time from April to September, 1858. When at Payson, returning from Fillmore to Salt Lake City, he received a call to fill a mission to the eastern states. The call came suddenly and unexpectedly, but Geo. Q. Cannon was, and is a minute man. He made it a rule of his life to answer promptly to every call of duty, and in less than one hour he was prepared to start. The purpose of his mission was to enlighten the public mind regarding the true state of affairs in Utah. This was a delicate matter, as prejudice ran very high. The army being sent to Utah was entirely due to the scurrilous falsehood of federal officers, and others in Utah who thought to make capital by defaming an unpopular people. Brother Cannon labored with indefatigable zeal and efficiency. He was greatly aided in his labors by letters of introduction from Gen. Thos. L. Kane of Pennsylvania, who understood the situation in Utah, and had been an undeviating defender of the Latter-day Saints ever since their expulsion from Nauvoo. By the assistance of these letters President Cannon was enabled to meet and converse with members of congress, many leading editors and other public and influential men. He laid before them the true status of affairs in Utah, and disabused their minds of much prejudice. At the same time he had charge of the branches of the Church in the east, and acted as emigration agent for the Church. In all these labors he exhibited marked ability, good results followed and perfect satisfaction rendered to the Authorities of the Church.

During his absence he was chosen, Oct. 23, 1859, to be one of the Twelve Apostles, a vacancy having been occasioned by the death of Apostle Parley P. Pratt. He returned ten months later and was ordained to the Apostleship Aug. 26, 1860, being then 33 years of age.

Very soon after he was called on a mission to Great Britain, and reached Liverpool Dec. 21, 1860; subsequently the Church printing office was established in that city. Since that time, from the Church printing office in that city has issued tens of thousands of copies of leading Church works and pamphlets, explanatory, and in defense of the Gospel of Christ and the character of the Latter-day Saints.

Elder Cannon returned to America in May, 1862, and with the Hon. Wm. H. Hooper repaired to Washington, D. C. They had been elected senators from Utah, in the effort to secure admission for the territory into the sisterhood of states. After the adjournment of congress in July, 1862, Brother Cannon returned to England and presided over the European mission until 1864. Upon his return in the autumn of '64, an Indian war was in progress, and the journey over the plains was attended with perils. but through Divine Providence no disaster occurred. From the arrival of President Cannon in Utah in 1864, dating backward, more than fourteen years had been spent in misisonary labors far from his mountain home.

While returning, home and family was a source of joy to Elder Cannon, he had no disposition to lay aside his missionary work. The field at home was broad and needed attention. Thousands of youths were growing up in the valleys of Utah and to their salvation, more especially, did he turn his attention. In the winter of 1864-5 he established a Sunday school in the 14th ward of Salt Lake City. In 1866, he began the publication of the Juvenile Instructor. His experiences as a writer, his love for children in particular and mankind as well, aptly qualified him to issue such a paper, designed to inspire and promote faith in the hearts of Zion's youth. The magazine is now thirty-four years old, and it is safe to say that no publication in the shape of a magazine or paper has done so much good among the young people as has the Juvenile Instructor. It is especially adapted to the younger people, and may be read with great benefit by all the Saints. President Cannon, though loaded with many duties, has never failed in devoting time and attention to the Juvenile Instructor, for the growth and development of faith and purity in the hearts of the young people.

In 1867, President Cannon was made general superintendent of Sunday schools throughout the Church. In this position he has faithfully and efficiently served from that day to the present time. He is greatly interested in education, and was at one time chancellor of the Deseret University, and is now one of the Church Board of Education. He recently remarked in public that no labor in life had given him greater satisfaction than the teaching and training of the youth in the paths of righteousness, and in all matters of true education as a means of promoting faith. President Cannon issued a little work called "My First Mission," reciting the hand-dealings of the Lord with himself and associate missionaries upon the Sandwich Islands. This was the first of a series of such volumes which have been issued since that time.

In 1867 President Young appointed him to edit the Deseret News, which wsa then a weekly and semi-weekly. While in this position he instituted the Deseret Evening News. In 1877 himself, with Elder Brigham Young, Jr., again had charge of the Deseret News. President Cannon is the author of a standard work on the life of the Prophet Joseph Smith and many other smaller publications. If all he has written in books, papers, magazines, pamphlets, etc., were published in book form they would comprise many volumes of several hundreds pages each; from every one of which could be learned lessons of incalculable worth to the children of men. President Cannon is remarkably attached to the Book of Mormon. He wrote "The Life of Nephi," and in many of his writings can be discerned the plain simplicity, the humble faith and spiritual force of the Nephite Prophets. He is a living evidence of the truth stated by the Prophet Joseph Smith, that by reading the Book of Mormon we should get nearer to God than by reading any other book extant. In a business line, President Cannon has been connected with railways, banks, mercantile and other financial enterprises, looking to the promotion and development of resources in the inter-mountain country. He took part in founding Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution, and is at present the only surviving member of the original board of directors of that great institution. He has also been a director of the Union Pacific railroad, and has been prominent as a member and officer of the Trans-Mississippi congress. But recently, in company with Apostle John Henry Smith and others from Utah, he attended the session of that body held in Houston, Texas, and subsequently visited the City of Mexico, in the Mexican republic.

In 1871 he was again sent on a mission to the east, to assist in the correction of wrong impressions created in the public mind by wicked and designing men against the Latter-day Saints.

In August, 1872, President Cannon was elected to congress as delegate from Utah. In this position he served for ten years. Although not entitled to voice or vote in legislation, he had marked influence among leading men in that notable body. On account of intense prejudice existing, through false impressions, against Utah and her people, his experience in congress was frequently a most trying one. Notwithstanding this, he made many warm friends in the Capital, and accomplished much for Utah and her people. In 1882, when the Edmunds act came into operation, President Cannon was rendered ineligible to congress, the act barring him out because he believed and practiced plural marriage as a Divine institution. Before leaving congress, however, he had the opportunity of speaking in defense of the people of Utah. He discharged this sloemn duty with ability and courage to the perfect satisfaction of his friends in congress and the people of Utah. In August, 1877, President Young died. In his will he named Geo. Q. Cannon, Brigham Young, Jr., and Albert Carrington as executors. The administration of the estate was attended with considerable perplexity. Several dissatisfied heirs started a suit. Jacob S. Boreman, the judge, issued an order increasing the bonds of the administrators. As this act of the court was altogether unjust and uncalled for, the administrators preferred an indefinite term of imprisonment rather than submit to this travesty by increasing the bonds. After a three weeks' term in the penitentiary, Chief Justice Hunter, who had newly come into office, set aside the action of Judge Boreman and liberated the administrators. Following their liberation President Cannon and associates proceeded with their labors until the affairs of the estate were closed.

Subsequent to the decease of President Brigham Young, the Presidency of the Church was exercised by the Twelve Apostles. When the Presidency was again organized with President John Taylor at the head, he chose for his counselors, Apostles Geo. Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith. Since that time the Presidency has been organized twice, occasioned by the decease of Presidents John Taylor and Wilford Woodruff. In each instance Presidents Cannon and Smith have been chosen, and hold that position at the present writing. In this position, as in all previous ones, President Cannon has manifested that humility and meekness which ever yearns for the guiding hand of the Almighty. His choice gifts to counsel and assist in directing the affairs of the Church have more than ever been brought into activity in the Presidency of the Church. In 1884, when the fury of persecution was raging, particularly against plural marriage, it was thought proper for leading men subject to these assaults to go into exile. The spirit of persecution against the Saints was exceedingly bitter. The law, itself severe, was transcended by federal officers in their determination to fine and imprison those who were living in plural marriage. It appeared that the anti-Mormon element were determined to provoke violence and thus secure a pretense that migh result in scenes similar to those enacted in Missouri and Illinois. Much suffering was endured. Thousands of dollars of fines were imposed. Altogether about 800 men and a few women were imprisoned. At last the storm abated, the conservative long-suffering of the Saints was answered as a prayer by the Almighty, and conditions settled down to a moderate enforcement of the law. A double martyr, President Taylor, died in exile. In all these trials President Cannon was a leading sufferer. He was in exile, and suffered a four-months' term in the penitentiary, but all this tended to advance the interest of the cause and prove the Saints to be superior in morals, sobriety, patience and faith, to their persecutors. Their prison life, rather than a stain was a credit, indicating their fidelity to conviction of right. The experiences of President Cannon's life have been so varied through numerous hardships, from his youth up, as to be a heavy strain upon his physical and mental being. He is now past 73 years of age, and, all things considered, is remarkably well preserved. He is still in the enjoyment of health and in the full discharge of his many onerous duties and we trust he will be continued in this life for many years; a blessing, a benefactor to the Saints of God, as he has been from his early youth. His preservation is greatly due to observing the "word of wisdom" and personal cleanliness. An example of virtue, temperance, industry, courage, humility and faith to the people of God. President Cannon is gifted as a speaker and writer, yet his study to use simple language and make his meaning clear to all classes, is worthy the following of all young men, whose lot in life may be cast in a similar mould. Among the many noble traits of character possessed by this great man, there is none more conspicuous and which possibly has never been excelled by any man in this dispensation, and that is: profound respect for the Lord's Anointed. We think it can be truthfully said that no living being ever heard or could possibly infer by word or act from President Cannon the slightest disrespect or even depreciation as to the morality or ability of his file leader. The names of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff and Lorenzo Snow are to him sacred, as shown by his life association with these men of God. As a fitting conclusion of this brief article we subjoin a character sketch of President Cannon from the able pen of Elder John Nicholson:

My first meeting with George Q. Cannon was in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1862. On the invitation of several brethren of the local branch of the Church, I accompanied them in a friendly call upon him at the house at which he was stopping during a brief visit to the Scottish capital. He was at that time presiding over the European mission.

I was then a youth of 22 years, and afflicted with diffidence, amounting to embarrassment in the presence of strangers, and therefore on this occasion confined myself strictly to the exercise of observation, listening to the conversation and replying tersely to questions directed personally to myself.

I was at once struck with the strength of the personality of the distinguished visitor,—a handsome, vigorous man of 35 years. His figure of medium height, well rounded and erect; the shapely head crowned with a liberal growth of black hair; the cheeks and upper lip clean shaved; the chin adorned with a close hirsute growth. Up to that time his was one of the most striking faces I had seen: a forehead broad and high—the breadth being specially observable in the upper section; a somewhat large, aqueline nose, almost approaching the Israelitish in contour; a well-formed mouth, without rigidity and with an expression of amiability. The large, clear gray eyes impressed me most. In the course of conversation, in which he took the lead, the characteristic mobility of his countenance was exhibited.

My acquaintance with the subject of this personal sketch covers the period from 1862 to the present. At times it has been close—notably while he was at the head of the Deseret News establishment and editor of that journal, commencing in November, 1867, and continuing for several years. Necessarily I had opportunities of becoming familiar with many of his traits. One of these was his regard for detail and appearances. While presiding in Europe he insisted that the clerks employed in the office at Liverpool should write with neatness and legibility. All those who worked under him in that capacity became excellent penmen.

The importance he attaches to appearances is not only apparent in his own unvarying personal neatness, but in his requiring, under proper circumstances, the same condition on the part of others. Hence in the missionary field in Europe he directed that every Elder should be clad in a full suit of black, of clerical cut, and surmounted by a tall silk hat. Frequently when a group of missionaries arrived he would commission one of the office clerks to take the lot to a clothing establishment, where they were thus equipped. Occasionally, but rarely, some of the boys from the far West objected. One of these is now a Bishop in Idaho. While the latter labored abroad he insisted on dispensing with the use of suspenders, in wearing a suit with some semblance of antiquity and not of the regulation cut or color, and a somewhat unsymmetrical article for head-gear. Brother Cannon sometimes good-humoredly referred to this unconventional but really estimable individual.

President Cannon is a gifted speaker. In his earlier experience he was much more deliberate in utterance than later in life. In this he showed his usual fidelity to detail. If he happened to make the slightest error in grammar he would there and then correct himself by repeating a sentence. This was noticeable in the first discourse I heard him deliver. It was on the subject of the necessity of continuous revelation, which he explained with striking clearness. For many years he has ranked among the foremost public speakers of the nation. Added to his wide range of information and deep and sometimes tremendous earnestness, he has been aided by a clear, resonant voice. When warmed to his theme he has on occasions reached the highest flights of oratory, thrilling and captivating his auditors by the forcefulness of his thought and the persuasiveness of his address.

There never was a man within the range of my acquaintance who could so readily as he adapt his speech to convey important thoughts to the minds of little children. This is one of the rarest of gifts. It is natural to him, and he developed it to a high degree of excellence by cultivation. Hence his speech has a wide applicability, ranging from the undeveloped children to the most cultivated audiences of mature people. His addresses have been far from being confined to theological and moral subjects, but have embraced a wide variety of themes, including civil government and other matters associated with the general well-being of humanity.

He is an intense lover of little children, in whom he takes a deep interest. This trait has always been manifested in his visits to families. He never fails

UTAH WINS.

The intercollegiate debate between the University of Nevada and the University of Utah ended in a glorious victory for the latter. The world is beginning to note that much good can come out of Utah, and as for orators, why the woods are full of them in Zion.

WILL FLOAT THE FLAG.

Deseret News.

Gov Wells has notified all state institutions to throw old glory to the breeze on President Brigham Young's birthday, which occurs Friday, June 1st. While no word has been sent to business men, and those having charge of public buildings, it is believed that they, too, will fall in line and do honor to Utah's founder, first Governor and pioneer.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S BIRTHDAY.

Yesterday marked the ninety-ninth anniversary of the birth of Brigham Young, second President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. President Young was born in the daybreak of the nineteenth century, June 1st, 1801, in Whitingham, Windham county, Vermont. Much has been written of this noble man—the "Lion of the Lord," as he was often called. Through the many persecutions, trials and tribulations which he passed, we find him ever comforting and encouraging the Saints. At times when men's hearts and courage failed them, this Prophet of God marched bravely on, trusting in the mighty arm of his Creator. He led the children of God across the barren wilderness, and was indeed the "modern Moses."

One writer has truly said that "He could speak the language of the stars, discourse eloquently regarding the organization of worlds; and then in simple terms direct how to plow and plant, reap and sow."

At his funeral, President George Q. Cannon said "he had been the brain, the eye, the ear, the mouth and hand, for the entire people of the Church. * * * Nothing was too small for his mind; nothing was too large. His mind was of that character that it could grasp the greatest subjects, and yet it had the capacity to descend to the minutest details."

"His sermons were as practical and full of common sense, as his demeanor was calm and devoid of extravagance and affectation. He discussed upon the highest philosophy and upon doctrine the most profound, but in the same sermon taught his hearers how to beautify their homes, how to build cities, how to redeem the desert. The embodiment of his religion was to do good here upon this earth, and he put his doctrine into practice." "The Lord does not thank you for your alms," said he, "long prayers, sanctimonious speeches and long faces, if you refuse to extend the hand of benevolence and charity to your fellow-creatures, and lift them up, and encourage and strengthen the feeble."

The people, from whom he sprung, and with whom he had always mingled, sought his advice for its wisdom and moderation, and loved him for his hearty, genial, lofty soul, no less than for his conscientious course and deep convictions of right and justice. "He has had to settle difficulties with thousands, and where is the man, Mormon or anti-Mormon, who ever appealed to him for the decision of a case but was satisfied with the result?"

He had faults, because he was mortal, and doubtless these appeared grave to his enemies; but his virtues swallowed them up. Ranking among the immortal benefactors of his race, his defects need no apologies, as his character needs no chiseled monument to mark its greatness. In the whole mountain region of the West, we see the traces of his marvelous genius and his still more wonderful influence on the minds of his people, their organizations and institutions. He stamped his opinions on his day and age, and succeeding generations, gazing through the clarifying glasses of time, will know the truth even better than we, and link his name with the greatest and noblest characters on earth.

By the inspired pen of the gifted Eliza R. Snow, the following beautiful lines were written over thirty years ago:

"Servant of God, most honor'd—most beloy'd,
By Him apointed and of Him approv'd.
Prophet and Seer—You stand as Moses stood,
Between the people and the living God."

"All human wisdom and all human skill
Could never qualify you, thus, to fill
The place you occupy: nor could you bear
Thro' human aid, the weight of duties there."

BALLOTING FOR BISHOPS.

"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" These words were uttered by the sweet singer of Israel—David, the Psalmist—and the expression of this holy man of God appeals to us very forcibly at this particular time when the sects of the day are divided and sub-divided—not only opposing each other, but also divided among themselves. An apt example, illustrative of the disunion existing among preachers of the same professed faith, and one which comes right home to us, having transpired but a few days ago; is the Methodist General Conference recently held in Chicago. In balloting for Bishops it seems that there was a sectional division—the East and the West crossing religious swords, engaging in sectarian tilts, thus causing them to be at loggerheads. Were they united? Not if the reports of that Conference be true. There were long-drawn-out deadlocks, and it was not until sixteen ballots had been taken that they succeeded in electing a Bishop. One can very clearly understand the jangling and contention rife in that convention, when we read that "the venerable John Lanahan, of Baltimore, moved to indefinitely postpone further balloting and thus end this wrangling." Amid much confusion his motion was laid on the table by a vote of 315 to 300, and another ballot was ordered. Perhaps never before, since the organization of the Methodist Church, has there been manifest such dissension and contrariness as was exhibited in Chicago during their late Conference.

In the good old days of Paul and Peter, James and John, preachers of righteousness were made able ministers of the Word by the Spirit of God. It is recorded in the thirteenth chapter of Acts of the Apostles, that when the Lord desired His servants—Barnabas and Saul (Paul), to go forth and declare righteousness and repentance unto both Jew and Gentile, it was the Holy Ghost which said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them"—not the ballot box, but the Holy Ghost—quite a difference and a remarkable distinction. The Spirit and power of God will unite and join as one the hearts of the true followers of the lowly Son; while the evil influence will divide and confuse the children of men. If we are true believers in the written word of God—the Holy Bible—then we must admit that those who are disunited, and divided, are not living and acting in accordance with Holy Writ, for Paul says, speaking by way of commandment in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that we should all speak "the same thing, and be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment." Christ prayed to His Father and asked Him to make His followers one! He told them "to tarry in the city of Jerusalem" until they were endowed with power from on high; and furthermore He gave them to understand that this power—the gift of the Holy Ghost—should guide them into all truth. In guiding into "all truth" it would naturally enough lead them from all error, bind their hearts together, and make them see with an eye single to the glory of God. Paul says, "Let the same mind be in you as was in Christ Jesus." The mind in Christ Jesus was to do the will of His Father, to have His followers united as one; that peace and harmony may abound, and the sons of men agree. Consistency and unity thou hast neither place or lot in the confused ranks of modern Christianity.

"LEARN WISDOM IN THY YOUTH."

When that great and good Prophet—Alma—whose record we have written in the Book of Mormon, was giving his farewell instructions to his beloved son, Helaman, he uttered these very beautiful and expressive words: "Oh, remember, my son, and learn wisdom in thy youth; yea, learn in thy youth to keep the commandments of God; yea, and cry unto God for all thy support; yea, let all thy doings be unto the Lord, and whithersoever thou goest, let it be in the Lord; yea, let thy thoughts be directed unto the Lord; yea, let the affections of thy heart be placed upon the Lord forever." Could a loving father give unto his son better admonition or more choice counsel, than that given above? "Learn wisdom in thy youth." This is the secret of final success and eternal happiness—learn wisdom. It will aid you in the betterment of your condition temporally, and be beneficial to the salvation of your soul eternally. Says the wise man, Solomon, "Get wisdom, get understanding." Ah! wisdom, thou art a precious gem, possessed by the few, yet sought after by the many. Some have knowledge, using it merely as a stalking horse to vain glory for self; but few possess this rare and priceless jewel—Wisdom.

These words spoken by the faithful Prophet—Alma—informs us that we must "Learn wisdom." Yes, "learn wisdom," by experience, by research, by investigation, and above all, by revelation. What a blessing we would be to our parents, our associates and our God, were we but to learn wisdom in our early days and apply it, as is pleasing in the sight of Our Father in heaven. We have too much worldly wisdom, and not enough of that genuine, pure, divine wisdom that emanates from the throne of God. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," says the Psalmist David, (Ps. 111:10), and the question naturally enough arises: Do we fear God? Or, are we not puffed up in the pride of our own hearts—thinking we know something—being contentious, bigoted and self-righteous? If we lack wisdom; if we are void of understanding; if we fail to possess knowledge, light and intelligence, let us do as James has commanded, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." Why not ask the Lord for wisdom? Surely we need the counsel of a kind, loving, just, merciful Father, who holds in His hands the destinies of men and nations. "A man of understanding hath wisdom," but fools die for the want of it; for wisdom is better than rubies," and all other things that may be desired cannot be compared to it.

Let everyone give ear, and let the heart of man incline to the instructions of this dutiful, godly parent, Alma, to his obedient, faithful son, Helaman.

Learn these beautiful words; let them be engraved upon the fleshy tablets of your heart; let them be burned in living letters of gold upon the conscience, to stir you up in remembrance of your duty to God, to your fellow-man, and last, but not least, to your own selves.

History of the Southern States Mission.

May, 1897.

President Kimball visited Florida and succeeded in stirring the Elders to greater activity, though he was decidedly unwell the entire time. He found the conference in good condition, and the Elders willing to work for the Master's cause.

Leaving Florida, President Kimball took violently ill, and was carried from the car at Lamison, Ala., where the Elders met and conveyed him to Magnolia, the conference place of meeting. Elder Musser visited the South Carolina Elders in conference on the 15th and 16th. They seemed to be in good spirits and were anxious to be taught further regarding their duties as servants of God. It was quite remarkable to note how faithful and determined were the Saints who attended conference. Some of them walked as far as 250 miles, and several families traveled long distances in camp wagons. They were striving to observe the "word of wisdom" and the grand law of tithing; they were thirsting to drink from the fountain of living truth. Elder Rydalch was appointed to visit the Mississippi and Louisiana conferences, and labor among the Elders for about two months, prior to his going home.

While conducting meeting at Elk Park, Mitchell county, North Carolina, Elders John R. Terry and W. H. Welling were assailed by a mob of outlaws, who threw at the Elders, abusing them in a lively shape; however, the Elders escaped uninjured. Mr. Bowers, the hotel keeper, and a good friend to the Elders, emptied his six-shooter into the mob, piercing through one man's coat sleeve and another's vest. Twenty Elders arrived from the west near the close of the month.

Oppressive heat seemed to reign supreme during June, in consequence of which many of the Elders suffered great inconveniences; still the work progressed. A goodly number of baptisms were performed. Elder Albert Matheson arrived at the office on the 18th to assist in the work. Elder Joseph McGregor was chosen to temporarily preside over the North Alabama conference.

The spirit of mobocracy made a faint display in South Alabama conference, but resulted in no harm to the Elders.

Nineteen Elders arrived on the 22d inst, and were assigned to their respective fields of labor. Following is a report of work done in the mission by the twelve conferences for the three months ending June 26, 1897.

Miles walked, 149,090; families visited, 49,216; families revisited, 35,171; rejected testimonies, 3,677; refused entertainment, 3,488; tracts distributed, 73,621; dodgers distributed, 39,697; books sold, 2,251; books given away, 2,290; books loaned, 1,920; meetings held, 16,569; gospel conversations, 71,746; gospel letters, 1,307; children blessed, 296; baptisms, 587.

July, 1897.

A good deal of sickness was developed throughout the mission on account of the oppressive heat.

On the night of the 3d inst., at Rodgerway, S. C., the meeting house belonging to our Saints was burned to ashes by their enemies. The fire broke out Saturday night, shortly after the close of the last meeting on the first day of branch conference. On the second day of conference, meetings were held at the homes of the Saints, who, undaunted by the outrage committed, subscribed $75 toward the erection of a new house of worship.

JOHN W. RIGDON IS IN SALT LAKE.

John W. Rigdon, of New York City, the only surviving son of Sidney Rigdon, first counselor of the Prophet Joseph Smith, is visiting old friends and acquaintances in Salt Lake City. He recently arrived from the East. In the course of a conversation he stated that a morning paper had not quoted him correctly in some portions of the interview that appeared that morning. In regard to his father's conversion to the "Mormon" Church, and his first knowledge of the Book of Mormon, he stated that he thought Oliver Cowdery was the man who brought the book to his father, but that Parley P. Pratt was with him at the time. Mr. Rigdon stated that he went to his father just before the latter's death, and told him that if he knew anything regarding the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, that had not been told, he owed it as a duty to himself and his family to tell it. The father replied that he had but one story to tell, and that was the story told him by the Prophet Joseph Smith, that the records from which that book was taken were engraved on gold plates, and the father then testified to his son that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and that an angel handed him the plates from which was taken the Book of Mormon. "Do you believe that, Mr. Rigdon?" "Yes, sir, I believe every word of it. For a long time I was skeptical about it, but now I believe every word my father told me and my heart is with the Mormon people. So was my father's; he would never permit a man to speak disrespectfully of the Church in his presence."

Mr. Rigdon stated that it was his belief that Joseph Smith instituted the system of polygamy, and although he (Rigdon) never subscribed to the doctrine, he never said that it came from the devil, as was stated in the interview with the Tribune.

In regard to the introduction of polygamy by Joseph Smith at this early date, there has always been a dispute. The Josephite branch of the Church insists that polygamy was not practiced or sanctioned by Joseph Smith, but was introduced by Brigham Young when he became the head of the Church. Mr. Rigdon said yesterday that he had positive knowledge that polygamy was introduced by Joseph Smith as early as 1843.

Mr. Rigdon affirms that the two points on which his father hung out were polygamy and the accession of Brigham Young to the leadership of the Church, and although he never recovered from the humiliation, and spent the remainder of his days in silence, whenever the Church was assailed the old fire would kindle in his eyes, he would become animated and the assailant would soon retire a thoroughly whipped man.

Mr. Rigdon by profession is a lawyer. He is a ready and intelligent conversationalist, and very affable in manner. His sensitive nature was manifested, when, on speaking of his father's lonely and brooding life, he became so affected that he broke into tears.

He related many very interesting experiences incident to his boyhood life in the Church, and stated that he was proud of having been baptized by Hyrum Smith, the Prophet's brother, and having his father and the Prophet as an audience. He was taken from what was supposed to be his deathbed, and baptized in the river, after which he quickly recovered.

This is John W. Rigdon's second trip to Utah; his first visit was in 1863, crossing the plains with an ox team.

When he was there at that time Mr. Rigdon states he was urged by Brigham Young to write to his father, conveying to him Brigham Young's earnest request to come and make his home in Salt Lake. He wrote the letter, and although he hoped that his father would accede to the request, he felt at the same time that he would not do it. He remained here and in Montana for two years. In 1865 he went to Fort Benton, built a flatboat and traveled down the Missouri to St. Joe, Mo.

Mr. Rigdon was born at Mentor, O., in 1830. He has a wife and three children, two daughters and a son. His son resides in California, and the others of the family still live in New York.

President Snow was a friend of Mr. Rigdon's father, and Mr. Rigdon himself knew the President in the very early days of the Church.

Mr. Rigdon said he expected to remain some time, and would try to see more of the country than he did when he was out there almost forty years ago.

He stated he liked Salt Lake, and if circumstances were such as to permit him to move there, he would certainly do so.

In conclusion, Mr. Rigdon said: "I feel well towards the Mormon people, and I hope that they will continue to prosper, for I feel that they are the people of God."

WHIMS OF NOTED AUTHORS.

Habits and fancies of famous authors are a fruitful source of investigation for the student of literary curiosities. Balzac affected a monkish habit when writing, a garment so wholly at variance with his lax code of morals as to be in a measure grotesque. This robe was necessary before he could settle down to continuous work, and then he labored with tremendous energy. Dickens was uneasy and incapable of satisfactory composition unless he was seated at a certain table. When he was in Paris and Bologne in 1855 and 1856 engaged in writing "Little Dorrit," he carried this table with him, having been compelled to abandon the attempt to work at the novel until his favorite piece of furniture was sent to him from England. The prolific Southey had also a favorite desk and though author of 109 novels and innumerable articles and reviews, he could not write a sentence unless he was seated at that particular desk with his beloved books and familiar articles of library furniture around him. But a singular fancy, stranger than the foregoing, was that of Bacon, who drew inspiration from the fumes of a bottle of claret poured on earth which had been freshly upturned.

Some Grotesque Notions.

Johnson ridiculed all such fancies as unworthy of any sensible man, and declared that if a person were capable of writing at all he could write under any conditions "if he set himself doggedly to it." Presumably the good doctor would have attributed Lord Orrery's literary industry while suffering from gout not so much to the efficacy of the attack as an intellectual stimulus as to the fact that the gout compelled the noble author to indulge in a sedentary occupation. De Quincey is authority for the statement that James Hogg, the Ettrick shepherd, and Graham, the author of "The Sabbath," were unable to versify with any degree of facility unless they sat down with boots and spurs on. This must have produced a lively sense of riding Pegasus in a manner less imaginary than literal. One of the two poets named is likely to have imitated the other's whim, just as John Phillips, an English poet, whose existence is now known only to special students of minor English literature during the Cromwellian and restoration periods, certainly copied the fancy of Isaak Vosclus, the Dutch scholar, in having his hair combed by a servant while meditating his works. George Wither, whose poems, written about the same time, are spiritual in subject and treatment, records that he was obliged to watch and fast while engaged in poetical compositions. His inspiraton vanished if he touched meat or drink; "even if I take a glass of wine I cannot write a line," he says.

Made Themselves Ridiculous.

Dickens was a great walker and a keen observer during his pedestrian exercise, but exercise was the primary impulse that started him to cover miles of streets and roads. Coleridge, however, told Hazlitt that he never composed so readily as when walking over uneven ground or making his way through a coppice with the twigs brushing his face. The meditative Wordsworth thought out most of his later poems while walking to and fro, but he preferred a straight gravel path where he could wander mechanically, heedless of any obstruction or impediment. These are different in kind from those caprices of costume such as Buffon's helplessness, without a spotless shirt and starched frill. A leading modern novelist wrote in a variety of uniforms and masquerade dresses according as the character was military or historical; he could only get into the proper vein by wearing the costume of the leading character in the period treated. Dryden indulged a peculiar fancy in having himself bled at frequent intervals and he ate raw meat, believing that it strengthened his imagination. This, however, was a less harmful stimulant than was used by so many famous authors. De Quincey and Coleridge were the two chief writers addicted to opium, but Bishop Horsley, Dean Milner, Shadwell, the poet, and that precious imposter, George Psalmanazar, were addicted to the drug.

They All Tippled.

The use of wine in the eighteenth century was so general that practically all the authors who flourished then were drinkers. One is surprised, however, to find Blackstone sitting down to write his "Commentaries" fortified with a bottle of port before him. Voltaire was an inveterate coffee drinker while engaged in writing, and overindulgence in that beverage during a protracted literary effort was the proximate cause of his death. Schiller also drank coffee, "to thaw the frost out of his wits," but he fancied imbibing the infusion while seated with his feet in hot water. This, he believed, stimulated his imagination in sluggish moods, and he refreshed it during work by copious drafts from a flask of Rhenish wine. Montaigne's amiable partiality for the companionship of his cat is a famous instance of a writer's whim. We can imagine the studious essayist stroking his feline pet with one hand while with the other he penned the witty and wise results of his reading and meditation. Hobbes, the philosopher, indulged in "ten or twelve pipes with a candle" during the time he sat at his desk each day, but so many authors have been dependent on tobacco since the ill-treated Sir Walter Raleigh introduced the Nicotian weed to Europe that their enumeration is impracticable. Tennyson, it will be remembered, was an inveterate smoker among the latter-day poets.

Creatures of Caprice.

Seasons and the conditions of weather were believed by many authors to have affected their imagination and facility of expression. Even the sane and philosophic Milton declared that he never could compose anything to his satisfaction except in the period between the vernal and autumnal exquinoxes. This was his season of inspiration and poetry flowed spontaneously. Thomson, who sang of "The Seasons," Collins and Gray convinced themselves that their muses were subject to exactly the same influences as Milton's. What probably gave rise to such fancies as have been alluded to might be worthy of investigation by the student of psychology. It is known that obedience to some little superstition relative to going to sleep will cure sleeplessness. Perhaps some fortunate composition at a particular time or place or under some peculiar circumstances may have induced the belief that the recurrence or reproduction of the conditions might be essential to the best work. But we do not learn that Bunyan ever wanted to be sent back to Bedford jail in order to renew the literary inspiration which gave birth to "The Pilgrim's Progress." Nor did Cervantes care to return to the wretchedness of the Spanish dungeon in which he wrote "Don Quixote." Indeed, in the last analysis most of the whims of authors may be traced to some form of personal luxury or sybaritic indulgence. —Philadelphia Press.

Brigham Young Birthday Celebration.

It has been decided to ask the children of the Sunday schools of the Salt Lake stake of Zion to take part in the celebration of the birthday of Brigham Young on June 1. At 9 o'clock on that day they will meet at the monument at the head of Main street. This they will decorate with flowers and they will then be taken to the Tabernacle, where they will take part in commemorative services.

This week the brethren and sisters at the office here enjoyed a call from Elder Geo. H. Emery, who has completed a two years' mission in the Virginia conference. Elder Emery carries with him that sweet, congenial influence so conducive to friend making in the field, and so beneficial for the converting of the honest in heart. He is the son of Bishop Geo. H. Emery, of the 16th Ward, Salt Lake City, and has proven himself a worthy, true representative of his noble sire. He returns to be a joy to his family, an honor to his ward, and a benefactor unto all who stand in need.

The Three and Four Plan.

"At the close of the war," said a Southern representative today, "a great many negroes in the South refused to leave their old homes. My father gathered his former slaves about him and told them they were free and must leave him. Some went and others remained. Among the latter was an old darky named Eph, who swore he would not leave, but would stay and take his chances. 'All right, Eph,' said my father. 'Just take four or five acres and go in on the three and four plan.'

"'An' what am dat, massa, fo' de Lawd's sake?'

"'Why, if you raise three loads of corn you must give me one and you keep two.' So Uncle Eph went to work and raised a crop. At harvest time my father rode over the farm and noticed that Eph had cut his corn. Seeing the old fellow, he rode up and asked him why he didn't do as he had agreed about dividing the corn.

"'Well, massa, yoh said if I raised free loads of corn I wuz to gib yoh one an' take two loads myself, an' I done only raised two loads.'"—Washington Times.

In Memory of the Soldier Dead.

Extracts from an article written by Gen. J e Wheeler for the Chattanooga Times

Devotion to the memory of the dead is not the birthright of any one people, or tribe, or nation, nor does it find its origin in any given period of history. It is a sentiment as ancient as creation, and as widespread as humanity. The first death recorded in sacred history left a broken-hearted Eve to hand down her tears to sorrowing mortals, and from that time there have ever been bleeding hearts which find solace in bringing flowers and sweet spices and precious gifts to lavish upon the lifeless clay, once the casket of a precious, immortal soul.

Among the rudest and most savage people we find sparks of this sentiment. The old heathen held their mosts beautiful and attractive festivals in honor of the dead, and selected their most famous orators to chant the praises of the departed. The older nations of the east allowed this devotion to degenerate into ancestor-worship.

Our aboriginal Indians have thousands of quaint rites, varying with the numberless tribes into which they are divided, for the purpose of commemorating the dead and keeping alive in the hearts of the young the memory of the brave and glorious deeds of their departed chieftans and the beauty and virtues of their mothers.

A sentiment so universally exhibited must be deeply rooted in the human heart; it has its source, indeed, in the eternal youth of the soul which finds its counterpart in the ever renewed springtime of mother earth. The heart may be crushed and frozen by the sordid cares of life which bind it down with the numbness of scores of winters, and yet, as the glad awakening earth flings up its free arms to embrace the ever-renewing youth and newness of the spring-tide, "Hope springs eternal," and the soul bowed down by grief and care and even the weight of years, lifts itself up in the gladness of reawakened life to catch the joys of the newborn spring. The faint murmur of the bursting bud and blossom, the gurgling music of the brook, the drone of insects and the melodious voices of nature's feathered choristers all join to soothe the spirit and send a quickened pulse throughout the weary frame.

We look about for the dear ones wont to share life's joys with us. They are not visible to mortal eyes nor do they respond to our yearning call; but to the keener senses of love and memory they stand revealed so near that we can almost touch their garments; changeless, immortal, they tread strange and unexplored spheres, beckoning us ever upward and onward to higher and holier lives. And we can but keep their memory green, we can but salve the wounds in the sad hearts of those who survive them by enshrining in sweetest flowers the graves of all our loved ones gone before; even more ardently and intensely does the heart yearn to express itself towards our soldier dead and the yearning leads us to place garlands upon the graves of those whose heroic valor has won for them a country's love and gratitude.

Origin of Memorial day.

The American custom of decorating the graves of the soldier dead originated with the fair women of the southern states. If I mistake not, Alabama was the first to inaugurate the annual custom of observing a day as sacred to that purpose.

Beginning with the first anniversary of the close of the great struggle between the north and south, the ladies of the south, led by those of Alabama and Georgia, have held appropriate ceremonies each recurring spring, in honor of the beloved heroes who fell in the civil war. The early spring of the more genial climate of the gulf states brings its wealth of flowers in time to celebrate the memory of the dead during the month when the great armies of Lee and Johnston yielded to the overpowering forces of Grant and Sherman; but in the northern states Memorial Day comes a month later.

The 30th of May was chosen and formally set aside for the purpose on May 5, 1868, in an order to the Grand Army posts issued by Gen. John A. Logan, then commander of the Grand Army of the Republic. The general public took part in the ceremonies thus inaugurated and the custom was so pleasing to the people at large that within a few years most of the northern states had made the day a legal holiday, to be set aside during all time for the special observance of memorial services in honor of the dead soldiers.

There was at first inevitable bitterness and sectional rancor, but these sentiments were little felt between the veterans themselves who survived the war. They grappled with one another and recognized in brave antagonists foemen worthy of their steel, mutual respect soon ripened into esteem and confidence; the conflict had broadened, not narrowed their souls, and by degrees the annual festivities of Memorial Day have wiped out the bitter feelings engendered by internecine strife.

And the boys who followed the flag to the far-away Philippines and died beneath the Stars and Stripes—who stops to ask their state or section? It is enough that they are our soldiers, defenders of this great republic; and no honor is too great to pay to the memory of the American soldier. His prowess, his endurance, his fortitude and his courage have challenged the admiration of the world, and are equalled only by his tender generosity toward a fallen foe.

Today, after the suns and rains and dews of thirty-five years have called forth flowers to carpet the graves of the heroes who gave up their lives on the battlefields of the civil war, or in the hospitals crowded by the conflicts and hardships of the struggle, we are apt to forget what men of '61-'65 endured for their country. The shout of victory reverberating down the chain of time silences the moan of anguish which rose from the place over which brave columns charged. The picture presented to our imagination of bright uniformed hosts, gleaming swords and prancing steeds, obscure those other scenes when the angel of death came to claim the men whose graves we now decorate with flowers.

Lessons of Patriotism.

We would have our children learn the lesson of patriotism which comes from the bivouac, the tedious march and the battlefield. We would have them emulate the self-sacrifice of those men who so cheerfully left the office, the shop, the counting room or the plow to show their loyalty by fighting, and, if need be, dying for their country. Whether they fought beneath the Stars and Stripes or beneath the Southern Cross, they fought for what they conceived to be right, and sealed their loyalty with their blood.

If Egypt built pyramids to honor the memory of her tyrannical kings, it is fitting that America should keep green the memory of those who died in defense of the liberty our ancestors won by battling against a king. What other nation has such good cause for honoring its heroes as America?

Not to uphold dynasties or emperors and kings do our soldiers battle, but for eternal truth and justice, and to guarantee to all over whom the flag of our country floats the advantages of the blessings of the principles of the free republican government, which has made ours the leading one among the powerful nations of the earth. It is for this that American soldiers go forth cheerfully to endure the hardships of the soldier's life; to die, perhaps, the soldier's death.

The heroism of those whose graves we decorate, whether they be "The Boys of '61," or "The Boys of '98," is one of the bright jewels in the diadem that crowns the brow of American liberty. It is part of the heritage of every child born beneath our flag. Therefore, in honoring the men who died for the millions yet to come, for in giving testimony to the courage and loyalty of the men who sleep in soldiers' graves, we enhance the nation's glory and render the name American citizen of still more priceless value.

So long as nations, like individuals, are prone to forget the rights of contemporaries, war will be an unfortuante necessity. The question, then, for statesmen and humanitarians to consider is how best to avert the horrors of war.

In Gen. Washington's speech to both houses of congress, Jan. 8, 1790, we have the assurance of that great soldier and statesman that:

"To be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

The patriotism of American citizens renders it unnecessary to maintain such great armies as Europe seems forced to keep ready for action. But there are many other ways to prepare for war.

A nation whose people are ever ready to defend it against insult or aggression and to do battle for the right, commands universal respect.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and not too great a price, our ancestors thought when at fearful odds they wrestled with a mighty foe, and like the stripling David came out of the conflict strong and free.

The destinies of nations are shaped by those who fight and die at their country's call. History is written in the blood of the brave and the true. But the manhood of a nation is formed by the hand that rocks the cradle. So long as American mothers teach their sons that the greatest possible privilege and the highest honor is to fight for country, its safety and its honor, so long shall we have a nation in whose honor, chivalry, glory and patriotism shall dominate. Would we check the greed for wealth and power, and stop the mad career of a mammon worship let us encourage the cultivation of high ideals and lofty ambitions. Let us cherish the memory of our dead heroes and while we minister to the necessities of the living, let us not forget the dead, but as each Memorial Day rolls round, let us scatter flowers above the sacred dust and renew our tributes of admiration and gratitude.

Motion and Color.

The relations between light and the eye are wonderful, and the rapidity of the vibrations of the atmosphere necessary to produce color sensations are amazing. To get the sensation of redness our eyes are affected 482,000,000 times in a second; of yellowness, 540,000,000, and of violet, 707,000,000. So that the seven-hued rainbow, whose firm and subtle flame is reared out of drops of water that are ever shifting, plays upon the human eye in a manner so astounding that the strongest mind might stager beneath the awful revelation.—London Opinion.

SKETCH OF PRESIDENT CANNON.

to give a liberal share of attention to the little ones, with whom he pleasantly converses. In this capacity he has exhibited marked tenacity of memory by calling each child of a household by name after a lapse of two or three years between a former and a later visit.

His love for and interest in his own progeny are hardly exceeded. This patriarchal instinct prompts him to group the members of his family and their branches around himself, he being the center of the aggregation. The wisdom of this is apparent. It is the process of patriarchal populous expansion. Its perpetuation means an incalculable wonderful result. So long as the organization and solidification are preserved, the accretion must necessarily be ceaseless. This practical effect of his personality is but one of numerous evidences of the communal tendency of his thoughts and far-reaching character of his ideals.

It must not be supposed that Brother Cannon's interest in and affection for children are merely of a centralized character. On the contrary, these sentiments are, with him, decidedly expansive. His work at the head and front of the Sunday School system, now so conspicuous a feature among the Latter-day Saints, places this beyond question. He took hold of this labor when the enterprise had scarce an existence as an organization. Now it extends to every settlement where the Saints are found, and has numbers of scattered branches in the nations abroad. I have no idea that this beneficent establishment has its equal in completeness and efficiency in the world. The spectacle presented by the Jubilee celebration held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Oct. 8th, 1899, was of such a character as to impress any intelligent beholder with this thought. Who can count the number of precious souls whose feet have been directed and maintained in the path of rectitude and salvation by the agency of this great institution? If the subject of this sketch had performed no other work in life than that which he has accomplished in connection with the Sunday School cause, it would entitle him to have his name handed down as a benefactor, to the latest generation. What he has produced under the blessing of God, through this agency, radiates beyond the limits of time and stretches into eternity, where the multiplication of its effects will parallel duration.

The man about whom I write has been conspicuous for the strength of his personal magnetism. As a rule he captivates those who come in contact with him. The influence of his personal atmosphere has not only been felt among his co-religionists, but has extended to all classes of men whom he has met in the world. I should say that he is a natural statesman. This has been virtually admitted by national characters of this Republic, while he occupied the position of Delegate to the Congress of the United States from the Territory of Utah, and since. While acting in that capacity he showed his usual appreciation of the necessity for familiarity with details. Not only did he acquaint himself with the functions of government and the features indicating the limitation lines between its different departments, but likewise with the names, constituencies, and some personal particulars regarding every member of each branch of the National Legislature. He was therefore regarded by his cotemporaries in that body as a kind of individual intelligence bureau. When any one member made inquiry of another about some particular Senator or member of Congress, it was by no means unusual for the gentleman interrogated to say, "I don't know. Inquire of Mr. Cannon from Utah. He seems to know everybody." This species of information was doubtless useful to the gentleman who possessed it. As a rule, men are pleased when they observe evidences of being remembered.

Running through the career of this striking character are strong evidences of his adherence to duty as he has understood it. This ideal has been sustained under circumstances that have demanded, at the time, much personal sacrifice. His responses to calls made upon him by his superiors in office in the Church of Christ have been prompt and unhesitating. I have found in my observation of men this statement of Carlyle to be unqualifiedly correct: "Great minds are respectfully obedient to all that is over them. Only small souls are otherwise."

The standard of the subject of this sketch in relation to charity has always been of the highest order. His exalted ideal in this respect has not only been exhibited in his public and private teachings, but, without doubt, is personally exemplified in his entire mortal career to the present. This eminent position regarding the most important subject that occupy human contemplation has undergone in him but a single change—a modification in his views in relation to those who have not practically occupied the same elevated moral position as himself.

Has Brother Cannon exhibited faults? Ask me if he is human. Imperfections are the lot of humanity. Where there is light there is shadow—the more brilliant the light the deeper the shadow appears by contrast. The failings of mere men of the world pass without notice, while the defects of individuals conspicuous for great qualities appear abnormally large by immediate contrast with their opposite. In this case I speak not of imperfections. They should be buried in oblivion by the overwhelming weight of his virtues.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

Only one man who served in the Confederate Senate during the war is now to be found in the United States Senate. That is Vest, of Missouri. When he retires the last of the Confederate Senators will have passed from public life.

When the Duke of Norfolk was about to depart from London for Africa he took his sword to the private chapel in the Roman Catholic Archbishop's house, where, according to an ancient rite, it was solemnly blessed before the altar by Cardinal Vaughan.

Miss Bessie Shirley, of Salt Lake City, owns and edits a mining journal. Though she is but 19 years old, she has established the paper herself, and has made a success of it. She makes weekly trips to all the neighboring mining centers in search of news, and wields a great deal of influence.

The Cynic.

The cynic is one who never sees a good quality in a man and never fails to see a bad one. He is the human owl, vigilant in darkness and blind to light; mousing for vermin and never seeing noble game.

The cynic puts all human actions into only two classes, openly bad and secretly bad; he holds that no man does a good thing except for profit; his insinuations and inuendoes fall indiscriminately upon every lovely thing like frost upon the flowers. If Mr. A is pronounced a religious man he will reply, "Yes, on Sundays." Mr. B has just joined the church. "Certainly, the elections are coming on." The minister of the Gospel is an example of diligence. "'Tis his trade." Thus his eye strains out every good quality and takes in only the bad. To him religion is hypocrisy, honesty only a preparation for fraud, virtue only a want of opportunity. The livelong day he will coolly sit with sneering lip, transfixing every character that is presented.

It is impossible to indulge in such habitual severity of opinion against our fellow-men without injuring the tenderness and delicacy of our own feelings. A man will be what his most cherished feelings are. If he encourage a noble generosity, every feeling will be enriched by it; if he nurse bitter and envenomed thoughts, his own spirit will absorb the poison, and he will crawl among men like a burnished adder whose life is mischief and whose errand is death.

He who hunts for flowers will find flowers, but he who hunts for weeds may find weeds. Let it be remembered that he who is not himself morally diseased will have no relish for disease in others. Reject then the morbid ambition of the cynic, or cease to call yourself a man.—Henry Ward Beecher.

TRUTH SHALL TRIUMPH!

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

Oh! how glorious is the thought;
Truth shall triumph!
Tho' her course be dearly bought—
Truth shall triumph!
She, the victory shall win,
Over wickedness and sin,
Peace and righteousness bring in—
Truth shall triumph!

Tho' her foes are legion now—
Truth shall triumph!
To her every knee shall bow—
Truth shall triumph!
Wicked hosts may scoff and jeer,
Mock, revile, malign and sneer,
Still these joyful words we hear—
Truth shall triumph!

From the Heaven's comes the cry—
Truth shall triumph!
Echoed now from sky to sky—
Truth shall triumph!
Earth with this glad lay shall ring—
When the just behold their king.
Saints and angels shout and sing—
Truth shall triumph!

Hallelujah! swell the strain—
Truth shall triumph!
Jesus comes to earth again,
Truth shall triumph!
Comes in power 'mid realms of light,
Comes in majesty and might,
Comes to put our foes to flight—
Truth shall triumph!

Courage! servant of the Lord!
Truth shall triumph!
You've received His perfect word!
Truth shall triumph.
Fervent love your righteous shield,
Holy truth your sword to wield—
Meet the foe and never yield—
Truth shall triumph!

Elder Christo Hyldahl.

We take pleasure in presenting to the many readers of our southern "twinkler" a brief biographical sketch of the life of him whose gladsome, congenial features adorn and illuminate the fair page of this week's Star. Brother Hyldahl is known far and wide in the Southern States Mission, for the admirable characteristics which compose his being has made him friends wherever he has journeyed.

Born in the far-away, sunny land of Denmark, he naturally inherited those sterling traits which have ever characterized the sturdy inhabitants of the Scandinavian peninsula. His early life was spent in the land of his childhood, where he cheerfully assisted his parents in maintaining an honest livelihood. It was here that he was thoroughly schooled in the rigid school-room of stern experience, which training is ever beneficial, lasting and of priceless worth, although severe and exceedingly trying when endured and encountered. But he braved the trials, and with a will which knew no defeat, he successfully battled with the arduous duties of manual labor, rising victorious over every obstacle and difficulty. At the age of 16 he left his native country, Denmark, and sailed across the broad Atlantic, in company with his father. They settled in the thrifty city of Chicago, where our beloved brother labored assiduously with muscle and sinew for five long years. His mother (Sister Hannah Sorenson, having embraced the Gospel some years prior to his emigration from Denmark) left her home in Utah and paid a visit to her husband and children in Chicago, for the purpose of carrying the good news of salvation, which she had been made the happy recipient of. The testimony of the dear mother rang in the ears of her son Christo as a familiar sound, and her words rested not alone on the ear, but he felt the sense as well as the sound, and they sank deep into his heart. Prompted by the remarkable impression which his mother's testimony had made, he decided to spend a season in the land where the despised people, called Mormons, dwell. He landed in Utah, and began a course of study in the Brigham Young Academy. It was while studying in this institution that he became thoroughly convinced of the truthfulness of the Gospel, which led him to implicitly yield obedience to the same.

In 1898, April 27, he received a call to fill a mission in the northern states and two weeks later found him in his field of labor, working as a traveling Elder in the city of Chicago. After spending six months in this capacity he was transferred to the Southern States Mission, where he occupied the position of commissary clerk and book-keeper. In March of '99 his beloved wife—Sister Allie Hyldahl—was appointed and set apart as a missionary to the Southern states. When the Chattanooga conference was duly organized in May, '99, Brother Hyldahl was selected as its president. In December of the same year he was released from this position, and appointed as a counselor to President Ben. E. Rich, to fill the vacancy occurred by the return to Utah of Elder Geo. A. Lyman. He has filled all his callings with signal ability and marked success. Having performed an honorable mission, he, in company with our much loved sister and faithful co-laborer, left Chattanooga for Chicago on May 31. We wish them God speed in their journey, success in all their undertakings, for we feel that they have performed their part well, and that the Lord has many rich and perfect gifts in store for them.

July, 1897.—Some slight attempts were made at mobbing South Carolina Elders in Georgia, but no serious results developed. Although this spirit of violence showed itself in the Conference just named, yet a feeling of comparative peace prevailed throughout the other parts of the mission. The Elders were permitted to hold many meetings and push the other work unmolestedly. This is in striking contrast to what the Elders were enabled to do during the protracted meeting season, only a few years previous.

Persecution in South Carolina had not ceased by any means. The following is but a brief account of mob violence near Ridgeway, S. C.: The Ridgeway Branch Conference convened near Ridgeway, July 3d and 4th. Threats of violence to Saints and Elders had been made, but no attention was paid to them. On the night of the 3d inst. the church was burned by incendiaries. The Saints at once made preparations to rebuild their house, Brothers James A. Smith and R. E. Cleveland coming from Oconee county for the purpose of erecting it. Saturday, the 17th inst., these men were met in the road by James Harrell and R. W. Hollis, who cursed them, warning them to leave the county. That night the house of Brother W. W. Collins was fired into by unknown parties, about twenty buckshot entering the building, slightly wounding his daughter.

The night of July 24th, Elders Morris Wilson and Henry Behrman were visited by a mob of 120 drunken men while at the home of Mr. Lewis Branham, in Kershaw county, and warned to leave the country by August 1st. These Elders went to Columbia, where they were met by Samuel P. Oldham, the president of the Conference. Elders Oldham and Wilson called upon the Governor of the state, who assured them that they were entitled to protection. Elders Wilson and Behrman then returned to Fairfield county, and visited the Saints. Some hostile demonstrations were indulged in by the mob element, but they made no attempt to get the Elders until a later day.

Thirteen Elders arrived on the last day of the month and were assigned to various fields of labor.

August, 1897—President Kimball, on account of sickness, was unable to attend the Kentucky Conference, which began on the 7th inst. Elders John Woodmansee and Albert Matheson, who were laboring in the office, were sent by him to hold conference with the Elders. The Elders gathered at Junction Branch, Metcalfe county, in a frame meeting house with a seating capacity for about three hundred people. It was built by the Saints of that county, and at the beginning of this conference meeting it was dedicated by John F. Wakefield, President of the Kentucky Conference. There were in attendance not less than 1,000 people, which included about 100 Saints, some of whom had traveled from 150 to 175 miles to attend conference. On this occasion the spirit of the Lord was enjoyed in a rich measure by the speakers, to the edification of Elders, Saints and the public in general.

The Morning.

The morning is the gate of day, and should be well guarded with prayer. It is one end of the thread on which the day's actions are strung, and should be well knotted with devotion. If we felt more the majesty of life we should be more careful of its mornings. He who rushes from his bed to his business and awaiteth not to worship is foolish as though he had not put on his clothes or cleansed his face, and as unwise as though he dashed into battle without arms or armor. Be it ours to bathe in the softly flowing river of communion with God before the heat of the wilderness and the burden of the way begin to oppress us.—Spurgeon.

Language.

A century ago, the French language was spoken by 10,000,000 more people than spoke the English tongue. Today the English leads. The figures are given as follows: The English language is spoken by 115,000,000 out of the world's inhabitants, Russian by 85,000,000 German by 80,000,000, French by 58,000,000, and Italian by 38,000,000.

AS IT WAS IN THE DAYS OF NOAH.

BY ELDER R. W. SMITH.

The Scriptures inform us that "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man." This being the case, it would be of great benefit to us to know something of the general conditions as they existed in those days, as it would enable us to contrast them with existing conditions of the present time and prove, or disprove, the claims which are being made in the world today to the effect that the coming of the Son of Man is nigh at hand—even at their doors.

This is a highly important question, and one that concerns most vitally every individual now living upon the face of the earth; and especially those who are interested in their soul's salvation. It is in view of this fact, and with a hope of doing good, that I offer a few remarks upon the subject.

The days of Noah are distinguished as being among the most remarkable of the world's history, from the fact that at that time the earth was entirely submerged in water, and totally depopulated with the exception of eight souls. This we understand was its water baptism, or cleansing by water. The days of the coming of Christ to reign on earth will mark the greatest epoch of the world's history since its creation, for the reason that at that time the consummation of the wicked is to take place, all things are to become new, and the earth is to receive its spiritual baptism or cleansing by fire.

The religious condition of the world today is very similar to that of Noah's day and time. This may be considered by some to be a very broad assertion. But allow me to remind you that the truth is very broad. Aye, so broad that the entire struggling, opposing, contending masses of humanity could unitedly stand upon it, if they would but consent to do so.

This assertion, however, is not made without sufficient reasons and evidence to back it, as will be seen by what follows.

Let us go back now to the days of Noah just prior to the flood, and examine into the true state of affairs with regard to the social and religious condition of the people of the world in general. Notwithstanding this people had with them a living oracle of God, who was in direct communication with the heavens, to give instruction and advice to them concerning their spiritual duties; yet we find that they gradually drifted from the truth, until finally they apostasized altogether from the teachings of the mouthpiece of God. This of course gave Satan full sway, and he lost no time in making complete havoc of the entire generation. They turned their attention entirely to the things of the world; they were marrying and giving in marriage, increasing in licentiousness and vice, as they increased in numbers, until they became so corrupt and wicked that the Lord determined to destroy them from the face of the earth. Not, however, did he carry this terrible decree into execution until He had given them ample time to repent of their sins and receive a remission thereof. He commissioned Noah to preach to the people, calling them to repentance and warning them of the terrible judgments which would shortly follow if they refused to do so. Noah went forth with the proclamation of the Lord as commanded; and how was he received?

Naturally we would think that his message would be received with the deepest gratitude and thankfulness by that condemned generation; but instead of this, they coldly rejected the Lord's anointed with his message of love, liberty and salvation, and thus lost the last chance of a reconciliation with their Father and God. Did Noah cease to warn them, and to urge upon them the great importance of his mission among them? No. Although branded as a fanatic, scorned as a heretic, hissed and jeered for believing what they considered such absurd nonsense, he labored diligently and incessantly for a period of one hundred and twenty years, and then only succeeded in convincing his three sons and their wives of the divinity of his mission, and the rest were swallowed up in the great deluge which followed. All that was good and desirable might have been enjoyed by this generation of people, had they so desired and lived for it. What was it that debarred them from the enjoyment of the blessings that might have been theirs? It was their persistent obstinacy in refusing to hearken to the commandments of God through His servants, and trusting in their own wisdom and learning to guide them through. Esteeming themselves far greater and wiser than any whom God might send to correct them in their manner of living and lead them into paths of rectitude and right.

Now cast your eye critically over the world and examine closely into the conditions as they exist today, and you will discover, as I have previously remarked, that they are strikingly similar to that day and time. The great masses of the people have become worldly; utilizing their time and talent in keeping up with the fashions of the day, and paying far more attention to the adornment and comfort of their bodies than to their moral and spiritual development, and the building up of the Kingdom of God on the earth. Those who profess to be followers of Christ are virtually in the same condition as were the antideluvians. They refuse to accept the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as the God of today, and have substituted in His stead a God that has no body, parts nor passions. The Scriptures teach that in order to come to God we must first believe that He is; but modern Christianity teaches that He isn't. They claim that He is an immaterial being, and of course that means nothing; therefore they deny His existence. The Bible also speaks of a time when men would deny the only God that bought them, and it appears that that time has come. However, when we come to think about it, it becomes quite necessary on the part of our Christian friends to invent a new God, in order to be consistent with the rest of the improvements (?) which they have made upon the long-established order of heaven. For they have so perverted and changed the doctrines of the Bible that it would never do to retain the God of Abraham as the author of their faith and practice. It would never do to associate modern Christianity with the God of the Bible, for they could never agree worlds without end. Hence the necessity of a change in the person of the Deity. But I am digressing.

No doubt there are thousands today who, if you should remark in their hearing that the people of today were in very much the same condition as were the antideluvians, would throw up their hands in horror and say, "Oh, no! That cannot possibly be true! This is a day of progression and advancement. The people are becoming educated and enlightened at the present time, and are far in advance of any generation that has ever lived upon the earth." It is quite true; the world is advancing and making rapid progress along certain lines, but what are they? Is it progressing religiously? No, verily, no. Religion is loosing its hold upon the minds of the people every day. There never was a time in the history of man when such confusion, contention, discord and disunion existed among religious classes, as we see before us at the present time.

This proves that the churches of today are transgressing and not abiding in the doctrine of Christ. For if they abide in the doctrine of Christ, John says they have both the Father and the Son; and if they had the Father and the Son, such confusion and contention would not exist, for God positively declares that "He is not the author of confusion but of peace." (I Cor. 14, 33.) Therefore we can come to no other conclusion than that "the earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, for they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant;" and except they repent of their sins and turn unto the Lord they will meet a fate similar to that of the antideluvians, for the Lord God hath spoken it.

If we could lift the veil from this earth of ours for just a moment, and get one glance at the corrupt condition of the majority of the people, our hearts would grow sick and faint within us at the horrible spectacle which would meet our gaze. Sin, corruption, wickedness in every imaginable form fills the earth, which we would see if we were permitted to glance behind the scenes. One of the lines upon which the world is making the most rapid progress is the art of concealing sin. And one of the most impenetrable shields for sin now in use to baffle the public gaze and keep down suspicion, is the cloak of religion. The wearing of this shield has become quite popular in the world today, especially among the up-to-date, fashionable classes. There is enough sin, however, open and above board to occupy our attention without going into its secret hiding places to create a reformation.

The people of today are drifting into darkness, rather than gaining light. They cleave to darkness and shun the light. And why? Because the light would reveal them as they are, and that is what they wish to conceal. "Men love darkness because their deeds are evil."

Today pride and ambition have taken the place of virtue and godliness. Licentiousness walks the earth unbridled. Vice flaunts itself upon the streets. Pomp and pride exist where virtue would be ashamed to set her feet. And when a Prophet of the living God steps forth and declares that God has again spoken from the heavens, and that He is displeased with the actions of the children of men and desires them to repent and work works of righteousness, lest He should come and smite the earth with a curse; and that the great and dreadful day of the Lord is nigh at hand, when the Son of Man will come to execute judgment upon the earth; and to punish with everlasting destruction from the presence of God all those who know not God and have obeyed not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. He is ridiculed and mocked on every hand, hissed and jeered at and branded as a fanatical fool, unfit for the association of fashionable Christians. And those few honest-hearted who heed the glad message, and unite themselves with the armies of Israel to wield the sword of the Spirit in the defence of truth, are classed as deluded fanatics and not fit for the companionship of respectable people. How similar are the conditions at the present time to those of Noah's day.

There was a living Prophet of God upon the earth in the days of Noah, and Christ said that it should be the same in the days of His second coming. In the days of Noah there were eight souls saved out of the whole world. Few, wasn't it, comparatively speaking, with the number of inhabitants then upon the earth? How many today are following the straight and narrow way mapped out by our Lord and Savior? According to the words of Christ, should we look for the biggest crowd in searching for the people of God? "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

The burden of Noah's mission was to expose the wickedness of the people and call them to repentance. He did so and incurred the displeasure of the entire populace, and persecution followed.

The same burden rests upon the shoulders of the servants of God today, and in the discharge of their bounden duty, they encounter the same, or greater opposition. This is but natural, however, as the same cause always produces the same effects. Let all mankind awaken from their sleepy condition and prepare for the second advent of the Messiah, for He has warned us that He would come as a thief in the night, and at a time when He was least expected. And when He shall make His appearance He will "gather His wheat into the garner, but He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

Services at the Salt Lake Tabernacle.

Elder W. H. Chamberlain, a recently returned Elder from the Society Islands, was the first speaker. He opened by saying that the children of men had been separted from the courts on high, that through trials and temptations that they might appreciate their heavenly home. So it was in the far-off islands of the sea. It was glorious to be home again, to hear the choir and to be among friends and kindred.

The speaker read from the fourth chapter of Nephi, in the Book of Mormon, wherein the prophet Nephi is grateful to the Lord for the light He had given him, and also bewails his own weakness. The Prophet also speaks of the power of the Lord made manifest in his behalf.

The speaker stated that it was while reading such noble thoughts and sentiments that he formed an attachment to the descendants of the Prophet Lehi. He had had the pleasure of laboring among some of them. These people were people of Israel because they naturally believe in God, and many of them embrace the Gospel.

Elder Chamberlain stated that, before going on his mission, he had expended his energies along other lines, and was not anxious to be called, but one morning, just before he awoke, he dreamed that he had been called on a mission, and it awakened within him a great love for the Gospel, and within one hour from that time he received his call.

The first "Mormon" Elders landed on the Society Islands in 1843. Many of the natives of that group have embraced the Gospel and they are generally faithful. The speaker had been in the islands nearly three years, and the Elders there are very energetic.

He had experienced the influence of the Holy Ghost, and he knew that it surpassed any other feelings that he had ever experienced. Feeling, said the speaker, is the basis of belief, and the Later-Day Saints must be in harmony with God to experience the feelings that they enjoy. Elder Chamberlain closed by bearing an earnest testimony, and expressing a warm desire for the blessings of the Lord upon the people.

By request of President Cannon, Elder Chamberlain spoke briefly in the native tongue of the Society Islands.

President George Q. Cannon.

President George Q. Cannon next addressed the assemblage, and in opening stated that he had been much interested in the testimony of the preceding speaker. He said that there were many words used by the natives of the Society Islands that were identical with some contained in the Hawaiian language. These people also have customs similar to the ancient Hebrew rites, showing that they are of the house of Israel.

The speaker stated that when the more enlightened men throughout Christianity embraced the Gospel, and then fell away into sin, they generally become very bitter towards the church, but the Polynesian people may embrace the Gospel and fall into sin, and after a lapse of years, repent and come back to the church apparently with as much faith as ever.

The Indians are natural Latter-Day Saints; even where they are indoctrinated with sectarian ideas they readily embrace the Gospel.

President Cannon spoke of the authority that is embodied in the priesthood of the Son of God. The "Mormons," said he, are a peculiar people, and one thing that tourists notice of is that the Latter-Day Saints are a mixed people, that they have come from all parts of the world, and this, said the speaker, is one of the strongest testimonies of the work of God, this gathering of people from all parts of the world.

Joseph Smith started out with the assertion that all the churches were wrong, but that God would restore His church. This was a most remarkable statement to make. It was the universal belief throughout Christendom that the Bible was all that was necessary to gain salvation. Joseph Smith claimed that he had received authority that was held by the ancient servants of God. Men who had never been taught in theology, were ordained by Joseph Smith to go out and preach the Gospel, with the result that people were converted and the Spirit of God descended upon them, and the gifts that had been enjoyed in ancient days were again experienced. Nearly every land has furnished its quota of believers in the message brought by Joseph Smith. Whenever the Gospel has been embraced the gifts of the gospel have been enjoyed, and it is that which united the people together.

There is nothing that can be met with anywhere that can be compared with the organization of the "Mormon" Church.

The speaker had witnessed hundreds of people gather in cathedrals and worship with apparent sincerity, yet in their midst vice abounded and unvirtuos people were numerous. What good is religion if it does not make a man honest and virtious. Virtue, declared the speaker, has nearly fled from the earth. He thanked God from his heart that he had the revealed principles of righteousness and purity. If it were not for the few Latter-Day Saints who hold to virtue, the world would be lost. Latter-Day Saints must be a virtuous people, if not they will be destroyed. The young people must be trained in purity and virtue, for as sure as God lives, those who indulge in unholy practices will be destroyed, as the antediluvians were detroyed, not by water, but destructions that will be as universal in their effect. God will destroy mankind if they do not repent. The wicked shall be destroyed, with their knowledge of evil, and the Latter-Day Saints will share in these destructions if they do not remain pure and upright.

The Gospel was restored that all who love truth and righteousness and virtue may be gathered out from among the wicked.

The choir sang the anthem, "Lift up your heads, oh ye gates."

Benediction was pronounced by President Jos. E. Taylor.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

HONORABLY RELEASED.

This week's issue announces the release of Elder Jeremiah Stokes, Jr., from labors in the Southern States. Elder Stokes carries with him the love, respect and high esteem of all who knew him. As an Elder in the van of Truth, he was valiant, steadfast, industrious and faithful; and those who have been honored with the privilege of being associated with him in the ministry, speak of him in the highest commendable terms. He was gentle, lovable, kind, good-natured; yet was he firm in his convictions of the truth, fixed in his purposes to do the right, and earnest in his efforts to convert souls to the ways of righteousness and peace. The last five months of his mission were spent in the office, where he labored assiduously for the cause which we are engaged in promulgating. May God bless him, the Holy Spirit attend him, and happiness and success be his to enjoy.

"WHAT WERE HIS RESOURCES?"

The Apostle Paul, in writing to the beloved Timothy, makes this emphatic declaration: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." (2 Tim. 3:16, 17). New England agnosticism and higher criticism of the written word—the Holy Bible—apparently do not care to accept these words, spoken by a true servant of the Lord Jesus in simple, plain, unequivocal language. Our reason for making this assertion is, that Rev. Lyman Abbott, who succeeded Henry Ward Beecher, in a recent public address delivered in Boston, declared that the Book of Genesis was a myth—a legend written before the flood by some unknown Prophet—and that it was impossible for Moses to have known of the things that transpired 2,000 years before he was born, and he asks: "What were his resources if they were not legends and myths?" We do not wish to take issue with the learned divine of Plymouth, but merely desire to say a word in defense of the good "Old Book," and, if possible, bring to light some of the "resources" which the Prophet Moses—"God's first pen," had access to, and which the "great preacher" overlooked in his eagerness to foster Higher Criticism.

Let us first see the prominence given the Prophet Moses over those other Prophets of Old Testament times. The Lord Jesus, when giving the parable of Lazarus and the rich man, said, "If they will not believe Moses and the Prophets, neither will they believe though one rose from the dead." Yes! and furthermore He gave the Jews to understand that the rejection of His message was due to their not believing the words of Moses, for, said He, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me." The words of the Savior certainly gives Moses a prominent position in the ranks of holy men and inspired seers, and when we learn that the Lord gave unto him the laws and statutes by which the children of Israel were to be governed; that it was Moses who was intrusted with the tables of stone upon which were written the ten commandments by the finger of God; that it was Moses who stood in the presence of our Eternal Father when the law was thundered from Mount Sinai during that wonderful display of divine power and majestic glory; that it was Moses who stood on the mount of transfiguration when our Lord was transfigured and glorified in the presence of the Apostles—Peter, James and John; and that it was Moses of whom the Apostle Paul testified as being faithful as a testimony of those things which were to come after; when we learn all these important events in which the Prophet Moses figured so conspicuously, we are at least convinced of this fact: that he was the vicegerent of the Almighty, and inspired Prophet of the Most High God. This being true, why not give him credit for having wrote all the books known to us as the Pentateuch? How can we believe the New Testament (which the reverend gentleman professes to accept) and at the same time endeavor to demolish and destroy the Old Testament, when the one is revealed and made known in the other? It is altogether inconsistent to indulge in such vain sophistry. Christ and His Apostles accepted the "Law and the Prophets"—the Old Testament—they read from it, preached from it, and from it proved their doctrine and their mission, holy and divine. Peter says that in the days of Noah eight souls were saved by water, while the disobedient perished in the flood. This exactly corroborates with the record given in Genesis, which was written by the hand of Moses. If the account given by Moses is incorrect, then Peter—that stalwart giant for truth—was hoodwinked by a false history, and was also guilty of fostering and maintaining the error by quoting it as authentic unto others. Would it be plausible or feasible to suppose that Peter—blest with the gift of the Holy Ghost, endowed with power from on high, commissioned by the Lord Jesus, and placed at the head of the twelve Apostles—would indulge in "legends," "myths," fables, and the like? It does not appear reasonable to have such vain, erroneous suppositions. Peter possessed, as all true servants of God do, the power to discern between right and wrong; truth and error; good and evil.

But to return to the question of the pastor at Plymouth: "What were his resources, if they were not legends and myths?" Let us see; Jude says something touching upon this subject which may interest us somewhat, and throw a ray of inspired light upon the question. Here are his words, "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints." If Jude, living at a period some 2,000 years after the flood, understood and knew of the prophesies of Enoch, who was only the seventh in descent from Adam, is it not quite consistent and reasonable to believe that Moses had the writings of this holy man Enoch before him when he wrote the book of Genesis? If Enoch—just and righteous seer—prophesied of the coming of Christ—why should these prophesies be hid from Moses, when God had called him to be a leader and a Prophet unto Israel? We understand "the Gospel was preached unto Abraham." (Gal. 3:8.) Abraham came on the scene of action before Moses, and so he (Moses) had another resource, without giving heed to "legends and myths." This would give the faithful Moses at least two most worthy and divinely reliable witnesses, from whom he could gather facts and incidents as material for the composition of the former part of Genesis—at least that portion that bears record of events which transpired in their own day, and previous to their birth.

Moreover when we come to understand that Moses walked and talked with God, and that he was blessed with revelation and inspiration, being in communion with the heavens, and in close touch and intercourse with his Creator, we can very readily see that his resources were of the very best and most substantial nature. Could one desire a more worthy source of edification than to be privileged to have access to the teachings of the righteous Enoch and the faithful Abraham, together with the choice, divine gift of conversing "face to face" with his Maker—the just and merciful law-giver? No! for the latter—revelation—is the surest and best means of enlightenment and correctness, in any line of study or branch of science.

When we gather with the righteous and the blest in that bright, eternal city of the New Jerusalem; when the earth shall be as a sea of glass, being full of the glory of God; we shall hear the heavenly choir chanting in sweet melody the songs we love so dear, and, among other beautiful hymns which fall upon the ear, filling the heart with joy and the soul with gladness, shall be heard "the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are Thy ways, thou King of Saints." (Rev. 15:3.) Yes, and when we shall hear this angelic strain by heavenly beings sung, then shall we know, even as the Apostle John states, that Moses is a "servant of God," and, as such, he demands our love, respect, honor, and confidence. Perhaps when we meet him in that home of peace and bliss, we shall find that his resources were many, and that he had access to a great many sacred rolls and holy books, which we today are lacking. The young and tender mind is so apt to become infected and infatuated with this Scripture-destroying, seductive influence, known as Higher Criticism, that we feel to say, Let reason weigh the mountains, count the planets, and measure the distance from earth to sun, but in matters pertaining to the divinity, sacredness, and authorship of Scriptural writings, let revelation speak. She hath spoken, and we know that Moses did write the books accorded him in the Bible; therefore let us stand by the good word of God, accept the writings of inspired seers as holy and true, and not quibble and say, "Where were his resources."

THE ELDERS DEFENDED.

In another part of this week's issue we are pleased to publish an article written by a Virginian in behalf of the Elders. The writer is not of our faith, yet feels a desire to do something to lessen the unjust persecutions heaped upon the Elders. We take the liberty of quoting from the letter accompanying the able article: "I am endeavoring to do my duty in the sphere where God has placed me." "I have great sympathy for these men who are subjected to such harsh criticisms—such cruel hardships, and I would like to feel that I had done something (though of course it is very little) to lessen their burdens." "I know they do not deserve such treatment as they have received, and are still receiving." "Many of the Elders have stayed with us; some while canvassing in this county, others who have been journeying through our neighborhood. I always found them humble, meek, deserving Christians." "I thought that this article would have more weight if published in one of our papers, so I sent it to a church periodical, but they refused to publish it—said it was unsuitable for their columns."

That the article was not suitable for the church paper is no surprise to us, for these good Christian editors do not care to deal out justice to the much hated Mormon Elders. No, they prefer to have false articles stain their inspired (?) pages, in an endeavor to darken the minds of the people in regard to the true religion of Christ, as taught and practiced by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

DEMISE OF JOHN JAQUES.

Deseret News.

John Jaques died at his home, 530 East South Temple street, at 6 o'clock last evening of Bright's disease, after an illness of seven weeks. Prior to the attack of that dreadful malady Mr. Jaques had been a very healthy and active man, and the rapidity with which the disease sapped his vitality and laid him low, was remarkable. John Jaques was the assistant historian of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and general Church recorder. In those positions he was eminently efficient.

He was born in Market Bosworth, Leicestershire, England, on Jan. 7, 1827, and had consequently attained to a ripe old age. In his youth he joined the "Mormon" Church, and emigrated to Utah in 1856, being a member of the famous handcart company. His brave heart and cheerful nature did much towards encouraging the more despondent members of the company. When a young man he evinced no mean literary ability, and was given a position on the Millennial Star, then located in London. He held that position until his departure for Utah.

Soon after his arrival in Salt Lake, Mr. Jaques secured a position on the Daily Telegraph, which was published by T. B. H. Stenhouse. He followed the paper to Ogden, but subsequently accepted the position of associate editor of the Deseret News. His work was always satisfactory, being a careful, painstaking writer, and at the same time forceful. After serving the News a few years he was called to a postition in the historian's office, where he labored carefully and assiduously during the remainder of his life. He rose to the position of assistant Church historian and general Church recorder in October, 1881.

John Jaques was a strong man, his abilities rising high above the average. He was useful wherever he was placed, and performed several missions abroad. He was the author of the catechism, a most valuable work for the children of the Saints.

Accept Your Lot.

A plow in the shop, polished and equipped, wanted a field. It understood its mission—to stir the ground and kill the weeds and make the corn grow. So it received a call. But it was not a promising field. The ground was hard, and there were stumps and stones. The corn was not thrifty, but the weeds were. The plow had expected mellow soil, and a luxuriant growth of good things. So it was discouraged and resigned. At last another field was found, but there were clods and weeds and hardened soil in it also; so the plow again resigned. And thus it went from field to field till plowing time was past. Now the plow is on the shelf in the barn.—St. Louis Observer.

Quantity or Quality?

The Presbyterian general assembly is reported to have declared that the supply offering for the ministry is insufficient. This is contrary to the popular impression, which has it that there are more applicants for positions as clergymen than there are profitable pulpits. But possibly the Presbyterian sages were talking about the quality rather than quantity of the theological students. The quality may be "insufficient," while the quantity is abundant. The point should be cleared up. Whenever there is a profitable pulpit vacant—always remembering the qualification profitable—there is a rush for it, which indicates, strange to say, that in the minds of modern preachers, the laborers are plentiful, while the harvest—in dollars—is scarce.

Sorrow's Lesson.

'Tis well all souls were made to suffer,
That each for others' woes might feel;
For pain unlocks the door of mercy—
So learns the wounding hand to heal.
—O. F. Whitney.

CHARACTER OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

Hon. Thomas Fitch, a non-Mormon, speaks eloquently of the great founder, at the Anniversary Celebration, Salt Lake City June 1, 1900.

(Extracts from Deseret News.)

My friends, the man whose birth we commemorate and whose memory we honor today was known to me not through the report of others, but with an intimacy born of the relation of lawyer and client, an intimacy which soon ripened into a friendship which continued until he passed into the beyond. A quarter of a century has gone since he bade me farewell with a blessing which, although not of his creed, I did not scorn, yet his vital and vigorous personality seems as if it were here today, throbbing with life and strong in purpose.

It is such perceptions as these of the continued existence of those who have journeyed on that—without help from the dogmas of theologians, and without hindrance from the greater dogmas of scientists—come to us at times, and then with an intuition that is higher than reason we are convinced that our little life here is not rounded with a sleep, that it does not moulder to ashes in the dark house or perish in the incinerating flame, but that it goes out to broader fields of effort, to grander cycles of time, to worlds before which this world shall pale as a star pales in the presence of the morning.

This is no time nor place to speak either in criticism or in defense of the religious faith in which and by which Brigham Young lived and died, nor of the peculiar tenet of that faith which excited the animosity and inspired the hostile action of the religious and political world of America.

Yet it may not be unfitting to remark in this connection that while "the Lord loveth those whom he chasteneth," it often happens that the chastened ones do not immediately reciprocate the affection. History is filled with examples of people who have accepted in good faith the results of defeat on the battlefield or at the ballot box, or in the court room, and who yet have not hastened to love and reward those who, in their opinion, had "despitefully used them." Much of the prejudice that has been created and kept alive in the east against the people of Utah has resulted in part from the selfish obstinacy of a few Latter-day Saints who have preferred adherence to their own opinions to the welfare of their people; but it has resulted also from the unphilosophical unwillingness of some of those who successfully conducted the campaign against Utah's peculiar institution to content themselves with the moral results of their victory.

Time will correct all this. It will appear to all who study the situation without prejudice that the practice of plural marriage is at an end, and the missionary zeal of the misinformed will abate when this utter extinction becomes apparent to the world.

With it will disappear all that is objectionable in the religion of the Latter-day Saints, and the people of Utah will no longer be subject to criticism on account of their domestic relations. The civilized world has reached the conclusion that belief is not a matter of volition, that the will of man cannot dominate his brain, and that it is not given to priest or philosopher to sit in judgment upon any faith in the hereafter which restrains the evil passions and uplifts the purposes of mankind.

Heredity, environment, education, all contribute to fashion our beliefs and unbeliefs. The profoundest intellects of the orient accept the teachings of Buddah, of Confucius, or of Zoroaster. Scholars and statesmen proclaim that there is but one God and Mahomet is His prophet, and those who are now in the youth of their old age can recall the days when any sect of the Christian church would have expelled from its membership any one who dared to doubt the literal truth of the story of the sun's obedience to Joshua, or the narrative of the muscular exploits of Sampson, or the tale of the sojourn of Jonah in the interior of the whale, or the absolute verity of any of the numerous allegories of the divine philosophy.

The faith of the Latter-day Saints with polygamy eliminated differs but little in spirit or in detail from any evangelical creed. Its followers accept the ten messages of the thunder as the origin of all law for human government, they sit reverently at the feet of the crucified Christ, and their belief in the revelations of their prophets is as reasonable as many features of the creed of Christendom.

Indeed, the logicians, the skeptics and the theologians may all suggest that if revelation from God to man be a truth at all, why should it have ceased nineteen hundred years ago? Why should it not have continued until the present time through such inspired ones as might be selected by the Almighty as batteries to receive and interpret His message to mankind?

An effort—should effort be anywhere made—to now place the people of Utah under a cloud because of their theological idiosyncracies will fail—utterly. The world is moving into the new century. It has left behind it the rusted racks of Torquemada, the cold ashes of the fagot in which Socrates roasted, and the wrecks of the pillories in which the Puritans tortured the Quakers.

Brigham Young lived according to his light, and no prophet, priest or seer in all history was more sincere than he in believing that the light came from above. His spiritual and material systems were both engraftures upon a Puritan tree. He was a Vermont Pericles, an American Cromwell, a western Columbus; but he was above all the very incarnation of the Puritan idea.

The Pilgrims launched boldly out into the Atlantic and trusted God. The Pilgrim spirit was not confined to any religion or race. Lord Bacon was a Puritan in spirit, for as he takes his proud march down the centuries he may lay one hand on the steam engine and the other on the dynamo, and say, "These are mine, for I taught you how to invent." Columbus was imbued with the Puritan spirit when he made the historic reply to his remonstrating first officer—

"What shall I say, great captain, say,
If we sight naught but sea at dawn?
Why you shall say at break of day,
Sail, sail on, sail on and on."

Brigham Young, like his Athenian prototype, was formative in his ideas. He was a masculine man. He was instinctively an architect—a builder—a creator. He loved to plan houses, to organize industries, to provide for the erection of mills and factories. The overland railroad and telegraph lines through Utah, and the great irrigating canals were constructed under his guidance.

He would tolerate no slighting or inefficient work. Every stone in the temple from foundation to spire was cut to exactly fit its place. While a part of the foundation was being laid President Young was absent. On his return he visited the work and noticed a mason placing "spawls' or chips of granite under one of the blocks. "What is that for?' he inquired. 'In order to make the stone level,' was the reply. "How much of that kind of work has been done?" he sternly asked. "All the way down," was the answer. "Then," said he, 'tear it out all of the way down and begin over. Make every stone fit its neighbor, and stand level without any 'spawls,' and when the stones don't fit cut and shape them until they will fit.'

He had the patience with small annoyances that is an attribute of a great and placid soul. He brushed away the gad-flies instead of trying to crush them. His suaviter in modo was superb, but the forties in re was behind it. Beneath the velvet glove was the grip of steel. He was the Cromwell of his people, the lord protector of his realm. He had the same desire as the great covenanter for the freedom of his creed and clan; the same intense belief in the righteousness and wisdom of his own institutions; the same intolerance of interference with his methods; the same instincts of leadership; the same love of power.

A thousand miles toward the sunrise the Missouri rolls its turbid flood, yet in thirty-six hours we may journey here from there in a luxurious car. But the men and women who founded this commonwealth plodded for weary weeks across alkaline deserts under the fierce throbbing light, and over mountains torn from the tortured breast of chaos and thrown away upon the world. Footsore and weary, yet submissive to discipline and undaunted of soul, they faced the storm and the savage of the desert and disease, with the spirit of the Spartans whose messages to the ages is graven upon the rocks of Thermopylae:

'Go stranger, and in Lacedemonia tell,
That here, obedient to her laws we fell."

And ever in the vanguard was the leader—comforting, cheering, advising and encouraging his band, and with brave and prophetic messages inspiring them even as Napoleon inspired his troops when he said: "Soldiers, from the heights of yonder pyramids forty centuries look down upon you." The foliaged avenues and gardened palaces of the capital of Utah—the most beautiful city in the United States—were planned and planted under the direction of Brigham Young, and this magnificent pavillion—unrivaled in Europe or America—where the ozone of mountain heights mingles with the sweet salt breath of an inland sea is an offspring of his policy of improving every natural advantage of Utah.

President Young was an ardent and persistent advocate and helper of the cause of education. He was an architect of States as of temples, and in the erection of both he provided for the future. He knew that no edifice, whether of character or of granite, can be erected without a solid foundation, and that the education of the school room is the foundation of the house of life.

Under President Young's direction education of children extended to morals and manners as well as music and mathematics. The boys in Zion's schools did not smoke cigarettes during recess. Slander and malicious gossip were strangers in the homes of Utah, and there was ever a single standard of morality for men and women. The head of the Latted-Day Saints advised his young people to aim high, and make a point of reaching their aim, and if they fell below it to go at it again wtih redoubled zeal, for he knew that high and inflexible purpose is truth upon a cycle, swift, silent and sure to get there.

In private conversation as in public speech President Young's words were apt and to the point, and he aboundoned in homely and forceful metaphors. Said he, in my presence, to a young man who sought his counsel: "No man can make it rain, but any man can keep his platter right side up, so as to get some of it when it does rain." To another he remarked: "Be sure there is something you can do thoroughly well, and it is your business to find out what that something is. Don't fritter away your time by attempting the impossible. Remember that genius is often judgment." The enthusiastic Methodist brother who was haunted day and night by letters "G. P. C.," believed that it was a divine call to "Go Preach Christ." But, after his ministrations had driven away the congregation, he concluded that the letters really meant "go plant corn."

The history of Brigham Young has, except in Utah, been written by his enemies, who have allowed their hatred of one feature of the strange new faith which he preached and practiced to blind them to his greatness and goodness. He wronged no man. He lied to no man. He kept the faith with all men. He was just and generous, and charitable. He was loyal to his people, his country and his convictions of right. He was gentle and courteous. He was wise in counsel and fearless and unwavering in action. He ought not to be judged by ordinary standards.

No men and women in all this land are more progressive than are those of Utah. They do not resemble the man of whom Douglas Jerrold said, "He can never fully relish the new moon out of respect for that honorable institution the old one." The Latter-Day Saints have adopted some valuable legal and social reforms. When an advanced thought presents itself they do not telephone for police protection, they give it hospitable welcome. They limit by law the hours of labor; they compel the manager of stores to provide seats for female help; they prohibit blacklisting; they make wages a preferred debt, and exempt them from garnishment; they have modified the common law injustice which denies redress against the employer to the employee injured through the negligence of a fellow servant; they punish those who overwork or underfeed dumb animals; they were pioneers in establishing woman suffrage, and their legislatures have never yet sold a senatorial toga.

I have already sugested that the Puritan spirit has ever pervaded and controlled not only the spiritual and intellectual but the economic life of Utah. Brigham Young adopted the plan of building villages in which those who tilled the soil should live, and whence they would go forth to their labors in the surrounding fields. In the early New England settlements this method was adopted for more efficient defense against the Indians, with whom the colonists were usually so unfriendly that Lowell was impelled to say that "the Pilgrim fathers first fell upon their knees and then fell upon the aborigines." President Young's motive was to guard the young men and women against the discontent engendered by lonely and isolated lives, and to make farm life attractive by affording opportunity for social gatherings and rational amusements.

It has sometimes been charged against Brigham Young that he was disloyal to the government of the United States. This unjust aspersion rests solely upon the conjectures of his enemies, for there cannot be found a single authenticated act of utterance of his to sustain the accusation. When demand was made by President Polk upon the scattered, hunted, and depleted fugitives from Nauvoo for a battalion of 500 men for the Mexican war, Brigham Young replied without hesitation: "You shall have your battalion, Capt. Allen, and if there are not young men enough we will take the old men, and if they are not enough we will take the women." The battalion was raised without delay, and on the eve of its departure the leader of his people said to them: "I want to say to every man that the Constitution of the United States, as framed by our fathers, was dictated, was revealed, was put into their hearts by the Almighty, and I tell you in the name of Jesus Christ, it is as good as I ever could ask for. I say unto you, magnify the laws. There is no law in the United States or in the Constitution but I am ready to make honorable."

The loyalty which Brigham Young proclaimed in those early days he maintained unto the end. In 1872, when his liberty and his life were menaced by those who were using the forms of law to compass their designs, there were some among his own people who advised resistance, and some who advised flight, but he promptly rebuked all such counsel. He held his American citizenship, as among the most valued of his possessions. Once, when it was learned that an indictment for a non-bailable crime had been found against him by a picked and packed grand jury, and that he would soon be arrested and probably incarcerated at Camp Douglas, a prominent member of his church said to him in my presence: "President Young, remember the fate of Joseph Smith. Do not place yourself in the power of merciless enemies. From this room the road is open to you unto a safe retreat in the mountains of Mexico, and there are not enough deputy marshals or troops in Utah to overtake or capture you." The grand old man arose, and outstretched his arm with that gesture of mingled patience and power which the artist has presented in his statue, and exclaimed: "No, brethren, there is no road open for me in which to travel as a fugitive from my people or my country. I will meet these false accusers face to face and defend myself to the uttermost. The Supreme Court of the United States will give us justice, and God will not desert me."

The cities of Utah today with their hundreds of miles of graded and shaded avenues, with their iron arms reaching out for the traffic of a mountain empire, with their glowing furnaces, their clanking forges, their humming factories, their miles of costly and beautiful homes, their palaces of art and industry and trade, their trolley cars propelled by prisoned waterfalls—all lived in the brain of Brigham Young when—53 years ago—he looked from the summit of Big Mountain upon the Salt Lake valley, and exclaimed: "Enough, this is the right place, drive on."

The age through which we have passed is but the herald of the age upon which we are entering. The pioneers have broken the path, it is for you, oh, young men and women of today, to follow. It is for you to lay check upon the wrong, to give encouragement and direction to the right, to place all your resources under contribution, to develop the posisbilities within you, to train your hands to the magnetic needle of self-government, to broaden your mantle of charity, to strengthen your discernment of error, to teach yourselves self-restraint and self-control.

The lesson that may be drawn from the life which we honor this day is that it is best to be patient, to be wise, to be strong, to be brave, to be hopeful, and—above all—to be good. Virtue is surely its own reward. It may be that in our earth-life it is sometimes the only reward that virtue ever receives, yet it is a reward nevertheless. I am neither sage, moralist, nor preacher, but I have found in a life that has mainly been one of toil and battle, that the success or gratification which comes from disregard of the higher and better impulses of the soul is always uncompensating. Such fruit will ever be Dead Sea apples—ashes and dust.

The bronzes of conquest on the column Vendome in Paris perpetuate the memory of triumphs won by Napoleon, who desolated a world that he might illumine a throne. But no story of blood or tears mars the harmony of the greeting which all Utah sends today, even into the All Hail Hereafter, to the leader whose bronze image stands under the shadow of the anthem in granite he planned, stands in death as in life, watching over his Israel with unslumbering eyes. The paths which he hewed through the passes and over the summits are now resonant with the rush of iron feet, and about the ashes of his camp-fires cities have grown, yet not for many generations will his name and his fame be forgotten by the people he served and loved so well.

An Appeal to Virginians in Behalf of Mormon Elders.

BY A VIRGINIA EPISCOPALIAN.

Representatives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly known as Mormons, have for some time been doing active work in Virginia, and bitter indeed has been the opposition with which they have met. Very few there are, who pause long enough to see any good in a Mormon Elder. The mere fact that he is a Mormon is enough, in the opinion of some, to call down the combined wrath of heaven and earth upon him; so strong is the prejudice against them. So cruel are the indignities to which they are subjected, so persistently are they abused and dogged from place to place, that the sympathy of a few who call them friends has been justly aroused and they are determined to do something to alleviate the suffering of this unfortunate class of men. It is in the name of this small band that this appeal is written.

We, Virginians, know very little about the people whom these men represent; very little, comparatively speaking, about the teaching of their church, their customs, etc., being so far removed from them; but the mere fact that they are followers of God ought to be enough to cause us to stop and reflect before subjecting them to any unnecessary hardship. Some of you have such an unbounded dislike for the whole Mormon church and the Elders in particular, that you seem to lose sight of this. And yet, it is a fact. They worship the same God that we worship. They believe in the same Redeemer that we believe in. They believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that He came into the world to save us from our sins.

Any of the Elders will tell you, if you allow them, that this is their belief. They acknowledge and worship the only true God—The Holy Father—and if they choose to serve Him in a way that is different from our own private and personal way, is it fair, is it Christ-like, to close our doors against them? You worship Him in the way that seems the most acceptable to you, according to your understanding of the Scripture, and I in the way that seemeth best to me, and thus it is throughout this whole broad land of ours. We all, as a nation, acknowledge Him, but claim the right at the same time to worship Him according to the dictates of our own conscience, our own religious convictions, as individuals. It is a privilege we all enjoy. And while, no doubt, it is right for us, each and every one, to serve Him in the way that seems most acceptable, and not only to serve Him ourselves, but to lead others to serve Him in our way, we should be very careful to guard against bigotry. Of course, we should let our light shine at all times, but then we must not think because we are right that everyone else who does not conform to our particular faith is wrong. We have no right to judge another. After all, we do not know that ours is the most acceptable form. We may think it is; we hope it is; but then we do not know. At any rate, it is certainly very uncharitable to condemn those who, as worshipers of God, are just as sincere in their religious convictions as we are in ours. It is unkind. It is un-Christlike. Do not condemn them or turn them away, my friends, without at least giving them a hearing. Even the meanest criminal is allowed to say a word in his defense. Take them in and talk with them calmly and quietly, about their doctrine; then, after you have obtained a fair knowledge of their belief, compare it with your own and point out to them what you believe to be erroneous.. It will do no harm and it is undoubtedly your duty.

They come among us as missionaries, as servants of God, and as such we ought to receive them, no matter how widely in many points we differ in religious opinions. How can you expect or hope for our own missionaries to be kindly treated by the heathen—those poor benighted creatures who have never known the refining, softening influences of the religion of Christ—while we, who live in the broad daylight of God's blessed Gospel, treat these men so inhuman, so shamefully? Is it possible that you expect more of the heathen than you are willing to give?

Possibly, you think that you are justified in your course of action by feeling perfectly sure that your way of serving God is the right one and the Mormons are wholly in the wrong and ought, therefore, to be supressed. And so you go rigorously to work to do all you can towards what you believe to be your Christian duty.

My friends, just stop for a moment and reflect. Do not deceive yourselves by any such false idea of Christianity. That is not the religion of Christ.

Our dear Master is just as surely a God of love and mercy today as He was when He bade him who was without sin cast the first stone at her, who was accused, so many years ago; He loves each and every one of us, and the Mormons, despised though they are, are just as surely His children as you and I. They may hold erroneous ideas, but we do, too, perhaps. They may be the least among His children; but they are undoubtedly His. He, Himself, told you that when he said "He that is not against us is for us." Luke 9:50. And being His children, He certainly loves them as such and will surely hold you responsible for any suffering that you cause them, either directly or indirectly. Remember that, for while He is a God of love and mercy, He is also a God of justice. But granting that your form of worship is the right one, that you have rightly interpreted the Bible teaching and that you are serving God in the way that is most acceptable, so far as doctrine is concerned, and the Mormons are a misguided people, wholly and entirely in the dark.

Are you leading them any nearer to Christ by closing your doors against them? Do you think you are helping them to find the true light by refusing to allow them to tell you one word concerning their belief? Do you think you are showing them that your religion is one that enjoins love and charity to all men when you refuse them even so much as a night's shelter?

Is this the blessed religion of Christ? Is this the charity that covereth a multitude of faults? The charity that suffereth long and is kind?

But, laying aside the religious part of the question, you ought to receive them and treat them kindly for humanity's sake. It is not much they ask of you—only shelter and a little food. Surely that is very little to give a fellow-creature in need. They are strangers in a strange land, as it were, and entirely dependent upon your kindness and when you refuse to take them in and care for them, they must suffer. There is no alternative, they have no means, no way of providing for themselves. In accordance with their doctrine, they carry no money on these tours, believing that they are doing the will of God in traveling as He commanded His disciples to travel. (Mark 9:7-10.) That is their belief; they try to live up to it, and surely it is as little as we can do, to provide them with food and shelter while they are in our midst. Do not close your doors against them, my friends. I beseech you, in the name of humanity, in the name of God, in the name of Him who was, Himself, a stranger and a wanderer here, not to turn these men away—away from your homes, away from your hearts, to wander on, weary and uncared for.

Abstracts From Correspondence.

Old Town, Lafayette County, Fla.

To The Star:

With a desire to testify to the truthfulness of the gospel, which we embraced on March 18th, 1899, we pen you a few lines:

Having become disgusted with religion, for in the world we could see nothing but confusion and contention. The first time we ever heard the pure gospel of Christ was in February, 1898. Elders Watts and Coombs called at her house and asked for entertainment for the night. We were well pleased with them and invited them to call again. After hearing them preach four times we were convinced that they were the messengers of the pure gospel, having all the gifts and blessings promised to the pure and obedient of our Lord. At the time we applied for baptism we were both unwell.

After baptism the Elders administered to us and we immediately recovered. This with other things has been a strong testimony to us. We wish to bear witness to all people that the gospel is true and Joseph Smith was a prophet of God.

Yours in the Gospel,

J. W. Bennett.
Nancy Bennett.

Rockwood, Tenn.

To The Star:

I trust you will allow me space in your paper that I may bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel. I do not only believe, but I know that the gospel preached and practiced by the Latter-Day Saints is the one accepted by our Father; being the same as taught by our Savior, while on earth. I know that Joseph Smith is a prophet of the true and living God. I was baptized July 20, 1897, by Elder D. W. Jeffs. The same day my mother being ill the Elders administered to her and she received strength and relief at once; arising from her bed she assistetd in preparing dinner, and attended the baptizing in the afternoon. Praying that all saints may ever have the holy spirit to guide them in the paths of righteousness. Your sister in the Gospel,

Virgie Ellis.

Lincolnton, N. C.

To The Star:

A few nights back, while traveling the roads through rain, in quest of a place to tarry for the night (having been turned from many doors) my thoughts were, "how would I receive a stranger if he called at my door?" Surely he would not be turned away. There are many blessings awaiting those who entertain the servants and children of God. If Lot had turned from his door the angels he would have been destroyed with the wicked of Sodom. "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." The words of Christ should be a warning to those who profess to be Christians, yet they obey not his teachings. "For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me no drink; I was a stranger, and yet took me not in."

"Then shall they also answer him, saying: Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee? Then shall he answer them, saying, verily, I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." (Matt 25; 42-45.)

Again we are commanded to do unto others as we would have them do unto us. "If thine enemy hunger, feed him, if he thirst, give him drink, for by so doing you heap coals of fire upon his own head." If we love the Lord we will do as he commands.

Elder W. C. Packer.

Thanks God for His Cigar.

"Mr. President," said Bishop Stevens at the recent general council of the Reformed Episcopal church in Baltimore, "I smoke, and I shall continue to smoke. I don't believe the use of tobacco is as bad as it has been described; I believe it is all a piece of will worship. God has never said anywhere that we shall not be ministers of His Gospel if we do use it. God provided for every need in nature, and I thank God for my cigar."

GLEANINGS.

A few weeks ago, Elder J. A. Wixon, having been honorably released, paid the office brethren a visit, while en route home. His most pleasant hours were while examining into our mode of condusting a paper. These were happy moments to him, and often his mind wandered back to days past, when he too used to handle type. His thoughts centered upon the beauties of the paste pot, and the never-failing friend of an editor—"the scissors," Elder Wixon is now busily engaged reading choice poetry, etc., as the following clipping from the Box Elder News, Brigham City, will tell:

Announcement.

It is with pleasure that we announce that Mr. J. A. Wixon has purchased an interest in the Box Elder News and will hereafter be associated with Hyrum Standing and S. C. Wilson in the business.

Mr. Wixom has for many years past been in the newspaper business and is a practical printer. We fell that the company will be greatly strengthened by acquiring his assistance and that our patrons will be also benefited.

The home of Brother and Sister Topham, of Paragoonah, Utah, was made happy a short time ago, by the arrival of a visitor—viz. a baby boy. Elder Topham labored in the Southern States as a missionary and did a good work. He lives in hope his son may fill a similar mission to that of his father some day. The Star sends congratulations. "The harvest is great and the laborers are few," so there will be plenty of room for the junior Topham.

* * * * * *

For some time past Elders C. N. Corbridge and Manasseh Smith have been holding a series of meetings near Tyus, Ga. One evening after the close of meeting rocks were thrown at the house by unknown parties, but the Elders took very little notice of the unruly disturbers. The brethren accompanied a friend home and thought when they retired for the night their enemies had lost track of them. Such was not the case, however, for about 11 o'clock the bigots surrounded the house and fired a number of shots, presumably into the air. The armed cowards carried their plans no further, knowing full well that a man in the south will protect his guests against abuse, preferring to lay down his life for them, rather than have them harmed while under his roof.

THE DEAD.

Sister Alice Cherry, wife of Brother H. C. Cherry, departed this life May 6, 1900. She was born May, 1858, in Beaufort county, N. C.

She was a kind and devoted soul, and leaves a devoted husband, eight children and a host of friends.

Both she and her husband were baptized March 19, 1899, and have lived faithful Latter-day Saints.

Sister Eliza Willford, of Clay county, Florida, met with a sad accident on the 18th ult. Her clothing caught fire and burned her so badly she only lived a very few hours. The sister was about 67 years of age and always tried to live up to all the light she had received. She has always been kind and loving and will be missed by Elders, Saints and friends.

VOL. 2. CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1900. No. 29.

HOPE, FAITH, LOVE; THREE LESSONS.

There are three lessons I would write;
Three words as with a burning pen,
In tracing of eternal light
No night but hath its morn.

Have hope. Though clouds environ now,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put thou the shadow from thy brow;
No night but hath its morn.

Have faith. Where'er thy bark be driven,
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth,
Know this—God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of the earth.

Have love. Not love alone for one,
But men, as men, thy brothers call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul;
Hope, faith and love—and thou shalt find
Strength when life's surges rudest roll,
Light when thou else wert blind.

—Schiller.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder Don C. Benson.

There is an ancient Greek aphorism which says: "Good men never die." This maxim has stood the critics' test for over a thousand years, and today it remains just as true and accepted, as the day when it was first spoken by the Grecian philosopher. Slightly paraphrased we have it thus: "Good never dies." No! for "to live in hearts we leave behind, is not to die." Apostle Ezra T. Benson was a great and good man, who bestowed upon his posterity an inherent and God-like goodness. Although he passed from this sphere of action some years ago, and now mingles with the just and true of by-gone days, it can truthfully be said of him that he lives in the hearts of those whom he left behind. Apostle Benson was a sturdy pioneer, who braved the wilds of the inter-mountain region, and assisted in the establishment of that beautiful commonwealth which graces the Rockies of the far west by its beneficient presence. Thrice pleased must be this faithful seer, when he beholds his children ministering the word of salvation to those who sit enveloped in spiritual darkness—destitute of divine power, and utterly void of the Gift of the Holy Ghost.

He, whose portrait will be scanned, and whose brief biography will be read by the many readers of this week's Star, is a son of the staunch and firm Apostle—Ezra T. Benson. His presence in the mission field, clearly predicts that the good spirit of his father is not dead, neglected or forgotten. No! for Elder Don C. Benson is declaring the self-same message of life and salvation which his father so gallantly, fearlessly, heroically and faithfully advocated.

Brother Don C. Benson first saw the light of day in Logan, Cache county, Utah, Sept. 29, 1869. A few short years after his birth his father was called beyond the grave and his angel mother was left a widow with six little children to care for. She struggled nobly, and by the help of God she succeeded in bringing them up as is pleasing in the sight of the Lord. She sought by faith and prayer, by counsel and instruction to have her children versed in the laws and ordinances of the Gospel. In his tender years our brother attended the district schools, and when large enough to work, he attended in the winter and labored in the summer. After completing his studies in the district schools, he commenced a course in the Agricultural college, Logan, Utah, but not having much of a desire for scholastic education, his sojourn in the class room was very brief.

Prizing the gospel above all things else in this world, when he received a call to perform a mission, he was found ready to go, and so he reported to the Presidency in Salt Lake City. It was on the 19th of June, 1899, that he arrived in Chattanooga, where he was assigned to labor in the North Kentucky Conference. His first five months in the ministry were spent in the capacity of canvassing Elder, after which he labored as a traveling visiting Elder. When President L. M. Terry was released to return home, April, 1900, Elder Don C. Benson was chosen and appointed to fill his place. Since that time until the present he has taken charge of the affairs in the North Kentucky Conference. Elder Benson is prompt, humble, faithful and true, and bids fair to make a mark in the world. May the blessings of God attend him, and the good spirit of the Lord be present with him.

History of the Southern States Mission.

Elders T. W. Naylor and Albert Matheson held conference with the Middle Tennessee Elders at Beersheba Springs, Grundy County, Tenn., on the 14th and 15th.

Elder Matheson held conference with the East Tennessee and North Carolina Elders. With the former brethren on the 21st and 22d at Jacksboro, Tenn., and with the latter on the 28th and 29th, near Princeton, N. C. At each of the gatherings a good spirit prevailed. At the Priesthood meetings which were held the day after the public meetings closed, the Elders manifested a strong desire to receive counsel; expressing their desire to carry the same into effect.

On the 20th inst., Elders Behrman and Wilson were staying at the house of Bro. James E. Dixon, four miles southwest of Camden, Kershaw County. About 11 p. m. a mob of probably 100 persons surrounded the house and took the Elders outside. Brother Dixon was not at home at the time; the Elders were taken about twenty rods from the house and whipped with a strap, Elder Behrman receiving thirty, and Elder Wilson forty lashes. The mobbers failed in making the Elders promise to leave the county. A day or two previous to this time, some of the houses of the Saints at Fairfield, were raided by the law-breakers, but no Elders were found. The Saints prosecuted twenty-four members of the mob, but they were acquitted by the jury. Twenty-seven Elders arrived on the 25th inst., which greatly strengthened the mission.

September, 1897.

President Kimball's health was improving somewhat, yet not enough to allow him the privilege of visiting the different conferences. Elder Matheson visited the brethren and held the following conferences on the dates mentioned: Virginia Conference at Rudford 11th and 12th, North Alabama at Big Cove, Madison county, on the 18th and 19th, and East Kentucky, the 25th and 26th. In Mississippi, South Alabama, Louisiana and some parts of Florida, the yellow fever (which had broken out in Mississippi the month previous) had spread so much that the efforts of the Elders were badly hampered. Quarantine regulations not only prevented them from moving among the people, but in many cases the mails were stopped.

President J. A. Cornwall, of the Louisiana Conference, not hearing from a large majority of his Elders, was unable to report the condition of his conference.

In the southern part of Mississippi, matters were no better. The Elders simply had to stay in the homes of their friends, contenting themselves by working among them. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, the work progressed favorably. More books were sold, during this month, than any previous month of the year. Seventeen Elders arrived from Zion on the 22d inst. Following is the report of work done by the twelve conferences in the mission, for three months ending Sept. 26, 1897:

Miles walked, 137,524; families visited, 48,535; families re-visited, 34,847; rejected testimonies, 2,717; refused entertainment, 3,520; tracts distributed, 63,620; dodgers distributed, 47,105; books sold, 3,402; books given away, 3,033; books loaned, 1,771; meetings held, 18,525; gospel conversations, 67,410; gospel letters, 4,032; children blessed 252; baptisms, 539.

October, 1897.

Yellow fever was still raging in the gulf states. The presidents of the conferences were requested as they were the month previous, to take their co-laborers from the fever-stricken districts, into the less effected northern counties of their respective states. Quarantine regulations were strict, and compelled the Elders to remain where they were thus stopping the work to a certain extent.

Thomas B. Reed on Life.

"You are well experienced in this world's affairs," I ventured. What do you take to be the object of life? Money?"

"No."

"Individual happiness?"

"Not wholly. Right action. A man should take a part in the affairs of his fellow-men and live up to the dictates of his conscience in acting. He should be of some use. If he has desires, all the better. A desire for anything that will help others and satisfy you is a good thing. A man has a right to desire money or place or public praise, but he has no right to any selfish feeling in the matter. He ought to desire to be liberal and earn his reward by service of some kind.'

"Do you think the world offers as much to individuals as it ever did?"

"If we can trust history, it does. The literature of earlies times seems more complaining than our own. Men were just as dissatisfied a thousand years ago as they are now. Man seems always to have craved a great deal more than he could obtain. Individually, I think the age is richer with opportunities than for ages. The system under which we live is somewhat defective, and many suffer by it; but it is changing and the world grows better. The unselfish man will find enough, I fancy, if he honestly fulfills his duty to his fellow-men. It is all a question of peace of mind, and that can be obtained in various ways—the best one, by doing right."—Success.

A good old dame, who appearantly spent a great deal of her time reading her Bible, was very seriously relating the death of an infant in the neighborhood, to her neighboring friend. "Did the child suffer much?" asked her friend, "Suffer! of course it suffered. Didn't Jesus say "Suffer little children to come unto me?"

THE BOOK OF MORMON—ITS AUTHENTICITY.

A LECTURE GIVEN BY INVITATION, APRIL 29, 1900, BEFORE THE OHIO LIBERAL SOCIETY, CINCINNATI, OHIO, BY ELDER BEN. L. RICH.

On April 29, 1900, Elder Ben. L. Rich, by invitation, appeared before the Ohio Liberal Society at Cincinnati to deliver a lecture upon the Book of Mormon. The G. A. R. Hall was well filled with an appreciative audience and the young man received marked attention. At the close, fifty minutes were devoted by the congregation in asking questions. After the rendition of a beautiful musical program, the chairman introduced the speaker as a young man who was worthy the respect due a gentleman and who would be found fully able to take care of himself.

Ladies and Gentlemen: There is probably no cause so universally discussed, and yet of which so little is known, as the one termed "Mormonism." Most undoubtedly you have all heard of, or read about the "Mormon" people, but probably this is the first opportunity the majority of this audience has ever had of actually seeing a real live "Mormon." By our pious brethren we are branded as a stigma upon our pure civilization. But let those who may raise aspersions upon our people, please to give us an impartial account of their own, and we shall be satisfied. I was born of "Mormon" parents, have been raised in the faith of my fathers and nearly all my life have breathed "Mormon" atmosphere. But until I came east and was made to view myself as others see me, I did not know what a very bad, wicked man I really was. To say that the "Mormon" people and their belief have been erroneously and sinfully abused and misrepresented, is to speak the truth but mildly. "Mormonism" as it is, not as our enemies would have it be, possesses beauty, intelligence, truth and purity. An enforcement of its teachings tends to the development of man morally, spiritually and physically. The practice of its precepts inspires virtue and progression. It looks forward to a perfect consummation of the brotherhood of man, when all men will enjoy the inherent prerogatives of their birth, bound together in mutual co-operation under freedom, truth and righteousness. Such are the purposes and intentions of "Mormonism." Its enemies, however, have put upon its clear brow a repulsive and hideous mask; and thus disfigured and masqueraded, it is exposed to the taunts and mockery of a thoughtless and fickle rabble. Knowing whereof I speak, I hold up before the gaze of all men the Mormon people, as a class, and challenge comparison in patriotism, in education in morality, in tolerance, freedom and humanity, with any other class of mortals; and candidly ask for their parallel, go where you will upon the face of this broad land. Our cause is persecuted largely by a frightened priestcraft—fearful lest it be overthrown and reach a premature doom. Professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, who apparently forget the commandments, "Thou shalt not lie; thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor" are the cause of our misrepresentation. Because of religious fanaticism and bigotry the Mormon adherents were expelled from the confines of a Christian civilization; and in Christian America, Mormon blood has been made to flow like water. In the name of religion and by religious people some of the most inhuman crimes that have crimsoned the pages of history, have been committed. And I ask you to look well into the history of our cause, and see for yourselves if our wide-spread unpopularity cannot be traced to the same religious, unfair, and narrow sorce.

Do not judge our cause from the standpoint of our avowed enemies. Disabuse your minds of prejudice, consider the supporters of "Mormonism" sincere, moral and intelligent; view them and their cause in the light of true American tolerance, determined to give honorable treatment and hear the support of both sides, with an unbiased brain, before passing judgment. Remember that while I am a "Mormon" I do not surrender my rights as a gentleman, and in the presence of ladies and gentlemen I only ask the respect due a gentleman. You may not believe my religion; you may consider me deluded, you may ridicule my faith; but to me my Church and its teachings are most dear. I am thoroughly sincere in my convictions, and ask that my belief may be treated with fairness, liberality and reasonable consideration.

From the religious enthusiast a "Mormon" Elder receives the arguments of abuse, denunciations and ridicule, but from liberal minds he expects more humane and consistent treatment.

The religious organization to which I belong is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It is falsely called the "Mormon" Church and its teachings, "Mormonism:" because it affirms the Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon.

The Book of Mormon purports to be a history of the ancient inhabitants of America, the progenitors of the Indian. It holds that a people left the old world many centuries ago, and were led by the hand of God to the land now called "America." The first colony came to this continent soon after the confusion at Babel, when people were scattered upon "all the face of the earth." Here they lived, prospered and flourished for a time, until finally through wickedness and by internal dissention they became exterminated. A history of themselves, which they kept, and a scanty compilation of which the book of Mormon contains, was found by a people who subsequently inhabited the hemisphere. The second colony, with which the Book of Mormon deals principally, left Jerusalem, under the leadership of one Lehi, shortly before the Babylonian captivity of the Jews They set sail from the Arabian sea and under trying circumstances, landed on the western coast of South America, near the present site of Valparaiso, Chili. This transpired in the sixth century before Christ. The story is a long one, and as I am to give reason for my belief in the Book of Mormon and not to give the narrative of the people which it records, my account must be curtailed. After the death of Lehi, the patriarch or leader of the little colony, a división of the people was effected through the jealously of brothers, and two tribes or nations resulted, one called Lamanites after Laman, a son of Lehi, and the other Nephites, after Nephi, brother of Laman. Years passed, the inhabitants of the new world grew in numbers, expanded and quarreled. One nation tended towards civilization and advancement; the other by indolence and debauchery deteriorated, and in the course of years became an inferior and benighted people.

However, in the third or fourth century after Christ, the condition of the better class was wickedness itself. In a frightful war of extermination the race known as the Nephites was blotted out, or what remained became absorbed in the numbers of the Lamanites. Divisions arose, clans, tribes and nations broke off and grew away from each other. Some retained many of the arts of civilization; others retrograded. In 1492 Columbus discovered a remnant of this Lamanite nation and called them Indians. To this day scientists are unable to divine the direct origin of this copper colored race.

The Book of Mormon holds that among the people known as Nephites there lived prophets and Holy Men of God. Some wrote histories of the travels and wars of the people, others wrote prophecies and exhortations, while others recorded the ministry of Christ, upon this continent after His resurrection, and of His teachings and commandments. Many of these writings were handed down from one dynasty to another, from one ruler to another, until the time of a prophet named Mormon, who engraved upon metallic plates a compilation or an abridgement of nearly all these records. He condensed the writings into a small volume, gave each section or book the name of its original author, and entrusted the keeping of the work to his son, who finished the work and hid it away in the earth. The metal book has been described as a volume of thin gold sheets, of the thickness of common tin. engraved on both sides and bound or fastened on one edge by three rings; in dimensions it measured about eight inches in length, seven in width and six in thickness.

On the night of September 23, 1823, Joseph Smith, a young man of eighteen years, while engaged in fervent and faithful prayer, received an answer to his supplications by the manifestation of a heavenly messenger, an angel who gave his name as Moroni; said that he had lived upon this continent long ago, the last of a succession of prophets; said that his father's name was Mormon, also a prophet, who had compiled a set of records of the ancient occupants of this continent which contained a fullness of the gospel of Christ.

Joseph was told many things about the race of man and its destiny, about the apostacy from the gospel established of Christ; and was promised on condition of his faithfulness, purity and chastity that he would be made an instrument in instituting under truth, a mighty reformation of the human family. He was told that throughout the world his name would be held for good by those who love and know the truth, and for evil by the wicked and unenlightened. The resting place of the records was made known, and instructions given concerning their translation and his preparation for his life's labors. After an elapse of four years Joseph Smith obtained the plates from their place of deposit, a hill twenty-five miles southwest of Rochester, N. Y., and with much difficulty incident to the severest kind of persecution, translated them. In 1829 the Book was published. Since then it has been printed in every language of the civilized world.

Such in extreme brevity, eliminating much that would interest and instruct, is the account of the Book of Mormon.

It is considered very unpopular to believe in the manifestation of angels nowadays, and some say it is not fashionable to believe even in a God. I do not know, I am sure, what you may think of a person who honestly and sincerely believes in the genuiness and truthfulness of the Book of Mormon. But there are thousands of men in intelligence, who peer the peers and who, not without cause or reason, accept the Book of Mormon and affirm it to be what it purports. If it is true it contains the secret of human salvation. If it is false, while it will elevate the human family by moral precepts and admonitions, it should be exposed and held up before the gaze of men as an object lesson of the frailties of falsehood. But until it is justly disproved, no man has the right to question the motives, or ridicule the belief of its adherents. No reasonable, fair person can have the arrogance to say it is imposition. When the Book was published men tried to account for its origin. It created a violent disturbance in all the Christian world. That it was of mere human origin the majority thought then, and to this day think, if, indeed, they can be said to think, that it is other than what is claimed for it by its supporters. Speculation became rife, and bright intellects endeavored to account for its authorship. Many and varied were the arguments advanced against the boy prophet and his works; but unless accompanied by brute force, spurned on by ignorance and ill-directed zeal, each and every argument fell piteously and helplessly to the ground. For want of a better argument, which since, though, has shown to what deception, prejudice and bigotry will resort, the religious opponents proclaimed that it was a new revelation and that as such it must be false, for said they: "Revelations have long since ceased. God has sealed up the heavens and has withdrawn himself from the human family for nearly two thousand years." Thus they reasoned. Not thinking for a moment that they might have changed, not God, as a reason of which they did not receive revelation. They supported their wild assertions by shallow perversions of the scripture. But that objection has long since fallen. The objection is as inconsistent as it is unscriptural, and as unnatural as it is unreal.

Scripture does not prohibit revelation. On the other hand it shows the utter impossibility of righteous permanency without it. Continuous and new revelation is to church what a main spring is to a watch, what heat is to fire, what savor is to salt, and what a rudder is to the ship; without it, the church crumbles away in decay, becomes decrepit and childish. Because of the lack of revelation, look upon Christendom today and contemplate its fickleness, its inconsistencies, its divisions and its superstitions. This argument of revelation against the Book of Mormon lacking reason and stability, another must be found. It was said, knowing that such a work could not have been written by Joseph Smith, who was unlearned in the worldly sciences and unschooled in literature and the classics, that Sidney Rigdon, a bright character in church history, was the real author of the Book, and had hidden his imposition behind Joseph Smith. No attempt at explanation was given, however, why Mr. Rigdon should have used Joseph Smith for his cloak. But this objection or explanation fell when it was proven that at the time of the publication of the Book of Mormon, Sidney Rigdon was a Campbellite minister in the wilds of Ohio, and until years after did not know the existence of Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon. Then the opponents of "Mormonism" believed they had found proof of the so-called deception when they found within the Book this fact, that since it was a book of books, each book given the name of its author, the same style of dictation and manner of writing appeared in most of the books. And it was contended that various authors could not use the same style of writing; and since the same style was found throughout the several books, under the names of different composers, that necessarily the Book was written by the same author; and, therefore, it was false. This explanation gained credence; but it too was doomed to the same end as its predecessors. The Book of Mormon purports to be a book of books, of several writers, but says that it was compiled and abridged by Mormon. It is perfectly natural that in his paraphrases he would observe his originality in the books he abridged. Indeed, it would be most detrimental to the Book were this not the case. However, several of the sections were not abridged; and in them we find a marked difference of manner and style from the records rewritten by Mormon. This fact makes the work more consistent. Instead of becoming an argument against, this objection brings out an argument in favor of the Book of Mormon.

D. P. Hurlbert, an anti-Mormon, excommunicated from the church because of his immorality, accounted for the Book of Mormon in a manner most satisfactory to the public and in which the world places more confidence than in any other explanation. He attempted to show that Joseph Smith obtained the plot and gist of his work from the manuscript of one Solomon Spaulding written in northern Ohio in 1812. The false affidavits of this man Hurlbert, while they were replete with absurdities and contradictions, appeased the public curiosity, and to this day there are men who believe that the Solomon Spaulding story was the origin of the Book of Mormon. This argument has been thrown into the face of every Mormon Elder who has ever defended the faith of his convictions. Mr. Hurlbert gave out that the manuscript had been burned by accident; but in 1885 it turned up in Honolulu, having been taken there with the business and effects of the Painesville (Ohio) Telegraph, years before. It seems that the manuscript was taken to the printing house of the Telegraph for publication, but probably because of disappointment of its contents was ordered burned. It had been lodged among some old papers, and turned up in the Sandwich Islands, half a century later to witness for the cause of truth. The manuscript is at present in the State, and lately I communicated with its custodian.

President James H. Fairchild, Oberlin College, Ohio:

My Dear Sir: You will, I trust, pardon the intrusion of a "Mormon" Elder.

I desire to hear from you, directly, whether or not the account published over your signature in the New York Observer is true, which credits you with saying that Mr. Rice and yourself, with others, made a comparison between the original manuscript of the Solomon Spaulding story, which is now in your college library, and the Book of Mormon, and that there could be detected no semblance either in general or in detail between the two works. If the above assertion is correct, you will do me a very great favor by indorsing this letter and mailing same to my address. If the rendition be not true, would like to obtain a brief explanation from an authorative source. I will be truly very thankful for any information you may give me.

The veracity of your reported testimony referred to has been questioned, and I desire proof for the stand I have taken, hence this communication, which I pray you will not ignore.

Yours very respectfully,

BEN. L. RICH,

211 East Town St., Columbus, O.

The letter was indorsed by the signature of Mr. Fairchild.

METHODIST REFORMS.

Philadelphia Call.

By the conference's action the time limit is entirely removed and the great Methodist denomination passes into the domain of congregationalism, where no limit to a pastoral is fixed

Brooklyn Eagle.

When a man has a reasonable assurance of permanence in his position he can do better work than when he is certain that he will have to move within a few years. It takes time to accomplish big results.

Chicago Chronicle.

The removal of the time limit on the service of Methodist clergymen will install a new era in that denomination. For the present it is an experiment. But doubtless the plan will produce results as acceptable and as valuable as have followed the same method in other Christian sects.

Indianapolis Press.

It is asserted that the new rule will be a great advantage to the talented ministers of the church by giving them a chance to build themselves up in communities that appreciate their ability and power. It will raise the standard of the Methodist ministry.

Cause and Effect.

"For what do you educate your girls, finely furnish your homes and give them social pleasures?" asked Prof. Cristman at the Des Moines Mothers' congress. Without pausing for a reply, he answered his own question, as follows. "To make them marriageable." Then the congress hissed him. Perhaps the professor had prepared his lecture for a fathers' congress.

3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

All Elders who have ordered alpaca suits should send to us at once their addresses, that we may send the goods. If there are Elders desiring these suits, who have not yet ordered, they should attend to this matter immediately.

Our "colored" shirts are now in stock, and we shall be pleased to furnish our Elders with the same promptly upon receipt of their orders.

THEN AND NOW.

Upon a brass tablet, found in the year 1280, among a quantity of records of the kingdom of Naples, in the city of Aguilla, was found the following inscription. Pontius Pilate sentenced our savior to be nailed to the cross, for six reasons, as follows:

1. Jesus is a disturber of the peace.
2. Jesus has taught the people sedition.
3. Jesus is an enemy to the laws.
4. Jesus calls Himself the Son of God.
5. Jesus calls Himself the King of Israel.
6. Jesus disturbed the worship of the temple, by leading a mob of people with palms in their hands.

Primitive Christianity was not so popular and so fashionable as is the system of worship which is so falsely called Christianity today. In that day to be a Christian was to be despised, looked upon as an enemy to the laws and a part of a disturbing element; but today, to be what is called a Christian, is to possess a passport into fashionable society. Then, to defend a Christian or speak kindly or truthfully of Jesus, was to be despised, derided and mocked, also to be shunned by man, therefore it was very seldom that a man of influence could be found with a heart brave enough, and a mind independent enough, to speak the truth about Jesus or His followers, who were everywhere proclaimed as disturbers of the peace, teachers of sedition, enemies of the laws, leaders of mobs and disturbers of those who desired to worship.

Among those who virtually led the persecution against this despised body of hated Christians and who were foremost in crying "Crucify him, crucify him," were chief Priests who were ministers of the so-called Gospel of that day.

There are many leading men of today who are looked upon as manly and brave fellows, who speak with profound respect when dealing with modern Christianity, who, had they lived eighteen centuries ago, would have occupied the same position towards Christ and Christianity in its unpopular and hated condition that they now occupy against Joseph Smith and his friends, who believe he was a Prophet of God. Joseph Smith and the Latter-day Saints occupy the same position before the Christian world today, that Christ and the Former-day Saints did before the Jewish people in their day. They are charged with the same crimes, and hated for the same causes; they are despised by the same kind of Chief Priests, and lied about by the same kind of Scribes, who are hungry for popularity and who are desirous of making a cheap display of pretended bravery. Had the class of individuals, here referred to, lived then instead of today, they would have recorded the resurrection of Christ as blasphemy; they would have sneered at the testimony of those who claimed to have seen the risen Redeemer, and would have given publicity only, to the statements of the pronounced enemies of Christ and the perjured Roman soldiers who guarded His grave.

If C. C. Goodwin, of the Salt Lake Tribune, had lived in the days of Christ, he would have shown his bravery by attacking Jesus and the Former-day Saints in about the same manner that he did Joseph Smith and the Latter-day Saints in the June number of Munsey's.

He's a slave who dare not speak for the right, fallen and weak;
He's a slave who dare not be in the right with two or three."

ATTACKED BY COWARDLY MOBOCRATS.

"Man's inhumanity to man,
Makes countless thousands mourn."

How very true indeed are these words spoken by the good-natured and jovial Scotch poet—Robert Burns. Yes! "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." Man's worst and most fierce enemy is man. Just to think that that being who, in the image of his Creator, and blessed with wisdom and intelligence, will commit such devilish and inhuman acts as to cast him beneath the ferocious animals of the forest for bloodthirstiness, is enough to make one shudder, and exclaim, "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

On Sunday, June 3d, 1900, a wicked mob rushed into the home of Brother George H. Garman and savagely attacked Elders Joseph H. Woolsey and William A. Adams, who were staying there on that date. Elders Woolsey and Adams have for the past six weeks been laboring in Cabarrus county, North Carolina, and on the Sunday above mentioned had met at Concord for the purpose of conducting religious services. A meeting was held at 2 p.m., and all went well with the exception of a few low mutterings which afterwards proved to be the foreboding of the coming storm. The brethren had gone home with Brother Garman and had held meeting at his home in the evening, where the spirit of the Lord prevailed, and a most enjoyable time was spent. It was about 11 p.m., and the Elders were preparing to sing one of their beautiful hymns, when a masked mob, heavily armed, burst in upon them and straightway rushed for these two peaceable, unarmed, defenseless followers of the Master. Brother Garman courageously intercepted these savage intruders, but the odds were against him and he was violently hurled from the room over a flight of steps into the yard, receiving severe bruises about the head and limbs. This cowardly act accomplished, one of the fiends laid hold upon Elder Woolsey, who quietly shook him off as a terrier shakes a rat. Elder Woolsey, seemingly caring little as concerned his own personal danger, hastened to the side of Brother Garman, who lay bleeding on the ground, and attended to his wants. During this time the same outlaw who had thrown the injured brother from the room rushed across the floor and clinched with Elder Adams, and together they went struggling towards the door, it being directly opposite the one where the other brethren were. In the doorway a fierce tussle ensued, and Elder Adams was about to free himself from the grasp of his adversary, when the remainder of the mob came forth, and as many of them as possibly could, pounced upon him and dragged him from the house—the few who could find no hand hold lingered behind, shooting their pistols and shouting vociferously. Elder Woolsey had not discovered the absence of his companion, being intently engaged in examining Brother Garman's wounds, in order to find out the extent of his injuries. As soon as Elder Adams was missed Elder Woolsey went around the house to discover if possible just where he was. On account of the continuous shooting it was exceedingly dangerous for one to venture out, and owing to this fact the brethren were kept apart.

Fearing their force—about nine in all—too weak to handle both of the Elders (Elder Woolsey is a giant, compared with these pigmy mobbers) they concluded it best for the consummation of their ungodly schemes to take Elder Adams alone. Their beastly anger was manifest, when one delivered a stinging blow upon the breast of Elder Adams, who was at the same time held fast in the grasp of the others, their hold being so firm as to make it impossible for him to move. There were nine of these wretches surrounding him when he was thus struck, and it was some few moments before he could regain his breath sufficient to speak. Notwithstanding their numbers, the hideousness of their blackened faces, and the presence of their deadly revolvers, he felt the power and strength of the Lord with him, and he rebuked them for their cowardice, and reproved them for their rank injustice.

They decided to take him to the Rocky River bridge, some four miles distant from Brother Garman's home, and feeling the influence and spirit of his rebuke they promised to let him go without injury, providing he would walk along peaceably. It was a singular march which occurred when they commenced their journey to Rocky River bridge. There were two scouting in the lead, followed by three—the center one being the "Mormon Elder"—a mobocrat on either side, closely followed by two more of the same stripe, while three of the gang loitered some three or four hundred yards in the rear, anxiously looking (?) for Elder Woolsey.

During the trip, the mobbers began to ask questions concerning "Old Joe Smith" and "Brig. Young," and, although in rather uncomfortable quarters, yet the Elder was ready to give them in words of plainness and sincerity the truth of the lives of these worthy seers. When asked what became of Joseph Smith, Elder Adams promptly told them that it was an armed mob who could not bear or accept the truth that had cruelly spilt his life's blood.

On arriving at the river bridge (which is about 150 feet in length) they marched the Elder into the center thereof, and then commanded a halt. Here an "indignation meeting" was held, in which the Elder was commanded to leave the community and never return on peril of his life. He was also told to inform his companion by letter of the dangers awaiting him in that locality. Bidding them good-night, and thanking them for their kindness in accompanying him so far entirely out of their way, Elder Adams started for the farther end of the bridge. As he was going, all alone, and bareheaded, the leader of the mob extended a little "brotherly love," for pulling off his little skull cap, which had been drawn down over his eyes, he handed it to the Elder, who eagerly accepted the same, again thanking them for their due consideration. Upon reaching the other end of the bridge, Elder Adams knelt down and poured out his soul in prayer to God, thanking Him for His goodness in protecting him from his wicked enemies, and preserving his life from the evil one. He had felt the power and strength of the Lord with him, and words were inadequate to express the joy of his heart and the gratitude of his soul.

After a few moments' reflection he decided to follow his companions—the mob—fearful lest they should come upon Elder Woolsey and do him bodily harm. Not willing to disgrace his head by wearing the cap of a chief coward, he took the aforementioned article in his hand and commenced trudging his way back—this time alone, save it were for the cap. The Lord led him a different road from that traveled by the mobbers, and it were well for him that he took another route, for his enemies were on the lookout for his return. After a somewhat tedious and tiresome walk over bridges, through forests and across fields, he finally arrived at Brother Garman's house. Elder Woolsey was not found here, and Brother Garman knew naught of his whereabouts. He had left the house about thirty minutes after the trouble in search of Elder Adams. Not finding his beloved companion, Elder Adams took his hat, grip, etc., and walked over to Mr. Hampton Howell's, a distance of about one mile. He had not been here long before Elder Woolsey made his appearance, and it is needless to say that they were highly pleased and exceedingly thankful to find each other safe, sound, unharmed, and unhurt.

The Elders express a desire to press on, and feel as did David of old when he said, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." Elder Adams has only been in the Missionary field a very few weeks, and if he continues steadfast in the hour of trial and persecution as herein shown he will prove a noble, valiant "Soldier of the Cross."

Mormon Pluck.

Chattanooga News, June 7, 1900.

Yesterday afternoon a News reporter called at the Southern States Mission headquarters and obtained the following interesting facts from Elder David H. Elton, president of the Chattanooga conference, regarding the mission.

Elder Elton said:

"At present there are but twelve Elders laboring in our conference, and the work is progressing to a marked degree.

"You know as we also do that opposition is necessary and essential to the development and advancement of any work. We are opposed on every hand, but like the faithful ones of old, we take it all in good part and hope for better treatment, when the minds of the people shall have become enlightened and educated as pertains our true motives and pure desires.

"In many ways are the lives, labors and travels of our Elders strikingly analogous to those holy men who labored for the Master during His own personal ministry in Palestine and Judea. The apostles and disciples of former days were valiant and courageous—fearing God—trusting in Him for strength, and relying upon the gift of the Holy Ghost for guidance in the line of duty. No one, to be truthful and know whereof they speak, can say that our Elders are not God-fearing men, who put their faith, hope and trust in Him from whom all blessings flow; and in regard to their pluck, boldness and valor in declaring the message they have been sent forth to proclaim. let me cite you to the stick-to-it-ive-ness of one of our Elders here in the Chattanooga conference. His name is J. W. Berry, and at present he is laboring in Bledsoe county, Tennessee."

Reporter—"It seems to me that I have a slight recollection of the name of Elder Berry, in connection with a mobbing which occurred in Lewis county, Tennessee, some years ago. Is the Elder of whom you have referred, any relation to the Berry I have mentioned?"

Elder Elton—"Yes! the young man now laboring in Bledsoe county is a son of Elder W. S. Berry, who was brutally martyred by a savage, cruel mob several years ago. It was a dastardly, heinous crime; and a more cold-blooded, pusillanimous atrocity has never been committed to mar the pages of Tennessee's fair history. When we reflect upon the memorable incident I have just related, and then consider the fact that the son of this brave martyr is here in Tennessee, preaching the same gospel for which his father nobly fell, declaring the same fearless testimony as that borne by his honorable sire,, we must at least acknowledge that the world will not, can not compete with the Mormon pluck! Just to think that that son will volunteer to leave the home of his loved ones, the bosom of his friends, and all that is near and dear in this life for the purpose of advocating an unpopular religion, yea so unpopular that is cost his beloved father his life, is enough, it seems to me, to convince the fair-minded of the earth that we are devout, sincere, earnest and fearless.

"It is very severe and exceedingly trying to have to smart under the last of that which one knows to be rank injustice. I have just received a letter from Elder Berry, in which he says: 'We attended preaching from a good Christian brother on Saturday evening and Sunday morning. Oh! how he did rail on us by calling us the false prophets, false teachers, and tallow-faced devils, also many other vile names, which I do not deem it wisdom to repeat. We took it like little men, and felt to ask the Lord to bless him with wisdom, love and light.' He is composed of the same admirable qualities which were ever manifested in the life of his martyred parent, and which compose the anatomy and moral fibre of the true servant of God in these latter days."

Elder Berry has a brother laboring in the North Alabama Conference. The two boys left home together and arrived in this city (Chattanooga) Jan. 21, 1899. They are true as steel, with a faith firm as the Rock of Ages, and their testimony of the Gospel cannot be shaken by the scoffs and jeers of the frowner, or the threats and abuses of the wicked mobocrat. The blood of a brave martyr flows in their veins, and such cannot fail to be productive of heroic deeds, faithful acts, and honorable conduct. They cannot be made to complain; but like the faithful ones of old, they press forward to the goal of Eternal Life.

GLEANINGS.

An Example Worthy of Imitation.

Editor Southern Star, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Dear Brother—Please find money enclosed in payment for subscriptions to The Star, which please send to parties whose names appear below. I have tried hard to increase the subscription of your valuable paper, which I deem a faith promoter, and which should be read by the young men in Zion and elsewhere. I suggest that every missionary returning home act as an agent for The Star. Your brother in the Gospel.

Bishop Wm. T. Tew.

We centainly appreciate the efforts of Brother Tew and thank him for aid given us in promoting the publication of the gospel.

Our mission paper is performing a labor in carrying forth the revealed truths. In doing as Bishop Tew has recommended, we are assisting the glorious work of upbuilding the kingdom of God.

A quiet wedding took place in Mesa City, Arizona, Thursday evening the 31st ult., at the home of President C. R. Hakes, he uniting in the holy bonds of matrimony Mr. George M. Fryer and Miss Lucy Phelps. While it was not a surprise to their many friends, yet but few were informed of the wedding having occurred until afterwards, when the happy couple were introduced as man and wife at the choir practice, which they attend. The bride is a daughter of H. S. Phelps, living just east of Mesa, and the groom is an adopted son of William Lang and wife of Mesa. Both are very popular in Mesa society. Congratulations are extended to the happy couple. May their lives be long and happy.—Exchange.

The Star sends congratulations to Bro. and Sister Fryer, and wishes them much happiness.

God's Infinite Love—Atonement—Gospel of Salvation.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

"For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.)

In the meridian of time it pleased our Eternal Father to send His beloved Son Jesus into the world to suffer for the sins of mankind and bring to pass the resurrection of the dead. The world was sorely in need of an Atoner, a Redeemer, and a Savior; for the sons of men were groping under the dominion of sin, and the unrelaxing grasp of death; powerless to free themselves therefrom, save one who was holy and perfect, should act as a mediator and redeem them by the free will offering of His own life. Christ volunteered to do His Father's bidding. He left the courts on high, where He had glory, honor and power; and came to the earth as a Lamb without spot or blemish, full of mercy, equity, grace and truth; pure, righteous, just and true, to present Himself a perfect, holy sacrifice for the sins of the world. The offering was accepted, justice was satisfied, sweet mercy rejoiced, and infinite love was manifest; while "whosoever will may come," resounded from shore to shore, and was re-echoed wheresoever the servants of God journeyed. The Prince of Peace, Jesus, the light of the world, had made it possible for mankind to live again; for their mortal bodies to be raised in immortality, clothed with a robe of righteousness, the fair brow adorned with a crown of everlasting life—the "robe of righteousness" and the "crown of everlasting life," being predicated upon obedience to the Gospel plan; while the redemption of the body from the grave was a free unconditional gift, extending to the whole human race, whether they be good, bad, or indifferent. It matters not, so far as the coming forth from the grave is concerned, what has been our life while here on earth, whether it has been a pure life of true devotion to God, or whether, on the other hand, we have catered to the world, the flesh and the devil, we shall be resurrected from the grave, for, "As in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (I Cor. 15:21.) But we shall, not all be resurrected at the same time, neither shall we be resurrected with the same glory, for in the same chapter from which I have just quoted, the Apostle Paul says, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead." (41, 42 verses.)

We understand by perusing the word of the Lord, that there are two resurrections yet to take place, viz., a resurrection of the just, which will occur when Christ comes in His glory, and a resurrection of the unjust, to take place one thousand years after our Lord's second advent. The Prophet Daniel, in the last chapter of his book, says: "And many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." (Dan. 12:2.) From this we observe that those who, in the justice of God, have merited "everlasting contempt" will be resurrected nevertheless, and be punished according to their desserts. Their sins and offences in this life will not prohibit them from being resurrected, but they will prove an hindrance and a detriment as pertains their glory, exaltation and eternal progression. John, the beloved, records the Savior as saying, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." (John 5:28, 29.) Here we have the plain declaration of our Lord as an evidence divine, supporting the doctrine that the good, the evil, the righteous, the wicked, the just and the unjust, will all come forth from their graves in the own appointed way and due time of the Lord. In Paul's defense before Felix we have another ray of light thrown upon this subject. He makes this confession, "That after the way, which they (the Jews) call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the Prophets; and have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." (Acts 24:14, 15). If further proof were necessary we need only turn to the testimony of John the Revelator, who, when the curtains of the present were parted aside, was permitted to gaze down the dark vista of future ages until he "saw the dead, small and great, stand before God. * * and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to his works." (Rev. 20:12, 13.)

Sufficient Scripture has been given to prove this fact; that Christ voluntarily left the mansions of His Father's glory (John 10:17,18, Matt, 26:53, 54) and gave himself a ransom for all (I Tim. 2:6), for the Prophet Isaiah, at a period 700 years before the Messiah's birth, prophesied of Him, saying, "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him * * * and the Lord hath laid upon Him the iniquity of us all. (Isaiah 53:5, 6.)

We see, then, what the atoning blood of our Savior hath wrought for us! By reason of His redeeming love manifest in the free-will offering of His own life, we are given a resurrection from the grave; and now it remaineth with us, as to whether we shall gain glory, honor and immortality in His presence. There is only one way by which an exaltation can be gained. Christ hath given us a salvation—free and unconditional—but our exaltation depends upon our lives of righteousness, together with the mercy and grace of God. Let it be understood that our individual acts would avail us nothing were it not for the atoning blood, the redeeming love, and the never-failing mercy of our Father and His Christ. God hath loved us, yea, with such infinite divine love and compassion, that He sent His only-begotten Son to the earth, who, pre-eminently the "man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," offered Himself a spotless sacrifice for the sins of fallen man. So far as our resurrection pertaineth, Christ hath done it all. We cannot resurrect ourselves; the power to bring this restoration about resteth only with God, and He will redeem us from the grave, and break the bonds of death. Herein is a fulfillment of that oft-repeated passage: "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast." (Eph. 2:8,9) We are saved through grace—not of works, for how could works exalt if grace had not first abounded? It is by the grace of God that we live, move and have a being; and therefore, whatsoever we gain, whatsoever we enjoy, whatsoever tends to save and exalt us, is a gift of God, a blessing from Him who is mighty to save.

As pertains to our individual salvation, mentioned hereinbefore, this depends upon our implicit obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel. When the Apostle Paul was engaged in instructing the beloved Timothy by letter, he wrote thus: "Be not therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me His prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God: Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." (2nd. Timothy 1:8-10.) From the above it will be seen that "immortality to light is brought" through the Gospel. In other words, life eternal, the best of all good gifts, is granted unto mankind by virtue of their compliance with Gospel law, and divine commands. Christ, we are told, is the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him (Heb. 5:8,9) "the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." (1st Tim. 4:10). The acceptance of these passages of Scriptures in the spirit and the intent of the word, means: that although we may truthfully sing, "Grace is free, salvation a blessed gift!" it is nevertheless a fact that we must partake of these gifts, having clean hands and a pure heart: being righteous, God-fearing and faithful; in order to enjoy the rich fruits thereof. A simple illustration will suffice to make the meaning clear: Here is a free gift offered unto all. Does this gift benefit the man who stands idly by, heeds not the invitation to come forth and be filled, but carelessly neglects his every opportunity of being in possession of said gift? No! Verily, no. Neither can we expect to enjoy the free gifts of the Gospel, save we reach forth, take hold, and grasp the same. They are within reach of all. God hath so ordained them, and He has made known unto us how we may become the happy recipients thereof. David says we must "walk uprightly before the Lord, work righteousness, and speak the truth in our hearts." (Psalms 15:2), and James informs us that we must "resist the devil and draw nigh unto God." (James 4:7,8.) By doing these things we are treading upon the stepping stones to salvation and life everlasting; and by continuing on in the line of duty we shall inherit the glorious rewards promised unto the faithful and true. The Gospel of salvation has been instituted of the Lord, and established by Him at the cost of His life-blood, for our exaltation and advancement in things spiritual and eternal. While the Gospel is, as Paul emphatically declares, "the power of God unto salvation" still it must not be supposed for one moment that it will prove a savor of life unto eternal life to those who do not accept its precepts and obey its ordinances. No, we must of necessity obey the word of God, and keep His holy will, if we would receive of His divine gifts and enjoy His blessed promises. Here is an elevator, and as I stand on the first floor I observe that by means of this operation scores are lifted to the second, third, fourth and fifth floors, etc. Well, now, if I would be raised in the elevator, it is self-evident that I must step inside; otherwise I might stand there, gazing intently and with all my mind believing—a mere intellectual assent only—and I would never, no never, worlds without end, attain to any loftier or higher position in that building, than my present standing on the first floor.

The Gospel is a logical, reasonable code of consistent laws. To the humble disciple of the lowly Nazarene it is a beautiful system, furnishing food for thought, material for reflection, and life and light for the spiritual being. God's infinite love is clearly and beautifully manifest in the atonement of His beloved Son. The love of Christ for all mankind is readily seen when we understand that He gave His life freely and voluntarily; and the grandeur, symmetry and magnificence of the Gospel structure, mingled with the sweet enlightening influences of the Holy Ghost, makes one precious, perfect total of love, supreme, divine and beneficent. To meditate upon the love of God and His Christ; to ponder and reflect on the plan of life and salvation, brings joy and gladness, sweetness and comfort, faith and hope, together with gifts and benefits, glory and honor, power and exaltation. Yea, more: it gives knowledge and wisdom, health and beauty, strength and nobleness, patience and fortitude, intelligence and serenity; above all that mortal man can express; until in the ecstacy of our mirth we exclaim:

"How great the wisdom and the love,
That filled the courts on high,
And sent the Savior from above
To suffer, bleed and die!"

"OBSERVATIONS IN UTAH."

The Wilkes-Barre (Penn.) Times of April 24 has the following defense of the "Mormon" people which, coming from a non-"Mormon' source and over the writer's own signature, is particularly gratifying and worthy of reproduction in the Deseret News:

"The Times is requested to print the following from the pen of Mrs. Henry Rose, who is a former resident of Kingston, but who has made her home in the west. She was before her marriage Miss Edith Lewis of Plymouth, a daughter of David Lewis. She is here on a visit to relatives:

"To the Editor of The Times;

"Since leaving my home in the west I have been asked by many people regarding the 'Mormons,' as I came from their midst, and take this means of informing your readers of my impressions as to this people after associating with them for many years. I was surprised at the strange idea entertained by intelligent people regarding this peculiar sect. I could not account for the prejudice existing until I learned of the source of the information sent broadcast. I have lived in Salt Lake City, Park City and Rock Springs, Wyoming, and have visited sections almost entirely 'Mormon,' yet in all the years of my mingling with them, never have I found anything upon which to base such uncalled for stories as I hear in the east. It really seems surprising that people who say they are in the service of the Master should wilfully invent the absurd nonsense that is given to the public here as facts relative to the 'Mormons.'

"Mistakes may have been, in the past, by this misjudged people, but if we examine a system results should be loked for rather than beginnings. I do not write in defense of 'Mormonism,' as I am not a member of their church, but simply state facts as I know them.

"Their teachings are consistent with Bible doctrines as they adhere closely to the instructions of Christ. The Book of Mormon and other church works, do not differ in teachings from the Bible.

"In their homes will be found peace and love as "Mormonism" embraces all principles of harmony. The oft-repeated stories of the degradation of the women are false; no people on earth present a more contented, hopeful, praying individual than the 'Mormon' mother. It is her greatest ambition that her children be taught pure principles and lead holy God-fearing lives, worthy of emulation. There is an absence of many evils found here in the 'Mormon' settlement.

"The youth are taught to become self-supporting and not dependent upon others. They branch out into the surrounding districts and acquire homes of their own. It is estimated that 90 per cent. own their own homes, yet they are termed indolent. A person has but to look over the beautiful valleys teeming with industry and prosperity to be convinced of the results of a united people. The tourist is pleased to notice the regularity that characterizes the building of towns and cities. The irrigation system marks the ingenuity with which these sturdy pioneers were blessed. Nowhere can be found the ignorance that is supposed to exist. Schools of high-grade are flourishing everywhere.

"We honor the Pilgrim fathers for their great work, why not honor the 'Mormons' for opening up the avenues of industry in the west. Both people were driven for the same cause: Their religion has paved the way for the future openings.

"Mormons are tolerant to other religions, they court investigation, and grant courtesies to others which I am sorry to say, are not received by their Elders, especially in this section. The 'Mormon' creed is 'Mind Your Own Business,' and if their opposers would teach the Gospel of peace and remember the above creed they would better deserve the name of Christian.

"Mormon" teachings are elevating and come nearer the mark of bringing about a united people than any other system I am conversant with. Many persons think 'Mormonism' means polygamy, which is wrong as that doctrine is not taught or practiced now.

"The claims made by this people are great and if true effect every individual. It is our duty to solve the problem, but not by force as has been done in the past. We should exercise charity patience and love instead of hatred. "Mormons' 'are very sincere in their worship, showing a broad-mindedness hard to equal.

"The question as to whether Joseph Smith received the manifestations he claims, deserves the attention of all. It has not been solved as yet and never will be if the methods pursued in the past be followed. 'Mormonism' is growing faster than any other denomination. There seems to be a superhuman force behind it that causes it to advance in the face of stern opposition. Let us exercise our American privileges of hearing both sides before condemning. Be not deceived by the invented falsehoods afloat which have been instigated through envy and jealousy. Mrs. Henry Rose.

HOW DOES IT SEEM TO YOU?

It seems to me I'd like to go
Where bells don't ring, nor whistles blow,
Nor clocks don't strike, nor gongs don't sound,
And I'd have stillness all around.

Not really stillnes, but just the trees'
Low whisperings, or the hum of bees,
Or brooks' faint babbling over stones
In strangely, softly tangled tones.

Or maybe a cricket, or katydid.
Or the songs of birds in the hedges hid,
Or just some such sweet sounds as these
To fill a tired heart with ease.

If 'twern't for sight and sound and smell,
I'd like a city pretty well,
But when it comes to getting rest
I like the country lots the best.

Sometimes it seems to me I must
Just quit the city's din and dust
And get out where the sky is blue.
And say, now, how does it seem to you?

—Eugene Field.

THE MISSIONARY'S MESSAGE.

While packing up my trunk to go upon my journey home—
'Twas after years that I had spent away—
I stopped to shake the hand of one in whom I recognized
My partner in my labors till today.
"O my dear boy!" I said to him—he quickly turned away;
His eye was wet. "Wait now," said I, "my friend,
You know I'm going back to see our loved ones and I thought Perhaps a message you would like to send."

Chorus:

"Just tell them that I'm faithful," he said, "they'll know the rest;
Tell them I am looking well, you know;
Just whisper, if you get a chance, to the dear ones there and say
I love them as I did long years ago."

"Your cheek is pale, you're feeling sad; just let me take a word
To that lone wife you love and hold so dear;
We know she's longing now for you, just a word from you, we know,
Will cheer her heart as nothing else can cheer."
"I long to see her soon again, but not just yet," he said;
'Tis duty now that's keeping me away.
Just tell her not to worry, for I'm all right, don't you know,
Tell darling I am coming home some day."

Chorus.

"Your heart is warm, I know you feel a thrill within your breast
At mention of your darling little boy.
Just let me bear those pretty shells, and kiss his brow and say
'They're from your father dear, and you're his joy.' "
"Just take the shells," he said to me, "and say a father's tear
Bedewed them each; and kiss his infant brow,
And tell him that my anxious prayers for him do e'er ascend,
And some day papa'll kiss as you do now."

Chorus.

Those little girls you've fondled so, you'll send by me a toy,
And bid me dandle each upon my knee,
And tell them that their father'll come when his mission's ended here,
And soon their darling papa they shall see."
"Don't make me weep for them,' he said, "my darling little ones!
Their mother dear is ever with them there.
But take a token from my heart, and whisper, if you will,
Sometime again they'll have a fathers' care."

Chorus.

"I would not touch your heart yet more, but think of that dear one
Whose age and cares are told by locks of grey,
Who'll haste to grasp my hand and ask, 'How is my darling son,
That boy of mine who is so far away?' "
"My mother dear! Just tell her how I am and how I feel—
You know it better that I now can say;
Just tell her my faith and zeal, and make her feel I still Am true to God and her, though far away."

—Elder Barker, in Deseret News.

I envy no quality of mind or intellect in others, be it genius, power, wit, or fancy; but if I could choose what would be most delightful, and, I believe, most useful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to every other blessing; for it makes life a discipline of goodness —creates new hopes when all earthly hopes vanish—throws over the decay, the destruction of existence, the most gorgeous of all lights—awakens belief in death—and from corruption and decay calls up beauty and divinity.—Sir Humphrey Davy.

Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

Abstracts From Correspondence.

Datura, Va.

Editor Star:

With a desire of bearing my testimony I will write you a few lines. The Elders visited my home and I treated them the best I knew how. I learned from them the true plan of salvation, which I had been seeking after for a long time, as I well knew modern ministers were not teaching the true gospel. On Sept. 24, 1899, I joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, and I am thankful to say I have lived to behold the gospel again restored to earth in its purity. I, like thousands of others, enjoy the gifts and blessings promised to the saints. The Star is a welcome visitor. Ever praying for the welfare of all the honest in heart, I am your sister in the gospel,

Susan W. Woodson.

Rocky Mount, Va., June 6, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Dear Brother—Thinking perhaps a few lines from me will be of interest to you, I take this opportunity of writing. I am pleased to say that my testimony grows stronger every day. I am trying, in my weak way, to spread the gospel truths among the people, and to overcome my faults; to be a true and faithful follower of our Savior. The Lord has blessed me, and I know that if I continue to labor for His cause, He will give me continued light. I realize that we all have our trials to pass through, but by living up to counsel given by God's annointed, we will be better able to overcome all obstacles. To be sure one cannot learn all in a day, but must learn here a little, and there a little, line upon line and precept upon precept.

What a pleasure it is to one to know his understanding increases from time to time —— to comprehend the beauties of God's Holy Priesthood, delivered again in this age, to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Obedience to the Priesthood brings blessings tenfold. Elder Pratt and myself are laboring in Franklin county and have made many good friends, and a number of them are investigating the gospel. We held a meeting at a very influential gentleman's house last Sunday, about thirty people attending to hear us. We had such a good meeting and the spirit of God was in our midst. The gentleman of the house is a Sunday School choir leader, and he had his choir furnish the singing at our services. He desires us to visit him again and hold another meeting at his house, so we gave out an appointment for next Saturday night. We have made many good friends in this section, which has caused the scribes to rage. I believe the day will come when many people in these parts will embrace the gospel. The Lord will not permit the honest in heart to always be deceived by men who teach for hire and divine for money; men who are corrupt at heart and care not for nothing but earthly possessions. I will be pleased to hear from you whenever you can find time to write. May the Lord bless and protect you in your labors. Your brother in the gospel.

Frank H. Snow.

A Good Name.

Secure a good name to thyself by living virtuously and humbly, but let this good name be nursed abroad and never be brought home to look upon it. Let others use it for their own advantage; let them speak of it if they please; but do not thou use it at all but as an instrument to do God glory and thy neighbor more advantage. Let thy face, like Moses', shine to others, but make no looking glass for thyself.—Jeremy Taylor.

Flowery Sermons.

It is said that a young preacher, once desiring to get the opinion of Prof. Jowett as to a sermon he has preached, asked him what he thought of it. The professor looked at him a moment, and then slowly added: "Edward, if you would pluck a few of the feathers from the wings of your imagination, and stick them in the tail of your judgment, you would make better sermons." That is a criticism not likely to be easily forgotten.—Christian Observer.

FUNERAL OF MISS RICHARDSON.

Chattanooga Times, June 12.

Yesterday forenoon, at the family residence on Fairview avenue, Dr. Elmore conducted the beautiful funeral rites of the Presbyterian church over the remains of Miss Annie Grey Richardson, who passed away Saturday evening. He delivered a very choice sermon, dwelling upon the many virtues of the departed and speaking words of comfort and consolation to the bereaved family. Many friends gathered at the family residence to pay their last loving respects to her memory and follow the remains to their last resting place at the Forest Hills cemetery, covering the sacred spot with costly and fragrant flowers, laid upon the grave as tokens of remembrance and esteem to the purity and loveliness of the character of our sister. Miss Annie had certainly been a patient sufferer for years, and during the past fourteen long weeks has been confined to her bed; yet during illness she was never heard to murmur; on the contrary, she had ever shown that patient resignation to the will of God that always accompanies the true Christian spirit. During all her suffering she was so filled with the spirit of Godly charity to all mankind as to endear her to all who had the honor and pleasure of knowing her. She was truly a noble and loveable young lady, and those who had a knowledge of her goodness will always remember her as one who came upon the earth like an angel of peace, who remained just a little while to spread rays of sunshine in the path of others and then returned to her Savior and her God, leaving the earth a little better than it might have been had she not been on it.

To the parents and their family we repeat the words of the poem, written by Mary Mapes Dodge:

We know not what is it, dear, this sleep so deep and still,
The folded hands, the awful calm, the cheek so pale and chill;
The lids that will not lift again, though we may call and call,
The strange, white solitude of peace that settles over all.

We know not what it means, dear, this desolate heart pain,
This dread to take our daily way and walk in it again.
We know not to what other sphere the loved who leave us go,
Nor why we're left to wonder still, nor why we do not know.

But this we know, our loved and dead if they should come this day,
Should come and ask us, "What is life?" not one of us could say:
Life is a mystery as deep as ever death can be;
Yes, O! how dear it is to us—this life we live and see.

Then might they say—these vanished ones—and blessed is the thought:
"Lo! death is sweet to us, beloved! though we may show you naught,
We may not to the quick reveal the mystery of death;
Ye can not tell us, if ye would, the mystery of breath."

The child who enters life comes not with knowledge of intent,
So those who enter death must go as little children sent.
Nothing is known, but I believe that God is overhead,
And as life is to the living, so death is to the dead.

THE DEAD.

Sister Mary Ann Driggers, an aged an respected member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, passed away on the 5th inst. From the best information obtainable she was 101 years of age.

July 31, 1898, she was baptized by Elder W. J. Fife and was a faithful advocate of truth. Until one week before her death, she was active in mind and body, when she gradually began to weaken until her life ebbed away and her spirit returned to God who gave her life.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH.

For twenty years President Smith has been Second Counselor of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints. He was born Nov. 13th, 1838, in Far West. Caldwell county, Missouri. The period of his birth was a stormy one in the history of the Church—a time when it was but in its infancy. His father, Hyrum Smith, the Prophet's faithful brother, was all and more to Joseph than Jonathan was to David. In life they lived, labored and suffered together, and when their time came, died like men filling the martyr's grave for the salvation of mankind. Mary Fielding, the mother of Joseph F. Smith, was a native of England. and for energy, faith and determination, coupled with good business abilities, was a most worthy and suitable companion for her noble husband. A few days previous to the birth of Joseph F., his father and uncle, Joseph, with other brethren, were betrayed into the hands of armed mobocrats, through the cruel treachery of George M. Hinkle. Being courtmartialed, they were sentenced to be shot, but this failed, by the interposition of Providence through Gen. A. W. Doniphan. They were then hustled off to prison, but before starting were allowed a few minutes to bid farewell to their families, being told they would never see them again. With such scenes being enacted, with mob rule holding sway, plunderings, drivings, imprisonment without trial, or conviction, poverty and distress, at such a time was Joseph F. Smith born into the world. His childhood days were spent amid scenes of persecution and hardships, which resulted in the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. His mother left Nauvoo in 1846, as an exile from her home and country, for no other cause than that of worshiping God according to the dictates of her own conscience. Although at this time Joseph F. was but a lad of 8 years of age, he drove an ox team for his mother across the state of Iowa. During the sojourn of the family at Winter Quarters, Joseph was occupied as a herd boy, in which he took special pride, feeling that his mother's cattle were the only means by which they were to make their exodus across the great plains of the "Far West." Even after reaching the valley Brother Smith was engaged in herding, and so close and conscientious was his attention to duty that he never lost a "hoof" through neglect or carelessness; this attention and devotion to responsibilities placed upon him has always marked his character, and is seen in all the labors of his life. During his trials at Winter Quarters, while herding cattle, he passed through a thrilling experience with Indians, who suddenly came upon him and his companions for the purpose of driving off their cattle. In the exciting chase, two Indians, one on either side of Brother Smith, rode up to him, and taking hold of his arms lifted him from the saddle, and probably would have scalped him, but for the unexpected appearance of a number of men who were going to the hay field. The Indians suddenly dropped him to the ground, and thus by the aid of Providence his life was saved; his bravery and fidelity to trust saved the cattle. President Smith was taught by the example and precept of his noble mother that in the performance of all duties and labors, he should go to the Lord in prayer. As a striking illustration of the faith with which he became imbued in his early boyhood, by the example of his mother, we present the following incident, related by President Smith, in his own language:

"In the spring of 1847 a portion of our family crossed the plains, following the pioneers to the valley of the Great Salt Lake, the remainder of the family intending to proceed on their journey to the west the following spring.

In the fall of 1847 my mother and her brother, Joseph Fielding, made a trip down the Missouri river to St. Joseph, Mo., about 150 miles, for the purpose of obtaining provisions and clothing for the family for the coming winter, and for the journey across the plains the following spring. They took two wagons with two yokes of oxen on each. I was almost 9 years of age at this time, and accompanied my mother and uncle on this journey as a teamster. The weather was unpropitious, the roads were bad, and it rained a great deal during the journey, so that the trip was a very hard, trying and unpleasant one. At St. Joseph we purchased our groceries and dry goods, and at Savannah we laid in our store of flour, meal, corn, bacon and other provisions. Returning to Winter Quarters, we camped one evening in an open prairie on the Missouri river bottoms, by the side of a small spring creek, which emptied into the river about three-quarters of a mile from us. We were in plain sight of the river, and could apparently see over every foot of the little open prairie where we were camped, to the river on the southwest, to the bluffs on the northeast, and to the timber which skirted the prairie on the right and left. Camping near by, on the other side of the creek, were some men with a herd of beef cattle, which they were driving to Savannah and St. Joseph for market. We usually unyoked our oxen and turned them loose to feed during our encampments at night, but this time, on account of the proximity of this herd of cattle, fearing that they might get mixed up and driven off with them, we turned our oxen out to feed in their yokes. Next morning when we came to look them up, to our great disappointment our best yoke of oxen was not to be found. Uncle Fielding and I spent all the morning, well nigh until noon, hunting for them, but without avail. The grass was tall, and in the morning was wet with heavy dew. Tramping through this grass and through the woods and over the bluffs, we were soaked to the skin, fatigued, disheartened and almost exhausted. In this pitiable plight I was the first to return to our wagons, and as I approached I saw my mother kneeling down in prayer. I halted for a moment and then drew gently near enough to hear her pleading with the Lord not to suffer us to be left in this helpless condition, but to lead us to recover our lost team, that we might continue on our travels in safety. When she arose from her knees I was standing near by. The first expression I caught upon her precious face was a lovely smile, which, discouraged as I was, gave me renewed hope and an assurance I had not felt before. A few moments later Uncle Fielding came to the camp, wet with the dews, faint, fatigued and thoroughly disheartened. His first words were: 'Well, Mary, the cattle are gone!' Mother replied in a voice which fairly rang with cheerfulness, 'Never mind, your breakfast has been waiting for hours, and now, while you and Joseph are eating, I will just take a walk out and see if I can find the cattle.'

My uncle held up his hands in blank astonishment, and if the Missouri river had suddenly turned to run up stream, neither of us could have been much more surprised. 'Why, Mary, he exclaimed, 'what do you mean? We have been all over this country, all through the timber and through the herd of cattle, and our oxen are gone—they are not to be found. I believe they have been driven off, and it is useless for you to attempt to do such a thing as to hunt for them.'

'Never mind me,' said mother. 'Get your breakfast and I will see,' and she started toward the river, following down the little stream. Before she had proceeded out of speaking distance the man in charge of the herd of beef cattle rode up from the opposite side of the creek and called out: 'Madam, I saw your oxen over in that direction this morning about daybreak,' pointing in the opposite direction from that in which mother was going. We heard plainly what he said, but mother went right on, paid no attention to his remark, and did not even turn her head to look at him. A moment later the man rode off rapidly toward his herd, which had been gathered in the opening near the edge of the woods, and they were soon under full drive for the road leading toward Savannah, and soon disappeared from view.

"My mother continued straight down the little stream of water, until she stood almost on the bank of the river, and then she beckoned to us. (I was watching her every moment and was determined that she should not get out of my sight.) Instantly we rose from the "mess-chest," on which our breakfast had been spread, and started toward her, like John, who outran the other Disciple to the sepulchre, I outran my uncle and came first to the spot where my mother stood. There I saw our oxen fastened to a clump of willows growing in the bottom of a deep gulch which had been washed out of the sandy banks of the river by the little spring creek, perfectly concealed from view. We were not long in releasing them from bondage and getting back to our camp, where the other cattle had been fastened to the wagon wheels all the morning, and we were soon on our way homeward bound, rejoicing.

"This circumstance was one of the first practical and positive demonstrations of the efficacy of prayer I had ever witnessed. It made an indelible impression upon my mind, and has been a source of comfort, assurance and guidance to me throughout all my life."

The impression made upon Joseph's mind by this striking answer to his mothers' prayer, has never left him, but has done much to encourage him in meeting every responsibility; causing him to realize that no matter how arduous the task the Lord will not fail those who put their trust in Him. Crossing the plains from Missouri river, to the Salt Lake Valley, Brother Smith (though less than 10 years of age at that time) drove two yoke of oxen attached to a heavily laden wagon, the entire distance of more than one thousand miles.

Reaching the valley of Salt Lake with his mother, Sept. 23d, 1848, he continued in charge of the cattle as herd boy for several years, and never lost an animal, notwithstanding the great number of large wolves in the valley. This work of herding was interchanged with plowing, harvesting, canyon work, etc., idleness taking no part in the life of this noble man.

The opportunities for education in those early days of trying experiences of the Church, were limited. Such learning as Brother Joseph possessed he acquired chiefly from his mother. She taught him to read the Bible during their pilgrimage across the plains, in the tent, and by the camp fire Such facilities as have been afforded him have not passed by unimproved. Being fond of books, he reads extensively the best of them, always with a purpose in view—viz.: to learn lessons of worth for practical use in life, and it is safe to say that no man living applies them better to himself and family than does President Joseph F. Smith. His mother died Sept. 21st, 1852, leaving him an orphan at the age of 14. When 15 years of age he was called on a mission to the Sandwich Islands. He received his endowments in the Old Council House, and was set apart in the same building by Apostles Parley P. Pratt and Orson Hyde. Brother Pratt, who was spokesman in setting him apart, declared that he should receive the knowledge of the Hawaiian language "by the gift of God as well as by study." This prophecy was literally fulfilled, for in less than four months from his arrival (two weeks of this time was spent in severe sickness) he was able to make a tour of the Islands of Maui; to preach, baptize and administer the Sacrament, etc., all in the native language. He left his mountain home to fulfill this mission, May 27th, 1854, in company with other missionaries. The Southern route was taken, accompanying as far as Cedar, President Young and party, who were on their tour to the Southern settlement. This little band of missionaries was headed by Parley P. Pratt. In crossing the desert country, from Southern Utah to California, they were followed a long distance by numbers of the Pah-Ute Indians, who were almost famishing for food. The only alternative was to share food with them, which they did to keep on friendly terms. As a result the missionaries were compelled to subsist on very short rations, consuming the last of their supplies the day they reached Cajon Pass. Parley P. Pratt proceeded to San Francisco. During the sojourn of Brother Joseph F. in California, he worked hard for a livelihood to earn means sufficient to pay his passage across the Pacific to Honolulu; much of his time being spent in the manufacture of cut shingles. He and his fellow missionaries embarked upon the "Vaquero," and after a somewhat disagreeable voyage they landed in Honolulu, Sept. 27th, 1854. After a few days there Brother Joseph was assigned to the Island of Maui, to labor in company with his cousin, Silas Smith, S. B. Thurston and Washington B. Rogers. He was shortly afterward prostrated for more than two weeks with a severe fever. Upon his recovery he was assigned to Kula, the place where President Cannon first introduced the Gospel to the Hawaiian race. He pursued the study of the language with much diligence and faith, soon being able to bear witness that "by the gift of God, as well as by study," were the words of Brother Pratt concerning his acquisition of the language verified; his experiences brought him near to the Lord. Relative to the manifestations of the Spirit to him he says: "Of the many gifts of the Spirit which were manifest through my administration, next to my acquirement of the language, the most prominent was perhaps the gift of healing, and by the power of God, the casting out of evil spirits which frequently occurred." One stance occurred at Wailuku, where he sojourned with a native family, being engaged in the study of the language. One night the woman was suddenly seized with evil spirits. She went through all manner of hideous contortions. Her husband was overcome with such fear that he trembled as a leaf in the wind. Brother Joseph was seized with fear at this new and unexpected demonstration, but suddenly all fright left him, the power of the Holy Ghost rested upon him, and he stood upon his feet, facing the woman possessed of demons. "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ I rebuke you," he said, when suddenly the woman fell limp to the floor and became as one dead. The husband pronounced her dead, and then set up a hideous howl, which Joseph promptly rebuked, after which quiet and peace was restored and the young missionary proceeded with his studies. Brother Joseph labored upon the Island of Maui over eighteen months with great success. The readiness by which he acquired and used the language astonished his brethren and the natives. After President Hammond took his departure for his home in Utah, Brother Joseph presided over the Maui Conference; later he also presided over the Kohala Conference for six months, and the Island of Hawaii for the same length of time.

Brother Joseph was laboring upon this island at the time of the great volcanic eruption of 1855. He says: "I experienced the tremendous shocks of earthquake which immediately preceded the eruptions, and subsequently visited the great lava flow which issued from the crater. It was said that this eruption in the quantity of lava thrown out, has probably never been surpassed during the residence of foreigners on the islands. The flow continued for about thirteen months, reaching to within six or seven miles of the city of Hilo, more than sixty miles from the crater. The city and bay of Hilo were in imminent danger of destruction for months. I have seen it stated since that the area covered by lava from this eruption exceeded three hundred square miles, or about one-thirteenth of the area of the Island of Hawaii." President Smith continued his labors upon the islands with efficiency, passing through many scenes which added strength to his testimony of the Gospel and fitted him for positions of responsibility, to which he has since been called. He has sometimes said that he was "never thankful but once that his first mission was upon the Sandwich Islands, and that once has been all the time, from the time of his mission to the present date."

Owing to the approach of Johnson's army to Utah President Young sent instructions that he desired all Elders laboring in foreign missions to return home. Accordingly President Smith and other Elders took passage on the bark Yankee. Oct. 6th, 1857. Upon landing at San Francisco they reported to President George Q. Cannon, at the Western Standard office. Shortly after arriving on the coast Brother Smith journeyed south to Santa Cruz, there joining a company. He next arranged to drive a team to Utah for George Crismon, arriving in Great Salt Lake City Feb. 24th, 1858, having been absent four years all but a little over three months. Immediately upon his return home he joined the militia, and started with an expedition to intercept the hostile army, which had been sent to Utah, without the slightest cause of justification. He served under Col. Thomas P. Callister, and later was Chaplain of the regiment under Col. Heber C. Kimball. He says, in speaking of his enlistment and experiences in the Utah army:

"The day following my arrival home I reported myself to President Young and immediately enlisted in the legion to defend ourselves against the encroachment of a hostile and menacing army. From that time until the proclamation of peace, and a free and full pardon, by President Buchanan came, I was constantly in my saddle, prospecting and exploring the country between Great Salt Lake City and Fort Bridger, under the command of Col. Thos. Callister and others. I was on picket guard with a party of men under O. P. Rockwell, when Commissioners Powell and McCollough met us near the Weber river with the President's proclamation. Subsequently I was on detail in the deserted city of Great Salt Lake, until after the army passed through the city, and thence to Camp Floyd. After this I assisted my relatives to return to their homes, from which they had fled, going to the south some time previous."

At the session of the Legislature held in the winter of 1858-59 President Smith officiated as sergeant-at-arms in the council, and on March 29, 1858, he was ordained into the Thirty-second Quorum of Seventies. He was married April 5, 1859, and on Oct. 16, of the same year was ordained a High Priest, also being made a member of the High Council of Salt Lake Stake of Zion. At the April Conference, 1860, Brother Joseph was called on a mission to Great Britain. He was in straightened circumstances financially and was almost obliged to discontinue housekeeping, and allow his wife to return to her mother's home for the time being. He was soon on his way, in company with his cousin, Samuel B. Smith, each driving a four-mule team, to pay their way across the plains. They had an interesting trip to the Missouri river; from that point to New York they went by way of Nauvoo and viewed the homes of their childhood days, calling upon the wife and children of the Prophet Joseph Smith. They sailed for Liverpool July 14, arriving in that port on the 27th of that month. During his mission in England President Smith traveled in various conferences, and in all his ministrations among the Saints and strangers left an impression for good that can never be effaced. President George Q. Cannon was also in Great Britain on a mission at the same time, and it was while there, perhaps, more than any other place they learned to love and esteem each other; where a friendship was established which has grown stronger as the years have gone by. That was the commencement of an intimacy which their labors together in the same councils of the Holy Priesthood have enhanced from that time to the present moment.

During his mission in Europe President Smith, with President George Q. Cannon, visited several of the conferences in Denmark, and with Elder Brigham Young, Jr., and others, visited Paris, France. Brother Joseph F. was released after filling a most honorable and efficient mission, returning home in 1863; himself and companions were in New York City, at the time of the "dreadful riots," which occurred in July of that year. Crossing the plains, he was Chaplain in Capt. John W. Woolley's company. Arriving home he found his wife in a very poor state of health, which for some time grew worse, but he waited upon her day and night with little or no rest for many weeks, when she gradually recovered her health. It was not in the providences of the Lord that Brother Joseph should remain long at that period of his life to enjoy the quiet and peace of home, for in March, 1864, he started on his second mission to the Sandwich Islands. He went in company with Apostles Lorenzo Snow, Ezra T. Benson, Elders William W. Cluff and Alma L. Smith. The purpose of their mission was to regulate the affairs of the church on the Islands, which had been greatly interfered with by one Walter M. Gibson, who had presumptuously established himself as leader of the Church upon the Islands. They labored faithfully to convert Mr. Gibson from his wrong doing, but to no avail. The man was not honest at heart, and they were obliged, for the protection of the native Saints, to excommunicate Gibson from the Church. The trouble being settled, the Apostles soon returned to America, leaving President Smith and other American Elders in charge of the mission. He returned from this mission in the winter of 1864-65. While upon this mission an incident occurred which is worthy of note:

The ship upon which the brethren arrived was anchored in the channel, where the sea was usually very rough. A breakwater had been constructed, and by the protection of it the natives successfully ran their boats ashore. However, in approaching it there was danger of disaster. It was proposed to land the passengers in the ship's freight boat, which was unwieldy and not easily managed.

President Smith at once apprehended the danger and stoutly protested against the proposition, warning the brethren of the great danger of capsizing the boat at the breakwater. He refused to accompany them in the boat, and tried to persuade his co-laborers not to go. They were persistent, however, and made the attempt, while Brother Joseph offered even to go alone for a better boat. When they were determined to go he persuaded them to permit him to remain on the anchored ship and leave their clothing and valuable articles with him. They consented to this reluctantly, and as they moved away from the ship, Joseph stood upon the latter gazing at his brethren with awful anxiety, apparently knowing their fate. His fears were not ungrounded, for as their unwieldy freight boat struck the breakwater a heavy wave dashed against it and instantly capsized it, emptying its human cargo into the surging billows. A boat manned by natives came to the rescue and recovered all but President Snow, when they started for shore. Brother W. W. Cluff demanded the return of the boat, that they might secure Brother Snow, which was done, and when his remains were recovered, to all appearances he was dead. Through the mercies of the Lord, however, he was restored to life. All this time Brother Joseph stood in awful suspense, a helpless spectator upon the floor of the anchored ship. This action of President Smith indicates that fearless trait of his character which has been manifest throughout his life, showing that he has the courage of his convictions, and is most vigorous and earnest in expressing them. When Brother Smith returned home from this mission, he was employed as a clerk in the Endowment House and at the Historian's office, frequently performing home missionary work in the Territory. He was also an active and efficient member of the Great Salt Lake City Council for several terms; the effects of his influence in that municipal body are today monuments of worth to the city of Salt Lake. The possession of Liberty Park today by Salt Lake City is due to his influence and determined convictions, more than to the labors of any other man. July 1st, 1866, he was ordained an Apostle by President Brigham Young, and on the 8th of October,

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

MODERN METHODS.

Many perhaps have noted that certain preachers, called ministers of the meek and lowly Savior, are again at their old trick of disturbing the peace of mind of liberty-loving people. They are in a cowardly manner doing to the Mormon Elders just what the enemies of Christ did unto Him in His day, and yet they claim it Christlike. When a porcupine gets in a close place he always begins to throw his quills. It is his only means of defense. He is not a fighter, he is not a foot racer; his only protection is to make himself as disagreeable as possible. When our Elders go into a neighborhood the ministers will not meet them with Scripture and reason, they will not come out openly and accept the truth as it is in Jesus, but instead use the same method as the porcupine of throwing their quills of falsehood. It is their only means of defense, but at once cowardly and unjust, and in the end will bring condemnation to their souls. These preachers are not called of God, and therefore have not His spirit to guide them, but think more of money getting than of soul saving. Their only protection and shield is in flinging filth when they get cornered. Nature gave unto the porcupine his quills as a means of defense when cornered, and so does Satan arm these so-called preachers with falsehoods, that when cornered by truth they might defend themselves by letting them fly broadcast. It does seem strange, nevertheless it is a fact, that the different religious sects will jangle and quarrel with each other until it seems that a reconciliation is out of the question, and yet just as soon as an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints comes into their midst they will all join hands and lay plots and devise ways and means of getting rid of these "despised Mormons." Instead of taking up their Bibles and going to the Elders in brotherly kindness, with a desire to point to them their errors, they take up the club and lash; raise mobs and then tell the people they are humble servants of the Master. "It must needs be that offences come, but woe unto that man by whom the offence cometh."

"It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into a sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones."

"WITHOUT MONEY AND WITHOUT PRICE."

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price." (Isaiah 55:1.) Here we have a call, uttered by a Prophet of the living God unto all those who are athirst for righteousness. This call extends, as the Prophet hath said, unto "every one that thirsteth:" but fearful lest the poor should think themselves not accounted worthy of this "milk and wine" of salvation, the holy man of God—Isaiah—continues by saying, "and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat." Who is it that "hath no money?" Is it not the poor among men, and those that are in the lowly walks of life, that have no money? It is verily true! And they—the poor among men—are given the blessed promise of enjoying the gifts of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The Gospel, therefore, must needs be free, else how could they "that have no money" purchase the same?

Let us turn our attention to that good old Book of Books—the Holy Bible—for within its sacred pages we shall find much to comfort and gladden the hearts of the poor; we shall find much to support and uphold the doctrine that the Gospel shall be preached free; and we shall also find that the Lord condemns those who preach for hire, and divine for money.

The Apostle Paul says, "For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O, man of God, flee these things." (I Tim. 6:10, 11.)

This passage of Scripture is preceded by a verse which informs us that riches drown men in destruction and perdition. In this same chapter of Paul's epistle to Timothy, we find that those destitute of the truth suppose that gain is godliness (5th verse). Today, we observe that a large salary makes a big preacher. If the Christian (?) minister of today can demand and obtain $5,000 a year, why it goes to say that he is an evangelist of no small type. But the country pastors, sometimes called "Jack-legged preachers," who can only succeed in draining the members of their circuit of, say $500, why he is not designated as a great preacher, as is his fellow laborer who receives the larger salary. Why is this the case? Cannot we truthfully say that it is an exact fulfillment of what Paul said, writing to Timothy: they are "destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness?" (I Tim. 6:5.)

"Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." (I Cor. 11:1.) Paul coveted no man's silver or gold, but energetically labored for his sustenance with his own hands. (Acts 20:33 and 34) that he, by so doing, might not abuse his power in the Gospel. (I Cor. 9:18.) Peter commanded the Elders to feed the flock of God, not for filthy lucre (money), but of a ready mind (I Peter 5:2), not following the way of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness (II Peter 2:15). When our Lord sent His Apostles out on their first mission, He commanded them to go forth and preach saying, "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils. Freely ye have received, freely give." (Matt. 10:7-8.) He never revoked this command, and it is enjoined upon all who would preach the everlasting Gospel. Furthermore we hear Him declaring, as an evidence of His Messiahship, that "to the poor the Gospel is preached." (Luke 7:22.) He, the Savior of the world, the Redeemer of all the sons and daughters of Adam's race, neglected not the poor, neither did He deprive them of the glorious privilege of hearing and accepting the glad tidings of great joy which were heralded by Him and His humble followers.

The Scriptures of Holy Writ return again and again to condemn the practices of a hireling clergy, and to uphold, indorse and sustain the actions of the true followers of the Lamb who preach the Gospel free.

In conclusion, let the words of John, the divine Revelator, be heard, "And the Spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say, come, and let him that is athirst say come; and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." (Rev. 22:17.)

PRESIDENT LORENZO SNOW.

Our venerable leader and beloved President, Lorenzo Snow, has been afflicted with illness of late, but we are pleased to announce to the Elders and Saints of the Southern States Mission that he is convalescent at the present time. Let the prayers of all Israel ascend to the Throne of God in behalf of President Snow, that we may all be blessed with his presence, comforted by his loving words, and instructed by his choice admonition and God-like wisdom, for many days yet to come.

Elder W. O. Phelps is now in charge of the Louisiana Conference. Although there are but a small force of Elders in that conference, yet the brethren in the past have done nobly, and we rest assured that under the guidance of Brother Phelps the good work will continue.

THE BOOK OF MORMON—ITS AUTHENTICITY.

Thus you see the frailties of the strongest objections advanced against the authenticity of the work in question. Many more arguments and objections were raised but they are all too absurd and self-contradictory to receive any attention whatever. And the history of the western ancients will have to be explained by much stronger arguments than have been advanced heretofore to disprove its truthfulness. Now since the objections are so palpably weak and irrational, the evidence of its authenticity must necessarily evince strength and reason. And I ask you candidly to weigh carefully the proofs of its claim.

There is a fulfillment of prophecy in the coming forth of this record.

The Book of Mormon purports to be a history of a remnant of the people of Israel that was practically destroyed. It is claimed to have been taken from the earth and translated in an ancient style somewhat resembling biblical. And Isaiah (29 chap.) in speaking of a people akin to Israel wrote: "And thou shalt be brought down and shall speak out of the ground and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust." Does not the Book of Mormon fulfill this ancient prediction? Some of the characters were transcribed from the plates and given to Martin Harris who took them to Professor Anthon, of New York. The Professor gave a certificate of the genuineness of the characters, saying that they resembled the ancient Egyptian Chaldaic Assyria letters. A Prof. Mitchell of New York also gave similar testimony. "Where did this man Smith get the records?" asked Mr. Anthon. He was told that he received them from an angel. He continued. "Bring me the plates and I will translate them." Mr. Harris said that a part of the records was sealed, that Joseph was not permitted to translate but part of them, whereupon the doctor heartily ejaculated, "I cannot read a sealed book," thus fulfilling another of Isaiah's predictions (29 chap.) which read: "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book (the words of the book, not the book itself) which men deliver to one that is learned, saying read this I pray thee; and he saith I cannot for it is sealed; and the book is delivered to him that is not learned." Can you not also see the fulfillment of ancient prediciton in this passage?

The Book of Mormon purports to be a record of the descendants of Joseph. The Bible is principally a record of the descendants of Judah. We hold that the Bible and Book of Mormon contain many truths in common, and are one in the cause. The Prophet Ezekiel knew of the coming forth of the two books and purposely wrote (37 chap.):

"Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, for Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then take another stick, and write upon it, for Joseph, the stick of Ephriam, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

"And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thy hand.

"And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these?

"Say unto them, thus saith the Lord: Behold I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hands of Ephriam, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand." When we realize that the ancients wrote on papyrus and parchment and rolled them upon sticks and called the writing a scroll, a book or a stick, the weight and significance of this quotation can be seen.

Christ made a remark recorded by John (10) which has great meaning. In the Book of Mormon it teaches that Christ visited the people of this continent after his crucifixion. We know that on the eastern continent Christ did not go among any people other than the Jews. And until the explanation found in the abridgement of Mormon the statement of Jesus was considered mysterious. He said: "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." There are many more Biblical proofs of the Book, but the paragraphs quoted show that its advent satisfies clearly, literally and exactly predictions of the Prophets.

But from the researches of scientists in the traditions of the Indian and in the antiquities of America we find greater evidence of the authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Now when the record was published in 1829, the wonderful ruins and relics of the new world's antiquities practically lay undisturbed, in the sleep of centuries. But the facts revealed in American Archeology and ethnology wonderfully show that the work brought forth by Joseph Smith is at once reasonable and consistent.

Furthermore, the history of America's past, makes it plain that an imposition could not summon to its support such evidences as discovery and investigation afterwards contributed to the account published through the instrumentality of the boy Joseph.

When the Book of Mormon said that this continent had been inhabitated by a powerful, intelligent race which enjoyed a civilization akin to that of the old world in past centuries, men of more zeal than wisdom laughed at the idea. They said can this man believe he can palm off onto intelligent people such absurdities? They sneered at the proposition that the progenitors of the Indian ever lived in a state of civilization. But research came to the rescue, and we now find proof that the civilization of ancient America rivals that of ancient Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia. The ancients of this hemisphere understood an advanced style of architecture. They built cities with walls, with terraces, with towers and with paved streets, many of which exist well preserved today in New Mexico, Arkansas, Arizona, Mexico, Yucatan and Central and South America. In Yucatan there is a foundation which contains a stone of almost incredible dimensions, a rock much larger than can be managed nowadays. This stone is shown to have been taken from a quarry over a hundred miles distant. To have quarried and transported such a stupendous block of granite gives evidence that a knowledge of levers and engineering prevailed. They knew how to temper copper to such hardness that it could cut steel, an art unknown today. They understood the art of making and coloring glass. They understood geometery, the science of war and fortification. In New Mexico there have been unearthed networks of cemented rock canals, which carried water onto an arid land. This shows that the 19th century is not the only age that can boast of artificial irrigation. Hieroglyphics and queer characters are found engraved on walls, columns, monuments, pyramids and parchment scrolls over all the hemisphere, proving that the ancients possessed a written language and enjoyed an advanced civilization. And since an intelligent and civilized race did exist upon this continent would it not be cruel, unnatural, unmerciful and unjust, for a loving and just God to withhold His blessings from this people and favor another people no more worthy of such blessings?

Does not the God of heaven tell us that He is an impartial Being, no respector of persons? Would it not be the height of partiality to bless the inhabitants of one part of the earth with the plan of happiness and salvation, and hold another race in chains of darkness?

But the Book of Mormon solemnly affirms that the ancients of this land did have the Work of God and did know of Christ and His gospel. When this information came to the world in the early decades of this century, men ridiculed more and more the claims of Joseph Smith. They thought surely he had greatly underestimated the intelligence of the age or else had lost his mental balance. But investigation again came to the rescue, as investigation often does. It shows that the religion and tradition of the aborigines of America resembled that of the Israelites. Although the traditions and belief through apostacy, ignorance and degeneration lost many of their beauties and gave place to vague superstitions, we can, however, see in the belief of the native races a parallel of biblical teachings. Not many years ago in Licking County, O., a tablet was discovered, containing, inscribed in corrupt Hebrew, the ten commandments. Parchments have been discovered recording prophesies of Isaiah and other ancients. There are extant many stories among the Indians relative to the deluge and the confusion at Babel. The Central American used to practice the rite of circumcision. The ancient Peruvians offered burnt animal sacrifices. We note in these things, rudiments of the practices in the Mosaic dispensnation. It is explained from the fact that Lehi left Jerusalem long before the Christian era. He brought with him a language of his fathers and worshipped in the customs of the Jews.

The Book of Mormon also states that a knowledge of Christ was held by the peoples whose history it records, and we find in the religious beliefs of the Indian races corroborative evidence of this assertion. The ancient Chilians said that their fathers were visited by a wonderful person full of grace and love, who did many wonderful works and taught them to worship a creator who dwells in the heavens, whom they called the Great Spirit. The ancient Mexicans found a deity in one Quetzalcoatl who, they held, took upon himself human nature, endured sorrows and pain and voluntarily died for the wrongs of their fathers. This same Quetzalcoatl is chiseled in the walls of an ancient temple, with outstretched arms, crucified, bearing imprints in his hands and feet. We can see in this traditional Quetzalcoatl none other than the crucified Christ. The early Catholic priests found in Yucatan a perfect knowledge of the God-head, among the natives. And they, the priests, in their inability to account for its origin, said that Satan had instituted a counterfeit religion. The people of Yucatan believed in God who resided in the heavens, even the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Thy said the Father's name was Yeona; that his son was born of a virgin; that he was scourged and put to death with arms outstretched upon a beam of wood; that he came to life again and went to His Father and afterwards sent to them the Holy Spirit, who came in the person of a good merchant, distributing precious gifts abundant and divine. This is not mysterious to one familiar with the Book of Mormon.

We are also told that the sign of the cross was prevalent among the Mexicans at the time of Cortez and that the priests who accompanied him were astonished to find that the Aztec priests practiced an ordinance similar to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. They were seen to mix blood with a cake of flour and to consecrate it and distribute it to the people to eat, saying that it served as the flesh of Deity. Again I say, while these ordinances and traditions of the Indian peoples are corrupt, we can plainly see in them corroboration of the statements of the Book of Mormon.

From the researches of such men of unquestionable authority as Waterman, Baldwin, Scott, Lord Kingsborough, Schoolscraft, Pritchard, Botwini, Claregoo, Priest, Morgan and Prof. Jas. E. Talmage, one of few Americans of the Edinborough Society of Geology, has compiled these conclusions:

(1) "That America was inhabited in very ancient times, probably soon after the building of the Tower of Babel." This agrees with the Book of Mormon; for it says that Jared left the old world for this continent soon after the confusion at Babel.

(2) "That the continent has been successively occupied by different peoples, at least by two classes or races at widely separated periods." The Book of Mormon states that the Jaredites occupied this continent from the scenes at Babel till the sixth century B. C., and that the Nephites and Lamanites occupied the hemisphere from the fifth or sixth century B. C. till the fourth century A. D., when the Nephite nation became extinct, leaving only a degenerate remnant of the Lamanites.

(3) "That the aboriginal inhabitants came from the east, probably from Asia, and that the latter occupants, or those of the second period, were closely allied to, if not identical with, the Israelites." The Book of Mormon says that Jared came from Asia and that Lehi, an Israelite, came direct from Jerusalem.

(4) "That the existing native races of America have sprung from a common stock." This agrees identically with the Book of Mormon.

Now, my friends, appeal to your reason and ask yourselves the question, could Joseph Smith, a youth unlearned in the sciences and classics, unschooled in geography and history, by his own accord and wisdom have authorized a work which in after years summoned to its support the evidences of an extinct civilization? Had the work been of an ignorant, presuming mind, is it not much more reasonable to conclude that instead of proving, the tombs of American antiquities would have furnished evidence sufficient to disprove and overthrow such a work as the Book of Mormon with all its claims? The force of archeological and ethnological corroboration of the Book of Mormon is self-evident and gives it uncontradicted support of its authenticity.

But there are other evidences of the Book of Mormon. The question might be asked: Who other than Joseph Smith saw the plates from which the record was translated? On account of the sacred character of the volume, it was not exhibited to satisfy mere curiosity. But eleven men, praised for their honesty, truthfulness and sobriety, give their testimonies to the fact that they saw and handled the plates. They subscribed their names to an affidavit, solemnly affirming upon the honor of their manhood, that they saw and handled the curious volume; that it was marvelous to their understanding; but nevertheless they gave their word to all men and nations what they saw and did, and called upon God and angels to witness that they spoke the truth. But, says one, could these men not have been deceiving? Men noted for honesty and truthfulness do not very often deceive in such matters, but let us see. When men deceive they do it either for wealth, for power or for notoriety. If these eleven witnesses were not speaking the truth, what other motives would prompt them to fabricate? Could they have sought wealth by their testimonies? It seems a queer way of becoming rich, for by their act they were socially ostracised; nay, more, they were ridiculed and abused. By being "Mormons" they were mobbed, plundered of all they possessed, their homes burned and their lives jeopardized. These are not the proceedings of men in search of wealth by lying. Most of the number lost their standing in the church, lived in poverty and were offered bribes to retract from what they had sworn to; but they never denied their testimonies. No, it could not have been for money that they gave their good names. Then, was it for power? Had it been, when most of them lost their standing in the church, when they were excommunicated and became enemies of Joseph Smith, and forfeited the chance of realizing any ambition or power whatever, had power been their motive, they, in anger or in jealousy, would have denied their testimonials. Surely, through revenge, one would have retracted his statement to overthrow the work which grew on his testimony. Was it for reputation or notoriety, then, they might have deceived? Indeed, what enviable notoriety; to be called an imposter, a "Mormon," to be mobbed, and risk their lives, all for the sake of reputation. Had their motives been for notoriety, when they were excommunicated from the church, could they not have gained more popularity and notoriety by denying their testimonies and thus be the means of overthrowing such a growing and gigantic organization? But they did not. They could not have been under a spell of mental hallucination. Who ever heard of a young man deluding eleven of his superiors by mental magnetism, and holding them deceived all their lives, when separated from them in after years in every way? No, it was no deception, delusion, or imposition. The evidence of any three of the eleven, if given against any man in the courts of the United States, would convict him of any crime. The testimonies of Joseph Smith and the eleven witnesses to having seen and handled the plates, would convince before any impartial court. There are millions of people who believe in the resurrection of Christ, through the testimonies of a few witnesses, two thousand years ago. Yet the evidence of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon is stronger, more binding, more conclusive and lasting than the witnesses of the immortal Christ. The evidence of the Book of Mormon is not from contradicted sources, filtered through ages of ignorance and superstition, as have many of the strongest supports of the Christian faith. There is much more cause to question the witnesses of Christ's immortality than to doubt the validity of the testators of the Book in question. Still there are men who accept without thought the former, and because the latter savors of Mormonism, still not knowing what Mormonism is, they will not give it reasonable attention. No; the witnesses of the metallic plates were not deceiving. Who ever heard of a conspiracy among men embracing whole families, risking their lives, sacrificing their property, losing their good names, and all for what?—for the sake of elevating and making better the human family? Who ever heard of such a deception! Had it been deception, in after years, when in disappointment, when in poverty, when entertaining bitterness against one another, surely one, just one, would have exploded the folly, had it been a folly. But to the end each man upon his deathbed, whether in or out of the pale of the church, reaffirmed his testimony of the Book of Mormon. What would Christendom give for such evidence in proof of its ancient record?

Now, my friends, you have heard in brief my humble attempt in support of a work which I revere as bearing the impress of truth upon its pages. The Book of Mormon in its construction is simple, logical and harmonious. The spirit which permeates its pages feeds the soul. To read it is to be a better man, to feel purer and happier. It, in itself, is an argument able to satisfy its claims in its evidence of prophecy and consistency. You have heard exploded its objections and noted its proof from various sources. Is it not reasonable? Does it not deserve careful and serious investigation? If it is true, is it not of incalculable value to the human family? If it is not true, why have the brains of men been at a loss to show its falsity? If true, it will weather every wind of opposition. Its proof makes it true. It explains the origin of the Indian races. It is a criterion by which to tell the truths of the Bible and serves as a key to many so-called mysteries of the Jewish scriptures. It is an evidence that God lives. It is an evidence that Jesus is the Christ. It is an evidence that when the Spirit of Joseph Smith was beaten back to the bosom of its God by an ungrateful and blood-guilty world, the inhabitants of the earth had again martyred a valiant son of the Great Eternal Father.

GLEANINGS.

Sunday last, Elders Iverson and Perkins came up from Memphis, spending the day with us. These brethren, with others, are doing a good work in that city.

Monday, the 18th inst., a company of twelve Elders arrived from Zion. We also were favored with the presence of Brother John H. Bankhead, who was on his way to Florida, having been transferred from North Kentucky to the proverbial "Land of Flowers."

Last week a number of Elders going to and returning from their fields called and paid the office brethren a visit. Elders Blake, Gay and Rogers, who have been honorably released from labors in the North Carolina Conference, called upon us en route home, spending the day visiting, etc. Elder J. A. Robison, of the East Tennessee Conference, was so anxious to get home that three hours spent in Chattanooga seemed like months. He no doubt thinks the railroad people very unaccommodating because they do not run trains every hour, bound for Zion.

Forsyth county, Georgia, has been favored for a short time with the presence of Elders R. D. Green and E. T. Mayhew, but it seems their labor of righteousness was not appreciated by some of the people. Having canvassed the county seat, they proceeded to the northeastern part of their field. On the 13th inst. the brethren were successful in getting the Castleberrie school house to hold a meeting in. That night about 8:30 o'clock (meeting having been given out during the day), a crowd of boys and men, numbering about thirty, began to gather. The Elders had sung a few songs, when a young Baptist preacher informed them that "they did not allow Mormons in their neighborhood." The preacher of the word (?) then withdrew, when eggs, rocks, etc., were thrown through the windows and doors by outside parties. The brethren were then told to "make tracks," and amid a shower of the aforesaid over-ripe hen fruit and the vilest cursing, they moved up the road with the mobocrats following. Finally at the turn of the road the brethren retreated into the protecting woods, while the mobbers thinking they had continued up the road, proceeded past them. In closing the Elders write: "This is our first experience with rotten eggs in the hands of modern Christians, and we hope it will be the last, for indeed these people's idea of Christianity and rotten eggs seem to work harmoniously."

Why ministers are sent to the so-called "poor heathen lands," to civilize those people, when in this boasted land of liberty such uncivilized people exist, we cannot understand. When men claiming to be ministers of the Son of God will persecute Mormon Elders they show their true color—hypocrites of the worst type.

SKETCH OF PRESIDENT J. F. SMITH.

1867, was called to fill a vacancy in the Council of the Twelve. When President Young chose to have more than two counselors President Joseph F. Smith was one of the number selected.

In 1868 he was called with President Woodruff and Elder A. O. Smoot, to go to Provo and labor for the upbuilding of that city and Utah county. He served one term in the Provo City Council. By permission of President Young he in 1868-69 removed his family back to Salt Lake City and resumed his labors in the Endowment House and Historian's office. On Feb. 28, 1874, Brother Joseph F. started on his second mission to Great Britain. This time to preside over the European mission. During his labors in Europe, Scandinavia, Germany, Switzerland and France were visited, as well as the several conferences of the British Isles. Brother Joseph proved himself to be one of the very choicest Presidents that has ever presided over any mission, not only for his prompt and wise methods of conducting affairs, but also his humbleness in obeying the whisperings of the Spirit, for which he constantly lives; for his personal love and tenderhearted kindness to every Elder in the mission, which has endeared him to the hearts of thousands of Elders and Saints, who have lived and labored directly under his personal ministrations.

Soon after the decease of President Geo. A. Smith, in the fall of 1875, Brother Smith was released to return home; and upon returning from this labor of love he was appointed to preside over the Saints in Davis county, the county at that time not being organized into a Stake of Zion. He held this position until the spring of 1877, when he was called on his third mission to Great Britain. Before leaving he witnessed the dedication of the St. George Temple, the first completed in the Rocky Mountain country. During his labors on this mission Elder Orson Pratt came to Liverpool to publish new editions of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Later they appeared with copious marginal references and foot notes, prepared by Elder Pratt. About the 1st of September they received the sad news of the death of President Brigham Young and were requested by the Council of the Apostles to immediately return home. They reached Salt Lake City Sept. 27, 1877. and the following year Brother Joseph was sent with Elder Orson Pratt on a short mission to the east. They visited noted places in church history, in Missouri, Illinois, Ohio and New York, calling upon David Whitmer, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. When the Endowment house was reopened in Salt Lake City, subsequent to the death of President Young, President Joseph F. Smith was placed in charge. In October, 1880, when the presidency of the Church was organized, with President John Taylor at the head, President Smith was chosen to be his second counselor. He was chosen to the same position under President Woodruff, and now occupies that honored station under the presidency of President Lorenzo Snow.

During the presidency of President John Taylor, and under the trying scenes of the anti-Mormon crusade, by direction of President Taylor, Brother Smith performed another faithful mission in the Sandwich Islands. While there he obtained an exact copy of the old Spaulding story, and by evidence incontrovertible showed that not the slightest resemblance existed between the Book of Mormon and the Spaulding story.

His labors in the City Council, the Legislature and other places of civil and financial responsibility, are too numerous to mention in a brief sketch. President Smith has filled every position of trust assigned him with such unblemished honesty and fidelity, that no man can justly say aught against him. One of the grandest traits of his character is impartial justice. The great system of Patriarchal Marriage, so well designed to prove the hearts of men and women, and to develop in them the principles of pure love, charity, justice and impartiality, has no better examples among God's noblemen than President Joseph F. Smith. Whatever obligation he is under to that sacred principle for his existence, and for the possession of his own posterity, he is meeting that obligation manfully, with the record that his example shall exemplify the truth of Celestial marriage as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

During his counselorship in the presidency he has traveled extensively in the stakes of Zion, in Utah, Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Canada and Mexico, and continues active, whether at home or abroad. As a fitting conclusion of this meagre sketch of a useful and noble life, we quote a pen sketch of President Smith from the able writer, Elder Edward H. Anderson:

"President Smith has been constantly in the service of the public, and by his straightforward course has won the love, confidence and esteem of the whole community. He is a friend of the people, is easily approached, a wise counselor, a man of broad views, and, contrary to first impressions, is a man whose sympathies are easily aroused. He is a reflex of the best character of the "Mormon" people—inured to hardships, patient in trial, God-fearing, self-sacrificing, full of love for the human race, powerful in moral, mental and physical strength.

President Joseph F. Smith has an imposing physical appearance. Now completing his 62d year, he is tall, erect, well-knit and symmetrical in build. He has a prominent nose and features. When speaking, he throws his full, clear, brown eyes wide open on the listener who may readily perceive from their penetrating glimpse the wonderful mental power of the tall forehead above. His large head is crowned with an abundant growth of hair, in his early years dark, but now, like his full beard, tinged with a liberal sprinkling of gray. In conversation, one is forcibly impressed with the sudden changes in appearance of his countenance, under the different influences of his mind; now intensely pleasant, with an enthusiastic and childlike interest in immediate subjects and surroundings; now absent, the mobility of his features set in that earnest, almost stern, majesty of expression so characteristic of his portraits—so indicative of the severity of the conditions and environments of his early life.

As a public speaker, his leading trait is an intense earnestness. He impresses the hearer with his message more from the sincerity of its delivery, and the honest earnestness of his manner, than from any learned exhibition of oratory or studied display of logic. He touches the hearts of the people with the simple eloquence of one who is himself convinced of the truths presented. He is a pillar of strength in the Church, thoroughly imbued with the truths of the Gospel, and the divine origin of this work. His whole life and testimony are an inspiration to the young.

I said to him: "You knew Joseph, the Prophet; you are old in the work of the Church; what is you testimony to the youth of Zion concerning these things?" And he replied slowly and deliberately:

"I was acquanted with the Prophet Joseph in my youth. I was familiar in his home, with his boys and with his family. I have sat on his knee, I have heard him preach, distinctly remember being present in the council with my father and the Prophet Joseph Smith and others. From my childhood to youth I believed him to be a Prophet of God. From my youth until the present I have not believed that he was a Prophet, for I have known that he was. In other words, my knowledge has superseded my belief. I remember seeing him dressed in military uniform at the head of the Nauvoo Legion. I saw him when he crossed the river, returning from his intended western trip into the Rocky Mountains to go to his martyrdom, and I saw his lifeless body, together with that of my father, after they were murdered in Carthage jail; and still have the most palpable remembrance of the gloom and sorrow of those dreadful days. I believe in the divine mission of the Prophets of the nineteenth century with all my heart, and in the authenticity of the Book of Mormon and the inspiration of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and hope to be faithful to God and man and not false to myself, to the end of my days."

THE PROBLEM SOLVED.

BY ELDER JAMES KIRK.

Prominent among religious circles seems to stand the stubborn and intricate problem of how the firm and permanent foundation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, or so-called Mormons, can be successfully combated to accomplish its overthrow. Theological schools have assailed it with a prospective triumph before them; but their brilliant banner of fancied victory has never been unfurled to wave over its ruined stronghold only in vain imagination. The learned, the wise, the great and small, have all contributed to effect its utter annihilation. Sullen and malignant foes have frowned upon its gleaming battlements, but, like a wind-driven cloud, have cast but a transient shadow of gloom upon its perpetual strongholds.

What seems to be most perplexing to the minds of all is the current of power which permeates the whole organization from center to circumference, uniting its members and their interests into one solid compact.

Some have attributed this unanimity to isolation, others to ignorance or plebeian subservance to their despotic leader. But the people themselves proclaim that it is the power of God. And if those who are swathed in the labyrinth of prejudice and bigotry would study more carefully the results of cause and effect, perhaps their mental burden would become less ponderous in trying to solve the "Mormon problem."

Let us search the Scriptures for a little intelligence along this line.

The Apostle Paul, in teaching the ancient Saints, explained to them the nature and necessity of a completely organized body in the Church of God; that they should not be tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine and cunning craftiness of men whereby they lie in wait to deceive. (Eph. 4.)

Now, Paul goes on to tell us (I Cor. 12) that the body of Christ (the church) consists of Apostles and Prophets, teachers, evangelists, pastors, etc., Jesus Christ being the head. (Eph. 4-11, Eph. 5-23, Col. 1-18.)

That the subject may be made clear it will be necessary to place these members in their relative positions and dependency on each other. Christ being the head, the Apostles and Prophets being next in order, would constitute the trunk, the evangelists, pastors and teachers the legs; and the members or Saints the feet and toes. Now, we find recorded in the fourth chapter of Ephesians that this kind of a body "fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth according to the effectual working in the measure of every part maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

Saints upon this same subject, Paul says: "Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular * * * and the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary. * * * For our comely parts have no need; but God (not man) hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked: that there should be no scism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it."

All that is necessary to an understanding of the nature, importance and harmony of such a thoroughly organized system as Christ effected upon the earth, according to Paul's explanation, is for one to acquaint himself with the workings and relationship of the members of his own physical organism, and the system of communication carried on between the various parts of the body; for Paul tells us that the church is identically the same in its organization and operations.

Now if you should ransack the whole domain of Christendom would you be able to find such a perfect and complete church organization? No. Outside of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints it cannot be found upon the earth. All churches professing to be Christian look to Christ as their head. But the Apostles and Prophets, which constitute the main body of the church, are rejected by them as being unnecessary. But although Apostles and Prophets are dead and gone, evangelists, pastors and teachers, which form the legs to the body, are still alive and actively engaged in disseminating the Gospel truths (?) in the world.

Who ever saw a head, legs and feet without a body? Paul tells us that the head cannot say to the feet, I have no need of you, and if such be true, certainly the feet and legs cannot say to the body, we have no need of you, for they, being the lesser members, would be left powerless by rejecting the greater. Now, if we should separate the head from the feet and legs by removing the trunk of the body, would it be possible for the legs or feet to have any connection with, or receive any revelation or intelligence from the head? Of course not, such a thing would be an impossibility.

Then, like the amputated limbs of the human body, the Christian world today is entirely cut off from all communication with the head (Christ), and as it is only a matter of time when the severed limbs will wither away and die, just so it will be with all those who deny the essentiality of Apostles and Prophets in the church or body of Christ.

Now, if we are willing to accept the teachings of the Bible in preference to that of man, there will be no schism in the body, the spiritual gifts will be enjoyed as in days of old and a current of power will permeate the whole system. Otherwise it is contrary to both reason and Scripture to suppose that such blessings could be enjoyed and such conditions exist.

In conclusion, "Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them." (Eph. 5-6 and 7.)

History of the Southern States Mission.

October, 1897—As a whole, the mission work progressed very favorably, the Elders were holding a great number of meetings and distributing many books and tracts.

After an absence of more than four months, President Kimball returned to Chattanooga from the west, arriving Oct. 19, bringing with him his wife and children.

On the 30th inst. a letter reached the office from Elder Thomas Martin, Jamestown, Ky., bearing the news that Elder Lewis J. Bushman was very sick with typhoid fever, and asking how to best care for him. The following morning a telegram was received from Elder Martin informing President Kimball that Elder Bushman had just died. Instructions were immediately wired to Brother Martin to have the body embalmed and to take his sacred charge to Cincinnati, Ohio, where it would be met by President Kimball. Of course the death of this brother caused a feeling of sorrow to overshadow the mission, but to the understanding minds of Elders and Saints they know that to die while in the service of the Eternal Father is but passing from this sphere to a better resting place.

The stringency of the quarantine regulations in the Gulf states, to prevent the spreading of yellow fever, hindered our Elders from doing much work in that part of the mission.

November, 1897—On the night of the 10th, Apostles F. M. Lyman and M. F. Cowley arrived from Zion. The purpose of their visit is set forth in the following lines, which is a copy of a letter they carried with them from the First Presidency of the Church:

Salt Lake City, Utah, Oct. 22, 1897.

To the President, Elders and Saints of the Southern States Mission:

The bearers of this communication, Elders Francis M. Lyman and Mathias F. Cowley, members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, have been called and appointed to make a special visit to the Southern States Mission, to meet with the Elders and Saints in public and private, and to give such instruction and counsel as wisdom and the spirit of the Lord may suggest. As our fellow servants and embassadors of the Lord Jesus Christ, we commend Elders Lyman and Cowley to your kind consideration, and trust whatever instruction, advice or counsel they may be led to impart will be received by you as though coming from ourselves. And we pray the Lord to bless these our brethren in their travels and labors, and to bless the Elders and Saints who may receive and hear them, that their visit may be fraught with good results to the mission and blessings to the people. We are your brethren,

WILFORD WOODRUFF.
GEO. Q. CANNON,
JOSEPH F. SMITH.

At 10:15 p. m., only a few moments after the arrival of the Apostles, President Kimball's 14-months-old baby died. Jonathan Golden Kimball (the name of the babe) had been a delicate child. On the 11th inst. at 2 p. m. funeral services were held in the parlor, where twenty-one friends of the bereaved had gathered. Apostles Lyman and Cowley did the speaking. The body was interred in a lot of Mr. Ed Davidson in Forest Hills Cemetery. The sympathy of the entire mission went out to President Kimball and family.

South Carolina Conference was held on the 13th and 14th insts. at Society Hill, Darlington county, S. C. The North Carolina Conference was held on the 20th and 21st at Princeton, Johnston county, N. C.; the Virginia Conference was held near Haran, Va., on the 27th and 28th. Apostles Lyman and Cowley and President E. S. Kimball were present. On the 20th inst. twenty-one Elders arrived from Zion and were assigned to their various fields of labor.

The month closed with the most of the Elders enjoying good health, and working with a determination to scatter seeds of truth; to warn mankind of the precious truths held by the servants of God in this day and age. The Saints were vigorous in doing their duty, which was a source of much joy to those in charge of this part of the vineyard.

WOMEN AND WAR.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

We women teach our little sons how wrong
And how ignoble blows are; school and church
Support our precepts and innoculate
The growing minds with thoughts of love and peace,
"Let dogs delight to bark and bite," we say;
But human beings with immortal souls
Must rise above the methods of a brute
And walk with reason and with self-control.

And then—dear God! you men, you wise, strong men,
Our self-announced superiors in brain,
Our peers in judgment, you go forth in war!
You leap at one another, mutilate
And starve and kill your fellow men and ask
The world's applause for such heroic deeds.
You boast and strut; and if no song is sung,
No laudatory epic writ in blood,
Telling how many widows you have made.
Why then, perforce, you say our bards are dead
And inspiration sleeps to wake no more,
And we, the women, we whose lives you are—

What can we do but sit in silent homes
And wait and suffer? Not for us the blare
Of trumpets and the bugle's call to arms—
For us no waving banners, no supreme,
Triumphant hour of conquest. Ours the slow,
Dread torture of uncertainty, each day
The bootless battle with the same despair,
And when at best your victories reach our ears,
There reaches with them to our pitying hearts,
The thought of countless homes made desolate
And other women weeping for their dead.

O men, wise men, superior being say,
Is there no substitute for war in this Great age and era? * * *
Why should we women waste our time and words
In talking peace when men declare for war?

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

"Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good.
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."
—Tennyson.

Herein lies the secret of true happiness, "to be good," and the "simple faith" once delivered to the Saints will bring to pass this "true happiness"—heartfelt, everlasting and eternal. Our subject topic, "God's greatest gift," is an important one, for it most vitally concerns the inhabitants of the earth in every land and clime under the sun. When once we realize its beauty, glory, magnificence and heavenly splendor, we shall never rest contented, our souls will never be satisfied, until we have reached its blessed portal, and obtained its peace and bliss. To specifically and distinctly define God's greatest gift, means to say that He is the Author of many rich and perfect blessings; all of which we shall find go to make up this supreme gift or summum bonum of divine favor, James, the Apostle, says, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1:17.) From this we learn that "every good gift and every perfect gift" emanates from the throne of God; that they are bestowed upon the sons of men, by the "Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." Let us not overlook this fact; that there is "no variableness, neither shadow of turning" with Him who is the Giver and Bestower of all "good gifts;" therefore can we place all confidence in His promises; all faith in His holy words; and implicit trust in His righteous decrees; for being an unchangeable God, He will be the same yesterday, today, tomorrow, and forevermore.

There are "good gifts," and there are "perfect gifts," all of which come from the one source, the fountain head of Truth, God, the Eternal Father. We may define the "good gifts" as health, strength, food, raiment, homes, habitations, and all that we really enjoy of a temporal nature, or it may be said, all blessings that are more nearly connected with our earthly existence, happiness, and maintenance. These are all "good gifts," yea, they are precious gifts and much to be desired; but there are other blessings, which the Apostle wisely designates as "perfect gifts," which pertain to our eternal natures, and which exalts the spirit, cleanses, purifies, redeems, and immortalizes the body of man. God's gifts are given unto man to counteract the evil influence and wicked power of the adversary. Thus, health combats sickness; strength conquers weakness; food allays hunger; raiment shields and protects from exposure and inclemency; homes provide a shelter from the storms; and habitations supply for us a place to dwell. The Father of all mercies and the Author of all things beautiful and good, is the Giver of these choice temporal gifts. Yes, for in the beginning when all was pronounced "good" by the Maker, and sin and wickedness had no place in all the footstool of Omnipotence, the Lord blessed our first parents—Adam and Eve—yea, He gave them health; He gave them strength; He gave them food; He gave them the new-born earth for a blessed home, and the Garden of Eden for a celestial habitation.

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein." (Psalms 24:1.) He hath loaned it, with all the blessings it produces, with all the rich gifts which it affords, and the hidden treasures which it possesses, unto the children of men for a temporary habitation. As Jehovah is the creator and preserver, so is He the owner of the world, and all things therein; and He has a perfect right to rule, govern, and dispose of all as seemeth good and righteous in His holy sight. Purity of heart, chastity of conduct, and obedience to divine commands are essential to our enjoying the good and perfect gifts of God.

This, then, naturally leads us up to the subject, "God's greatest gift;" for if there is one gift more precious, more profitable, and greater than all others, it behooves each and every one to diligently seek for this paramount blessing; that they might receive of the Lord's highest rewards. It will be agreed by all concerned and interested in the redemption of the soul of man, that "God's greatest gift" is salvation, exaltation, and life everlasting in His celestial kingdom. Yes, for then we shall be given this earth, sanctified and glorified, for an everlasting inheritance, and an eternal dwelling place. Says one: Is it possible that this earth will be prepared, cleansed, renewed, and made the eternal home for immortal man? Yes, kind reader, such is verily true, and the Scriptures of Holy Writ are replete with passages confirming the same. With your generous consideration, let us do as the Lord Jesus hath commanded, "Search the Scriptures," and in them we shall find an abundance of testimony and evidence to support and sustain the stand taken in this regard. "And the Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy word; but as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." (Num. 18:20-21.) Why "all the earth filled with the glory of the Lord?" for this reason; "the valleys shall be cleft as wax before the fire." (Micah 1:34), and this same destroying, cleansing element "shall consume the earth, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains." (Deu. 32:22.) After which cleansing "the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." (Prov. 2:21-22.) Then will be fulfilled the beautiful promising words of the Redeemer, when He said, "The meek shall inherit the earth." It comes to "the meek" as an everlasting inheritance, a heaven-born legacy, a holy heritage—a gift from God. That this blessed inheritance of the earth by the righteous and God-fearing shall be forever, we need only turn to the 37th Psalm, where we shall find the following: "Those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth," (9th verse), "and their inheritance shall be forever" (18th verse). And furthermore, "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." (Psalms 37:29.) It would not be possible to have more pointed, direct, explicit declarations than those herein given. The Prophets and holy men of God have spoken very plainly upon this subject, and from their inspired words we learn that the earth shall be cleansed with fire, and "every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." (Isaiah 40:1-5.) This is in part the restoration, and then the Lord God shall cause His Holy Spirit to dwell on all the face of the earth, that His words might be fulfilled, "All the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

When the glory of our Lord shall cover the face of the purified soil, then shall also this Heavenly influence rest upon man and beast, removing from them the enmity which was placed there by reason of the transgression of our foreparents in the Garden of Eden, for God said, "I will put enmity," (Gen. 3:15), and now we are given to understand that this enmity shall be removed, and that the Spirit of the Lord shall be poured out upon all flesh. (Joel 2:28.) This glorious outpouring of God's Spirit will bring to pass that blessed state of affairs which Isaiah's pen has so beautifully described: "But with righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of His lions, and faithfulness the girdle of His reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb; and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; and their young ones shall lie down together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." (Isaiah 11:4-9.) This is the millennial era, when Christ shall reign upon the earth; when righteousness and good will shall abound; when sin, wickedness, and violence of every kind shall cease; when the Saints of the Most High God shall be given the kingdom of the Lord forever, and they shall live together in harmony and love, blessedness and peace.

The earth thus cleansed, beautified, redeemed, sanctified and glorified, being graced with the presence of its Creator—Jehovah—and blessed with the sweet, pervading, enlightening influence of His glory, is now a fit, heavenly abode for immortal man. Is not this, then, the greatest of all God's good and perfect gifts; to be redeemed from the grave, raised with an incorruptible tabernacle of flesh and bones—the eternal Spirit of God coursing through the veins, taking the place of the corruptible blood, and supplying life, light, wisdom, and intelligence to the whole being, and then divinely favored with the celestial earth for an eternal home, and heavenly blessed with our Redeemer, Lord, and Savior for our Everlasting King? Can the mind of man anticipate greater joy, long for higher rewards, or hope for more glorious gifts, than a salvation which will place him beyond the wicked Lucifer's enticements, and an exaltation with God and His Christ? No, verily no! This is the acme of reward for the humble, the Himalayas of expectation for the faithful and earnest. It is the highest, the best, the richest, and the greatest gift of a loving God to a fallen race.

This is what the Lord taught His disciples to pray for, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as it is in Heaven." (Matt. 6:10.) When the will of God is obeyed on earth as it is in heaven we shall find all things in subjection and submission thereto. Now, kind reader, does not your soul long to enjoy this holy peace, this sacred rest, in the celestial kingdom of God's glory? Would you journey along this highway of salvation that you might be made the happy recipient of God's greatest gift; then follow the course pursued by the Savior, yea, keep in that straight and narrow path marked out by Prophets and Apostles under God's direction. It is both plain and safe, and no honest inquirer after truth, no earnest investigator for righteousness, need fail to traverse its beaten track, or go astray after he has entered upon it; for the Lord hath promised unto all those who obey Him a spirit which will lead and guide into all truth, and which the Prophet Isaiah says shall be as a word behind you, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it."

There is glory and honor for the faithful, and life everlasting; but as long as wickedness abounds, and sin can find a place in the hearts of men, the righteous will have to meet opposition, battle with persecution, and overcome evil with good. Now, we know that, although the Church of Jesus Christ has been, and now is, oppressed on every hand, she will eventually triumph, and the final issue of all her sufferings and conflicts shall be universal victory over her enemies, permanent tranquility, holiness, and peace; when love unfeigned shall reign supreme, and extend all around, and all above, until the whole earth and the inhabitants thereof are filled with the peaceable fruits of righteousness. In subsequent issues we will consider the plan of life and salvation through which God's greatest gift is obtained, and by which the obedient may enter into their heavenly home, "with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."

Girls Compared.

Deseret News.

An investigation of peculiar interest to the West has been completed by Miss Anna Barr, of the physical training department of the University of Nebraska, and as a result it has been announced that the Western woman is physically more perfect than her eastern sisters. To be more explicit upon a subject of such importance, it has been found that the "girls from the East are flatter chested, flatter headed, lesser in lung capacity and bigger footed than the Western girls."

The measurements were made by Miss Barr upon 1,500 Nebraska girls, but it goes without argument that if the experiment were repeated in Utah, the result would be still more favorable to the West. For physical perfection there is nothing like the valleys of the mountains, with their pure air, pure morals and lofty ideals.

And the truth is that this physical beauty is but an outward expression of the beauty of soul. There is a law according to which that which dwells within will find an expression in the outward form. The sculptor no more faithfully carves his ideal in the marble than does the indwelling spirit stamp its image upon the walls of the home in which it dwells. Sorrow, joy, passions, happiness, will leave their peculiar traces. If the heart is pure, the faith strong, and the mind bent submissive to divine will, the tent in which such a personality lives will show it, just as the surroundings of a home give a fair index to the character of the inhabitants thereof.

Miss Anna Barr has paid a great compliment to the Western woman, and found that the idea of the West as "wild and woolly" is entirely erroneous. Wildness must be looked for where "flat heads" and other deformities prevail.

WHAT GOD REQUIRES.

The Gospel in Brief — Only One Church — Its Organization — Persecution.

BY ELDER R. W. SMITH.

No doubt there are many honest-hearted people in the world today who are trying to serve God to the best of their ability according to their conception of His divine will; but who are so blinded by the traditions and false doctrines which are so universally taught in the world, that they are in a great measure, if not entirely, ignorant of what our Heavenly Father actually requires of His children in this life. It is a great thing to know the will of the Father, but a greater one to do it when once understood. Knowledge is a great blessing to one who puts it to proper use and cultivation. But to have a knowledge pertaining to the things of God and His commandments and then to ignore them or fail to govern our lives accordingly, is in itself sin. James says, "he that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." In order to do good, however, we must first get understanding, without which all is uncertainty and doubt. Those who desire an inheritance in the mansions of our Father in the life that is to come, and who are willing to sacrifice the pleasures of this life, and life itself if necessary, in order to obtain it, should first of all turn their whole attention to acquiring a knowledge of the conditions upon which this great blessing is predicated. Then, having gained the necessary information of what to do, by coupling with that, faith and energy to act accordingly, obeying each principle as it is brought to your understanding, you are then in a fair road to final success and ultimate salvation; which you will gain by continuing steadfast unto the end.

Should the investigator, seeking the "straight and narrow way," go no farther in his investigations than to observe those who profess to be following it and serving as guides to others, he is almost sure to be defeated in his object and give up in despair; for one could never pattern after modern methods of Christianity as an example of obedience to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The spectacle presented by the combined forces of modern Christendom is, to say the least, discouraging to one who is trying to solve the great problem of salvation. Here is one sect or party advocating certain principles and ordinances as a means of salvation; another alongside of it directly opposing its teachings and holding up to the public gaze an entirely different system of worship; and still a third openly condemning the other two and advocating other doctrines agreeable to their own peculiar views. And so we might go through them all with the same result —opposition, division, multiplied division, and the farther we go the more complicated it becomes.

What seems most strange and perplexing to the mind of the truth seeker in his investigations, is the fact that each one of these sects claim to be following the same road, with Christ and the Apostles as their guide and example. Now our natural conception of reason and sound judgment teaches us that there is something very wrong here, and that there are many thousands who are being deceived and led astray either by the mistaken ideas and conjectures of men, or their cunning craftiness, or perhaps both. The wise man, therefore, will be warned, and instead of stumbling, as many have, will keep clear of this web of deception and learn the will of God by endeavoring to comply with His requests, and obtain His Spirit as a teacher, by which, and it alone, mankind can understand the things of God.

In starting out upon a search after the Kingdom of God we must of necessity come to one of two conclusions to commence with; either that all the churches now in existence claiming to be Christian taken as a whole, constitute the Church of Christ; or that one only is right and the rest wrong. It would be entirely unreasonable as well as unscriptural for one to arrive at the first named conclusion, for Christ Himself said that if a house be divided against itself it could not stand. God also said that His house is a house of order, and the teachings of the Apostles was to the effect that all true followers of the Master must be baptized by one spirit into one body, and live in the unity of the faith, being perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. This brings us then to the last named conclusion, viz., that there can be but one true Church of God upon the earth.

It should be, therefore, the uppermost desire in the heart of every individual, as it certainly is his duty and obligation to God, to seek out that one organization or Kingdom of God, and when found to accept the terms of admission, become associated therewith and obey its precepts, principles and doctrines, which alone will bring salvation in the celestial Kingdom of God in the life to come.

The Church of God as it rolled from the hands of its divine organizer, Jesus Christ, and as it must remain as long as God has a people on the earth, is a perfectly organized system, or body, containing all the gifts, powers and blessings requisite for its government and perpetuation in the earth; and its members enjoy all the rights, privileges and blessings which has ever been accorded the people of God by our Eternal Father. It is built upon the foundation of revelation, and is presided over by a quorum of Apostles, who stand as prophets, seers and revelators to the Church, and who exercise the right of holding direct communication with the heavens and making known to the children of the kingdom the mind and will of God respecting their lives and actions from time to time as circumstances may require.

You will find by referring to 1st Corinthians, 12th chapter and 18th and 26th verses, that God Himself placed these officers, together with many others, in the Church; and from Ephe. 4, 11 to 14, that He placed them there for an express purpose, which was to edify or instruct the Saints and to attend to the work of the ministry; and also that they were to remain until all men should come to a unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man.

Paul, in the same chapter referred to above (1st Cor., 12th chapter), likens the Church to the body of a man, and reasons that to dispense with one of the officers of the Church would be equivalent to severing one of the members of our physical organism. We could, therefore, with as much propriety assert that the body would survive after the head had been severed; as that the church would still exist although you should exclude, or do away with its visible head—Apostles and Prophets.

According to the Apostles' doctrine, as taught in the Bible, the first requirement made of the candidate for salvation is that he shall believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; second, that he must repent of his sins; third, that he should receive a remission thereof by being baptized in water by a legally qualified servant of God; and fourth, that he should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost by the imposition of hands of those holding the authority to confer it. And having obeyed these principles, he is considered a legally adopted citizen of the Kingdom of God on the earth, prepared to ascend higher and higher on the Gospel ladder leading to the throne of the Majesty on high, which he must do by adding to his faith, virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity, and so on till the last round, perfection, is reached. This is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, pure and simple.

Is there anything strange, inconsistent or unreasonable about it? No, it is beautiful and grand when understood in its true light, and exhibits most beautifully the divine hand of Providence in its composition and arrangement; each principle following the other in perfectly natural and harmonious sequence. This is the Gospel as taught by that generally despised sect known to the world as "Mormons." These are the principles they advocate, and for defending them they are subjected to the same treatment, and made to suffer the same injustice, and receive the same persecution at the hands of their fellow-men, as was our beloved Savior and His followers who inaugurated the system eighteen hundred years ago.

Yet, notwithstanding the great opposition which is encountered in the work of disseminating these divine principles and doctrines among the children of men, they are being widely proclaimed in all the world by the humble servants of the Master in whom they originated; and the time is not far distant when all mankind who will deign to listen will have heard them and had the opportunity of embracing them. And when ample opportunity for their acceptance will have been given the sons of men and they are left entirely without excuse, then Christ will make His appearance, wickedness will be overthrown, Satan will be bound and justice will be meted out to all.

"The time is nigh, that happy time,
That great expected, blessed day,
When countless thousands of our race
Shall dwell with Christ and Him obey."

LIFE.

HENRY KING.

Like to the falling of a star,
Or as the flights of eagles are,
Or like the fresh spring's gaudy hue,
Or silver drops of morning dew,
Or like a wind that chafes the flood,
Or bubbles which on water stood—
E'en such is man, whose borrowed light
Is straight called in, and paid tonight.
The wind blows out, the bubble dies,
The spring entombed in autumn lies;
The dew dries up, the star is shot,
The flight is past—and man forgot!

Let not one look of Fortune cast you down:
She were not Fortune if she did not frown:
Such as do bravest bear her scorns awhile
Are those on whom at last she most will smile,

—Lord Orrery.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

ARGUMENTS OF BIGOTS ANSWERED.

We have recently received several letters, asking if the Latter-day Saints believe a woman cannot be saved, unless she be, as our enemies express it, "tacked on to some man." This argument is only a fair sample of many of its kind used by silly, bigoted fanatics, who are unable to meet our Elders in reasonable arguments, and are constantly resorting to just such rot as this. There is not a religious sect on earth, professing a belief in Christ Jesus, whose religious views are filled with so much charity, concerning the salvation of the daughters of Eve, as is the belief of the Latter-day Saints.

When the great day of eternal judgment dawns it will be found that man will be punished and damned for the sinful lives lived by many of the women of the world; God will deal out a just and a charitable punishment to those of His daughters who sin, but this punishment will be nothing compared to the judgment that will be pronounced upon man, whom God created, the stronger of the sexes, and therefore expected him to become a protector, instead of the defiler of His daughters. Man will be more severely punished, because he will be looked upon as the responsible one. It would not surprise us, if, when a daughter of Eve, one who has lead a life of sin in this world, stands before the great judgment seat, that God's voice may not be heard telling her to step aside, before receiving her sentence, until He had first passed judgment upon the man who was the cause of her starting out on this life of sin, and also upon the men who were the cause of her continuing in this downward path.

But to return to the original subject, the fault of mankind today lies in their ignorance in not knowing the difference between merely being saved and being exalted. Many will be saved who will not be exalted, because there are different degrees of salvation, just as there are different glories in the Kingdom of God; as the Apostle Paul says, one like unto the sun, another like the moon, and others like the stars; or, as the Master Himself said, in His Father's house were many mansions, and that He would go to prepare a place for them, that where He was there they might be also. Those who will inherit the greatest glory and dwell with Christ will be those who will be exalted; others of God's children will be saved, each one according to his or her acts, but none will reach that glory like unto the sun, save they obey the Gospel of Christ, and none will be exalted in that glory (because there will also be different degrees of salvation in that glory), unless they are faithful in keeping all of God's commandments. We therefore believe that no woman can reach the highest exaltation without the man, and that no man can be thus exalted without the woman. We cannot help whether this doctrine suits bigots or not, it is the law of God and will be understood when the great day dawns, and to those who open so wide their mouths in denouncing the Mormons we ask why they do not denounce the Apostle Paul in the same manner? He taught the same doctrine when he said the man was not without the woman, neither the woman without the man in the Lord. The trouble is that modern Christianity has heaped unto themselves teachers for such a length of time and has listened so much to man's interpretation of God's word, that they understand about as much regarding being saved, being exalted, and being sanctified, as a pickaninny coon knows about ancient Greek. That our readers might know something more about our belief concerning woman, we reproduce, in this number, an article on the "origin and destiny of woman," from the pen of the late President John Taylor.

The Fairhope Courier, a neat little journal, published down in Alabama, contains the following, from the pen of Marie Howland:

We have had a visitation from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Very few indeed were out to hear the Elder's (Martineau) address, given on such short notice, merely out on the bulletin board a few hours, and as there was a band rehearsal, and at Cliff Cottage a class meeting.—Speaking for myself, only, I was entertained and instructed; and of absorbing interest to me was the account of that small band of devoted Saints traveling from Missouri hundreds of miles (through a desert region much of the way) and among savage Indians; most of them pushing two-wheel carts, containing all their worldly goods; arriving at length, weary, lame, hungry and foot-sore, in the Great Salt Lake valley. There they halted, and before twenty-four hours had passed prepared a little portion of the soil and planted some of the precious seeds they had brought with them. They were on that inhospitable alkali soil, and for years they fought death, starvation and other enemies with an indomitable will and an unfaltering trust that God had led them there to found the Church of Zion and to build up a noble commonwealth. No wonder, when we consider what they have accomplished, that they believed themselves divinely led.

I never saw a Mormon before, though one of my most valued and learned correspondents, the editor of the Young Woman's Journal of Utah, is one of the Saints; and, literally, judging from the wise, tolerant, liberty-loving spirit she always manifests, and from her beautiful photograph, I believe her to be of the "salt of the earth." I should also add from the testimony of those who know her personally.

We wish to call the attention of all delinquent subscribers in regard to renewing their subscriptions.

Words of Condolence.

All who are acquainted with Elder Sylvester Low, President of the South Carolina Conference, will be pained to learn of the death recently of his 9-year-old son, Leslie. Brother Low is a man of sterling worth, who is loved and respected by all who know him, and in his hour of trial we pray he and his family may be comforted by the sweet influence of God's Holy Spirit.

"Cease, ye fond parents, cease to weep,
Let grief no more your bosoms swell;
For what is death? 'Tis nature's sleep;
The trump of God will break the spell,
For He, whose arm is strong to save,
Arose in triumph o'er the grave.

"Why should you sorrow? Death is sweet
To those that die in Jesus' love;
Though called to part, you soon will meet
In holier, happier climes above;
For all the faithful, Christ will save,
And crown with vict'ry o'er the grave."

The judges of the contest were, on delivery. B. H. Roberts, O. F. Whitney and Geo. H. Brimhall; on thought and composition, Dr. J. E. Talmage, Prof. N. L. Nelson and E. H. Anderson. We publish the prize oration, "Thou Shalt Not," in full, as contained in the Deseret News of June 12th:

"THOU SHALT NOT."

The thoughts which I shall utter are the result of some study as to the causes which have led to most, if not all, the persecutions that have been heaped upon former, as well as upon Latter-day Saints.

Four thousand years ago, God thundered from the summit of Sinai, ten great commandments. Since that eventful day in the world's history, each has been broken time and time again, yet the breaking of none has caused so much sorrow and suffering, misery and death as the breaking of the ninth, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

The world's tragedy, enacted on the summit of Calvary, was but the effect of a cause which had preceded it. The breaking of the sixth commandment had been preceded by the breaking of the ninth commandment. Let your minds go back to the scene which was enacted in the judgment hall of Pilate, nearly 1,900 years ago. Seated upon his throne, with his purple robes about his form, is the Roman governor; before him stands the man who, but a few hours earlier, had been dragged from his agonizing prayer in Gethsemane; to the right and left, stand Rome's hirelings; close to the throne stands the band of priests, elders, and scribes, every feature of their vicious faces showing the hatred which they bear towards their intended victim. Only one thought seems to control their actions: "Away with him. Let his blood be upon us and upon our children." The background of the judgment hall is filled with a hating, howling mob, crying, "Crucify him! Crucify him!" presenting in their action, a picture of hate and murderous intent such as the world has rarely seen. Pilate finds no fault. The testimony is not strong enough to convict. Are, then, the priests, elders and people to be denied the blood of their intended victim? No, for, "At last came two false witnesses." It would be unjust to say that Pilate knew that the testimony was false, yet upon it he sentenced the "perfect man" to death upon the cross. The Son of God was crucified on Calvary. He was convicted before Pilate. He was murdered by haters. He was convicted by liars. The breaking of the sixth commandment on Calvary Hill was not a greater crime than was the breaking of the ninth in the judgment hall of Pilate.

The Savior was crucified through the breaking of it: Peter and John were imprisoned by the same means; as were also Paul and Silas; the stoning to death of Stephen was not an effect from the same cause; Peter was crucified, head downward; Paul was beheaded; all the horrors of the early Christian persecutions were but the outcome of the testimony of false witnesses. Read the story of the Inquisition; of the massacre of St. Bartholomew; of the religious persecutions through the world for the past nineteen centuries, and then tell me if you know of any other commandment, the breaking of which has had as far-reaching an effect as has the breaking of the ninth. Time forbids a detailed account of all the horrors committed in the name of religion, but in nearly every case the cause was the same as that which drove the "Man of Sorrow" from the judgment hall of Pilate to the Hill of Calvary.

No sooner did the "Boy Prophet of the Nineteenth Century" tell of the heavenly visit which he had received, than false witnesses arose. Read the story of his mob-driven life from the age of 14 until his cold body lay against the stone wall of Carthage jail. Read the history of the Latter-day Saints from Kirtland to Jackson county, to Nauvoo, to Far West, to the valleys of the Rockies, the story of Johnson's Army and the Utah State Penitentiary and then tell me what was the cause of all the robbing, driving, imprisonments, beatings, mobbings and murders which have been committed in the name of religion and justice, if it did not arise from the testimony of false witnesses?

Let your minds dwell for a moment on the tragedy enacted on Slippery Fork of Cane Creek, in Lewis county, Tennessee, in 1884, in which Elders Gibbs and Berry gave their lives for the cause of truth, or turn to the tragic death of Elder Standing in Georgia, and then answer what was the incentive which organized and drove those mobs to their bloody work if it was not the testimony of false witnesses?

Let any Elder of this Church who has filled a mission to any nation of the earth, tell you of his trials and persecutions, and ask him the cause. I think that he will answer with me, that it was brought about through the testimony of false witnesses.

The history of the world's great crimes may be written in two sentences, The breaking of the ninth commandment, the cause; stealing, mobbing and murdering, the effect.

Few, if any, people in the world's history have suffered so much from the breaking of this commandment as have the Latter-day Saints, yet sometimes I wonder if many have not forgotten the cause of their persecutions, of most of their sorrow and sufferings? If some of them have not forgotten that the God who gave them existence has said, "Thou shalt not?" If many of them have not forgotten that good (though homely it may be) maxim of the Church, "Mind your own business?"

The lowest, most contemptible and cowardly creature is the character assassin, for his work is usually done in such a way that his victim has no chance for defense. The thief and murderer are oftimes brave in comparison, for "none but cowards lie." No person can have the right to break the ninth commandment any more than he can have the right to break the sixth or seventh.

If, for the breaking of the ninth commandment, you can plead "not guilty," for you have injured no man with false testimony, then all praise to you for keeping free from this sin. But characters may be ruined without a direct lie, by inuendo, a false impression, by a half a truth and half insinuation. "A lie that is half a truth is the blackest lie of all." Such actions always have weight with those who wish to believe evil. A word, a look, a sigh, then metaphorically like the Arab, you fold your tent and silently steal away; Mark Antony-like, your actions seem to say, "Now let it work: mischief, thou art afoot. Take thou what course thou wilt." "When we say of people what we will not say to them, we are either cowards or liars."

You tell me that man is the architect of his own life, that if he has broken the law, he must pay the penalty. I grant your charge. But his actions do not license you to add greater crimes to his credit. I deny any man the right to sit in judgment upon the actions of his neighbor, unless he has been injured; yes, even then, I deny him the right to judgment. "Judge not lest ye be judged." "Forgive one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven you." If you pray to God to forgive you of your sins and refuse to forgive your fellow-man, I deny you the right to utter the Lord's Prayer. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Note the first thought which The Prince of Peace uttered after the prayer, "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you, but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Before you refuse to forgive, I ask you to remember the last great prayer—"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Forgetting not the words of life and beauty, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Humanity is frail enough; the faults and wrongs which we have and commit are numerous enough without any adding thereto. What joy or satisfaction does it give to tell the faults of another? God has not appointed us to tell the faults of our neighbors, to make their failings known to the world. Would it not be nearer our religion and our Prince to hide the faults and to try and lead the erring one from the errors of his way? Remembering that "The words of the tale bearer are as wounds?"

Let me make a plea for the erring soul. Fathers, mothers, you who know the faults of your neighbors' son, or the indiscreet acts of their daughter,—before you tell them, think how your story would sound if it were directed against your own loved ones and how you would feel if the story told should blight the fair name of your child and cast a stigma upon yourself? You who have children whom you love with your heart's strong beating, what would be your feelings if it were your child whom some one had spoken ill of?

"If you're the first to see a fault,
Be not the first to make it known."

Hide rather than expose a fault, for there are times when silence is better than the truth. The first Napoleon had, as one of his mottoes, "I command, or I am silent." Can we not take for a motto, "I speak good of others, or I am silent?"

Young man, you have a mother and sisters, ere you speak ill, true or false, against the mother or sister of another, let me ask you to think how your words would sound spoken against those dear ones whom you love, remember that to the true man, the character of a woman is ever sacred; no matter what she is or may have been, you do but lower yourself to speak ill of her. To the young woman who is given to this fault, of evil speaking, I can only say, Thou art thy sex's own worst enemy. Thou hast less charity toward thy sex than has man.

We are human, weak and frail. Paul-like, "the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." How willing, how weak, only the struggling, fighting soul knows. The greatest battles of life are those fought in silence. Be he what he may or where he may, away down deep in every heart lies the wish to lead a higher, a better, a nobler life; yet how hard it is to overcome evil, to leave forever the flesh-pots of Egypt! Yet, how much easier would be our fight if there were only a helping hand, a smile or a word of encouragement. Would it not be better for the young man or woman whom you see going wrong, if, instead of telling others of the wrong, you were to go to them with love and kindness and try to help them to a higher and better life. A pound of help is better than a ton of advice, an ounce of kindness better than a car load of faultfinding. "There is an infinite satisfaction in receiving the gifts of God, but the privilege of becoming the means through which He will bestow light and blessings upon others is the greatest privilege bestowed upon man." "There is no beautifier of the form, complexion and manner like the wish to scatter joy and not pain around us." I cannot think that we would defame the character of our brother wilfully; I cannot think that we would injure, by tale-bearing, with malicious intent; but rather I try to think that we do not know the "whys and wherefores" for every false step that he may have made. It is not given us to know his temptations and trials. If we understood his heart's motives, we would be less ready to find fault, more ready to help.

"If we knew the cares and trials,
Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointments,
Understood the loss and gain,
Would this grim exterior roughness
Seem, I wonder, just the same?
Would we help where now we hinder?
Would we pity where we blame?

"Ah, we judge each other harshly,
Knowing not life's hidden force;
Knowing not the stream of action
Is less turbid at its source.
Seeing not amid the evil
All the golden grains of good;
Oh, we'd love each other better
If we only understood."

I plead for the erring, struggling, misunderstood soul; that with love and kindness it shall be led, not driven, to a higher, a better, a nobler life.

God gave ten commandments. They are as binding as they ever were. Where is the Latter-day Saint that would make unto himself any graven image? Where is the one who would worship any other God? They are not Sabbath breakers; they are not profaners; they are not thieves; the teaching of the seventh commandment is sacred to them; the murderer is unknown among them. All of these commandments have they kept from their youth, up; but do they break the ninth commandment? Do they bear false witness? You ask me if I place the bearing of false witness upon the same level of crime as the breaking of the sixth, seventh, eighth or tenth commandment? And why not? God made no distinction when He gave them. He prefaced each with "Thou shalt not." I know of but one distinction made in Holy Writ— that which was made by the Christ. The first great commandment is this: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy might, mind and strength." And the second is like unto this—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Who is thy neighbor? Read the parable of the Good Samaritan? Do I love my neighbor as myself when with words I rob them of their honor, of their good name? You remember the words which the "Bard of Avon" has put into the mouth of his character of Iago? "Good name in man and woman, dear my Lord, is the immediate jewels of their souls: Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing; 'twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands. But he that filches from me my good name, robs me of that which not enriches him and makes me poor indeed." "The crown and glory of life, is character." Wealth nor talent should be so priceless. Fame is ofttimes but a dream; wealth, but a will-o'-wisp.

Death robs you of your loved ones and sorrow fills the heart; friends prove false and regret floods the soul; wealth vanishes and leaves poverty; take away religion and the bright star of hope is gone; health goes, the vengeance of a violated law of nature remains. Wealth may be regained, health may return, other loved ones may fill the aching void, new friends take the place of those lost, the star of hope may once more shine, but take away honor and you leave nothing but desolation, heart-aches and misery! The sun of life is set; darkness alone remains. You have stolen that which can never be returned. And as surely as God lives you shall pay the penalty of that theft. The laws of the land may fail to reach you in this life, but the laws of God will reach you in eternity. You have broken a commandment and the penalty shall be paid.

The breaking of the ninth commandment has ever been followed by suffering, misery and death. The partial breaking of it by disgrace and dishonor. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." Such are the commandments of God. Can we, will we, do we follow them?

The Origin and Destiny of Woman.

The following article appeared in the Mormon, a publication issued in New York City in the fifties, under the editorial management of the late President John Taylor. The date of the issue containing it was August 29, 1857. It has been reproduced in the columns of the Deseret News:

The Latter-day Saints have often been ridiculed on account of their belief in the pre-existence of spirits, and for marrying for time and all eternity, both being Bible doctrines. We have often been requested to give our views in relation to these principles, but considered the things of the kingdom belonged to the children of the kingdom, therefore not meet to give them to those without. But being very politely requested by a lady a few days since (a member of the church) to answer the following questions, we could not consistently refuse—viz.: "Where did I come from? What is my origin? What am I doing here? Whither am I going? And what is my destiny after having obeyed the truth, if faithful to the end?"

For her benefit and all others concerned, we will endeavor to answer the questions in brief, as we understand them. The reason will be apparent for our belief in the pre-existence of spirits, and in marrying for time and all eternity.

Lady—Whence comest thou? Thine origin? What art thou doing here? Whither art thou going, and what is thy destiny? Declare unto me if thou hast understanding? Knowest thou not that thou art a spark of Deity, struck from the fire of His eternal blaze, and brought forth in the midst of eternal burnings?

Knowest thou not that eternities ago, thy spirit, pure and holy, dwelt in thy Heavenly Father's bosom, and in His presence, and with thy mother, one of the queens of heaven, surrounded by thy brother and sister spirits, in the spirit world, among the Gods? That as thy spirit beheld the scenes transpiring there, and thou growing in intelligence, thou sawest worlds upon worlds organized and peopled with thy kindred spirits, took upon them tabernacles, died, were resurrected, and received their exaltation on the redeemed worlds they once dwelt upon. Thou being willing and anxious to imitate them, waiting and desirous to obtain a body, a resurrection and exaltation also, and having obtained permission, thou made a covenant with one of thy kindred spirits to be thy guardian angel while in mortality, also with two others, male and female spirits, that thou wouldst come and take a tabernacle through their lineage, and become one of their offspring. You also chose a kindred spirit whom you loved in the spirit world (and had permission to come to this planet and take a tabernacle), to be your head, stay, husband and protection on the earth, and to exalt you in the eternal worlds. All these were arranged, likewise the spirits that should tabernacle through your lineage. Thou longed, thou sighed and thou prayed to thy Father in heaven for the time to arrive when thou couldst come to this earth, which had fled and fell from where it was first organized, near the planet Kolob. Leave thy Father and mother's bosoms and all thy kindred spirits, come to earth, take a tabernacle, and imitate the deeds of those you had been exalted before you.

At length the time arrived, and thou heard the voice of thy Father, saying, go, daughter, to yonder lower world, and take upon thee a tabernacle, and work out thy probation with fear and trembling and rise to exaltation. But daughter, remember you go on this condition, that is, you are to forget all things you ever saw, or knew to be transacted in the spirit world; you are not to know or remember anything concerning the same that you have beheld transpire here; but you must go and become one of the most helpless of all beings that I have created, while in your infancy; subject to sickness, pain, tears, mourning, sorrow and death. But when truth shall touch the cords of your heart they will vibrate; then intelligence shall illuminate your mind, and shed its luster in your soul, and you shall begin to understand the things you once knew, but which had gone from you; you shall then begin to understand and know the object of your creation. Daughter, go, and be faithful in your second estate, keep it as faithful as thou hast thy first estate.

Thy spirit, filled with joy and thanksgiving, rejoiced in thy Father, and rendered praise to His holy name, and the spirit world resounded in anthems of praise and rejoicing to the Father of spirits. Thou bade Father, mother and all farewell, and along with thy guardian angel, thou came on this terraqueous globe. The spirits thou had chosen to come and tabernacle through their lineage, and your head having left the spirit world some years previous, thou came a spirit pure and holy, thou hast taken upon thee a tabernacle, thou hast obeyed the truth, and thy guardian angel ministers unto thee and watches over thee. Thou hast chosen him you loved in the spirit world to be thy companion. Now, crowns, thrones, exaltations and dominions are in reserve for thee in the eternal worlds, and the way is opened for thee to return back into the presence of thy Heavenly Father, if thou wilt only abide by and walk in a celestial law, fulfill the designs of thy creation, and hold out to the end. That when mortality is laid in the tomb, you may go down to your grave in peace, arise in glory, and receive your everlasting reward in the resurrection of the just, along with thy head and husband. Thou wilt be permitted to pass by the Gods and angels who guard the gates, and onward, upward to thy exaltation in a celestial world among the Gods. To be a priestess queen unto thy Heavenly Father, and a glory to thy husband and offspring, to bear the souls of men, to people other worlds (as thou didst bear their tabernacles in mortality), while eternity goes and eternity comes; and if you will receive it, lady, this is eternal life. And herein is the saying of the Apostle Paul fulfilled, "that the man is not without the woman in the Lord, neither is the woman without the man in the Lord." "That man is the head of the woman, and the glory of the man is the woman." Hence, thine origin, the object of thy creation, and thy ultimate destiny, if faithful, lady, the cup is within thy reach, drink then the heavenly draught, and live.

Keep Still.

Keep still! When trouble is brewing, keep still; when slander is getting on its legs, keep still; when your feelings are hurt, keep still till you recover from your excitement at any rate. Things look different through an unagitated eye. In a commotion once I wrote a letter and sent it, and wished I had not. In my later years, I had another commotion and wrote a long letter; but life rubbed a little sense into me, and I kept that letter in my pocket against the day when I could look over it without agitation and without tears. I was glad I did. Less and less it seemed necessary to send it. I was not sure it would do any hurt, but in my doubtfulness I leaned to reticence and eventually it was destroyed.

Time works wonders. Wait till you can speak calmly, and then you will not need to speak, maybe. Silence is the most massive thing conceivable sometimes. It is strength in very grandeur. It is like a regiment ordered to stand still in the mad fury of battle. To plunge in were twice as easy. The tongue has unsettled more ministers than small salaries ever did or lack of ability.—Exchange.

GLEANINGS.

Elder George A. Adams has been chosen to succeed President Elton, of the Chattanooga Conference. Elder Adams is an intrepid worker for the Master, and we look for a continuation of the good work in this conference. President Elton has been called to labor in the office.

Ere this, J. Urban Allred, former President of the Middle Tennessee Conference, is in Zion enjoying the association of loved ones and friends. Brother Allred filled every position given him, while in the Mission, with honor. His successor, Elder John Reeve, takes hold of his new and responsible position with a determination to keep Middle Tennessee Conference where she now stands—in the front ranks.

Miss Knight at Home.

Provo Daily Enquirer, June 12.

Miss Inez Knight, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Knight, of this city, returned home last evening, from her missionary labors in Great Britain. Miss Knight left Provo April 2, 1898, and has worked continuously in the Bristol and London Conferences. The lady took up the same work as the male missionaries in preaching in the streets and halls, and distributing tracts. The Millennial Star states that Miss Knight is the first lady missionary to fill a full mission, and that she has done much to demonstrate the fact that ladies are a success in spreading the Gospel. The returned missionary has the distinction of being one of the first two ladies ever set apart for regular missionary labors. Since returning to this side of the pond, Miss Knight has visited many of the interesting points in the east en route home.

Abstracts From Correspondence.

Mt. Pleasant, Utah, June 17, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Dear Brother—I assure you that I appreciate the interest you and the brethren at the office have taken in me, and I wish to thank the Elders of the Southern States Mission for their fastings and prayer in my behalf. I believe I have been benefited already, and trust I shall recover completely in the near future.

Thanking you one and all for your expressions of sympathy and love, I am, your brother in the Gospel,

A. C. CANDLAND.

Corbin, Ky., June 19, 1900.

To The Southern Star.

Today we have completed our tracting in this town of about 2,500 inhabitants, having spent just a week here.

Although we have many friends at present, the way has appeared rather misty at times since our arrival in the city, and our experience has not been unlike that of others in our position, which we will take time to relate in as few words as possible.

On Tuesday, June 12th, we entered Corbin with the intention of doing all in our power, by the assistance of God, to warn the people of the approaching judgments upon the wicked, and to impart the plan of salvation unto them, as God had given us a knowledge of the same.

We were unsuccessful from the start in procuring a house to speak in, but were granted the privilege by the chief executive to distribute our tracts, sell books, and hold street meetings. We held one meeting without disturbance, but at our second night's service we were treated to a shower of eggs just as we closed, but escaped unharmed, and were taken to a hotel by a kind friend, who paid for our night's lodging.

We were out early next morning to see if we could have protection from such a lawless and disrespectful set as those who mistreated us, and we were promised by those in authority that we should be protected. Saturday last we went to the home of a friend, Levi Ellison, and found a letter awaiting us, which read as follows:

Corbin, Ky.

To the Mormon Elders:

We will give you until tonight to leave this town, and we warn you not to undertake to speak any more on our streets.

Please take notice to this.

COMMITTEE.

From the time of our mistreatment, our friends have increased in number, and many have become indignant at such lawlessness on the part of some of their townsmen.

As to the notice received, we gave very little attention to it, because there were so many who promised us protection, and Saturday night we stood on the same corner where we had received the eggs, and while several men stood by as guard, we preached the Gospel.

Upon leaving we can truthfully say that the people of Corbin, with the exception of those few whom we have mentioned, have proven to us a fair-minded and liberty-loving people.

Among our friends and kind benefactors, of Corbin, may be mentioned the names of Levi Ellison and family, J. D. Shotwell and family, John Shotwell, Solomon Wilder, George Wyatt, Samuel McKargue and wife, and many others, who shall receive their reward according to the promise of our Savior.

Valuable Note Book Free.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company has just issued a publication entitled Outdoor Sports and Pastimes. It is one of the best publications of its kind ever issued, contains all that can be learned in relation to base ball, bicycling, cricket, croquet, foot ball, golf, lacrosse, lawn tennis, polo, quoits, and outdoor sports of all kinds. It is a very useful little book, well printed, with diagrams to illustrate the text. No devotee of any of the sports enumerated should be without it. It contains all the up-to-date rulings of the United States Golf Club Association, twenty-nine foot ball rules, with a dozen minor notes; also fifty-five rules for cricket. If this book was sold in book stores it would be considered cheap at 50 cents, but J. F. Aglar, general agent Union Pacific Railroad, 903 Olive street, St. Louis, will mail the same free on receipt of 3 cents in stamps to cover cost of postage.

How Toil Conquered Pride.

John Adams, the second President of the United States, used to relate the following anecdote:

"When I was a boy I used to study Latin grammer; but it was dull, and I hated it. My father was anxious to send me to college, and therefore I studied the grammar till I could stand it no longer; and, going to my father, I told him that I did not like to study, and asked for some other employment.

"My father said: 'Well, John, if Latin grammar does not suit you, try ditching—perhaps that will. My meadow yonder needs a ditch, and you may put by Latin and try that.'

"This seemed a delightful change, and to the meadows I went. But soon I found ditching harder than Latin, and the first forenoon was the longest I ever experienced. That day I ate the bread of labor, and glad was I when night came on. That night I made some comparison between Latin grammar and ditching, but said not a word about it.

I dug next forenoon, and wanted to return to Latin at dinner; but it was humiliating, and I could not do it. At night toil conquered pride; and, though it was one of the severest trials I ever had in my life, I told father that if he chose I would go back to Latin grammar.

He was glad of it, and if I have since gained any distinction, it has been owing to the two days' labor in the ditch."—Christian Standard.

A Flower Emblem.

It is said that there is a flower in South America which is visible only when the wind blows. The shrub belongs to the cactus family and the stem is covered with warty-looking lumps in calm weather. These lumps, however, need but a slight breeze to make them unfold large flowers of a creamy white, which close and appear as dead when the wind subsides. Fit emblem this of many Christians who in ordinary times exhibit but little of active grace and are supposed to be unsympathetic and indifferent, but when reverses and afflictions come to themselves or others, when there is a call for what they can do or give, open out into the loveliness of charity and minister joy unto all about them by their grace.—Peloubet.

"Smoking Glass."

Pat was no astronomer, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, but next to his pipe, he loved to be "up to date." A friend had been telling him about an approaching eclipse of the sun.

That night Pat sat on his door-step, patientiy puffing away at his old pipe. He would light a match, pull at the pipe, and then, as the match burned out, try another. This he did till the ground was littered with burnt matchwood.

"Come to supper, Pat!" called his wife from the kitchen.

"Faith, an' Oi will in a minute, Biddy," said he. "Moike has been a-tellin' me that if Oi smoked a bit av glass, sure I could see the shpots on the sun. Oi don't know whether Moike's been a-foolin' me, or whether Oi've got hold of the wrong kind o' glass."

He is the man who is apt to be offended, and to be "hurt," as he calls it, because someone passed him at the church door without speaking, or "said things" about him—he knows not what—behind his back, or objected to some plan which he proposed, or refused to do something he asked. Having worried his wife about the matter, and talked himself into a fever of wounded vanity, he gives everybody to understand that he has a grievance, and assumes the air of a martyr. As a formal protest he may even absent himself from church for two Sundays, and will be still further hurt if no one calls to inquire the reason. Of course he is very provoking, but there is no malice in the man and he ought to be gently treated. It is his misfortune, rather than his fault, that he has no scarf skin, and no protection against the inevitable friction of life. A gentle touch and a liberal use of spiritual ointment will cure his wounds, or, rather, scratches.—Ian Maclaren.

December, 1897--After holding the Virginia Conference, President Kimball returned to Chattanooga on the morning of the 1st inst., remaining until the night of the 3d, when he started for Vanceburg, Ky., at which place the East Kentucky Conference was held on the 4th and 5th. The Kentucky Conference was held at Centre, Metcalf county, Kentucky, on the 11th and 12th inst., Apostles Lyman and Cowley, President Kimball and Elder John Woodmansee visiting with the brethren. The chief topic and instructions to the Elders was the cultivation of the Holy Spirit by obedience.

On the night of the 11th, Elder James E. Hart, President of the East Tennessee Conference, arrived in Chattanooga, informing President Kimball that he considered it impossible for that Conference gathering to be held at Wooddale, Knox county, Tenn., on the 25th and 26th insts., the place where the Elders had been notified to gather. Elders A. W. Ensign and Jos. R. Morrell, who were laboring in Knox county, were notified by an organized mob of eighteen men to leave the county. A Mr. Luttrell was the chief mobocrat, and was considered by the people who respected justice to be an unruly citizen. He leveled a gun on one of the Elders whom he met in the road, and threatened to kill him if he remained in the country much longer. He used vile language and by his actions toward the brethren incited others to persecute them. The Elders had been in the county but a short time, and in the face of much opposition were making converts. In that county were many honest-hearted people who were awaiting the voice of the Shepherd. Some had accepted the faith, while many others were investigating. There were also many good people who, although they did not believe in the so-called "Mormon" doctrine, yet they were willing to entertain and respect the Elders as American citizens. The whole community became excited and the Elders withdrew, resuming their labors in another part of the county. Although released to return home by Dec. 11th, President Hart of his own free will, went to Johnson City, Tenn., and there made preparations for Conference.

Middle Tennessee Conference was held on the 18th and 19th, at Duck River, Hickman county, Tenn. The East Tennessee Conference was successfully held at Johnson City on the dates appointed and much good instruction was given by Apostles Lyman and Cowley. The year of 1897 closed, much good having been accomplished. Many honest-hearted people had come out from the world and were willing to serve God with mind, might and strength. Books and tracts had been left at many thousand homes by the Elders. Taking the year as a whole, much good had been done and the seeds of righteousness sown were sure to bring forth some good.

We might well conclude the year's history of the Mission by quoting the poem written by Willis:

"Fleetly hath passed the year; the seasons came Duly as they were wont—the gentle Spring,
And the delicious Summer, and the cool,
Rich Autumn, with the nodding of the grain,
And Winter, like an old and hoary man,
Frosty and stiff—and so are chronicled.
We have read gladness in the new green leaf,
And in the first-blown violets; we have drunk
Cool water from the rock, and in the shade
Sunk to the noontide slumber; we have plucked
The mellow fruitage of the bending tree,
And girded to our pleasant wanderings
When the cool winds came freshly from the hills;
And when the tinting of Autumn leaves
Had faded from its glory, we have sat
By the good fires of Winter, and rejoiced
Over the fullness of the gathered sheaf.
'God hath been good!' 'Tis He whose hand
Moulded the sunny hills, and hollowed out
The shelter of the valleys, and doth keep
The fountains in their secret places cool;
And it is He who leadeth up the sun,
And ordereth up the starry influences,
And tempereth the keenness of the frost;
And, therefore, in the plenty of the feast,
And in the lifting of the cup, let Him
Have praises for the well-completed year."

The Influence of a Mother.

Not long ago an old man lay dying. For days he had lain almost unconscious, only rousing himself to take a little nourishment. Suddenly his strength seemed to return. He raised up in bed. "Mother!" he called. "Oh, I thought I heard my mother," and frequently thereafter until his death he talked to those about him of the personal appearance, manners and life of the mother who had died when he was 9 years of age. Think how strong an impression was made by that mother in the brief years her boy had been under her control. He had grown to manhood without her, had taken part in the business, social and political life of his native place, yet at the last, business cares, social pleasures, political triumphs, were forgotten. His mother and his early life at home alone remained in his thoughts. It seems remarkable that mothers so often fail to realize the impressions they are making on their children.

"He will never remember," said a mother lately, when her conscience smote her over some acts of injustice to her 7-year-old boy. But that boy will remember, and his mother's influence will be weakened by just so much.

A young officer was asked recently how it was he was able to live so noble a life in the midst of such tremendous temptations. His answer was, "I had a good mother."

Another well known man in London society was remarked upon as taking a strong line of his own, both moral and religious, and the question was one day put to him: "By whose preaching did you become the man you are?"

"It was nobody's preaching, but my mother's practicing," he replied. "Her daily teaching and example were enough to influence her children."

This magic power of influence is one of the greatest of God's gifts—and it is in a special manner granted to mothers—only they cannot exercise it if they are giving too much time to society, to traveling or to philanthropic work which takes them away from their home, and if they decline to give up many pleasures for the elementary duty of devoting themselves to their children's training in the first years of life.—Christian Observer.

THE DEAD.

After being sick nearly two months, Brother James Anderson, of Pike county, Ky., died June 10th. He was baptized July 9th, 1899, and has ever been a faithful member of the Church—a ready defender of truth—a loving husband and a devoted father. Brother Anderson was 33 years of age, and leaves a wife and eight little children, and a host of friends to mourn his loss. The many Elders who knew him will join us in wishing the comforting influence of God's blessings to be with his family and loved ones.

Sister Amber R. Nickolas, of Oilville, Goochland county, Virginia, departed this life the 16th inst., being in her 20th year. She was baptized April 25th, 1898, and acted as Secretary and Treasurer of the Oilville Sunday school until her marriage. She will be missed by her relatives and many friends, who had learned to love her.

LATTER DAY SAINTS

SOUTHERN STAR

"BUT THOUGH WE, OR AN ANGEL FROM HEAVEN, PREACH ANY OTHER GOSPEL UNTO YOU THAN THAT WHICH WE HAVE PREACHED UNTO YOU, LET HIM BE ACCURSED." GAL. 1:7 & 8 V.

VOL. 2. CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1900. No. 32.

THE CRISIS.

The crisis presses on us; face to face with us it stands,
With solemn lips of question, like the sphinx in Egypt's sands!
This day we fashion destiny, our web of fate we spin;
This day for all hereafter choose we holiness or sin;
Even now from starry Gerizim, or Ebal's cloudy crown,
We call the dews of blessing or the bolts of cursing down;
By all for which the martyrs bore their agony and shame;
By all the warning words of truth with which the prophets came;
By the future which awaits us; by all the hopes which cast
Their faint and trembling beams across the blackness of the past;
And by the blessed thought of Him who for earth's freedom died,
O my people! O my brothers! let us choose the righteous side.

—Whittier.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder W. O. Phelps.

There is one St. Valentine's day which will ever be remembered by Brother Hyrum S. and Sister Clarinda Phelps. It was in 1876, and on that memorable day the hearts of these faithful parents were gladdened and made to rejoice by the presence in their home of a sweet baby boy. The grandparents of this newcomer to earth were numbered among those sturdy pioneers who braved the sterile plains and faced the stern realities of frontier life. When the little fellow was only three years old his parents moved to Southern Arizona, and there settled on a tract of land with other faithful Saints of God for the purpose of beautifying and cultivating the same, that they might wrest therefrom a maintenance for their offspring. The land was considered worthless, so far as the production of vegetables and fruit were concerned, but they went to work with a will, and being united in their efforts, the Lord blessed them, and today the splendid results of their diligent labors are seen in the presence of the thrifty little town of Mesa, which is the production of their work.

The early life of our young brother was spent on the farm, where he learned to plow, to sow, to reap, and to mow, and to make himself generally useful. Fortune provided him with a couple of years' schooling in the Arizona Territorial Normal Academy, at Tempe, and he strove to make the best of his opportunities. Having been taught the Gospel by his loving parents, and instructed in the ways of righteousness from his youth, when the call came to fill a mission to the nations of the earth, he was ready to go, and responded with a willing heart. He left his all upon the altar of consecration, and in the latter part of March, 1898, he arrived in Salt Lake City. Here he was given to understand that his labors were wanted in the Southern States Mission, and so the subject of our sketch, W. O. Phelps, for this was he, was appointed to labor in the Florida Conference. Nineteen months of his time was spent in Florida, when he was transferred to Louisiana, where he has since endeavored to point out to fallen man the path of duty, the way of salvation.

When President J. N. Miller was released to return to his loved ones, the responsibility of presiding over the Louisiana Conference was entrusted to his care. Although his corps of laborers in Louisiana are few, we look for a continuation of the good work, and trust that through his labors the hearts of many may be made to rejoice, even as his parents rejoiced on that Valentine's day in 1876 when he was born.

ELDER W. O. PHELPS.
President of the Louisiana Conference.

History of the Southern States Mission.

January, 1898.—The year's work began with very favorable conditions existing. The health of the Elders was as a general rule good, and all of them were desirous of doing their duty. New sections of country were visited and many people taught the true plan of salvation. Where friends were found, enemies also existed, to battle against truth and righteousness.

On the 1st and 2d insts. the Florida Conference was held at Sanderson, Baker county, Fla. The Elders had the privilege of listening to the inspired teachings of Apostles Lyman and Cowley, which were timely, planting within the hearts of the brethren a desire to upbuild mankind and show unto the world we are performing our labors with love in our hearts.

The South Alabama Conference was held January 8th and 9th, near Jones' Mills, Monroe county, Ala., and was very successful throughout. On the 15th and 16th the Mississippi Conference was held in the opera house at Jackson, Miss. During this short stay in the city the ministers did all in their power to instill within the minds of the people falsehoods, their main object being to prevent the honest in heart, or, in fact, any from hearing the truth. And these were men claiming to be called of God to teach their fellow men: "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you."

Louisiana Conference was held near Vowells Mills, Natchitoches parish, La., and the North Alabama Conference convened at Plymouth, Pontotoc county, Miss., on the 29th and 30th.

Ten Elders arrived from Zion the latter part of the month and were sent forth into different fields of labor.

Generally speaking, the work of the various conferences progressed favorably. Rainy weather interfered somewhat with the Elders traveling, yet a good work was done during January.

February, 1898.—On the night of the 1st Apostles Lyman and Cowley left for New York. Their visit to the mission was appreciated very much and the good advice and council given was sure to produce a bounteous harvest of good works.

The 2d inst. found Elders Jabez Faux and L. W. Robbins in Tampa, Fla., ready to go to work. The mayor of that city did not seem to appreciate their services and told them plainly that if they continued their work, they could not have his protection. He also informed them that from the principal men of the city he had received a petition requesting the expulsion of the Elders, else the citizens would expel them, using plenty of tar and feathers in the work. Not wishing to remain where they would not be respected as servants of God, or American citizens, the brethren left the city.

An account of their expulsion appeared in the Tampa papers and was copied in the Chattanooga News. The following day after its appearance here the Chattanooga Times took occasion to severely criticise the article and the action of the people of Tampa. The Times spoke in words of praise of the Mormons as it had found them in Chattanooga.

Very favorable reports reached the office from Elders working in Shreveport, La., Selma, Ala., Charlotte and Winston, N. C., also from many other county seats. President Kimball felt that a Georgia Conference should be created and chose for President of the same Elder Albert C. Matheson. From two to six Elders were chosen from the sister conferences, and word to that effect was sent out informing the different Conference Presidents. The transferred Elders were instructed to preach and do all the good possible en route to the new conference.

President Joseph Cornwall, of the Louisiana Conference, reported that an article appeared in the Shreveport Times to the effect that Elders Arthur Dall and G. B. Moore had received a shower of rotten eggs in Preston, La.

W. E. Robinson, President of the East Tennessee Conference, reported excellent success in Charlotte, N. C. He and companion were unable to accept all invitations to dine and enjoy the comforts of the homes of their friends.

WHY IS IT?

BY THEODORE MARTINEAU.

In these days of progress and advanced thought, it seems rather surprising to the thoughtful mind that there should be so little recognition given to the doctrine of the universal brotherhood of man, a doctrine which is as old as Adam and which, in this age of free thought and religious liberty, should be a recognized principle of right and justice in the mind of every intelligent being in existence.

Springing from the same source, composed of the same elements, actuated, in general, by the same impulse and emotions, breathing the same air, subject to the same divine laws of nature, and moving toward the same goal—how is it we find mankind so alike, yet so different?

With but few exceptions all recognize the existence of a Supreme Being. All look for something beyond this brief span of life. All have a fear of punishment and hope of reward, yet how few, comparatively, are willing to lay aside their own petty jealousies and narrow prejudices and try to reach a higher plane of justice and toleration!

The Bible is their acknowledged standard, yet they reject its teachings and trample in the dust its divine truths.

Claiming to be followers of Christ, they crucify Him anew in their own hearts; preach righteousness and practice hypocrisy. Mempership in the true Church of Christ is claimed, yet the principles and ordinances upon which that church was founded are rejected.

They preach Christ, yet renounce those who come in His name, bearing the same Gospel which He established while here on earth.

They have a form of Godliness, but deny the power thereof.

Why should such conditions exist? If God is an unchangeable being, the same yesterday, today, and forever, is not His word the same likewise? Will not obedience to the same laws and ordinances which were established in ancient days for the salvation of the human race prove just as effective today as in the past for the elevation of mankind?

If not, why not? If the truth of the past is also the truth of the present, and of the future, is not obedience to the same laws and ordinances which were established in the past just as essential to our welfare for the present and the future?

By what authority, then, do men set themselves up as judges of their fellow men? By what authority do they reject the truth, pervert the Scriptures, and teach for the word of God the man-made creeds of today?

Why do they preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ and yet deny the signs which He promised should follow the believer? Why do they proclaim liberty to all men and yet persecute those who differ from them in their religious opinions?

These are thoughts which must occur to every thoughtful person, and questions which each should answer for himself.

In my travels among my fellow men, I find those who can preach eloquent sermons on the story of the Good Samaritan, yet whose souls are too narrow to allow them to succor an afflicted brother. Their pathetic narration of the sufferings of Jesus bring tears to the eyes of the whole congregation, and the meek, forgiving spirit He exhibited toward His torturers is dwelt upon in a manner calculated to melt the heart of a hardened villain, yet none are so uncharitable as they toward one who has been found in a fault.

Do not the same causes produce the same effects? Are not the fruits of the Gospel the same today as in the past? Why, then, should the love, peace, charity, faith and virtue which were fruits of the Gospel in former days, give place to contention, hypocrisy, envy, pride and malice among those who are professed followers of Christ in these latter days? Who will answer?

Abstracts From Correspondence.

Vinscent, Ky.

Dear Editor:

It was in March, 1898, while seated on a pile of lumber, that I first beheld the Mormon Elders, and to me they were a curiosity, wearing their long coats, derby hats and carrying grips. This was in Lee county, Kentucky, at a saw mill which employed a small squad of men. The strangers came to where the men were working and introduced themselves as messengers of God. I shook hands with them and we sat down upon some logs and began to converse. At that time I was a Campbellite preacher, falsely called Christian. I wished to know something concerning their belief and asked a number of questions. This seemed to please the Elders. They informed me their mission was to enlighten mankind upon the plan of salvation, and for me to ask all the questions I desired. I truly thought I could defend my belief against "all comers," but alas! like many others who have tried to overthrow the true doctrines of the Latter-day Saints, I was defeated. Our conversation drifted to the Scriptures which mentions that the signs should follow the believers. I denied the existence of signs, etc., in this age of enlightenment, but I must confess I was again vanquished, and tried to extract myself by demanding a sign. I told them that if they would go and heal a sick friend of mine I would believe them and their doctrine of God. They referred me to the words of Jesus as recorded in the writings of Matthew xii.: 39: "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas," which was too much for me and I left. I did not let the Elders know they had made an impression on me, that they had planted a truth within my heart that caused me to think. I studied and pondered over our argument, and fully decided that if signs did not follow believers today the Gospel Christ taught was not upon the earth. I continued to reflect upon the things told me by those humble men, Elders Mansfield and Bartholomew.

They left that section of the country, and the next Elders I met were Wright and Tanner. They informed me that they were holding meetings at the Needmore school house, Ousley county, Ky., and that evening found me under the sound of their voice listening to the inspired teaching they uttered. I bought the Voice of Warning and read it, yet I could not fully comprehend that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet. Next I read Orson Pratt's works and was convinced that a Prophet of God should be upon the earth today, and why not that man be Joseph Smith?

January 22d, 1899, I was baptized and became a member of God's Kingdom. Crowds of people flocked to the water's edge to see the baptism and many, instead of repenting of their sins and obeying as I did, made light of the whole affair. My wife was baptized in April of the same year. The longer we belong to the church the more satisfied are we. Our hearts are filled with joy to realize that we are numbered with the chosen seed. We now know that the signs do follow the believers, that the gifts and blessings enjoyed by the ancients can be and are enjoyed today by the Latter-day Saints. May the blessings of heaven be with the faithful. Your brother in the Gospel,

Abner Langdon.

He Won the Case.

Prof. Stevens was once working upon a mining case for the government in a Western State where Mr. Lincoln was practicing law. Mr. Lincoln at the time was comparatively unknown in law and politics. When the professor engaged his room in the crowded country hotel, he found that a Mr. Lincoln was to occupy one bed in the room, as there was no other place where he could be accommodated. After arranging his books the professor settled down in an easy chair to prepare his brief.

Mr. Lincoln soon came in and made himself known. He said he also had to spend the evening making up an argument upon a mining case, and he knew less about mines than about anything else. In an hour the professor finished his work and retired, but before he did so he granted his roommate the privilege of using all his books, maps and papers upon mines and mining. Then he went to sleep, and when he awoke at 7 the next morning he found Mr. Lincoln just where he had left him poring over his books and papers. The lamp was still burning, although it was daylight.

As Prof. Stevens' case did not come up the next day he attended the court to hear Mr. Lincoln present his arguments. He reached the scene in time for the opening speech by his roommate, and he staid all through the session.

Although Mr. Lincoln spoke for over an hour on the technicalities of mines and mining, he did not make a single mistake. He cross-examined some half dozen surveyors and engineers and in every case puzzled and embarrassed them with his knowledge of the subject. Of course he won the case. But Prof. Stevens said that everybody in the court believed that he had been graduated in mining engineering and had devoted years to the study of the science.—Saturday Evening Post.

OBEDIENCE.

BY APOSTLE M. F. COWLEY.

"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." (I. Samuel xv.:22.) In an age of the world when independence is the proud boast of the nations, obedience is, by mistaken ideas of freedom, considered a mark of humiliation. To the contrary, it is an indication of moral courage, union and power. It is not blind obedience that we maintain, but that type which characterized the ancient Seers and Saints, who, like the Messiah, were ready to say by word and deed, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of my Father who sent me." The Latter-day Saints are credited with being obedient and submissive to authority, this fact being often used by their opponents as a stigma. They forget that God requires obedience, that the best embodiment of this principle, the most humble and yielding to the Divine will, was the best and purest being who ever dwelt in mortality, viz., the Lord Jesus Christ: He in whose mouth there was found no guile; who was perfect and without blemish in all the walks of life. While obedient to His Father's will, and humble to the extreme, He was independent of the influence and persuasions of wicked men.

This, too, is the status of the Latter-day Saints. They are obedient to conscience, to convictions of right, to Divine authority and to God, in whom they trust. While thus submissive, their persecutors have found them equally oblivious to the behests of wicked men, whether high or low. Men have been found in the factories of the old world, working side by side at the weavers' loom, in the coal pit, or elsewhere in plying their various avocations of life—in this condition the Gospel preached by the Elders of Israel has found them. Alike, many of them have received convictions of the truth. Some have said: "This is the truth; I must obey it or stand condemned." Others have said: "It is true, but if I obey I will be ostracized, perhaps lose my employment and be an outcast from my father's house. Better that I reject the truth and live in peace, than take upon me this cross of obedience to unpopular truth."

The first obey the Gospel, suffer persecution, prove themselves men and will reap eternal life. The others are slaves to their own fear of popular clamor, and to the unseen powers of darkness which lead men to reject the plan of salvation. Of the first named class are the Latter-day Saints; a host of men and women who have left home, kindred and country for the Gospel's sake. They have endured persecution even unto death, privation and suffering in every form; have redeemed a desert and built up a commonwealth so fruitful with education, thrift and enterprise, that any nation beneath the sun might well be proud of them. Obedience and moral courage they bequeath to their posterity as a legacy better than diamonds or the honors and praise of a fallen world. They look back to their associates in early manhood, who for fear, rejected the truth, and find them, whether living or dead, in most cases, unhonored and unknown. The obedience rendered by Latter-day Saints to the authority of the Priesthood is not secured by virtue of any solemn obligation entered into by the adherent to obey the dictum of his superiors in office; but upon the nature of the Gospel, which guarantees to every adherent the companionship of the Holy Spirit, and this Spirit secures to every faithful individual a living testimony concerning the truth or falsity of every proposition presented for his consideration. "By one Spirit are ye baptized into one body;" and "by one Spirit have we access unto the Father." (Eph. ii.) So that as all men and women who embrace the Gospel are entitled to an individual testimony of the truth, so the same Spirit guides into all truth, reveals the things of the Father, and imparts that inspiration essential to preserve mankind from blind obedience, to erroneous principles and false guides. The statement of the Savior as recorded in St. John vii.:17, covers the ground in the broadest light: "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." This secures to every true Saint, if he is faithful, protection against imposture, the abuse of power, and the false decisions of man-made councils. In this particular the Church of Christ is distinguished from all other systems and institutions. He has promised to guide and direct, and that He "doeth nothing but He revealeth His secrets unto His servants, the Prophets." (Amos iii.:7.) This does not imply the infallibility of man, but it does imply the promise that no man or council of men who stands at the head of the Church shall have power to lead the Saints astray. With this assurance, then, the people of God in every dispensation have been justified in rendering absolute, yet intelligent obedience, to the direction of the Holy Prophets. It is an undeniable fact in the history of the Saints, that obedience to whatever united council has come, either by written document or verbally from the Presidency of the Church, has been attended with good results. On the other hand, whosoever has opposed such council, without repentance, has been followed with evidence of condemnation.

Even applying this principle to the organizations of a civil and business character, confusion and weakness results from men refusing their support to the decision of the presiding authority or of the majority, where the action is left to popular vote. Carlyle, the great English writer, said: "All great minds are respectfully obedient to all that is over them. Only small souls are otherwise."

The obedience rendered to God is based upon a conviction that He is perfect in all His ways. Possessing the attributes of justice, judgment, knowledge, power, mercy and truth in all their fullness. Obedience to His appointed authority upon the earth is obedience to Him, and is so taught by the Savior. "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth Him that sent me." (Matthew x.:40.) "He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth Him that sent me." (Luke x.:16.)

"Verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth Him that sent me." (St. John xiii.:20.)

It is not the attractive qualities of the individual, however great, which renders submission to his administrations valid, but the authority of God which he bears. The acts of Philip, Stephen, Paul, or James were just as valid and binding as those of the Messiah Himself when performed by His authority and in His name. To reject the personal teachings and offices of the Savior could bring no greater condemnation, than to reject the teachings of any man sent of God bearing authority and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit to speak and act in His name. This great truth was told by the Savior on more than one occasion, but perhaps no more forcibly or in more beautiful terms than expressed in the following: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. And He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on His right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in: Naked and ye clothed me: I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came to me. Then shall the righteous answer Him, saying: Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered and fed Thee? or thirsty and gave Thee drink? When saw we Thee a stranger and took Thee in? or naked and clothed Thee? or when saw we Thee sick, or in prison, and came unto Thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

When He told the wicked that they had failed to thus administer unto Him, they began to plead that they had not seen Him sick, in prison, hungry, naked or athirst. He answered them, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me." (Matthew xxv.:31-45.) It was not the individuality of the person which called for respect and consideration. It is the principle involved. God had placed His authority upon humble men. Through their administrations only can be secured, the benefits and blessings which follow obedience to the ordinances of the Gospel.

Implicit obedience must be rendered. The mandates of Jehovah are imperative. No substitute will do. The blessings are offered to all upon condition. The condition is obedience complete, to the plan as God has established it.

Saul was commanded to destroy Agag and all his hosts, man and beast. He kept the best of the flock, for, he said, a sacrifice, but God had ordered otherwise and Saul's disobedience caused him to lose the kingdom, shut him out from the revelations which came by dream, vision and Urim and Thurmim. "Thou shalt not steady the ark," and they who disobeyed were smitten of the Lord. Israel by disobedience lost the guidance of the Almighty, went into spiritual darkness, and have been scattered to the four quarters of the earth, "a hiss and a proverb in the mouths of all nations."

Obedience is essential to salvation, essential to success in every avenue of human enterprise, whether rendered to the laws of God direct, in their moral and spiritual phases, or to His authority vested in man, obedience must be implicit. The haughty man boasts of independence. He scorns the humble followers of the Lord, but while he prates of freedom, he is himself slavishly obedient to his own whims and mistaken ideas, or to the spirit of evil; to popular sentiment, or other influence always dangerous to the welfare of mankind. The Saints have been accused of being Priest-ridden and fearful to use their own judgment. What do the facts show? They are only asked to do right, live pure lives, do good to all men, evil to none, respect the order of God's kingdom that salvation may come to them and be extended to all the world. Their obedience has made them the best and purest body of people on the earth.

What of the character of those who have derided them? They are slaves to a shallow and excited sentiment, or to wickedness and vice: obedient to their own lusts and wicked ways. Compared with those they misrepresent, they are below them in almost every trait which characterizes noble manhood. By obedience to God and His Priesthood the Saints in this age have come off triumphant over obstacles within and foes without. By obedience to God and His commands they will continue the blessed and favored of the Lord forever; truly they have proven the words of Samuel to Saul, verily true, "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams."

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

THE BIRTH OF AMERICAN LIBERTY

Wednesday, the 4th inst., marked another birthday of America, a day long to be remembered by every true American citizen. The life and death struggles of those days of '76, causes the fire of patriotism to glow anew and finds expression in the firing of cannons, and patriotic speeches.

The germs of liberty sown in those colonial days are transplanted within the hearts of each succeeding generation. When that decisive blow was struck in the name of liberty, truth and freedom, the whole universe shook and the fetters of tyranny fell from the hand of fair Columbia. Long live the memory of those noble patriots who fought, bled and died for the liberty we enjoy today.

> In face of death who dared to fling
> Defiance to a tyrant king."

PERSECUTED DISCIPLES.

An exchange has the following to say, relative to the treatment of Christian missionaries in the orient of China:

The ignorant people of China have organized their opposition to foreigners and Christians, and are now in open rebellion against the government and at war with all Christendom. A number of missionaries have been cruelly killed and many others are fleeing for their lives. Of the 80,000 Chinese Christians scattered over the empire hundreds have perished at the hands of their persecutors, and the rest are in great peril of life and property.

They perish like Stephen, praying for their persecutors. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." China's redemption is near. Let your missionary offerings flow into the treasury that we may be ready for the larger opportunity that is at hand.

The civilized nations, including Japan, are hurrying military and naval forces to the scene of riot for the protection of missionaries and other foreigners.

Let the whole church pray for the persecuted disciples in China.

We sometimes wonder if modern Christendom ever stops long enough to engage her serious and sober attention towards a people upon this boasted land of liberty and equal rights, who have suffered much persecution, endured fierce and cowardly opposition, at the hands of a professedly religious and Christian generation.

When the call for volunteers came in '98, many of our Elders laid aside their Prince Albert suits to don the blue uniform and defend American rights in the Philippines and Cuba. We are just as ready and willing today, to shoulder arms, and take our places in the ranks of Uncle Sam's army, in defense of Protestant and Catholic ministers in China, while our own brethren remain behind to be persecuted and abused by those who should be our very best and dearest friends—Christian ministers!

What is the matter? Whoever heard of armored cruisers and iron-plated sea plows scudding the wave, manned with skilled marines, for the protection of a poor, defenseless Mormon Elder who was being brutally punished by a horde of wicked mobbers? No, the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, may be waylaid, mobbed, abused and even slain, and all the consolation or justice they receive may be summed up in the words of President Van Buren to the Prophet Joseph Smith: "Your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you."

We have no moral or legal right to oppress or persecute anyone. As Latter-day Saints we could not if we would, we would not if we could. Talk about praying "for the persecuted disciples in China." Why not do just a little praying for the persecuted disciples in America? Charity begins at home. First set your own house in order, see that love abounds therein, with good-will for all the children of the household; then branch out beyond the precincts of home and lend a helping hand to a distressed and afflicted neighbor. The actions of the good Christians of this present day are similar to the acts of those earlier religionists who fell on their knees, and then rose up and fell on the aborigines.

We do not, by any means, sanction or encourage the act of the heathenish Chinaman, in slaying or scourging the missionaries, but we do say, in all soberness and earnestness, that modern Christendom has been feeding the Mormon people on just such harsh and altogether un-Christian treatment since the organization of the Church in 1830. Our efforts and our talents shall ever be pledged to bring about a restoration of peace, an era of good will, when everyone shall enjoy liberty of conscience, freedom of speech, and the perfect right to worship God according to their conception of Deity, without restraint or opposition. Why not be fair-minded, modern Christians? Why not be liberal, consistent and just in your views; no matter with whomsoever ye may be dealing? Practice just a little of the immortal Lincoln's make-up: "Love towards all, with malice for none." This is the true and only genuine Christian spirit. Give us a hearing that we might be understood; grant us an audience that we might declare our message; give us an opportunity of appearing in our own defense, and then do as the Apostle Paul commands: "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good," (1 Thess. 5:21) "but shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness." (1 Tim. 2:16.)

Ever since the day when the first martyr, Abel, fell beneath the cursed blow of his wicked brother Cain, the ungodly have striven to club and drive from the face of the earth the righteous, the faithful, the just and the true. And so it will be thus until that great and dreadful day of the Lord cometh, when all the proud and they that worketh wickedness shall be as stubble to be consumed before the fiery indignation of God's righteous wrath. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord God."

Why, modern Christendom, will ye remain mute, and close your ears against the appeals of a people who profess to believe in the same God you claim to obey? Why will ye allow your souls to be dumb, your tongues silent, and your hearts unloving, when mob violence is rampant, and persecution raging in our own fair land? Why not buckle on the armor of fair-mindedness, and, like valiant men, as you should be, stand to the colors of your honored and respected grandsires, who nobly fell at Lexington, Concord and Boston, that all the gallant sons and lovely daughters of Columbia may be privileged to enjoy liberty and freedom, now and forevermore? These are pertinent questions, and we shall find that when we treat each other kindly, that God will bless us, prepare our way, make our path plain, and fight our battles.

It is perfectly right and proper that the civilized nations of the earth should come to the aid of our countrymen in China, and quell the barbaric treatment ministered by the Boxers unto the Christian missionaries. We have an abhorrence for such conduct, and trust that the Chinese government will be taught a lesson not soon to be forgotten, and one which will prove an example worthy of emulation unto all who endeavor to suppress religious differences by brute force. When the flood gates of civilization are opened, let the barriers of barbarism flow down before its enlightened surge. Barbarism must ever give way to civilization, even as darkness must vanish and flee before the rays of light. By her blood-thirsty and heathenish acts China has sealed her doom; her downfall is inevitable; the hand-writing of the nations' finger declares her wreck and ruin, and soon the tide of civilization will sweep across her vast domains.

We are indeed proud to know that Columbia will join hands with the mighty powers of the earth, and that the Star-Spangled Banner will be carried by the gallant marines of Uncle Sam's navy to Chinese blood-stained soil, in vindictive indignation of the murder and persecution of its noble citizens. Let the nations combine, and say, as with a voice of thunder, "It is a God-given legacy that all should have the privilege of believing as their minds may incline, and worshipping as their consciences may direct, and we will protect them in the exercise of their rights." Then, when the foreign conquest shall have ended, and the idolator taught this lesson, let the "powers that be" see to it that their own children strictly comply with their teachings, granting due respect unto everyone, let them worship how, where or what they may.

ELDER N. U. S. C. JENSEN.

There has been a rumor going the rounds of the press to the effect that Elder N. U. S. C. Jensen, of Sugar Ward, Salt Lake county, Utah, was one of the victims of that sad railroad wreck which occurred at McDonough, Ga., on the night of the 23rd ult. The evidence pointing to his identification as one of the number killed, was owing to the presence of his baggage on the wrecked train; but Elder Jensen did not accompany his baggage; he came from Macon to Atlanta just one train ahead of the same, arriving safe and sound. Strange to say, however, his personal effects were found with the body of one who was unknown, and unidentified. Naturally enough it was believed to be his body, for on the unknown dead was found one of Elder W. H. Jensen's name cards, and all around the corpse, and even underneath the same, were found articles belonging to Elder N. U. S. C. Jensen, and bearing his inscription. The parents of Elder Jensen were wired that their son was killed, and were asked to telegraph instructions concerning the disposal of his remains. A telegram from President Rich corrected the mistake and brought joy to the hearts of the grief-strickn parents, who were informed that their son was well and would soon return to comfort them by his presence. Many good friends, who supposed that one of our Elders had fallen a victim in the wreck, came to our aid, and endeavored to render all the assistance within their power. We highly appreciate their kindness, and feel to make special mention of the generous, hospitable good-naturedness of Brother and Sister Ford, of Atlanta, who strove to make themselves useful and helpful in our behalf.

Our love, faith, prayers and good will go out to those who are bereaved of loved ones by reason of the disastrous accident, and we feel to ask God's blessings upon them in the hour of their affliction. That all may know that we extend our heartfelt sympathy unto those whose dear ones were so suddenly taken from their midst in this awful wreck; that they may know that we fully appreciate the kindness of the many friends who freely and voluntarily proffered their services in our behalf, and that Elder N. U. S. C. Jensen was not one of the number killed, we pen this brief note.

THE PROPHETS DEATH.

June 27th was the fifty-sixth anniversary of martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. In speaking of the anniversary, the Deseret News has the following:

"They were both murdered by a mob of so-called 'Christians,' who had their faces blackened, at Carthage, Ill., June 27, 1844. There was no legal case against them, although they had given themselves up to arrest. But it was evident that the charges against them were false, and that they could not be convicted. It was therefore declared: 'Law cannot touch them, but powder and ball shall.' They were slain for the truth's sake. They sealed their testimony with their blood. The soil of Illinois is stained with it, and it has never been avenged. Its voice is added to the cries of those of old from 'under the altar,' and will not be heard in vain. 'The blood of the martyrs' has once more proved to be the 'seed of the Church.' The names of the brothers in kin and in faith are known throughout the civilized world, and heathendom has heard of them, while hundreds and thousands of seekers after divine light have found it, as brought to earth and spread through their instrumentality. The work they began in the flesh they are now carrying on in the spirit. A host of faithful servants of God who have followed them behind the veil, are laboring with them for the redemption of the dead. We do not worship either of them, but we revere their memory and honor them as worthy of our everlasting regard. The great principles for which they lived and died will never perish, and the influence of their testimony and their example will never fade. Hail to the Prophet and Patriarch of the last dispensation! Let the day of their birth be ever commemorated, and the day of their martyrdom be always kept in mind. They were chosen of God to be saviors of men, and they will shine with the crowned in the glory of the Father."

BRIGHAM YOUNG ACADEMY.

We are pleased to announce our receipt of the Brigham Young Academy circular for the twenty-fifth academic year. Its title page is adorned with that good old motto of our Deseret home—the Bee Hive—signifying no idlers or drones wanted, but busy workers in demand. The institution has done much for the furtherance of the work of God, and from its educative chambers have come many valiant defenders of righteousness whose efforts have been productive of much good in the Southern States Mission. We wish it success in its endeavors to promulgate the right ways of the Lord, and pray the blessings of heaven upon all who strive to educate, enlighten and instruct the youth of Zion.

PRESIDENT SNOW IMPROVING.

Late reports from Salt Lake City bring the encouraging news that President Snow is improving from his sickness. Such good tidings will cause Elders and Saints in all the world to rejoice and give praise to God, the Eternal Father.

Brother John Harvey has written us desiring that we request the Elders to try and find the whereabouts of his son, King M. Harvey. He was in Pasco county, Florida, when last heard from seven years ago. If his address be known, please inform John Harvey, Springville, Ky.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

THE GOSPEL—We have concluded that the greatest gift of God is salvation in His celestial kingdom, and now we proceed to investigate the principles and ordinances conducive and essential to that end. By salvation, let it be understood that we mean not only a redemption of the mortal body from the grave, and a reuniting of the spirit with the same, but also a deliverance from sin, a victory over every evil, and a triumph over all wickedness, being ransomed, sanctified, and exalted with our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. You remember that the Messiah hath said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in His throne." (Rev. 3:21.) To sit with Christ in His throne certainly gives us a state of high and eternal exaltation and blessedness; but we must not suppose for one moment that this exaltation and glory can be obtained and enjoyed without any effort on our part. To suppose such would be a vain delusion, for the Psalmist has said, "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart," shall abide in the tabernacle of the Lord, and dwell in His holy hill. (Psalms 15.) A mere intellectual assent to the will of God, or a verbal expression of belief in Deity, will not save; these must be of such a nature and profitableness as to lead one to comply with His holy laws, then are they productive of rich fruits and manifold blessings. We have been given the key note; we have been shown the way of salvation; the path of duty is made plain by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and we need not wander, knowing not whither we go, being driven hither and thither, tossed to and fro upon a sea of confusion by every wave of doctrine and petty formalism.

The light of the world is Jesus, and if mankind will only "walk in the light," do as He has bidden them do, obey His holy and righteous commands; put themselves in perfect harmony with God and His laws, then the redeeming blood of Christ will cleanse them from all sin, and our Eternal Father will raise them up at the last day to glory, honor, and everlasting life. Christ came to do His Father's will; He learned obedience by the things which He suffered; He drank the dregs of that bitter cup prepared for Him from before the foundation of the world; He satisfied the stern demands of justice and paid the penalty upon the Cross; He subjected Himself to the sting of death, to the loneliness and solitude of the tomb, that He might burst asunder the bands of death, rob the grave of her victory, and rise a resurrected, triumphant, immortalized and glorified Mediator and Redeemer. Now all this was done that justice might be satisfied; that the Adamic debt might be paid; that all the sons and daughters of men might be redeemed and loosened from the dominion of death, and raised in immortality to life eternal.

The means of grace, the plan of salvation, is known to us as the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It was instituted of God in the heavens, and was established upon the earth by the only Begotten Son at the cost of His life's blood. The Savior gives us to understand that He "came down from heaven not to do His own will but the will of the Father" (John 6:38), and He furthermore said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish His work." (John 4:34.) Is it necessary that we too must also do the will of the Father? Yes, absolutely so. Let the Savior address you in His own words, "not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." (Matt 7:21.) Here we observe that men are to receive rewards, not for their words or profession, but for their obedience to the revealed will of God. The will of God is beautifully manifest and made known in the life, labors, commands and holy precepts of the Son. He commands us to follow Him, and do the will of the Father, telling us at the same time that if we will so do that we shall enter "into the kingdom of heaven."

We have heretofore stated that "the means of grace" by which we are redeemed, and the plan of life by which we are saved, is known as the Gospel of Jesus Christ. "To the law and to the testimony." (Isaiah 8:20.) "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." (Mark 1:1.) To define the Gospel in simple terms, we might say with Paul that "it is the power of God unto salvation;" or, that it is a code of reasonable principles and ordinances, beautifully adapted to the children of men in their fallen state, consistent and logical, embodying all that is good and lovely to the exclusion of all that is evil and bad. To obey the Gospel, means to be sincere, honest, truthful, kind, benevolent, and upright; delighting in holiness and righteousness, with an abhorrence of wickedness in every form; ministering to the afflicted, comforting the downcast, visiting the widow and the fatherless, doing good to all who stand in need, and keeping free and unspotted from the sins of the world. (The principles and ordinances of the Gospel will receive attention and consideration in another number.)

Now the Gospel must be obeyed if Gods' greatest gift would be obtained. The Thessalonian Saints were undergoing much bitter persecution, when the Apostle Paul wrote unto them these very cheering words: "To you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angles, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." (2 Thess. 1:7-8). Those that do not obey this one eternal, everlasting Gospel, will come under condemnation, when our Lord shall re-appear, according to the words of the inspired Paul. You need not marvel, kind reader, for God has spoken it. His holy word records it, the spirit of truth reveals it, the servants of God declare it, and not one jot or one tittle of His word shall fall to the ground unfulfilled. Was Paul not an authorized servant of the Lord? All Christians will agree. Then can we not place implicit trust in the words he wrote and spoke? To be consistent in our professions of belief in the Bible, we must of necessity accept them. The Apostle Peter says, "The word of the Lord endureth forever, and this is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you." (I Peter 1:25.) The word of God, which is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, "endureth forever," and such being the case will it not always be binding upon the children of men to obey? We reply in the affirmative, and inasmuch as the Gospel is the appointed means of saving the soul, men, by believing and obeying it, are instrumental in bringing about their own eternal exaltation. Let us once more give ear to the Sacred Book, and listen to the inspired words of holy men. Paul, speaking of the gift of God, and the power of the Gospel, says that Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." How can we deny the efficacy, or the essentiality of rendering obedience to the Gospel when the Scriptures of divine truth are so very plain and clear on this point; or how can we expect or even hope to gain that blessed "immortality to light," while we remain disobedient to God and His laws as revealed in the Gospel plan? So long as we reject the counsels of God, neglect to yield obedience to the everlasting Gospel, and deny His tender mercies and heavenly goodness, we can never, worlds without end, receive of His greatest gift.

The Gospel being as Paul declares, "the power of God unto salvation," it is self-evident to the reasonable mind that this power must be applied if the end—salvation—would ever be attained, for neither the power, the love, or the grace of God will ever save any who reject; therefore all who hear, should, without procrastination or delay, believe to the saving of their souls, i. e., implicitly obey the means appointed.

There can be only one Gospel, or rather one plan, known as the Gospel, which will bring to the obedient, salvation in the kingdom of God. It is unchangeable. for the great Apostle to the Gentiles says, writing to the Galatian Saints, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ, unto another Gospel, which is not another; but there be some that trouble you and would prevert the Gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so, say I now again. If any man preach any other Gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1:6-9.) Paul verily knew that there was "not another" Gospel which was recognized of God and which received His divine manifestations; and he declared with earnestness, power, and emphasis, that those who would engage in proclaiming "any other Gospel," than that taught by the Lord Jesus, revealed by the Holy Spirit, and confirmed by them that heard him (Heb. 2:3), should be accursed. This is also in corroboration with the words of the beloved John, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your home, neither bid him Godspeed; for he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds." (II John 9-11.) Thus we see that those who reject the great truths taught by Christ and His Apostles, who abide not in His righteous doctrine, are not of God; and not to be received as servants of the Master.

When Christ was here on earth in the flesh, just after His resurrection and prior to His ascension, He called around Him the quorum of Apostles, and sent them forth with a commission as follows: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned." (Mark 16:15-16.) Here then is conclusive evidence that the Gospel must be implicitly obeyed, its holy principles accepted, and its righteous ordinances complied with. Jesus hath spoken the words, and together with other passages of the good old Book, it becomes an unimpeachable fact—an irrefutable evidence.

What remaineth for us to do? Seek to know the principles, to understand the ordinances, and comprehend the beauty, magnitude and power of the Gospel. We have seen that it is true according to the Bible, and now we should energetically, with a prayerful heart and an inquiring mind, endeavor to discover from the "law and the testimony" just what principles must be accepted, what ordinances must be obeyed, the course of life and conduct to be followed in order to purchase God's greatest gift—that precious heavenly boon—Life Eternal. To prove from the Holy Scriptures the principles and ordinances of the Gospel will be the intent and purpose of our next article, that we all may find that path of duty which shines brighter and brighter even unto the perfect day when time shall be no more.

GLEANINGS.

A short time ago Elders E. D. Olpin and J. E. Myler were spending Sunday with some friends and were requested to hold services. Many neighbors gathered in and paid good attention to the words spoken. After meeting was dismissed, the gentleman of the house, Mr. John E. Ruby, said he desired to say a few words in behalf of the Mormon Elders. We quote from a letter written by one of the Elders, what this gentleman said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—In speaking to you upon this occasion I would prefer that it were upon the cross roads or in some public building, rather than in my own home, where you have gathered. I feel it my duty to say a few words, for I am ashamed of my country, and the state of Kentucky, where the constitution says all men shall have the right to worship God as he pleases. Judging from the treatment received by these Elders at the hands of professed Christians, I behold the constitution of this glorious government trampled in the dust. I do not profess Christianity, I do not want you to understand I am preaching Mormonism (I would to God I was worthy, for I am convinced that if they are not preaching the Gospel, it is not upon the earth), but if they were foreigners or infidels, it would be our duty to show them respect at least. They have proven to me that they are gentlemen in every respect, and as such should be protected." Mr. Ruby spoke for about thirty minutes, and did much to batter down the walls of prejudice existing in the minds of the people. One minister desired them to preach at his house, which proved him to be broad-minded and willing to hear both sides of the question. Mr. Ruby has often defended the Elders in their righteous cause, and is a man of influence among his countrymen—one who believes in justice and liberty being granted to all mankind, whether professed Christian or Mormon.

The South Alabama Branch Conference will be held on the 14th and 15th insts. at the Saints' Meeting House. "Bodiford Old Field," four miles south of Highland Home, and two miles north of Saville, Alabama.

OUR TRUST IN THE LORD.

It Requires Moral Courage to Accept the Gospel—Hear the Word of the Lord and Do It—Woe Unto Us If We are Overcome of the World.

DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY APOSTLE GEORGE TEASDALE AT SALT LAKE CITY, APRIL 6, 1900.

I am very thankful to our Heavenly Father that I have the privilege of attending this conference and of rejoicing with my brethren that we are seventy years of age. I was very much impressed in listening to the instructions that have been given, how everything tends to establish the Scriptures. The 37th Psalm says:

"Fret not thyself because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity:

"For they shall soon be cut down like the grass and wither as the green herb.

"Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Delight thyself also in the Lord and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass:

"And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday."

From the testimonies that we have heard this seems to be the history of the Latter-day Saints. They are the most valiant and courageous people on the face of the earth, because they "trust in the Lord and do good." It required a great deal of moral courage to accept this Gospel, to come out of the world and take up the cross of Christ, and to advocate a doctrine that was everywhere spoken against. But it has established in us an everlasting character. We know no fear. Our trust is in the Lord; and the exhortation to us, Learn the will of God and do it, brings forth and establishes within us a character. We are always willing to do the will of God. We came into the Church for that express purpose. We found that it would be impossible for us to be delivered from death, hell and the grave, unless we accepted of the doctrine of Christ as taught by the inspired servants of God: and being on the unpopular side we had to defend ourselves. We tested the principles of everlasting life, and we have discovered they are true. God has given unto us line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, and we are growing in grace and in the knowledge of God. He has told us over and over again that if we will love Him and keep His commandments we shall prosper in the land. The Scriptures are true. The Holy Spirit has come unto the sons and daughters of God in the day and age in which we live. We all realize that we have our individual mission; that when we seek unto the Lord and ask His guidance, He guides and directs us. He gives us the opportunity of being everything that we could wish to be, in fulfilling the mission he has appointed to us, to His honor and glory. There is no need of our ever being deceived or being beguiled by the influence of the adversary—who of course is adverse to God's will being done—if we will only observe the will of the Lord and do it. We have a Father in heaven who loves us, and who has given unto us the privilege of dwelling upon the earth in the dispensation of the fullness of times. We encourage the rising generation to trust in the Lord and individually seek His counsel. The Lord does not require a blind obedience, but an intelligent obedience, and the Savior has exhorted us to ask and it shall be given us, to seek and we shall find, to knock and it shall be opened unto us. On one occasion He gave us the parable of the unjust judge, and told us to pray without ceasing, to put our trust in the Lord, and He would give us everything necessary.

The Church of Christ has a bad reputation. It always did have. "We desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest; for as concerning this sect, we know that everywhere it is spoken against," was said of old. It is a trick of the adversary that we should be evilly spoken of, and it is his disciples, who despise the commandment "thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," who have given us our bad reputation. But that matters very little. We know we are of God, and that the world lieth in the arms of the wicked one. We know that the principles of everlasting life, which we have subscribed to, are true, and it is to our best interest individually to accomplish that which the Father has given us to do. If those who fight against us, who despise us and who will not fellowship us would search for themselves individually as we have done, they would see as we see and have the same comprehension of the principles of everlasting life, because they would have the same spirit, even the gift of the Holy Ghost, without which no man knoweth the things of God. I have no faith in the wisdom of man, nor in doctors of divinity. They have made a mistake from the beginning. The history of the world tells us that mankind always accepted false prophets and slew and rejected those who were sent of God with the glad tidings of great joy. In the days of Noah, but eight persons out of the whole world accepted the Gospel of the Son of God, and were saved, while the others, under the dominion of the prince and power of the air, rejected light and truth and made their bed where we would not like to go.

I say to you, my brethren and sisters, seek the counsel of the Almighty in your individuality, and when the Lord reveals to you what your mission is, fulfill it to the glory of God, no matter who else is pleased or displeased. The whole duty of man is to serve God and keep His commandments, and woe unto us if we do not do it. We have been slothful; we have been indifferent; we have robbed the Lord in tithes and offerings; we have been self-sufficient and have despised the counsels of the Almighty, and He has called upon us to repent, to reform, and to consecrate unto Him that which is His due, according to His commandment, which is, that of everything He shall give to us, we will consecrate to Him one-tenth, and our ears shall be open to the cry of the widow and the fatherless, and we shall visit them in their distress. The Lord has also commanded us to get out of debt, so that we may owe no man anything and be independent and keep the law of God. Unless we do so He cannot establish His statutes upon the land. I want to bear my testimony to the truth of these principles. I know they are true. I know that God lives; I know that Jesus is the Christ. I know that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet sent of God. All mankind can obtain this testimony, if they will seek for it. There was a time when I did not know it. I sought the Lord for it, and He gave it to me, to my perfect satisfaction. My exhortation to the people all the time is, for goodness sake be kind to yourselves; hear the word of the Lord and do it; stand in the dignity of your manhood and resist the influence of the world. Woe unto us if we are overcome of the world; woe unto us if we are excommunicated from the Church. We have a long list of men who should pay tithing and do not. I am sorry for them. I wish they had sense enough to be kinder to themselves, for they are laboring under a curse who rob God in tithes and offerings. They have no right to partake of the Sacrament, being unworthy. Every time they do it they eat and drink damnation; for they tell the Lord that they are willing to take upon them the name of Christ and to keep His commandments, yet they do not do it. Hypocrites! Hypocrites! A great deal better if they should wake up to an understanding of the dangerous position they occupy. If the bishops are kind and considerate to bear with them, to plead with them and to dig all around them, and they reject it, when they pass behind the veil their record is made, the day has gone, the night has come, and their souls are not saved. Then comes the agony; but we have made it ourselves. We work out our salvation, or we work out our damnation. It is our own act. I know these principles are true; they are common sense. There is no blessing, no eternal life promised to those who despise God and His commandments, and who prefer darkness to light. It is a condemnation to reject light and truth; and when the Lord Jesus Christ shall come in flaming fire, to take vengeance upon them who know not God and keep not His commandments, those who love darkness rather than light will be punished with everlasting banishment from the presence of God and the Lamb.

I rejoice very much in the instructions that have been given today. I am in harmony with every revealed principle. I say that the Latter-day Saints are the noblest people upon the face of the earth; and instead of governments striving to stay their progress, they should do everything to enable them to progress in light and truth, and to develop principles and conditions which they know nothing at all about. We know what we are doing, and we understand the science of life. We understand where we came from, what we are here for and what is our future destiny, because we are taught of God. We are in harmony with eternal principles. Our Elders go forth preaching the Gospel of the Son of God. They take their lives in their hands, leaving their families behind, and proclaim this glad message of great joy and that God has again spoken. They call the people to repentance, and warn them of judgments to come. We are told that judgment will commence at the house of God. It will fall upon this very class of people who despise God, and reject His commandments. We take our little children to our Sabbath schools, our primaries, our Mutual Improvement Associations and quorums of Priesthood, for the express purpose of training them that they may grow up without sin unto salvation. The Lord wants to establish His righteousness. That is what He has hired us for, and we should love truth and righteousness, and have our ears open to hear, our eyes to see and our hearts to understand, that we may be for God and His righteousness.

Did you ever know this people so unpatriotic as to be petitioning the government against any handful of people? No patriot was ever guilty of anything of the kind. A patriot is a man who sustains the constitution of the United States and believes in religious liberty. There are hypocrites among professed patriots, as well as other classes of people. I say God bless the patriots. God bless our government, and give them wisdom, strength of character and moral courage to stand by the principles of the constitution, and not be cowards. I would plead for this with all my heart. For of all people in the world, we are interested in having a righteous government. We know how to appreciate liberty and freedom, and we never interfere with other people's doctrines or belief. We have enough to do to teach our own. We have the truth, the way and the life and we have no time to find fault with others. It takes us all our time to publish the glad tidings of great joy.

I pray God my eternal Father that He will establish the kingdom of God upon the earth in power; that the kingdom of heaven may come; that His will may be done on earth as it is done in heaven, and that we who have taken upon ourselves the name of Jesus Christ may be true and faithful to our covenants, and that we may have the grace of God to overcome and endure unto the end, in His glorious kingdom, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

REMINISCENCES.

BY J. R. SMITH.

Away down on the old Suwannee river, far, far away, on old Piney Bluff, the Latter-day Saints of Levy, Lafayette and Alachua counties gathered one day last month to enjoy the pleasure of a picnic, given in honor of the Elders laboring in that locality. The occasion was planned and prepared that Saints and friends might join together and spend a few hours as nature's guests. Besides the party of Saints, consisting of Brothers D. H. Airline, C. C. Stringfellow, J. J. Hodge, W. J. Burnett, Aaron Higginbothan, with their wives and children, were also many prominent citizens, who took quite an active part in the proceedings. Everyone seemed well prepared to enjoy themselves, and none desired to go hungry, judging from the bounteous lunches prepared by skilled hands. Some had gone to fish and soon returned heavy laden with fine specimens of the finny tribe, which were soon in the pan frying. Under the shade of the mighty oaks the food was made ready for the hungry picnickers.

As the Elders sat eating, surrounded by friends, their thoughts wandered back to just such happy gatherings they had enjoyed in their native clime. It was 1 o'clock before this feast of good things ended and then the people were called to order. Under the shady trees songs were sung, followed by speaking. Elder N. A. Decker first addressed the people, selecting as his subject "Divine Authority." He plainly and forcibly portrayed to the attentive audience the absolute necessity of a commission from God, ere any man could preach or officiate in His sacred ordinances. Elder Frank N. Tyler gave a brief talk, admonishing the Saints to strictly obey Christ's teachings—to live pure and obedient lives before man and God. That persecution was an heritage of the Saints all Bible read people could testify. "Yea, and all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Christ told His disciples that all manner of evil would be spoken against them, and inasmuch as the world would not receive Him, neither would they be received.

Elder F. P. Jones spoke, showing the duties and labors of a true Saint, pointing out to them that in order to enjoy the spirit of God we must prepare our bodies as a fit dwelling of the Holy Spirit. He quoted from I. Cor. vi.:19: "What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?"

The closing hymn, "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet," was sung in a spirited manner and all nature seemed to smile and rejoice at this song of praise to the Creator of all things—the giver of all perfect gifts. After meeting had been dismissed by prayer four honest-hearted people were led into the waters of baptism. Those who were willing to forsake the world and take upon them Christ's name were Ezekiel Johnson, formerly a Methodist preacher, and his wife; Amos Ferkiway and Mrs. G. W. Newmans.

The sun was fast making its way behind the towering hills—the day was drawing to a close, and, in fact, nature would soon be wrapped in the shadows of night. Things were hurriedly gathered together and back to their homes went this picnic party, feeling to rejoice in the good time spent that day. The conformation of those baptized was attended to upon arriving at Brother Allin's home.

Thus closed the day of pure and enlightening recreation enjoyed by the Saints of God. Such gatherings where peace, love and joy exist are pleasing in the sight of God and tend to unite in bonds of friendship those who participate.

Morality and Religion.

Juvenile Instructor.

Occasionally we find people who disclaim having anything to do with religion; at the same time they profess to believe in the practice of what are known as good moral principles. Such people do not seem to understand that morality is religion—that the Gospel is but a system for the development of moral principles. Without morality religion is but a useless form, and without the aid of the ordinances of the Gospel morality cannot be brought to perfection. There is no dividing line between the laws of morality and the laws of the Gospel. The Gospel includes them all; and any system of morality which does not embrace all the principles of true religion is imperfect or incomplete.

It may be supposed that obedience to the Gospel requires the observance of practices that have no connection with morality. It is true that the Gospel inculcates ordinances and duties that seemingly are not necessary to the practice of moral principles. They appear to be arbitrary requirements. But when the philosophy of these Gospel ordinances is understood it will be discovered that they are but necessary aids to the practice of moral principles.

Prayer, for example, may be regarded by some to be strictly a religious duty, having no connection with moral obligations. If prayer were only a form this might be true. But prayer is for the purpose of obtaining Divine aid in order to more fully perform moral duties. Without the assistance of the Lord a person cannot live a strictly moral life, hence prayer is as much a part of morality as of religion. One who lives a moral life cannot be otherwise than a religious person, at least to the extent of his obedience to what he regards as moral laws. As long as he rejects the Gospel ordinances that to him may appear to be unnecessary for moral development, he will never reach that moral perfection which may be obtained by those who render obedience to all the Gospel requirements.

THE DEAD.

Elder Horace O. Hurst, of Dublan, Mexico, died at his home June 21, 1900.

Brother Hurst was born May 9th, 1873, at Fairview, Sanpete Co., Utah. While on his mission of a little over two years he labored in the North Carolina Conference and was a zealous worker in the cause of truth. Through his untiring efforts many honest-hearted people were made to rejoice. Last December, having filled his mission, an honorable release was given him and he returned to his friends and loved ones. But since God has in His wisdom seen fit to recall the spirit of our beloved brother, although his presence will be missed, yet we know all things are for the best. Elder Hurst lived this life as a faithful Saint, and though called away in his early manhood, yet rich blessings await him.

"How long we live, not years, but actions tell;
That men live twice who live the first life well."

We sympathize with the loved ones who are called to part with he whom they hold dear, and wish them the comforting influence of the Spirit of God.

On the morning of the 26th of June, 1900, Sister Hattie Louisa Redding, the beloved wife of Brother W. Hampton Redding, of Live Oak, Suwannee county, Florida, passed quietly away to enjoy the blessings of another and better world, after an illness of about eight days, of congestion of the brain. The deceased was 45 years of age. She became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints June 21st, 1896, being baptized by President Joseph A. West. It was at her place where President West was kindly taken care of during a greater portion of his severe sickness while in Florida. The humble Elder was ever welcomed at her home, and many have partaken of her generous hospitality. It was while at the home of the Redding family that Elder Fisher was taken by a ruthless mob, and compelled at the point of the bayonet to leave the county. Sister Redding's kind and amiable disposition always drew friends to her wherever she was. She died a faithful Latter-day Saint, entitled to a glorious resurrection with the just. She leaves a husband, three children, and a host of friends to mourn her loss.

The funeral services were held at the Macedonia church June 27th, 1900, the funeral sermon being preached by Elder Peter E. Van Orden. The remains were interred in the Macedonia church yard, beside three of her children, who passed to the other shore before her.

TRUTH.

O. F. WHITNEY.

An ocean jewel, cast upon the sand,
Unseen, yet glittering 'neath the trampled sand,
Neglected and alone, in darkness lay,
Till time, in many a wave, had rolled away.

In vain the loud surge dashed upon the shore,
In vain the lightning's wrath, the thunder's roar,
Securely slumbered in its lowly bed,
A rarer gem than e'er decked a kingly head.

At length, a shining edge peered forth to view,
A sun-lit drop, as 'twere, of morning dew,
And yet no glance e'er rested on the prize,
None guessed what lay concealed from human eyes.

Men came and went, but all were proud and vain,
They gazed upon the sky and distant main,
Eager for wealth, yet none would look so low,
Or stoop for gems, howe'er so bright, below.

Along the lonely beach one summer day,
It chanced, at length, a little child did stray,
Beheld the jewel sparkling in the sand,
And drew it forth with tiny, eager hand.

And thus the treasure, which had lain concealed,
In fate's full-ripened hour to be revealed,
Long kept from pride, or Mammon's sordid sight,
By humble means at last was brought to light.

E'en so with truth, the richest, rarest gem
Save one, in Christ's eternal diadem;
By merit worn, though oft in meanest guise,
Men scorn the source, and trample on the prize.

History of the Southern States Mission.

March, 1898—

On the 8th, a letter was received at the office from Brother Robert Humphreys, stating that a mob of 200 men were gathering near Live Oak, Fla., to do violence to the Saints who lived six miles southwest of that place. Immediately a letter was sent to the Governor of Florida, laying the situation clearly before him, requesting a proper exercise of the law in the matter. A favorable reply was received, and the mobocrats, learning that the Governor would protect the Saints, abandoned their wicked designs and peace continued to reign in the homes of the Saints.

On the 12th N. P. Nelson, President of the Middle Tennessee Conference, came to the office to labor, while Elder Albert C. Matheson took up his labors in Georgia as President of that Conference.

About the middle of this month a letter was received from Ezra C. Robinson, President of the North Carolina Conference, stating that a Sunday School had been organized at Raleigh, N. C. This circumstance is of special interest, from the fact that less than a year and a half before, the Elders had no friends, but many bitter enemies in the city. About Christmas time of 1896, Elders Ira Baker and C. J. Winter were put in prison for tracting the city without purse or scrip. The Elders had asked many times for entertainment, when they were arrested. They were discharged, and by order of the mayor were commanded to leave the city. This feeling prevailed in Raleigh eighteen months previous to the organization of the Sunday School, which had twenty members and was reported to be in a thriving condition.

Fourteen Elders arrived from Zion on the 23d.

A letter, under date of March 23d, was received from Elders Jesse H. Wheeler and Levi A. Gayler, stating they had met with harsh treatment at the hands of cowardly men. As they were going to a place called Yellow Rabbit, to baptize a convert to the true Gospel, a mob of twenty men met them in the road and took them up into a hollow. After abusing the brethren and cursing them, they tore Elder Gayler's coat from his back and struck him fifteen unmerciful licks with a "black snake" whip. Next they took Elder Wheeler and likewise administered the lash upon his body, he receiving twelve lashes. The mobocrats said they would hang the Elders if they ever returned to those parts again, and the next mob would be led by the sheriff.

It seems that the evil one was working hard to overthrow the work of God, if we are to judge from mob violence received by the Elders. From many places came the news of abuse heaped upon them. The brethren were brave and valiant, and did not intend to give way to Satan and his hosts. He used his choice implements of war, some of his ministers, who claim to be servants of God, but judging, as Christ said to judge them, "by their fruits," we must admit that their fruits are manufactured falsehoods to overcome the righteous servants of God.

Much persecution and hatred grew out over a debate held: Resolved, That the Morman missionaries be excluded from the state of North Carolina." To cap the climax, the ministers took Mormonism for their text Sundays in their churches. On the 30th inst. Elders W. H. Carter and W. E. Robinson, while tracting Concord, N. C., presented themselves at the door of a man's home. The gentleman (William Caldwell), not being home, the brethren did not tarry, but left a tract with the lady of the house, who accepted it. While canvassing on the street, the man accosted them while walking down the sidewalk. He inquired of the Elders if they had been in his yard. They replied they were visiting all of the houses and may have called at his place. At this point he raised a club about two feet long—a deadly weapon—and struck Elder Robinson with intent to kill. In the villain's eye could be seen the look of hatred, and within his heart was murder. Elder Robinson guarded the blow with his hand, causing the club to strike heavily upon his arm, damaging it considerably. The next blow struck Brother Robinson on the head, inflicting much suffering and raising a large lump.

By this time he had endeavored to get away from his would-be assassin, and started to run. For a distance of twenty-five yards he was followed by the man, who hit him twice. Being a faster man than his enemy, Elder Robinson was soon out of his reach, but not without sore spots upon his body. Not yet satisfied, the befouler of American liberty turned on Elder Carter, striking him also. The brethren tried hard to find the civil officers, and at a late hour were successful. They advised the brethren to get out a warrant, but nothing was done in the matter, and the assaulter was left to continue his meanness. Although he, like others of his same kind, may go unpunished here upon earth, yet a time will come when every person shall stand before God and be judged according to their works done here in the flesh.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

Principles and Ordinances.

In matters of religion, when dealing with the Christian world, the appeal for truth must be made to the Bible, for this is the Book they claim to believe in; and this was the method invariably used by the Savior to prove His mission holy and divine. "Have you not read," are His words to the unbelieving Jews, and "Search the Scriptures; for therein ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." (Matt. 19:4, John 5:39.) He desired that the sons of men should have an intimate acquaintance with the written word; for He declared that the Scriptures bore record of Him, and showed that He was the Messiah, and that they must believe on Him or perish for their disbelief. Now, the good old Bible lays open before us; its sacred pages exposed to view; that all may read and learn of Him who is mighty to save. Let us avail ourselves of this generous opportunity, this blessed privilege, and, invoking Heaven's gifts and blessings, let us scan the holy word and peruse its heavenly truths. If we would receive light upon the Scriptures; if we would become wise in the knowledge of the Lord; let us seek these beneficent gifts at the throne of God's mercy, in whom is no darkness at all.

Our Savior having completed His mission on earth; having been subjected to much pain, sorrow and grief; having been suspended between the heavens and the earth, nailed to Calvary's cross, on Golgothas' dreary heights; having bowed His sacred head and exclaimed—while the body was racked with intense agony, and the mind sorely distressed—"It is finished" (thus signifying that the birth of salvation was complete and His earthly mission ended), was laid in the tomb; from which He arose triumphant on the third day, and afterwards appeared unto His faithful Apostles. With them He journeyed some forty days in His resurrected body, teaching, instructing, and tutoring them in the great work they had been called to perform. At the expiration of this time, and just before His ascension, He called these Apostles around Him in Galilee, and gave unto them this commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16:15-16.) The Gospel was to have a universal proclamation, and it was the will of Christ that the glad tidings of salvation should be preached to all men; yet, notwithstanding that salvation through the Gospel should be preached unto all, still none, without believing and obeying could be saved from individual transgression. Now, kind reader, let us pursue our investigation, and endeavor, by the aid of God's holy spirit, to discover the principles and ordinances which pertain to our redemption and exaltation.

We will follow these faithful Apostles, and find out what they taught, then we shall know what the principles and ordinances of the Gospel are. You have not forgotten that they received their commission and authority fresh from the lips of the Savior, and that salvation was promised unto all those who believed and obeyed the Gospel they taught.

There yet remains another point that we must not pass by unnoticed; it is the final command of Jesus unto His Apostles recorded by the sacred historian, Luke, "I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endowed with power from on high." (Luke 24:49.) Why this delay? may be asked with propriety. Had not these holy inspired men been with Jesus for a length of time, in duration almost three and one-half years? Yes! Had they not walked and talked with Him face to face, as one man walks and talks with another? Had they not beheld the many wonderful manifestations of His heavenly power, which were wrought by Him while yet with them in the flesh? Had they not witnessed the tongue of the dumb loosened, the ears of the deaf unstopped, the eyes of the blind opened; the lame made to walk; the lepers made whole; and those possessed of evil spirits cleansed from the wicked power, and the dead brought to life again? Yes, they had beheld all these wondrous things come to pass through the Lord's administrations, and yet they were not fully equipped to preach the everlasting Gospel. And why? Because the Lord never has, and never will, send out His servants to preach until He first bestows upon them the Gift of the Holy Ghost—a portion of His power. Evidently had the Savior permitted His servants to go out without granting them the spirit of truth for a guide, within twelve months we should have found them preaching twelve different contrary Gospels. But, blessed with the Spirit of God which emanates from the presence of God, and leads those possessed thereof into all truth, we can readily see that they would then preach the one, everlasting, unchangeable Gospel. This was the expressed desire of the Savior—it was His earnest prayer to the Father to make His followers one. (John 17:11.)

Obedient to the divine command, to "tarry in the city of Jerusalem until endued with power from on high," we find the Apostles gathered with "one accord" in the chief city of the Jews. It is now the day of Pentecost, and some fifty days have elapsed since Christ hung in agony upon the cross, making about one week since He was received into the Heavens from their vision, as they stood gazing in wonderment and awe at Bethany. They have not forgotten His last words of counsel and instructions, but expectantly await the glad realization of the blessed promise He gave them. On this memorable Pentecost was the promise of the Lord fulfilled, for "suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." (Acts 11:21-8.) Now that the Apostles are "filled with the Holy Ghost," we know that they are fully prepared to preach the Gospel and administer the ordinances thereof; therefore their words will be truth, yea, even the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe and obey. We can rely upon the words they speak, the principles they advocate, the ordinances they perform, as being essential to our soul's salvation, and pleasing in the sight of the Lord; for it was Jesus who had sent them forth; it was He who had ordained them to the ministry, and it was God the Father who had empowered them with authority from on high.

Peter, standing at the head of the Apostles, having received "the keys of the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 16:19), began to preach the Gospel unto those unbelieving Jews—unbelieving because they had rejected the Messiah and spurned His message from them. He straightway began to preach unto them of "Jesus of Nazareth," * * * whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that He should be holden of it." (Acts 2:22-24.) His words, seasoned with love, spoken with power and authority, and conveyed by the medium of the Holy Ghost, carried conviction to the hearts of his hearers, and established therein a true, living, profitable faith, which led them to exclaim, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (37th verse.) Peter was ready with an answer for their inquiry; he was fully prepared to tell them what to do, and had we been present on that eventful occasion, we should have heard him boldly declare, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." 38th verse.) What have we now discovered? We have seen that Jesus sent forth His Apostles to preach the Gospel; that He commanded them to tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high; that they were obedient to His command, and in consequence thereof they did receive the Holy Ghost; that they, being filled with this Holy Spirit, began to preach the principles of righteousness inculcated in the everlasting Gospel; and that these principles and ordinances were, first, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, second, repentance; third, baptism for the remission of sins; and fourth, the Gift of the Holy Ghost. Is this not Scriptural? All will readily agree. Is it according to "the law and the testimony?" None can deny. It is simple and plain, and we shall hereafter find that it is beautiful logical, reasonable and consistent.

If further Scriptural references were necessary to prove these principles and ordinances divine, we might go back to the days of John the forerunner of Jesus. Mark tells us that the presence of John in the wilderness of Judea was "the beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." (Mark 1:1.) What did the Prophet John teach? Did he not teach faith in the Lord Jesus Christ by telling the Jews of His coming? Yes. Did he not command them to repent, and did he not preach "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins?" (Luke 3:3-9.) Yes. Did he not inform them that the Lord who cometh would baptize them with the Holy Ghost? (Mark 1:8.) Yes. Here we have the selfsame principles and ordinances annunciated as those declared by the stalwart Peter on the day of Pentecost. Peter and John the Baptist agree in proclaiming Faith, Repentance, Baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost as the fundamental means of salvation. Here are two witnesses, and you remember the words of the great Apostles to the Gentiles—Paul, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." (II Cor. 13:1.) The Savior comes as a third witness, for He said, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." (John 14:1.) This then would create faith in the Lord Jesus. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." (Luke 13:3.) Here He taught the essentiality of repentance; and to the midnight inquirer—Nicodemus—the Savior said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) Again we see that the principles and ordinances, upon obedience to which were predicated salvation, were, faith in the Lord Jesus, Repentance, Baptism, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost. Paul's conversion to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus is another striking example of the divinity, power and essentiality of the Gospel. His faith in the Messiah was well rooted and grounded after the vision had cleared from his deluded eyes the superstition and heresy of the Jews; his repentance was of a Godly manner, and well worthy of imitation; after which he received the divine injunction, "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins," (Acts 22:16), "and be filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 19:17.)

Now some may endeavor to excuse themselves by saying that these principles and ordinances were preached only to the Jews, and that the Gentiles were exempt from strictly complying thereto; however, the word of God is sufficiently explicit on this point as to leave no room for doubt, misunderstanding or excuse. There is only one way—a straight and narrow course—and all, both Jew and Gentile, must journey therein if they would become partakers of God's Greatest Gift. If you will turn to the first chapter of Colossians, and the fifth and sixth verses, you will read, "For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the Gospel; which is come unto you, as it is in all the world; and bringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew the grace of God in truth." From this we learn that the Gospel heard and believed by the Colossian Saints was the same "as it is in all the world;" and therefore it was the one, everlasting Gospel for both Jew and Gentile. The devout Gentile, Cornelius, was first taught faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 10), and as a token of divine recognition, the Holy Ghost was poured out upon him, then Peter "commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10:48.) The self-same principles are here advised, and the self-same ordinances commanded, for this saying went forth, "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." (Acts 11:18.)

We see then that the way of salvation as declared and made known unto the Jews was just as applicable and essential to the Gentiles, and just as necessary for them to obey if they would enter into the true fold of the Good Shepherd.

When there arose a dispute concerning the law of Moses and its application to the Gentiles, "Peter rose up and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the Gospel, and believe. And God which knoweth their hearts, bore them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did unto us: and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." (Acts 15:7-9.) Thus we see there was "no difference" put between Jew or Gentile, but all were to enter in through Him who was the Light, the Truth and the way, by obedience to His everlasting Gospel, the fundamental principles and ordinances of which we have herein defined.

As the written word has named these principles and ordinances, their proper and perfect order is thus: First, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; scond, repentance after a Godly manner; third, baptism for the remission of past sins; and fourth, the Gift of the Holy Ghost, as a Guide, a Companion, and a Comforter. By the divine aid of the Spirit of God, and the sweet assistance of that good old Book of Books—the Holy Bible—we shall endeavor to give further light and intelligence upon these beautiful principles of induction into the Church of Christ, that all may know of the goodness of our God in providing for our salvation such a grand structure of heavenly truths, so simple, so plain, so deep, so comprehensive, that we are at once led to exclaim, "His yoke is easy, His burden is light the way of salvation plain, and the course for man to follow, straight and narrow."

YOUTH'S HOMAGE TO THE AGED.

Deseret News, July 6.

The most popular excursion of the season is that conducted by the Old Folks' committee, of Salt Lake. It is not only the best patronized outing, but it is in every respect the one in which all classes of the community take the greatest personal interest. Almost every nationality is represented; nearly every family in the city has its representative veteran, who has passed the three score and ten years alloted to man, and whose declining years are cheered and made glad by these annual midsummer socials and excursions.

Through the courtesy of Simon Bamberger, Esq., the twenty-sixth annual Old Folks' outing and social was held today at Lagoon, and the grandfathers and grandmothers of Salt Lake City to the number of 500 were given a free ride on the Old Folks' special, which left the city at 10 a. m. It is conservatively estimated that at least 400 more were taken to the resort on earlier and later trains.

The pleasure of the ride through the beautiful orchards, gardens and farms of Davis county was enhanced by the sweet music discoursed on the way by the Old Folks' choir, under the direction of William H. Foster, which passed through all the thirteen cars of the special, discoursing sweet melodies.

The Old Folks' committee and their aids and the proprietor and attaches of the resort, were indefatigable in their efforts to make the old people happy, and sought in every way to make the day most pleasant and agreeable, and they were eminently successful, judging from the many words of commendation and appreciation heard on every side. The ample grounds and generous shade of the cool and beautiful resort were highly appreciated by all, particularly by those who called to mind the almost shadeless resort to which the old folks went a year ago.

At 11 a. m. the choir gave a short concert in the dancing pavilion, the principal numbers of which were:

"America," by the choir.

"Hail, Smiling Morn," by the choir.

Solo and chorus—"Dear Heart, We Are Growing Old," Mrs. Julia Silverwood.

Tenor solo and chorus—"Cousin Jedediah," Henry Gardner and choir.

Besides the old folks of Salt Lake City and Stake, large contingents of veterans came in carriages from all parts of Davis county; many of the Bishops and prominent people of the county were also present in large numbers, and the grounds were pretty well filled with veterans who enjoyed the occasion to renew old acquaintances.

Among the prominent people from the city were President Joseph F. Smith, Apostles Brigham Young and Francis M. Lyman; Bishop Robert T. Burton and John R. Winder of the presiding Bishopric; James S. Brown and Oliver G. Workman were representatives of the famous "Mormon" batallion; Nathan Tanner, Sr., was the only representative of the few remaining survivors of Zion's Camp, a body of Elders which marched with the Prophet Joseph Smith from Kirtland, O., to Jackson county, Missouri, in 1834. Prominent among the ladies were a large number of Relief Society members of both Salt Lake and Davis county Stakes. Mrs. M. Isabella Horne, president of the first named organization, enjoyed the occasion very highly.

Of course the great majority of the veterans were wearers of the red badge—indicating that they had arrived at and passed their 70th milestone—but there were a host of octogenarians who wore the blue badge, and there were quite a number who had passed their 90th year, and wore white rosettes.

At 12 o'clock lunch was served in the bowery and refreshments were served by the committee and aids. This has always been a prominent feature in these outings. The committee is noted for its generous care of the aged excursionists.

OLD FOLKS' COMMITTEE.

The old folks' committee is composed of the following well known gentlemen: William B. Preston, Chas. R. Savage, Wm. Eddington, Wm. Naylor, Wm. L. Binder, John Kirkman, Andrew Jenson, Nelson A. Empey and Heber S. Goddard.

AFTERNOON FESTIVITIES.

At 1:45 this afternoon festivities began in the pavilion, the inimitable C. R. Savage, master of ceremonies, the choir singing "Jerusalem" for an opening chorus.

Hon. Ezra Clark, of Farmington, followed with a speech of welcome.

Heber S. Goddard next sang the old people's favorite—"Hard Times Come Again No More," the concourse of people all joining in the chorus.

The honorableJudge J. F. Kinney, a veteran of 84, who came to Utah forty-six years ago, and was at one time the chief justice of Utah Territory, responded to the call for a speech in a very happy and patriotic vein. He said he was pleased to met with the veterans who had helped to redeem the desert and make of Utah the paradise that it is. He remembered Salt Lake forty-six years ago, as a hamlet, and he was proud today of its palatial and comfortable homes.

Mrs. Lizzie Thomas Edward very sweetly rendered the Scotch favorite, "Comin' Thro' the Rye."

Apostle Brigham Young followed in a short and happy address, reminiscent of early scenes in Utah, and referred to the honorable career of Judge Kinney when on the bench and since. The speaker was glad to meet with the veterans of pioneer days, and was pleased to note the efforts made to make glad their declining years.

"Let the Mountains Shout for Joy" was joyously rendered by the choir, who never seemed to tire of singing for the aged sires and matrons.

Apostle Francis M. Lyman was the following speaker, and his felicitous and happy address was much enpoyed by the audience. His references to old times and early scenes in the history of the state were full of tender reminiscences.

CONCERNING "MORMONISM."

A contributor to the current number of Harper's Weekly, Mr. E. S. Martin, has this to say of the Church and its missionary zeal:

"They say the Mormon Church is growing like the traditional weed: that it has more than 2,000 missionaries working for it in all ports of the world. There are two or three hundred in Canada, many more in the east and the south, many more in Europe, and they are great missionaries, too. They work hard and draw very little pay. They seem, too, to believe in Mormonism, and in most places where they go they are abundantly stimulated by persecution. If the stories about them are true, they are making excellent progress in disseminating the doctrines of their Church and making converts. The enthusiastic modern Mormons are quoted as saying that polygamy has really gone out of their religion, and that when the plural wives now living have died, there won't be any more. Maybe not. Polygamy can hardly stand against the rise of American civilization, but the Mormon Church in its other particulars may last and flourish. It seems a curious heresy, but on its practical side, at least, it is strong, and it seems to excite just as much zeal as any other religion. It is worth knowing more about than most of us know. Polygamy aside, very few of us know how far and in what particulars it differs from the Christian religion. An American Church, which has 250,000 members, is worth some study."

2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

"HIS ENEMY CAME AND SOWED TARES."

How cheering to the heart; how comforting to the soul; how comprehensive, lovely and beautiful are the sweet and refreshing words of our Master, Jesus! His precepts and instructions given in parables: His walks by the sea-side with the multitude; His conversation with the learned; His humility, patience, lowliness, and obedience; all declare His perfectness, His holiness, His divinity and Godliness! His mission was one of holy love, compassionate mercy, and divine good will! Hear Him declare in appealing tones, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matt. 11:28-30.) Well might we exclaim, "What a friend we have in Jesus," and sing for joy of the goodness of our Lord, of His abundant love, and tender mercy. But our love for Him, who died that we might live, is best manifest and most pleasing when we keep the commandments He has given us, and yield obedience to His holy and most righteous laws; for He has said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John 14:15.) Ah, fellow-Christians, it is a great deal easier to sing of His love, to speak of His goodness, and talk of His mercy, than to follow in His holy steps, to comply with His laws, and live up to every word that proceedeth forth from His mouth.

He gave His chosen followers to understand that in the world they should have tribulation, affliction, sorrow, anguish, and pain; but in Him should they enjoy rest, yea even peace, comfort, and happiness. Though tribulations might rage abroad; though the evil one may bring bitter persecution upon the faithful, and cause fierce and wicked opposition to be brought to bear upon the righteous; still we may hear the holy word, coming unto us as a sweet morsel, a divine comforter, a heavenly balm, "In me ye shall have peace." (John 16:33.) These sweet, promising words give us joy in the hour of affliction, strength in the midst of persecution, and hope when all seems dark and dreary. The Lord hath said that if we will put our trust in Him and be of good courage, that He will strengthen our hearts. (Psalms 27:14.)

The Savior frequently addressed the people in parables, giving unto them some simple apt illustration, that they might easily comprehend His teachings, and understand His mission and work in their midst. These parables are beautiful, impressive, grand and comprehensive. They convey to the mind the idea the speaker wishes to impress, in appealing, graceful, convincing terms, for mortals can better understand things which are brought right home to themselves, and shown by example, contrast and illustration. Among the many beautiful parables which Jesus gave unto the Jews, He put forth this parable, saying, "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field; but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way." (Matt, 13:24-25.) How very true are these words; and how applicable are they to the children of this present generation. "His enemy came and sowed tares." Yes, this is ever the work of the enemies of righteousness to scatter seeds of ill-will and wickedness, to do as Jesus said, "sow tares." The good sower of the word—the true, humble follower of the Master, endeavors to implant in the hearts of the people seeds of righteousness, grains of truth; while the enemy strives to choke out the good seed sown, and substitute in its stead seeds of vain tradition, superstition and perilous heresy.

How often is it the experience of our Elders, that after leaving a neighborhood where the people have apparently delighted in the law of the Lord, and have entertained them with the honor, respect, love and esteem a true servant of the Lord deserves, they return to find that during their absence the enemy has been and sowed tares, and the hearts of the people are turned against them and their message of salvation. Well did the Apostle declare, "I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock." (Acts 20:29.) And well did the Savior say, "His enemy came and sowed tares." The Elder goes forth armed with the word of God, preaches simple, plain Bible doctrine unto the people, causing their souls to rejoice, and their hearts to be made glad; he is followed by one who claims to be a disciple of Jesus, a "preacher of righteousness," but instead of assisting the Elder to disseminate the good word of salvation, he seeks to destroy his influence, and supplant his message by instilling in the minds of the people, hatred, malice, contempt, scorn, prejudice, and narrow-minded blinded bigotry. Such is the status of affairs today, and it is a very serious and vital question which now confronts every professed minister of Jesus Christ: Are you sowing tares in the furrows of time, the evil fruits of which you must reap throughout eternity? If the teachings of these Mormon Elders be according to the Bible, and the doctrines they advocate the same as those taught by Jesus and His Apostles; can you feel justified in uprooting and impoverishing the same by sowing tares, circulating falsehoods, creating prejudice, and causing much bitter persecution? These are burning questions, pertinent questions, questions which each should decide in the light and intelligence of the Holy Scriptures, and the revelations of God's divine will. We shall each and every one be called upon to give a strict account of our acts when we shall stand before that great tribunal on high, when He who was pierced for the sins of men, shall judge and reward every one according to his works. We only make this journey of mortality once, we shall travel this road no more, therefore we should do all the good we can as we tread the weary way of life. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." (Gal. 6:7-8.)

While we now have life, and health, and strength, and the mercy of our loving Father is extended unto us with abundant kindness and manifold goodness, let us not procrastinate, delay, or neglect to improve the opportunities at hand, or fail to cultivate the privileges that are afforded us. Overcome evil with good, sow the precious seeds of righteousness, and although the enemy may sow tares, be not discouraged, weary not, fight manfully and valiantly for the truth. "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart." (Psalms 27:14.)

Let each one strive with might and mind
To serve the Lord our God,
To preach the word in every clime
And spread the truth abroad,
Then shall we feel the Spirit's power—
The Comforter and Guide,
To lead us on life's rugged way,
No matter what betide.

SOMETHING ABOUT PROPHETS.

BY ELDER JOSEPH H. LINES.

The members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly known as "Mormons," are considered by a great majority of the Christian world to be a very peculiar people in their religious belief, but the person who makes an honest investigation of "Mormonism" cannot but reach the conclusion that the so-called peculiarity consists entirely in their being firm believers in the teachings of Holy Writ, and devout followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene; which are, indeed, peculiar traits possessed by but few in this enlightened age. Modern Christendom, generally speaking, find it very hard, and I may say impossible, to believe that God has again spoken from the heavens, and revealed again the fullness of the everlasting Gospel through the Prophet Joseph Smith. Indeed, in this age of advanced thought, it is considered almost blasphemy to believe in Prophets at all. The Latter-day Saints, to the contrary, hold that to disbelieve in Prophets is to depart from "the faith once delivered to the Saints," and there is an abundance of Scripture to sustain them in their belief. The history of God's dealings with His children here upon the earth, shows that for a period of over four thousand years, embracing the time from the placing of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden to the death of the Apostles of Christ, there was an almost unbroken succession of Prophets upon the earth, through whom God revealed His will unto His children. It is true that the Lord, at various periods of longer or shorter duration, withdrew from His children the gift of prophecy, but in all such cases the withdrawal of the heavenly gift was the result of transgression, and was a sure sign that the people were not in favor with God, as will be clearly seen by reading the third chapter of Micah, which plainly shows that when the sun went down over the Prophets and the day became dark over them; when the seers were ashamed and the diviners confounded; when there was no answer of God; when, instead of heavenly inspired leaders who gave freely the bread of life, the heads thereof judged for reward, the priests taught for hire, and the Prophets divined for money, it was a curse, and not a blessing, brought upon the people because of wickedness. God, however, declares that He is full of power to declare unto Jacob his sin and unto Israel his transgression. Now, as the Lord says through Amos that He will do nothing unless He reveals His secrets to His servants, the Prophets, (Amos 3:7), we may reasonably expect that, whenever the Lord does declare unto Jacob his sin, and unto Israel his transgression, He will do so through the medium of Prophets. That this expectation is reasonable must be patent to anyone who reads the emphatic declaration of the Lord that He does not change. (Mal. 3:6.)

Thousands of years ago, God spoke to Israel and said: "Hear now my words: If there be a Prophet among you, I, the Lord, will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream," and Solomon says that "where there is no vision the people perish." So, when Christians say there is not an inspired prophet of God in the world today, they also declare that the people are perishing for want of the bread of life, and vainly thirsting for the living water that flows from the fountain of eternal salvation. Well could the Lord say of modern Christendom, as He did of ancient Israel: "For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water." Though ancient Israel at times lost the gift of prophecy through sin, yet the Lord was always ready and willing to restore them to favor whenever they manifested a sincere repentance. Isaiah says: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon." (Isaiah 55:7.) And the Lord Himself, speaking through Malachi, says: "Return unto me and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of Hosts." (Mal. 3:7.) And if our Christian friends will forsake their idols and return to the God of Israel, we can promise them that the Lord will again restore them to favor and grant them again the glorious gifts and blessings of the Gospel, which they have been for many long centuries destitute of.

Leaving the Old Testament and coming down to New Testament times, we find that the beginning of the Gospel of Christ was the voice of a Prophet of God crying in the wilderness of Judea, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight." And as long as we can trace the history of the Church which Christ established, we find the gift of prophecy abundantly manifest among the Saints, even women enjoying the heavenly gift, which enabled them to pierce the vista of the future and reveal the mysteries of unborn time. Indeed, the gift of prophecy was one of the results of acceptance of the Gospel.

When John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness, he declared that, though he baptized alone with water, there should one come after him who would baptize them with the Holy Ghost. Christ came and promised His followers that when He should be taken from their midst, He would send them the Comforter which would abide with them forever. Peter, upon the day of Pentecost, promised the assembled multitude that if they would repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of their sins, they would receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and lest there should be some narrow-minded person there who would think that the promise was limited to those who heard it, Peter further said: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2:39.) Peter again says: "The Lord is not slack concerning His promise, as some men count slackness; but is long suffering to-us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (2 Peter 3:9.)

From the above we learn that all mankind are called upon to repent and accept the Gospel, and upon condition of doing so, are promised the gift of the Holy Ghost. Now, what will be the effect of the gift of the Holy Ghost upon those who receive it? For answer, we will not go to the preacher of modern Christianity, which, by the way, is very different from that which was taught by Christ and the Apostles, but we will take the Savior's advice and "search the Scriptures." Jesus said: "Howbeit when He, the spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself: but whatever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and He will show you things to come." (John 16:13.) The ability to see things to come was one of the essential qualifications of the true Prophet in "ye olden time." Paul, the great Apostle, writing to the Corinthian Saints, and speaking of the glorious manifestations of the Spirit, or Holy Ghost, says that to one is given wisdom, to another knowledge, to another faith, to others the gifts of healing and the working of miracles, and to another the gift of prophecy. (I Cor. 12:10.) Christian friend, won't you please look in your Bible and see if the above quotations are not there, and if they are, then know of a surety that, either there are Prophets on the earth today, or else there is not a living soul in all the world who has received the gift of the Holy Ghost. And if there are none who receive the Holy Ghost today, then one of two things is certain; either there are none who are entering by the door into the fold of Christ, or else the promise of Christ and the Apostles has utterly failed. The Savior again says: "But when the comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." (John 15:26.) Now, would we know what the testimony of Jesus is? If we would, let us go to the writings of John the Revelator, and read the words spoken to him upon the lonely isle of Patmos, by the angel of the Lord, at whose feet he had fallen down to worship. "See thou do it not; I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." (Rev. 19:10.) Now, Christian friend, let me ask you if you think there is just one person in this world who has the testimony of Jesus? And if you think there is, what is that testimony? "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Dare you deny it? If you do, you deny the inspiration of the Scriptures, and proclaim Christ and the Apostles to have been base imposters. On the other hand, if you admit the inspirations of the above quotations, you also admit that Mormons are justified in declaring that modern Christianity has departed far, very far, from "the faith that was once delivered to the Saints."

Christianity, so-called, teaches that there were to be no more Prophets after the death of the Apostles, but either Christianity or the Bible is wrong, for the Bible teaches that when Christ ascended up on high He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men, and that among those gifts were Apostles and Prophets, who were to perfect the Saints, perform the work of the ministry, and edify the body (church) of Christ "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." (Eph. 4:8-13.) Which goal of perfection we have not reached yet by any means.

Paul in describing the Church of Christ in the twelfth chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians, compares it to the body of a man, and says that as the body has many members, and that all the members have not the same office, so also is the body (church) of Christ. He compares the various officers and blessings in the Church, such as Apostles, Prophets, etc., the gifts of tongues, healings, etc., to the various members of the human body, such as head, hands, feet, etc., and says that not one of these members can be done away with, but that even those which seem, to uninspired man, to be least useful are necessary. That the head cannot say to the feet, we have no need of thee, nor the feet to the head, we have no need of thee. Another thing we notice in Paul's description of the Church is that the members thereof, whether they were Jew or Gentile, bond or free, were all baptized by one spirit into one body (church), and were all made to drink into one Spirit, even the Spirit of truth, the Holy Ghost, which guides into all truth and shows things to come. What a contrast with the teaching of the college-bred dispenser of modern Christianity, who tells us that the members of Christ's Church are baptized by many spirits into many bodies (churches), and are made to drink of many spirits, none of which guide into all truth or show things to come; and that, though the feet (pastor, deacon and members) have kicked the head (Apostles, Prophets and blessings) off of the body, they still have the complete Church of Christ.

John the Revelator, while in vision on the isle of Patmos, saw the time (still future) when for a thousand two hundred and threescore days, two servants of God would prophesy in the streets of Jerusalem, after which, by the power of the evil one, they will be put to death, and the inhabitants of the earth will rejoice because the servants of God are slain. But after three and one-half days, they will rise again and be taken up to heaven. (Rev. 11:3-11.) It would no doubt be interesting to the Christian world to be able to lift the veil of the future and see who it will be who will kill those two Prophets and rejoice when they are slain. Suffice it to say that in past ages when the inspired servants of the Lord have been martyred, they have always met their fate at the hands of people, who, while professing a belief in the dead Prophets, would not believe in, nor tolerate the presence of the living: and it is just possible that in the case of the two Prophets who will be slain in Jerusalem, that history will repeat itself. Further on in the same vision John saw the time when even angels would leave the throne of God with the seven last plagues to be poured out upon the earth, and after describing the pouring out of the first two vials of wrath and the result, he says: "And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters: and they became blood. And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus. "For they have shed the blood of Saints and Prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink: for they are worthy." (Rev. 16:4-6.) Now, how will it be possible for the people living in the last days, even when the seven last plagues are being poured out upon the earth, to have shed the blood of Saints and Prophets, if there were to be no more Prophets after the death of the Apostles of Christ eighteen hundred years ago?

From the foregoing it can be clearly seen that the belief of the Mormon people in Prophets is neither unreasonable nor unscriptural; and that without Prophets in the last days there cannot be a complete fulfillment of the Scriptures, of which the Savior said that "not one iot or tittle should fail till all should be fulfilled." Christ spoke the truth. The promises of God never have and never will fail, and all the prophetic utterances of those holy men of old will as surely come to pass, as that the day will follow the night. Already many of the prophecies relating to the last days have been fulfilled. The angel has flown through the midst of heaven and restored again the everlasting Gospel. The sun has again risen in glory over the Prophets of Almighty God, and the day is bright with the promise that it never more shall set. The Kingdom of God is set up; the gifts and blessings of old are being enjoyed. One of a city and two of a family, the honest in heart, are being gathered from every land and from every clime, to Zion, where God gives them pastors after His own heart, who feed them with knowledge and understanding. The mountain of the Lord's house is established in the tops of the mountains, and all nations flow unto it. The heralds of salvation are proclaiming in the ears of all nations the heaven-sent warning: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." As servants of the living God, we say to all people, Christian friends, strike off the fetters that bind you to believe in the foolish traditions and vain philosophy of uninspired men, and accept the plain and precious truths of the Gospel of Christ, and you too shall know that the so-called peculiar doctrine, nicknamed "Mormonism," is nothing more or less than the teachings of the Savior and His Apostles—Bible doctrine, and the power of God unto salvation to all who will believe and obey it.

What Has Become of Hell?

Deseret News.

This is the startling question asked by the Atlanta Constitution. The paper makes these observations:

"One reason why our modern pulpit lacks the force which characterized the pulpit of fifty years ago is that preachers do not put enough fire and brimstone into the sermons which they preach from Sabbath to Sabbath. Instead of bringing the world up to the standard of the Gospel they are bringing the Gospel down to the standard of the world, and the outcome of this departure from the beaten paths of orthodoxy must eventually be the overthrow of Christianity unless divine power intervenes to prevent this result. We are hopeful enough to believe that the pendulum will soon swing back, and that our ministers will return to the methods of the old school, but in the meantime, as we listen to the chiming of the Sabbath bells as they float out this morning on the tranquil air and summons us to the discourses which await us in the sanctuaries, we find ourselves confronted with the question, "What has become of hell?"

Our Southern contemporary is not alone in the sentiment of regret at the elimination from modern theology of the doctrine of fire and brimstone. Rev. George Wolfe Shinn, in an article in the North American Review, raises the same piquant question. He argues in this way:

"The conscience of men must be aroused, and the most effectual quickening of conscience is through the dread of the judgment to come. We may talk as we will about the evanescent nature of fear, and we may talk about its being an inferior motive, but in all other things in life it is appealed to. Take it out of life, and chaos comes in ordinary matters. Because it has been taken out of religion—out of the religion of our time—there has ben a weakening of the force of religion. If we had perfectly normal beings to deal with—and that is a modern way of saying, if we were all without sin—then might there be no reference to fear, but an appeal to everything high and holy within us. We have to do with beings who are sinful and who must be led up to the higher motives by the exercise of the power. What, then, has become of hell? It has not been obliterated. It cannot be obliterated. Retribution exists as an awful fact back of all figurative language. Men in our days have overlooked retribution in seeking to get rid of materialistic notions concerning hell. The time has come to recall the awful fact of retribution. But it must be done discreetly, and always with those exceptions in mind which greatly modify it."

It is noticeable that in both these quotations the admission is made that modern Christianity is weakening, and that the ultimate result will be its "overthrow." This is important, though the reasoning that the doctrine of hell is the central point or the corner stone of true religion is false. The central point is the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God, and the weakening has come as a result of the loss of knowledge of God, the Father. The declaration that God is "incomprehensible," was the mortal blow to the Christianity of Jesus, whose express mission was to declare and to make known the Father. Let theology return, not to the lake of brimstone, but to the bosom of the Father.

"NOT HUSBANDS ENOUGH."

Saints' Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.

It appears that Utah is unique in several ways. In the Salt Lake Tribune, for June 12, 1900, in a report of a conference of the Y. L. M. I. A., occurs the following:

"Miss Sarah Eddington and Mrs. Maria Y. Dougal made brief remarks to the young ladies, congratulating them upon the progress they have made and are making in their improvement work. Mrs. Dougal said that marriageable girls are so much more numerous than marriageable young men, that a good many of the girls must necessarily remain single, and so she adised them to fit themselves for the missionary field, saying she was confident that women could preach the Gospel as forcefully and as logically as their brothers."

For some time past there have been telegrams in various papers something like the following:

"A carload of girls, converted to "Mormonism," passed through Denver today en route to Utah. They were in charge of a Deacon and his wife. They came from Missouri, Illinois and other states."

Dispatches similar to this have come from various places. The Deseret News comments editorially on these reports, under the caption, "An Absurd Dispatch," and ridicules the idea of there being girls in car load lots sent to Utah. Among the reasons presented for pronouncing the news absurd, the News presents this:

"One fact ought to be known, as it would furnish a sufficient refutation of such stories as that wired from Denver. That is, there are hosts of marriageable girls and women in Utah who are single, and apparently have no opportunities of entering the matrimonial state. It is something that is greatly deplored by thoughtful people anxious for the general welfare. There is not a town or settlement in Utah without a large number of young women, capable of marriage, who seem to have no present chance to become wives and mothers, for which nature has designed them. There is a backwardness on the part of many men, young and old, to embark on the sea of matrimony. Whether it is for fear of the expense which accompanies family responsibilities in these extravagant times, or for other causes, is not explained, but the condition exists and it is one that gives reason for serious reflection."

From the foregoing quotations it seems that Utah is confronted with a condition that exists in very few, if any other, places. In this country the number of females has usually been slightly smaller than the number of males, except possibly immediately following the great wars. It will be interesting to watch the census returns to see what the true conditions are. The idea seems to be somewhat prevalent among our Utah religionists that there is an urgent need for husbands. Of course the girls must get married; and if there are not men to marry them, what next? The Salt Lake people (the men) have wonderfully broad ideas on matrimony, and they will probably solve the problem some way.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION.

The Saints Are Marching On to Success and Victory — Tithe Paying Not a Question of Money, But of Principle.

DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY APOSTLE BRIGHAM YOUNG, AT SALT LAKE CITY, APRIL 6, 1900.

I take great pleasure in bearing testimony to the remarks that have been made by President Snow this morning. I am thankful to God and to our President for the testimony that he has given us. It arouses in my mind many reflections, brings before me the past history of this Church and foreshadows the future destiny of this people. God has been merciful to the Latter-day Saints, and if there are any men opposing us that have the idea that we do not pray for them, they are mistaken. We pray the Lord to soften the hearts of our enemies. We pray that they may be turned from their evil ways and not kick against the pricks, but seek to forsake the evil that is within them and to do good. They are, however, in the hands of God, as we are.

We are glad to know that this people have gained victory after victory. They have marched on, conquering and to conquer. In our youth, as stated by our President, when struggling against fearful odds, we came out greater, nobler, better soldiers of the cross than when we entered into this vortex of persecution; and now in our manhood, in our riper years, thank God that we have heard the voice of our leader saying that we are marching on to success and victory—to the time when men and nations will arise up and say, "Thou blessed people, that have fought the good fight, that have led the way and established righteousness in the land of our fathers." I expect to see this day. There is no power that can battle successfully against our Father and God. If we are His people, we are sure to win. If we are not His, how is it that we have been so successful from the beginning? and have through His power, in which we have trusted, grown to be seventy years old, instead of being a mere child in swaddling clothes? God has done it; He has given us these rights and blessings. I felt in my heart while the President was talking that I could prophesy to those who fight against us, Do your worst; do your best; try to accomplish all the evil that is in your hearts; but as true as God lives this kingdom will sweep on, this Church will progress, and the Kingdom of God will be as the stone cut out of the mountain without hands—it will crush all opposition. Now, that is not disloyal, because God will do it, not man.

I am not opposed to any man who seeks to do right. I am not opposed to any government that seeks to give liberty to the people and the privilege to exercise that free agency which God has given to all men. Every man and woman must have their agency. No man can take it from the sons and daughters of our Father.

It occurred to me this morning while sitting here that if I happened to be called upon to speak, I would read a part of the 29th chapter of Alma, in the Book of Mormon.

"O, that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people;

"Yea, I would declare unto every soul as with a voice of thunder, repentance, and the plan of redemption, that they should repent and come unto our God, that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth.

"But, behold, I am a man, and do sin in my wish; for I ought to be content with the things which the Lord hath allotted unto me.

"I ought not to harrow up in my desires, the firm decree of a just God, for I know that He granteth unto men according to their desire, whether it be unto death or unto life; yea, I know that he alloteth unto men according to their wills, whether they be unto salvation or unto destruction.

"Yea, and I know that good and evil have come before all men; for he that knoweth not good from evil is blameless; but he that knoweth good and evil, to him it is given according to his desires; whether he desireth good or evil, to him it is given according to his desires; whether he desireth good or evil, life or death, joy or remorse of conscience.

"Now, seeing that I know these things, why should I desire more than to perform the work to which I have been called?

"Why should I desire that I was an angel, that I could speak unto all the ends of the earth?

"For, behold, the Lord doth grant unto all nations, of their own nation and tongue, to teach His word; yea, in wisdom, all that he seeth fit that they should have; therefore we see that the Lord doth counsel in wisdom, according to that which is just and true."

The Lord is with His people, and I know it. We have learned to know good from evil. Three score years and ten shall be the days of man on earth. We have arrived at the full stature of a man; for we are three score years and ten this day, and if this people will arise in their manhood, as they have struggled to their feet in their childhood and youth, God will give them the strength of a man. They shall have the power to build up and inhabit, to sow and reap, and if the snows do not come in the mountains, God will send through the faith of the people, the pleasant rains to moisten the earth, that vegetation may spring forth and gladden the hearts of all. Now I learn a good many lessons myself from what I read to you, though I have not reflected so much, perhaps, as I will on the words of Alma.

I heard a man say in relation to tithing: "I don't want to pay my tithing, unless I can make a showing that will be a credit to me and really help to build up Zion. If I could put in $10,000, I would be glad to do it, but I have nothing. I could pay a little tithing, but the idea seems ridiculous for me to step forward and pay a dollar in tithing. It seems to me like I was making a mockery of this sacred principle." But I take the other view of this, and I said to him, "My friend, if you were a child and received five cents, I would caution you to remember the fact that you owed half a cent tithing, and when you had received another and another five cents, until they amounted to fifty cents, I would advise you to go and pay your tithing on that, not for the sake of the money, but for the sake of principle." If it were a question of money, where would have been the salvation of this people? When President Snow was speaking this morning I felt that the power of God was manifest in our preservation and that money had nothing to do with it. The everlasting power of our Father has brought this people to see this auspicious day. If every man and woman would follow the example of the widow and cast in their mites, they would be acting upon principle. The amount of money paid has nothing to do with it. It is the principle which God has commanded us to observe. This is the idea that we want to instill into the hearts of the people of this generation, especially at this time, when the servant of God has delivered unto you and me the message that the time has come when this revelation, given on the 8th day of July 1838, in Far West, Caldwell county, Missouri, must be observed. That revelation has now come to the front. It is as if God had inspired His servant to wirte a new revelation to the people, which must be observed, because it lies at the foundation of our prosperity in these mountains. Gen. Thomas L. Kane once said to me: "This land, on the backbone of the American continent, from Mexico to Canada, it seems to me, belongs to the 'Mormon' people. They led the way into the Rocky mountains, and occupied these valleys, and they ought to have the land." Well, there are not many people that think that, but I am of the same opinion as Gen. Kane. We ought to have this land. But in relation to our preservation upon this land, I have felt sometimes very insecure. Alma wished that he were an angel, that his voice could be heard by the whole world and that he could convert all the sons and daughters of Adam to the Gospel which he had received. I would that I had a hundred thousand dollars to pay in as tithing, not because it would make a good showing and I would be talked about, but for the very principle's sake. And some have the ambition to be spoken of in the midst of Israel. But I want to say to you that tithing is a principle that God has established for the training of men. It has been with us in our childhood and in our boyhood and in our young manhood, and apparently it has almost been a dead letter at times. But for the very principle's sake. But the revelation has come to us in our manhood, when we have reached a stage wherein we know God, and having received this knowledge and being of the full stature of a man, we can rise up as one man and obey this commandment, which has come from God through His authorized servant. I appeal to you on this point. Let every man and woman in this Church arise and do that which God has called upon them to do, and this land may be sanctified and be a land of safety unto us. I do not wish to utter a threat, but I do know this: every time we have disregarded and set at naught the commandments of Almighty God, we have paid for it. We must learn, if it must needs be, by the things we suffer. By and by the Saints will prove to all concerned that this principle of tithing is dear to them, and they will surely fulfill to the very letter what God has called upon them to do.

In a little time you will hear something like this: "Well, the 'Mormons' are moving again. They are leaving Utah, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Old Mexico, Wyoming, Idaho and all these places wherever they are located, and they are having another exodus." Where are they going? Why, you will find out that it will be a pretty strong company going down to Jackson county, Missouri, to redeem and build up Zion, but the word will go forth that the "Mormons" are having another exodus. The people will say that we are going down to inhabit this land of Missouri, and "we are willing they should." Some that are afar off may howl, but the people mostly interested will be glad to see the "Mormons" return to that land and build it up. Some will say, "We have been upon that land and it has proved a land of death unto us." They will have suffered the full force of that desolating sickness which will cover the land, even in Jackson county, Missouri. But when our leader calls upon the Latter-day Saints that are worthy to move down there, the land will be prepared for the Latter-day Saints—not "Mormons." Those who go to Jackson county in that day will be Latter-day Saints. The "Mormons" will be left in Utah, with enough Latter-day Saints to control them.

I will tell you what is in my heart. We are preparing this day in our manhood for the most glorious epoch that has ever come to man upon the earth. If you do not feel in your hearts that this is the most glorious day that we ever witnessed on this earth, then you do not feel as I do. I feel that there is more of the spirit of God, more wisdom, more knowledge, more light, more intelligence and a better union among those that are Latter-day I bear you my testimony that the providences of God have been with this people, and the scenes that will come before us will be such that we will need all the power and all the union we can get to stand and accomplish his work. Now is the accepted time to thrust in our sickles and reap that which has been sown among us and which is now ripe. It was sown in 1838; it is ripe today. That revelation is ripe and the fulfillment of it is ripe. We are now in our manhood, when we can receive and act upon it without question. God will bear us off victorious and we can smile like Him who sits in the heavens and laughs, for we are told that He shall have the wicked in derision, and this people will smile to see the fruitless efforts of those who would retard the progress of the work. They may have been successful sometimes in the past for a little season, but through it all they have seen us grow until we have now arrived to our full manhood. Thank God we see this day. God bless you and all who are interested in this work, is my humble prayer, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

Youth's Companion.

The stout man had jostled and fought his way through the crowd at the entrance to the Brooklyn bridge, and was scowling fiercely as he pushed out a big dent in his hat. Seated next to him in the bridge car was a man who had an office in the same building.

The stout man pointed to the battered hat and said, "I believe men—and women, too, for that matter—are no better than savages. It's every one for himself. There isn't a day passes but that I see something which convinces me civilization is only skin-deep."

"I'm afraid you see only one side of it," replied his neighbor. "There are lots of good things to be seen every day, too. Now, here is something that gives me a deal of happiness during the year." He pulled a small note-book from an inside pocket. Then he went on: "I used to feel as you do—that people are very selfish; but when I began to study them more closely, I saw so many pleasant things that I got in the habit of making notes of them, and so I carry this little book. Here's what I've jotted down today, for instance:

"On my way to the bridge this morning my hat blew off. I chased it, but before I reached it three other men were after it, and one of them caught it for me. Now, there was an entirely unselfish act on the part of men who were strangers to me; and you may see the same thing any windy day.

"As I was crossing City Hall park a woman in front of me dropped a glove without knowing it. Two boys made a dive for it and shouted, 'Lady, lady, you've dropped your glove!' Another act of kindness.

"Just as I reached Broadway a truckman's horse fell. The driver had hardly left his seat before the drivers of three other trucks stopped, got down, and began to help raise the horse. They did it because they saw a fellow-workman in trouble, and knew that they might need the same help at any time.

"On my way back to the office I passed a heavy, two-horse load of flour, stuck on the car track. I stopped a minute to look, and saw several men put their hands to the muddy wheels and push till the dray started. They had no selfish interest in that load of flour; they only wanted to help.

"These are little things, but I think they show something very different from savagery. Some days I see even more, and some things I see every day. The reason we don't notice them more is because they are so common. You watch when we get off the car now, and you'll see half a dozen of these men give the papers they have just glanced through to the newsboy at the foot of the stairs. They might easily throw them away, but they know the boys can sell them again and thereby make a few extra pennies."

And the stout man himself, when he reached the foot of the stairs, dropped a pace behind his neighbor, and hastily slipped his paper into the hands of a ragged newsboy.

To The Southern Star.

Allow me space in your paper to give my testimony concerning the truthfulness of the Gospel. I have been a member of the church for five years, and can say that I feel to rejoice that I have had the privilege of embracing the plan established by our Savior. Having been brought up in the Methodist church, I was contented with its teachings until the time came when the Lord sent His servants in our midst to show us the true light. I was only too willing to accept the glad message, and the five years spent as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have been the happiest of my life. Although we do not gain the love of the world by becoming members of the true church, yet by obedience to divine will the Lord blesses us. The Lord is not slack concerning His promises and does care for His chosen people. Ever praying for the good work. Your sister in the Gospel,

To the Editor Southern Star:

It is my desire to write a few lines in regard to the Mormon people. I have often heard them spoken evil about, but since hearing the Elders preach I believe them to be good people. For about twenty-five years I have been a member of the Baptist church, but last March discovered much error in their system of worship. Elders Lines and Ostler visited us and preached at our house. I never heard the Bible explained so clearly before. My husband being sick, desired them to administer to him, which they did. At that time he was not able to attend to his work, but by the blessings of God through the administrations of His holy servants, he is now able to work. While I am now a non-Mormon, yet I hope soon to be a Saint in very deed.

Mr. Spurgeon's Parable.

Mr. Spurgon once made a good parable. He said:

"There was a tyrant who summoned one of his subjects into his presence and ordered him to make a chain. The poor blacksmith—that was his occupation—had to go to work and forge the chain. When it was done, he brought it into the presence of the tyrant, and was ordered to take it away and make it twice the length. He brought it again to the tyrant, and again he was ordered to double it. Back he came when he had obeyed this order, and the tyrant looked at it, and then commanded his servants to bind the man hand and foot with the chain he had made and cast him into prison.

"That is what the devil does with men. He makes them forge their own chain, and then binds them hand and foot with it, and casts them into outer darkness." That is just what every sinner is doing—that is just what drunkards, gamblers, blasphemers are doing. But, thank God, we can tell them of a Deliverer. The Son of God has power to break every one of their fetters if they will only come to Him.

THE DEAD.

Henry W., infant son of Brother and Sister Henry W. Rucker, died June 17, 1900.

The parents of the little one which has been called away have ever been untiring workers in the cause of truth. We trust God will bless them and comfort them; that peace will abound in their hearts.

"THE VERY PLACE."

The following, taken from the History of Utah, written by the gifted poet and author—Bishop O. F. Whitney—beautifully expresses the entranced vision of the pioneers as they gazed upon the Great Salt Lake Valley—then desolate and uninhabited; and the impressions of the mind that great and good man, Brigham Young, as he reclined in Apostle Woodruff's carriage, and viewed the vast area of country which lay before him, on that memorable Pioneer Day in 1847. —Ed.

Silence and desolation reign. A silence unbroken, save by the cricket's ceaseless chirp, the roar of the mountain torrent, or the whir and twitter of the passing bird. A desolation of centuries, where earth seems heaven-forsaken, where hermit Nature, watching, waiting, weeps and worships God amid eternal solitudes.

A voice breaks the stillness. It is the voice of Brigham Young. Pale and wasted from his recent illness, and still reclining wearily in the light vehicle which has borne him through the mountains. the pioneer chieftain sweeps with a prescient glance the gorgeous panorama spread out before him—the contrasted splendors of mountain, valley, lake and stream, glorious and glittering in the summer's sunlight. Far over and beyond all these extends that inspired gaze. It sees not merely the present, but the future; not only that which is, but that which is to be, when from these barren sands shall rise, as rose proud Venice from the sea, a city fair as Adriatic's island queen, and no less wealthy, famed and powerful. It sees the burning plains to blooming gardens turn; the desert change to an oasis; the sterile valley, the reproach of Nature, which naught before had borne, teeming with varied life and yielding rich fruits and rare flowers for the sustenance and delight of man. An inanimate Sarah, a barren Rachel, transformed by the touch of God to a joyful mother of children. The curse of centuries is lifted, the fetters of ages are stricken off, and the redeemed earth, like a freed captive, looks up to heaven and smiles. Cities, towns and hamlets multiply; farms, fields, orchards and vineyards fill all the land. Egypt, the wilderness are past; another Canaan appears; and here a Moses who shall smite the rock, a Joshua to sit in judgment and divide to Israel his inheritance.

Still he gazed on. Still rolled before that enraptured sight, in waves of prophetic imagery, the sunlit panorama of the future. Saw he no cloud? Yes, one. He thought upon the oppressor and he frowned, for he was human, and he remembered the past; upon the Master and His mission of mercy, and a softened look played upon the wan and wasted features. Yes, he too could forgive, as he hoped with all men to be forgiven. If the Gentile came he should be welcome, blessing should be given for cursing, and the olive branch, and not the sword, would Ephriam extend to Japheth. But he must come peaceably, give friendship for friendship, and honor the laws of the commonwealth. No stirrers-up of strife, no mobocracy would be tolerated. Japheth, if he desired it, should indeed "dwell in the tents of Shem," but he must dwell there in peace and in propriety, or his room would be preferable to his company.

Is it all fancy? Did no such thoughts sweep through the mind of the Mormon leader that day—one who believed himself, as tens of thousands believed him, a divinely appointed law-giver, a Moses indeed to another and veritable Israel? Did no such sentiments swell his breast, as he surveyed for the first time the land, the desert land, which his directing genius and his people's united industry were destined to redeem and render immortal? Perhaps we shall see as we proceed.

"The very place." Such were his simple words, but they were words that spoke volumes. Says Wilford Woodruff, who, with Heber C. Kimball, Lorenzo D. Young and others, had remained behind with the President, and now stood with him upon the narrow plateau near the mouth of Emigration Canyon: "We gazed in wonder and admiration upon the vast valley before us, with the waters of the Great Salt Lake glistening in the sun, mountains towering to the skies, and streams of pure water running through the beautiful valley. It was the grandest view we had ever seen till this moment. Pleasant thoughts ran through our minds at the prospect that not many years hence the house of God would be established in the mountains and exalted above the hills, while the valleys would be converted into orchards, vineyards and fruitful fields, cities erected to the name of the Lord, and the standard of Zion unfurled for the gathering of the nations. President Young expressed his entire satisfaction at the appearance of the valley as a resting place for the Saints, and felt amply repaid for his journey. While lying upon his bed in my carriage, gazing upon the scene before us, many things of the future, concerning the valley, were shown to him in vision."

Some of the pioneers, however, weary and worn by their long pilgrimage, were far from enchanted at the prospect of remaining in such a desolate place. Their hearts sank within them at the announcement of their leader, that this was the very spot—a spot which he claimed to have previously seen in a vision, as held in reserve by the Almighty for His people. Said Harriet Young: "Weak and weary as I am, I would rather go a thousand miles farther than remain in such a forsaken place as this." Ellen Kimball, her sister pioneer, felt likewise. Clara D. Young was the only one of the three who felt at all satisfied with the situation. Said she in later years: "It did not look so dreary to me as it did to the other ladies. They were terribly disappointed because there were no trees. My poor mother was almost heartbroken. I don't remember a tree that could be called a tree." Lorenzo D. Young says there was a scrub-oak or a cottonwood here and there, but that the general outlook was dreary and disheartening. And thus were opinions and expressions divided. All in all, it is evident, from the concensus of their views, which might be multiplied ad libitum, that beyond the scenic glory of Salt Lake Valley, which still remains unrivalled, its inviting features at that time were more visible to the eye of faith than to the natural vision.

Continuing, Apostle Woodruff says: "After gazing awhile upon this scenery, we moved four miles across the tableland into the valley, to the encampment of our brethren, who had arrived two days before us. They had pitched upon the banks of two small streams of pure water, and had commenced plowing. On our arrival they had already broken five acres of land, and had begun planting potatoes in the Valley of the Great Salt Lake."

* * * * *

Not many seasons elapsed, after the pioneer year 1847, before the main city of the Saints, which served as a model for scores of others, with its wide and regular streets flanked with shade trees, neat and substantial dwellings embowered in groves and gardens, crystal streams fresh from the towering snow-crowned hills, flowing down both sides of its charming and healthful thoroughfares, presented the appearance, especially in summer, when orchards were all abloom, of one vast, variegated bouquet, radiant with beauty and redolent of mingled perfumes. The transformation from sage-brush and sunflower was truly wonderful, and the fair and peaceful city, as peaceful as it was fair, was a perpetual delight, not only to its builders and inhabitants, but likewise to the stranger guest, the weary traveler and passing pilgrim from abroad.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

FAITH—Now that we have discovered from the inspired testimony of the sacred writers of the Holy Bible the several principles and ordinances of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, let us not weary in well doing, but rather let us diligently pursue our investigation with an earnest, soul's sincere desire to become better acquainted with God and His laws, that we might more fully discern the worth, beauty and excellence of these simple constituent rules of the Gospel. It is God's greatest gift we would obtain, and inasmuch as "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (II. Tim. iii.:16, 17); it shall be our sole aim and object to give the pure and unadulterated teachings of the sacred word.

Peter has given us some important counsel and instruction which it would be well for us to keep in mind and not forget in our search of the Scriptures, for we shall find that it will greatly aid and benefit us, and guard us against the fatal mistakes many make who apply private interpretation and spiritualization to the word of God. The admonition of the faithful Apostle is as follows: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts: Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (II. Peter i.:19-21.)

With this beneficial and timely instruction as a compass and guide, we will endeavor, by the help of the Lord, to prove the principles of eternal life simple and plain. Of course it will be readily seen by all concerned that our elucidation of the subject is very brief, purely scriptural, without lengthly dessertation, or exegesis; for we feel that the Scriptures are, in general, self-explanatory, requiring little or no elaboration or comment other than a citation to the Scripture and the passages quoted in full. In our treatise of the principles and ordinances, we invariably named them in the following order: first, Faith; second, Repentance; third, Baptism; and fourth, the Gift of the Holy Ghost, because we believed that this was their proper and perfect rank in the Gospel, and the Lord had so arranged them in the Scriptures.

To deal with these principles according to the order given, we have first, Faith, and we shall now proceed to see what the Scriptures sayeth concerning the same. Paul has given us a definition of faith in the following passage: "Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." (Heb. xi.:1.) From this we learn that faith is the assurance or belief in the mind of man of the existence of things which the eye has never beheld. While we define faith as a belief, strictly speaking it is more than a mere intellectual impression of the mind. Peter, speaking of the power of God through faith, says: "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." (I. Peter i.:9.) Thus, if the end of one's faith be the salvation of their soul, faith constitutes the whole, and is therefore greater than the part—a mere belief. We may say that belief is the avenue; faith the public broadway; belief the germ of the plant, and faith the full-grown tree. From the faint and scant impressions of belief, properly directed and cultivated, grows the true, the living, the profitable and operative faith. Belief is the nucleus of faith, its first incipiency, its ground work and foundation. Belief is the inclination to do good, faith the very act of doing good; therefore, faith is the outgrowth or product of belief, and as such claims a prominent and important place in the Gospel structure.

We mention faith as a belief because the sacred historians have applied these terms as synonomous expressions, and this, we believe, grants us the license to treat of them on this wise, when dealing with Biblical teachings; therefore, with this understanding, we will use the terms faith and belief even as the holy men of old have. Perhaps it would be well to substantiate the assertion that faith and belief are placed on equal and like terms, and used to mean one and the self-same thing, by the inspired writers of the Bible. In the fourth chapter of the Roman letter, and ninth verse, we read "Faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness," and in the third verse of the same chapter we are given to understand that "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness." Here, then, is one of the many striking examples in Holy Writ that at once go to prove that these expressions, faith and belief, were used synonymously, and to the same intent and purpose, by the Prophets of old.

It is by faith that we move upon the face of the earth; that we walk, talk, live and act. Some men have great faith in the laws of hygiene, and hence by obedience to those laws they secure physical health and happiness. Others have faith in the laws of intellectual development, and by study, research, investigation and application, they become mental giants—the great thinkers and mighty rulers of the earth. But in all their advancement and progression they realize and know that the secret of their success is the proper application of the means at hand, or, in other words, a strict observance and compliance to the rules and regulations governing the coveted prize—development. "There is no royal road to success," no glittering, shining, easy pathway to the goal of advanced intelligence. It is faith in the mind of man which prompts and urges him forward, it is a mighty stimulus to action, the motive power of operation. "We walk by faith, not by sight." (II. Cor. v.:7.)

Faith, then, we say, is a principle of power. Thus: we believe firmly and intelligently that we can accomplish a certain work, and with this impression we set to with a determined will, and perform the act. You remember that Jesus invariably said unto those whom He had healed, blessed and comforted, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." "As your faith is, so shall it be unto you." "Great is thy faith." He desired that the people should believe on Him; that He was indeed the Son of God, and that He had come to earth to redeem them from the grave, and loosen them from the entanglements of sin.

Our Lord plainly taught that faith was a principle of power, for He said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." (Matt. 17:20.) "Faith as a grain of mustard seed"—quality and not quantity is here meant. A grain of mustard seed, although a tiny speck, is a perfect plant in embryo, capable of bringing forth, under proper conditions, thirty, sixty, and a hundredfold increase—sending its branches far up into the heavens, that the fowls of the air may rest therein. The grain of mustard seed has faith to fulfill the measure of its creation, and produce a mighty increase, and this is the kind and quality of faith the Lord desired we should possess. Time would fail to tell all the wonderful manifestations of power wrought out by and through the gift of faith. How Elijah closed the heavens (I Kings 17, James 5:16-17), how the sun and moon obeyed Joshua (Joshua 10), how Samson smote the massive pillars of stone and the great temple fell a heap of ruins (Judges 16), how the holy men of God, "through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions; quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens." (Heb. 11:33-34.)

When we begin to meditate upon this principle of power—faith—and ponder upon its excellence and worth, our minds begin to enlarge, our thoughts to expand, until we realize the magnitude and far-reaching properties of the Gospel plan, as never before. The principle of faith is a grand and glorious one, and the mortal mind has never yet exhausted the subject. It is a gift of God, and by cultivation and righteous application it will enable the mind of man to discern the glories of the kingdom of our God, the loving kindness of our blessed Savior, and the beauty, harmony and consistency of all the commands of the Father.

Faith, then, is the assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Noah felt assured that God would visit the earth with a flood, and this assurance led to obedience, insomuch that he prepared the ark as God had commanded him, and saved the members of his own household. Abraham felt assured that the Lord was able to restore his son Isaac to life again, and therefore he was willing to slay the boy in whom the promise of posterity and increase had been given. Likewise Daniel felt assured that God was able to close the mouths of the ravening lions; the Hebrew children that He was able to quench the violence of fire and release them from the burning furnace. This assurance of the power and might of God enables us to place implicit trust in His promises, and confidence in His holy laws. It becomes self-evident, then, that faith is the foundation principle of all revealed truths.

Our faith, our hope, our trust must ever be in God, who is mighty to save, anxious to bless, willing to impart, and ready to assist all who come unto Him in spirit and in truth. We must strive to understand and know the characteristics and attributes of our Father, whom we should adore, worship and obey. For "this is life eternal that they may know Thee the only God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." (John xvii.:3.) It is "life eternal" to know God, and we shall find from the revelations He has given us that He is a God of infinite love, compassionate mercy, knowledge, faith, justice, judgment and truth. The Scriptures bear testimony that the Lord is no respector of persons, that He is an unchangeable God, the same yesterday, today and forever. Accompanying the assurance that He possesses these divine attributes and holy characteristics, comes the belief and faith that all His promises will be fulfilled to the very letter. Without a knowledge that God is loving, kind, just and true, we can never exercise faith in Him for life and salvation.

Having searched the Scriptures thus far, our analysis being exceedingly brief for want of space, let us now consider a few passages which explain in whom we should have faith. Paul, the great Apostle to the Gentiles, says: "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." (I. Cor. ii.:5.) Of course our faith must be in the power of God, for it is by the power of God that we will be saved, redeemed, exalted and glorified. "Without faith it is impossible to please Him; for he that cometh to God must believe that He is and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him." (Heb. xi.:6.) Then we can readily see that we must have faith in God. It was the anxious desire of the righteous seers of old to possess a testimony that they might know that their course in life was pleasing unto God. This testimony could only be obtained by placing implicit faith in the Lord, for "without faith it is impossible to please Him." Again, Peter in his epistle, speaking of the glory of Christ, and the power of God, says, "That your faith and hope might be in God." (I. Peter i.:21.)

Some will declare, "Repent and then believe," but to whom shall we repent if we have no belief? How can we repent of sins committed if we have no faith that the Lord is ready to forgive us our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness? We must first believe, and with such an earnest faith as leads to repentance and every other good work. It was not until the seeds of faith were sown (by the preaching of the word and the manifestations of the spirit) in the hearts of those Jews on the day of Pentecost that they cried aloud, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts ii.:37.) Here is an example of the fulfillment of Paul's words to the Roman's, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. x.:17.) Faith in the mission and work of the Messiah came unto the unbelieving Jews by hearing the word of God preached and made plain, by the faithful Apostles of the Lord Jesus. Faith in God cometh by hearing the word of God We must first believe, for the divine injunction has gone forth, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How, then, shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?" (Rom. x.:13, 14.) Here is the question, "How, then, shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed?" How can they call upon Him, or worship, or obey Him, without they first believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him?

We are commanded to "draw nigh unto God" (James iv.:8), and Paul tells us to "draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith." (Heb. x.:22.) This then is the first principle of salvation, and in order to put ourselves in harmony with God and His laws, He requires that we shall first exercise faith in Him; that we shall believe with our hearts, and manifest by our acts that our faith is living, active, and operative. Faith is the foundation stone of the Gospel superstructure. It naturally enough wins for itself first place in the plan of salvation from the very order of things, and now, that we have briefly touched upon this first principle leading up to God's greatest gift, we will pursue our investigation of the second in our next issue. "I love them, them that love me, and those who seek me early shall find rest." Seek the Lord in faith, nothing wavering. Call upon Him in mighty prayer. Petition Him to bestow upon you the gift of faith, for all the principles of the Gospel are gifts and free-will offerings from God. You know that our Savior hath said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt. v.:48.) The pathway to perfection and holiness is obedience and consecration to duty. Faith is a principle of the Gospel, and before we can attain to higher glories and eternal rewards we must mount the ladder of Truth round by round, commencing at the foot, by placing faith in God, and then ascending after the order of principles revealed. "And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear" (I. Peter i.:17), "that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." (I. Cor. i.:9.)

Popular Misquotations.

From the Pall Ball Gazette.

Unlike certain correspondents, I shall not only point out the most familiar misquotations, but give the correct version immediately after:

"The tongue is an unruly member"—"But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil." (James iii., 8.)

"Charity covereth a multitude of sins"—"Charity shall cover the multitude of sins." (I Peter iv., 8. Rev. Vers., "Love covereth a multitude of sins.")

"A little knowledge is a dangerous thing"—"A little learning is a dangerous thing." (Pope, "Essay on Criticism.")

"Speed the parting guest"—"Speed the going guest." (Pope, Satire II.)

"A man convinced against his will will hold the same opinion still"—"He that complies against his will is of his own opinion still." (Butler, "Hudibras," Part III.)

"Make assurance doubly sure"—"Make assurance double sure." "(Macbeth," Act IV, Sc. 1.)

"Benedict the marieid man" should be "Benedick the married man." ("Much Ado About Nothing.")

"Falleth as the gentle dew"—"Dropneth as the gentle rain." ("Merchant of Venice, Act IV, Sc. 1.)

"The man that hath no music in his soul"—"The man that hath no music in himself." (Ibid., Act V., Sc. 1.)

"Falls like Lucifer, never to rise again"—"Falls like Lucifer, never to hope again." ("Henry VII.," Act III, Sc. 2.)

"Thick as autumn leaves in Vallombrosa"—"Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks in Vallombrosa." (Milton, "Paradise Lost," Book I.)

"Fresh fields and pastures new"—"Fresh woods and pastures new." Milton, "Lycidas.")

"'Twas ever thus from childhood's hour"—"Oh, ever thus, from childhood's hour." (Moore, "Lalla Rookh;" "Fire Worshippers.")

"By small degrees and beautifully less"—"Fine by degrees and beautifully less." (Matthew Prior, "Henry and Emma.")

"A wet sheet and a flowing sail"—"A wet sheet and a flowing sea." (Cunningham.)

"When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war"—"When Greeks joined Greeks, then was the tug of war." (Nathaniel Lee.)

"Praise from Sir Hubert Stanley is praise indeed"—"Approbation from Sir Hubert Stanley is praise indeed." (T. Moran, "A Cure for the Heartache.")

"The even tenor of their way"—"The noiseless tenor of their way." (Gray's "Elegy.")

Poor Gray suffers also in this year's Academy. Picture 339 reads "And all the air a solemn silence holds," instead of "And all the air a solemn stillness holds."

An Old Boer Bible.

Perhaps the only copy of the Boer Bible in the country is in the possession of Peter M. Campbell, of Denver. The Bible is in the Dutch language, and was published in the Netherlands, as is announced in the preface, in 1619. Mr. Campbell, who is the son of Sir Duncan Campbell, of Scotland, came into possession of the volume some eighteen years ago, at the time of the first Boer war. He was acting as a newspaper correspondent at the time, and remained in the Transvaal for five years.

During his residence there he bought the book from a minister of the Gospel named Hoxmeyre, who gave the following account of its history:

The book was for a long period of years in the Jubert, or Joubert, family, of which the late Gen. Joubert was a noted member. It was brought to Cape Town by the first band of Dutch emigrants, and was the second book ever taken to South Africa. The book itself, aside from its history, is interesting as a specimen of bookmaking. It is a huge volume, about 12 inches wide, 18 inches long and 7 inches thick, and weighs thirty pounds or more. It is bound in calf, and the backs are boards half an inch thick and bevelled at the edges. The corners are bound with heavy brass pieces in front and at the back. It is held closed by two massive brass clasps.

In typography the volume, though nearly three hundred years old, is excellent. There are ornamental letters at the beginning of each book and ornate tail pieces.

One of the queer customs of former times—that of representing biblical characters clad in the fashion of the time the book was printed—is shown in several striking instances.

In the illumined letter at the beginning of Genesis, Adam and Eve are represented surrounded by animals—lions, elephants, chickens and ducks. Adam is wearing a long mustache and Vandyke beard, such as were in fashion among courtiers of the seventeenth century. A tree in the same picture is represented with a large branch sawed off.

"Love thinketh no evil," imputes no motive, sees the bright side, puts the best construction on every action.—Henry Drummond.

Youth fades; love droops; the leaves of friendship fall:
A mother's secret hope outlives them all.

3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.

11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

HONOR THE PIONEERS.

The 24th of July marks a notable, eventful day in the history of the Latter-day Saints, and more particularly in the settlement of the present state of Utah. Ever since the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in the Empire state—New York—on the 6th of April, 1830, its advocates and adherents have been fiercely persecuted, violently opposed, wickedly abused, and maliciously reviled, because of their religious convictions, and devotedness to God and His holy laws. They had settled in the state, where the seemingly new faith received its incipiency (New York), and many honest souls flocked around the standard of Truth, lifted as an ensign to the nations. (We say "seemingly new faith," because many look upon it and treat it as such, but upon closer investigation and study it is found to be nothing more nor less than the genuine, good "old-time religion.") A prophet being, as Jesus says, not without honor, save in his own household and among his own friends, it could not be otherwise than that the people called Latter-day Saints, and their faithful prophet Joseph Smith, should receive the same kind of treatment as our Lord when He "was come into His own country." Witness the altogether un-Christian and unholy reception given to the Savior on that occasion. The people murmured, became exceeding angry, insomuch that He was contemned by His own countrymen, and they were offended in Him, and said, "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not His mother called Mary? and His brethren, James, and Joseph, and Simon, and Judas? and His sisters, are they not all with us? Whence, then, hath this man all these things?" (Matt, xiv.:54-58.) We must agree and admit that such a welcome home was anything but cordial, inviting, or enticing, and we are not at all surprised or amazed when we find Him departing from these ungrateful people, because of their unbelief, stiffneckedness, and obdurate natures. So it was with the prophet, Joseph Smith, and the Latter-day Saints, they found the people "at home," so to speak, very bitter, malignant, and scornful, and they were on this account forced to journey westward to the state of Ohio, at that time in the frontier region.

Here they endeavored to be at peace with their neighbors, to worship God in spirit and in truth, and serve Him with all the energies of the soul, and the faculties of the being. Their missionaries were not dormant or idle, but they vigorously and diligently carried the word of salvation to many of the sons of men, and succeeded in organizing branches in the United States and Canada. But falsehood was on the wing, misrepresentation was afloat; and religious bigots, full of vileness and contempt, with a foul mouth of slander and a forked tongue of envy, stirred up the people to anger and hatred toward them, and they were once more forced to flee from their homes and lands, while their houses were burned and their fields of grain laid waste. Neither daunted or discouraged, they wended their weary way into Illinois, and settled in the bend of the Mississippi river, the spot where they pitched their tents being considered very unhealthy, "a fit abiding place for malarial diseases." A commonwealth was here commenced and the city was christened Nauvoo, signifying beauty and rest.

It was not destined that these faithful pilgrims should tarry long in this city they had erected with their own hands, by the help of the Lord. They had journeyed now over almost one-half the breadth of the continent, and many of the residents of Nauvoo had been converted to the faith of the Saints in European nations, and had crossed the broad Atlantic to join the body of the Church in Nauvoo and mingle with their American brethren. The city grew, its citizens multiplied, a charter was granted, and the work progressed and prospered all along the line. Notwithstanding the fact that the people increased and their numbers grew, we find that they were being harassed, tormented, insulted and plagued by their enemies. They were well versed in the truthfulness of Paul's instruction to Timothy, "And all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (II. Tim. iii.:12), for they had experienced naught but persecution from the day of their conversion to and connection with that despised sect, erroneously known as Mormons.

The storm clouds of violence had been gathering thick around them, and on the ill-fated 27th, of June, 1844, the awful tempest of devilish hate, which had visited them so often before, burst forth in terrific fury, and the faithful prophet, Joseph, together with his beloved brother, Hyrum, were cruelly martyred, while Apostle John Taylor was savagely wounded, by a masked mob, whose blackened faces reflected the color of their wicked hearts. Their prophet and patriarch slain, the feelings of those who looked upon them as emissaries sent of God can better be felt than expressed, for the condition of the minds of the people, at this special period, beggars all description. It was only a few months later when the Saints were expelled from Illinois, and forced at the point of the bayonet to abandon Nauvoo, the beautiful city of their workmanship. It was in the cold, dreary month of February, 1846, that they, with tear-dimmed eyes and saddened hearts, left their homes, their habitations, their beautiful temple, and lovely city, to face the wild desert, and brave the savage Indian's haunt. Crossing the Mississippi river, which at that time was frozen, they pursued their course in the direction of the Missouri—the ground being covered with snow, the weather cold, damp and dismal. Many of their number died for want of the necessary comforts of life, and today their mounds rise up as signals to the nation, and tokens unto the world.

Having spent the winter of 1846 at Garden Grove, Pisgah and Winter Quarters, in the spring of the following year the Saints began to prepare for that great exodus of 1,000 miles across the dreary plains. One would naturally suppose that a people having undergone the severe trials these worthies had, would shrink from the journey which now lay before them, and faint by the wayside in despair and utter discouragement. But no, they knew in whom they believed and trusted—the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—that He was a God of the friendless, and a Father unto His faithful children. They had learned to sing with a consciousness and vigor that good, inspiring hymn:

"We doubt not the Lord, nor His goodness;
We've proved Him in days that are past;
The wicked who fight against Zion
Will surely be smitten at last."

And so they lifted their heads, believing that God was at the helm of the Ship of Zion, and no matter how fierce the storms, how trying the tempest, He would guide them safely through.

Twelve companies of twelve were selected to pioneer the way, and among this chosen band were three brave, noble women. Three heroines were they, faithful and true to the Master's cause, willing to bear His cross, and suffer for His holy name's sake. Like the faithful three who followed Jesus through Galilee, ministering unto His wants, who were last at the cross, and first at the tomb; so these gentle mothers in Israel were devoted and true to the same good Master. Ah! who can doubt the success of a people who had been true to God, loyal to their country, and loving to their fellow-man! God had said, "I will never leave thee, I will never forsake thee." True their path was not strewn with roses, neither was their course paved with beautiful gems. No, they had not the luxuries of life, or the comforts of cushioned seats. Theirs was a thorny path, a rugged way, a rocky incline. For six hundred miles they constructed an entirely new route, traveling the remainder of the journey aided by a trapper's trail. It was on July 24th, 1847, that they entered Salt Lake Valley, the place which the Lord had shown in vision to Brigham Young as the resting place of the Saints.

Oh, the goodness of our God in delivering His children from the hands of their enemies and establishing them in the tops of the mountains! These noble, valiant pioneers had marked the path, and by the help of God had led the way, so that the Saints might come to where the bold mountains rise as a refuge, and there find a haven of rest. Their pathway was often moistened with tears, but they struggled on for God and the right. They had not forsaken the United States or the Constitution, but the United States had forsaken them in the very hour of need, when persecution drove them from their homes. When they arrived in the Salt Lake Valley "Old Glory" was floated to the breeze the Declaration of Independence was read, and the Constitution revered, its statutes kept sacred and inviolate. Honor the pioneers, who made the desert to blossom as the lovely rose garden. Yes! we will honor, love, respect and praise them. These worthy sires made it possible that the people of God might worship the Lord free and unrestrained, granting unto all the same right and privilege they had endured so much to sustain. Upon the foundation stones which they hewed out and cemented in the commonwealth, has been built a superstructure which reflects honor to their names; for Utah now shines in the galaxy of states with a brilliancy to dazzle her sisters older and longer established than she. Of the pioneers but few remain in mortality—the major portion have passed through the valley of death, and now rest 'neath the shade of Paradise, from whence they shall arise in the morning of the first resurrection to glory, honor and life eternal. Those living in the flesh see day by day the wonderful products of their early labors, and we cannot be engaged in a better or nobler work than in honoring the pioneers. We feel to breathe for all these valiant sires a hearty, fervent "God bless you." Fifty-three years have passed since they entered their mountain retreat in the Rockies of the far west. Let each succeeding generation rise up and call them blessed.

To Elders who are about to return home, or who shall return in the future, we direct these few lines. Every Elder should know that it takes money to purchase their railroad tickets, to return them home, and they should understand also that it is necessary to have money on deposit before we can get those tickets.

Elders when notified of their release are given sufficient time to enable them to write home and have money placed to their credit here in the office.

Then, again, some of the brethren write in one day, telling us where to send their tickets, and if they are not there on the following day, whether it be 100 or 500 miles away from Chattanooga, they at once send in a long telegram, which only adds expense. We try our best to be patient, and do all in our power to aid the Elders, but there are certain rules laid down which must be kept. One of them is as follows: We cannot advance money to purchase tickets for Elders returning home, when they have none on deposit.

Hereafter we must have ten days' notice where to send tickets, and will have it whether it cause inconvenience or not.

GLEANINGS.

Elders Duffin and Cook, a short time ago, arrived in the Meadow neighborhood, a thriving little spot in Johnston county, N. C., and at once visited the school directors with a desire of obtaining their permission to use the school house. Their wishes were kindly granted, and news of "Mormons are going to preach" soon spread among the people. When services commenced a well filled house of eager and attentive people were present. When the brethren had explained some of the Gospel principles and were about to dismiss, one of the most prominent ministers of that section arose, advocating mob violence. In a very ungentlemanly manner he vilified and slandered them and the cause they represent; referring to false histories and magazines for his proof. After he had sung his little song (the same arguments having been used as all false teachers harp upon) he sat down. The reverend gentleman was then informed by the brethren that he had not spoken the truth about the people of God, and his arguments would not stand the test. Like the Scribes, Pharisees and hypocrits of old, he demanded a sign of the Elders, and wanted them to drink a vial of poison. After proving to him from the word of Christ that "an evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign," he left the building. The attack upon the brethren made friends for them, while it injured the minister who was so willing to persecute his fellow-men.

Three other meetings were held and a very large audience attended each time. The choir freely gave their services and furnished fine music, which was much appreciated.

The meetings held were the means of doing much good. It seems strange that so-called ministers will not soon realize that they only damage themselves when they give way to their false utterances and think to overthrow righteousness.

But the blessed of God are promised persecution, as is written in Matthew 5:11: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

The latest census of Utah, it is estimated, will show over 4,000,000 sheep for that state. Perhaps this explains why the west is called wild and "wooly."

Deseret News.

Dr. Greggs says "the Presbyterian church needs a new and simple creed." If he were to recognize his denomination's creed in Utah he might substitute "Christian" for "simple," as here its "confession of faith" is substantially "anything to beat the 'Mormons.'"

Elder E. L. Pomeroy, who has ably presided over the East Tennessee Conference since last February, paid the office brethren a visit last Tuesday. He expects to reach his home in Arizona to enjoy the 24th of July celebration, to be given in honor of the noble pioneers who made the western lands to blossom as the rose. J. Spencer Worsley has been chosen to succeed Brother Pomeroy and lead the good work in "Old East Tennessee." We congratulate Elder Worsley upon his appointment, and look for a continuation of good reports from that section of the Lord's vineyard.

Why so Many Fail.

President James Rea, of the New York Commercial Teachers' Association, tells in Success for July why many persons fail to obtain and hold good positions:

"Many young men fail to achieve success because they lack the power or inclination to do hard work. The head of one of our large department stores, in addressing a body of teachers, said: 'No man in the practical world of today can hope to get on if he shirks his work. I ask you to use all your power and influence to instill in the minds of those you teach the truth that a man owes work to the world, while the world does not owe him anything.' An expert accountant of many years' practice said: 'The best man I ever had in my employ was a plodder.' The writer, in his experience as a teacher, coming into contact with many thousand young men, has rarely, if ever, found a student who did not possess sufficient ability to make a successful start in life if he was thoroughly imbued with the precept—'Keeping everlastingly at it brings success.' Many young men fail to render valuable service, through lack of ability to do accurate, systematic work. The business community demands well-trained minds, capable of grasping details and carrying out instructions in a correct and orderly manner. The young man who possesses this faculty is a rarity, and never need be without profitable employment.

"Above all else, the young man who would succeed must be honest and temperate. He must be what he would appear. There is a premium upon those who possess sterling manhood, fixity of purpose, and a determination to overcome obstacles. Life's highest prizes are within their grasp."

China's Population.

The population of the earth is 1,440,650,000, according to the latest and most reliable statistics.

The Indo-Germans, or Aryan race, which cover Europe, inhabit a large portion of the American continent and may be found in almost any part of the known world, are estitmated to number 545,000,000 in all. This includes what might be termed the "civilized world."

The population of China is placed at 402,680,000, not including Chinamen in other countries. The entire Mongolian numbers close to 700,000,000.

By way of comparison it may be said that the population of China is equal to four-fifths that of the civilized world. Yet a difference of opinion may exist as to how the inhabitants of the civilized world are to be counted—whether by countries or by race.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM; OR, THE METALLIC IMAGE.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

Many comments have been made on the dream of this mighty monarch, and as it deals with a latter-day kingdom, which should be established in the last days, it is doubly interesting and especially worthy of the consideration of every student of theology. Every Bible student and scholar allows that we live in the latter days, and if the God of heaven has not yet established His kingdom, He will surely do so, as this marvelous dream, in all its bearings, in connection with the visions of Daniel, have thus far been most marvelously fulfilled.

I will endeavor to point out, by the light of profane history as well as the word of God, the miraculous handiwork of the Almighty in His control of nations and peoples; that the words of His prophets might not fall to the ground, unfulfilled.

The dream in question, contained in the second chapter of Daniel, in connection with the visions of Daniel in his seventh and eighth chapters, all bear on the same subject, representing the rise and fall of nations and empires.

The interpretation has been made so clear by the literal fulfillment, with evidence from profane writers, in connection with recent archaeological testimony, that there is no room to doubt Daniel's prophecies.

In the desert wastes of Arabia, amidst a most arid region, archaeologists have labored among the sand dunes and plains of Assyria, bringing to light vast ruins of mighty dynasties and ancient civilizations. Among the mighty cities thus unearthed, Babylon has been found and proof conclusive to the most skeptical has been brought to light, showing the grandeur of this beautiful city, in the plains of Shinar, built on each bank of the River Euphrates. This is evidence that Babylon was no myth, or poetic effusion of a disordered brain, but was as described, "the pride of the Chaldees."

The city of Babel (Babylon) was founded by Nimrod, the hunter (Gen. x.:10). For location it was most beautiful, being well watered, prolific and fertile, and for ages the most prosperous and the most desirable of countries; blossoming and blooming as the rose.

This plain of Shinar, and this mighty empire, in connection with the city of Babylon, were at the zenith of their glory in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, and he, in connection with his kingdom, is called "the head of gold."

The father of Nebuchadnezzar had been a very successful warrior and general in the Assyrian armies. His name was Nabopolassar, and for success in many conquests of nations he was rewarded by the king of Assyria, the city of Babylon. He beautified and strengthened the city, but it was left to his son, who also was a successful soldier, to make it the glory and the pride of the world. I will repeat, Babylon was beautifully located, being built on each side of the river, which at this point was a quarter of a mile in width. The city was sixty miles in circumference, and was built square, fifteen miles each way. The whole was surrounded by a vast wall, which stood over 150 feet high and, being 87 feet thick, was considered impregnable. The streets ran parallel the whole length of the city, fifteen miles, and were 150 feet wide, lined with beautiful shade trees, which were enticing to the weary traveler and which made the place most entrancing. The entrances and exists to this vast city were guarded by brass gates, which were closed after sundown. There were twenty-five of these gates on each side of the city, or 100 in all. In addition to these barriers, watch towers were placed on the wall and a strict guard kept, rendering it impossible for an enemy to get into the city.

From the descriptions of Babylon given by Herodotus, the Greek traveler, who visited the place about 400 years before Christ, it was most magnificent. The great temple of Bel towered in the air, upwards of 600 feet, a fitting monument to the great tower of Babel; its foundation was a half mile in circumference, and a circular causeway led to the summit. The top was crowned by a beautiful reception chamber, adorned, beautified and prepared for the Pagan god Bel, Baal or Jupiter, when he should deign to visit the earth. The hanging gardens of Babylon have become proverbial and renowned in history as one of the seven wonders of the world, being constructed on terraces ascending upward some 200 feet overlooking the city, making a grand and imposing spectacle of the most verdant green, trees, ferns and beautiful flowers that nature and wealth could supply, the whole being watered artificially by hydraulic power and their system of irrigation, which appeared to be most perfect. The concentration of wealth, the most beautiful in art and the greatest displays of magnificence that were to be found in the civilization of that age, centered in Babylon. They were enlightened in astrology, astronomy, the arts and sciences to a great degree, and possessed of much mysterious lore that has since been lost to the human family.

This, with its architectural beauty, its quays, bridges, hanging gardens, artificial lakes, floating islands, that have never before or since been equalled; the wonderful Babylonish palaces, which were inlaid with gold, silver and precious stones, dazzling in magnificence, all go to show that this empire is rightfully designated "the head of gold." This mighty city was surrounded by a moat, or ditch, which corresponded to the height and width of the wall, that is, a ditch 150 feet deep and 87 feet across. The ditch and wall were lined with brick cemented together with bitumen, making a composition strong and durable, and impregnable to the assaults of battering rams and implements of ancient warfare. Many writers have mentioned the height of these walls as having been upwards of 300 feet, which is correct if the measurement be taken from the bottom of the moat.

Isaiah calls Babylon "the golden city" (Isaiah xiv.:4), and prophesies of her rise and fall. Over 100 years before Cyrus was born, Isaiah, in his forty-fifth chapter, calls him by name and points out the fact that he (Cyrus) would break down those gates of brass. The above prophecy was remarkably fulfilled, in connection with the utter downfall, ruin and destruction of the city, with its present desolation, as predicted in the thirteenth chapter of Isaiah.

In the days of Belshazzar, the king, during the progress of an impious annual feast, in which they drank libations to their idols from the sacred vessels, God sent His sign of displeasure in the famous handwriting on the wall, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin," with Daniel's interpretation, "God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it. Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians." The chapter closes on the last and thrilling scene in this great drama, with these words: "In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain." In the midst of revelry, feasting and drinking, when everything looked so secure, this mighty dynasty fell.

Cyrus, the Persian, had been held in reserve, foreordained and duly appointed by the Almighty for this work, to bring to pass the downfall of this empire. He was the son of Cambyses, the king of Persia, and the nephew of Darius, the king of Media, and was placed in command of the vast armies of the Medes and Persians, amounting to over 720,000 warriors. He had besieged Babylon unsuccessfully for two years; his batteries had been useless against that city and his armies were discouraged, when he hit upon a stregem which was to divert the course of the river.

He dug vast channels, dammed up the main course and turned the waters, then marched with his soldiery along the river bed, breaking down the gates of brass, and while the inhabitants were drunken with wine and surfeited with feasting, the city was taken and the king, with his lords and nobles, put to the sword. The head of gold was subdued.

The Medio-Persian empire is represented as the breast and arms of silver, being the unity of the kingdoms of Media and Persia in Cyrus, who ultimately controlled and had dominion over the whole empire under the name of the Persian empire. It was thus when he issued his famous proclamation in favor of the Jews at the termination of their seventy years' captivity, as contained in Ezra 1-2.

This empire lasted about 200 years, governing and controlling over 100 provinces, but finally becoming effeminate and luxurious, their soldiery were easily overcome.

In Macedonia, one of the Grecian kingdoms, a sturdy race of men were being raised; men innured to hardship, with tried sinews, and muscles of steel; heroes every one, who entered battle to conquer or die. Prominent amongst this race arose the great Alexander, the son of Philip, king of Macedon, who was destined to conquer the world. At the time Alexander started his military career, Darius Codomanus occupied the throne of Persia and could command over 1,000,000 soldiers.

Nothing daunted, however, the intrepid Alexander, who took pleasure in danger, advanced his 30,000 men and engaged over 100,000 Persians in the battle of Granicus, defeating them with great slaughter. In the battle of Issus, Alexander had the audacity to meet the combined Persian host, which was commanded by Darius himself. He was again victorious, slaying over 100,000 men in this battle. After this, Darius was anxious to compromise, and offered the Macedonian hero immense wealth and the hand of his daughter Barsine in marriage. Alexander rejected these splendid offers, saying, "The world will not admit of two suns, nor of two sovereigns." At this the Persians arrayed the majesty of their vast armies against the Greeks, in the battle of Arbela. This army comprised 600,000 foot and 50,000 horse soldiers, with 200 scythe chariots and fifteen elephants. Alexander's army consisted of 40,000 foot and 7,000 horse, but notwithstanding this disparity Alexander gained the day and slew over 300,000 Persians, with a loss of only 1,200 men. Such wonderful achievements placed the Grecians, with Alexander at their head, in control of the world. He subdued all the provinces of Persia, extending his conquests to India and Egypt. In fact, in any place that he could find a foe or an unconquered spot, this rapacious youth was to be found. He finally died of fever in the city of Babylon, in the year 323 B. C., being only 33 years old, having brought the whole world in subjection to his arms by his martial prowess, being designated "the king of the world." It is said of him, that when he had virtually conquered the whole of the then known world, he wept for more worlds to conquer.

AN ADDRESS

To the Elders and Saints in France, Switzerland and Italy, as Published in the First Number of the "Etoile du Deseret," Paris, France, May, 1851.

BY PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR.

Beloved Brethren:—At the commencement of this publication, I wish to address a few words to you.

The Lord has been pleased in His goodness and mercy to restore to the world the primitive Gospel in all its simplicity, beauty and purity, as it formerly existed among the primitive Christians, during the days of Jesus and His Apostles. In the midst of the darkness and degeneracy of men, at a time when the world was perplexed with a thousand conflicting opinions, the light of truth burst forth.

The wise, the learned, the pious, the philosopher, the legislator, the divine, and Christian have been in search of something to ameliorate the condition of man; but, notwithstanding, in the midst of their researches and various plans, the world has continued unchanged, and unregenerated; contention, trouble, perplexity and misery fill the earth, and every plan put into operation by man, to regenerate the world, only exhibits more fully his folly and incompetency; and in spite of every effort, religiously, morally, and politically, the world is getting worse and worse.

If we trace carefully and minutely the dealings of God with the human family, we shall find that all these evils originate in the departure of the natons, and the world from God, and nothing but a return to Him can stop the mighty tempest, calm the roaring sea, still the unruly and wayward passions of man, and restore to the moral, religious and political world that order which exists in the physical creation of God.

The works of creation are still as perfect as on the day they proceeded forth from His hands; all creation is orderly, beautiful and harmonious, being governed by the wisdom and power of God. And if man had not abused that moral agency with which he has been entrusted; if he had not corrupted himself, and become proud, and arrogant, and forsaken God; if he had sought for and obtained wisdom from that Being who suspended the orbs in their motions, and regulates the universe; if he had copied after the beauty, order, harmony and innocence of nature; if he had yet been noble, magnanimous, virtuous, pure and good; dispensing to and receiving blessings from all; being taught by his Father in heaven, and copying after His works, this world might still have been an Eden, a Paradise, and man have stood in his place, as the representative of God on the earth.

It is the religion that you have believed in and teach, that is destined to restore the earth and men to their proper positions, to lead men back to God; and out of this chaos that exists in the world, morally, religiously and politically, to gather a people that shall be guided and acknowledged of God, that shall be honorable before men, and natons, and that shall assist in building up the kingdom of God in these last days.

Our religion is not a wild phantasy, as some have supposed, based upon some obscure vision, or idle tale. It is a revelation of God to us and the world. It accords with every principle of reason, revelation, intelligence and philosophy. It is the restoraton of the primitive Gospel in all its purity, fullness, beauty, intelligence and power, and clothed in its native original simplicity.

An angel of God has appeared to Joseph Smith, and also to others associated with him; but angels also appeared to Abraham, Moses, Gideon, Zachariah, Joseph, Peter, Paul, James, John, Cornelius and others. And why not to people in this day? An angel revealed to Joseph Smith the ancient annals of the aborigines of America; but we are not left to his testimony alone, for an angel confirmed also the same thing unto others, who bear testimony to it. Is it a thing very remarkable that the Lord should reveal the history of millions upon millions of people; the inhabitants of that great continent, whose ruins are living monuments of their intelligence and civilization? Or must we be told that the Lord would, or could, only reveal Himself to a few people in Asia, and leave the rest of the world in darkness? If these records be true, there will yet be other discoveries concerning the dealings of God with other people, that the world will be compelled to believe. How did the world come into possession of any knowledge of God? By revelation, or through the Scriptures which are given by revelation; and without revelation we must have been ignorant of God. Who is there, then, that would shut the mouth of God, and tell us that He must not, and ought not again to communicate with man? To be consistent, we must either say that He never has done it, or admit the probability of His doing it again; for if we can believe that He ever has spoken to man, why not believe He will do the same thing now?

But we are told that there have been many impostors in the world. True; but did an impostor ever come with the fullness and simplicity of the Gospel? We answer no, it cannot be shown. John says: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ he hath both the Father and the Son." Now, where is the imposture associated with this gospel, or with these records? The Gospel we teach, and the Gospel contained in these records is just the same in doctrines, ordinances, and blessings, as that contained in the Bible; and this record of a people on the American continent is confirmatory of the Asiatic record. Did the Apostles in former days tell the people to "believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and repent of their sins?" So do we. Did they tell them to "be baptized in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins?" So do we. Did they lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost? So do we. Did they believe in prophets, revelations, visions, healing the sick by the laying on of hands, through faith in Jesus? So do we. Had they hope in the resurrection? So have we. Did they look for the Second Advent and glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? So do we. Had they Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, and Evangelists? So have we. Had they gifts, tongues, interpretations, visions, governments, helps, etc.? So have we. Did they practice the doctrines, precepts and examples of Jesus Christ? We also seek to do so; and we know that God has restored again these ancient blessings to His Church.

What is there, we would ask, in all the above that is inconsistent? Which is most inconsistent, to believe and practice the Scriptures, or to say we believe them, and then deny them in our organizations, doctrines and works?

But are not visions, prophecies and revelations apt to lead to wildness, and fanaticism? Yes; the visions of men and delusions of Satan are. But if the Lord had thought that His visions and revelations were injurious to the people, why did He give them in former days? If they are injurious now, they certainly would have been then. The wildness, folly, and fanaticism of men is one thing; and the Lord revealing His will to the people for their organization, stability, comfort, union, teaching, and edification, and for the establishment of His kingdom, another.

The principles that we believe in and teach are in strict accordance with reason, revelaton and philosophy.

Who made the earth, and man? If God did, has He not a right to govern and dictate; to instruct and teach? Is it more reasonable that man, the image of God, destined to live here and hereafter, should remain in total blindness as it regards his present and future happiness, or that his Father should teach him those things? Has it indeed become degrading to acknowledge God?

Again, if we speak philosophically, what is it that can produce the greatest happiness to the human family? Intelligence, virtue, purity, union and brotherhood. And why is the world in its present unhappy, debased, corrupt and unsettled state? It is for the lack of the pure principles of true philosophy. For the want of a philosophy and intelligence taking cognizance of the earth and heavens. For God's work, whether on the earth or in the heavens, spiritual or temporal, are all governed and controlled according to the strictest principles of philosophy; the philosophy of God, as manifested in the heavens and on the earth. And if man has come to any wrong conclusions relative to the dealings of God, it is for want of a knowledge of God and of His laws, many of which can only be obtained through revelation. But as all His laws that come within our cognizance are orderly and perfect, so are those which are not generally known.

Philosophers have sought in man, in the earth, and in the works of creation, to find a true system. They have each had their day; they have introduced many good principles, but so far as the amelioration of the world is concerned, they have failed. Their systems, however good many of them may have been, are not commensurate to the object; "they have been weighed in the balance and found wanting."

We believe in every true principle of philosophy, and then seek the wisdom of God to associate with it. They search wisdom from the earth and the works of God; we from His works, and also from God the Author. They search the blessings of this earth; we, those of this and the next, a reward in time and in eternity. If we possess any intelligence, we are not ashamed to own that God gives it. If the Lord has given laws, we are not ashamed to observe them. If Jesus went to John and demanded to be immersed in water, we are not ashamed to follow His steps. If He appointed faith, repentance and baptism, we are not ashamed to adopt the same plan. If He appointed the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, we think it proper also; and if by the observance of those ordinances they obtained divine favor, and received a Spirit that "should lead them into all truth; bring things past to their remembrance, and show them things to come," we rejoice in His having discovered to us the way to obtain true intelligence, a knowledge of true principles, ancient and modern, of our relationship to God, and the way to promote our happiness and the happiness of the world.

The world has run to two extremes in regard to religion: the one has made everything spiritual, aerial and visionary; they have become ascetic, morose and superstitious, and have put unnatural bonds upon the human family. While the other, to burst these restraints, have run into excesses, violated the laws of morality and virtue, neglected or denied God, and have sought in licentiousness, vanity and the gratification of their lusts and passions, that happiness which alone can be obtained by virtue, moderation, purity and the fear of God.

Our religion is temporal, spiritual and eternal. It is adapted to both body and soul, for we have both; and the God which made one also provided the other. The object or redempton is to save both body and soul; it effects us in time and will in eternity. As men we have to use our judgment, reason, and intelligence to obtain possessions, organize society, to labor, till the earth, sow, plant and reap, and provide for our families; as Christians, to seek from God, wisdom to direct us in all things spiritual and temporal. And as eternal beings, to act in this life in all things, with a reference to the next; that we may be honorable here, and stand in our position with God in the eternal world, when our bodies and spirits shall be again united.

The Lord has given us revelations concerning both our temporal and spiritual affairs. He has commenced to build up Zion, and to establish His kingdom, and He will roll on His purposes, and fulfill the words of the prophets, and His work will roll forth until the designs of God shall be accomplished.

Let me say to the brethren, then, be virtuous, be pure, keep the commandments of God. Pray to your Father in heaven for wisdom, grace, patience and meekness, that you may be examples of everything that is good, great, noble and intelligent, that your light may shine before men. Avoid political strife, and pray for the nations in which you reside, and their rulers, and imitate our Lord and Savior in manifesting goodness and mercy, kindness and benevolence to all. In short, if there is anything good, praiseworthy, honorable and exalted; seek after these things, and the truth shall make you free; you shall be gathered in due time to Zion, and rejoice in the fullness of the blessings of the Gospel of peace; you shall know how to enjoy this world, and how to obtain a knowledge of and an inheritance in the celestial kingdom of God.

History of the Southern States Mission.

March, 1898—

During the latter part of March, Elders James Larson and R. G. Archibald entered Cookville, Tenn., to canvass, preach, etc., but met with a very cool reception. Knowing that the brethren traveled without purse or scrip, many of the people did all that lay within their power to see that no food or shelter was provided them. The Easter season was near at hand, and eggs being very plentiful, the people showed their appreciation (?) of a visit from the "Mormons." Elder Archibald's hat was used roughly, being almost filled with eggs, while both Elders had them thrown upon their clothes, without respect to location. This gang of toughs was headed by the deputy sheriff of the county, Mr. Jared, and a newspaper editor, Mr. Sims.

The sheriff had granted the Elders permission to preach in the court house, but as they were about to begin services Mr. Jared entered, informing them that a rehearsal was to be held and they would have to get out. Next appeared a number of toughs, who also ordered the Elders to leave the court house post-haste. As they were going down the stairs leading to the street, a number of eggs were thrown, while one man threw a chair, which struck Elder Archibald on the head, nearly knocking him down, breaking his hat badly. As Elder Larson was going out of the main entrance someone from above dropped a brick which just grazed his hat. Had it struck him perhaps it would have ended his earthly existence. But in the midst of persecution the brethren were kindly cared for by a citizen, who, in the face of threatenings and abuse, was not afraid to denounce the unruly mobocrats.

The month closed, having been an eventful one in many respects. The Elders worked with a will to spread the Gospel message, and many honest-hearted people were baptized.

April, 1898—

April 5th Elders A. C. Matheson and Fred M. Michelson began work in Atlanta, Ga.

Fourteen Elders arrived in Chattanooga from the West on the 16th inst.

There was no mob violence shown the Elders during the whole month, which was good news. The Elders enjoyed very good health and opened up many new sections of country heretofore uncanvassed. The Saints as a rule were in a prosperous state, both spiritually and temporally. They were taught the beautiful truths which would save and exalt them by obedience. Reports received from every part of the mission were favorable to a marked degree.

May, 1898—

Very little from the usual happened during this month, and everything seemed to work in harmony. Thirty-seven Elders arrived from the West during the month, which added much strength to the working force in the field.

June, 1898—

On the 5th inst. Elder J. Golden Kimball, of the First Presidency of Seventies, arrived in Chattanooga from Salt Lake City, to visit with the brethren.

A letter, dated June 9th, 1898, from President Frank Cutler, of the Florida Conference, who was then at Sanderson, Fla., gave the following sad news of the assassination of Brother Canova.

"We regret deeply that fate compels us at times to report anything but pleasant news. But a gloom has been cast over us that will sadden the heart of every Elder in our Conference, and grief has been brought upon Saints and friends that tears cannot wash away. Our noble and staunch friend, Brother George P. Canova, was foully assassinated a little after dark last Sunday night, June 5th, taking from our midst one whose generosity had reached the heart of every Elder and Saint who knew him. Brother Canova was a local Elder and presided over a branch of the Church at Sanderson.

We were holding a branch conference at New Zion on the 4th and 5th insts., and he was in attendance. He enjoyed the services and was in high spirits when he separated from us to return home, some twenty-five miles away. The distance compelled night travel, and at Juncture, when Brother T. Hill, his only companion, was opening a gate, Brother Canova was fired upon. The perpetrator finished his horrid deed of murder and then made his escape. The body of our beloved brother was taken home to the grief-stricken family, and after fitting services the remains were interred in the Evergreen cemetery at Jacksonville.

Brother Canova, since accepting the Gospel, has been a sincere member of the Church, ever striving to live up to all its requirements; happy and contented was he in the hope of eternal life. No cause existed for the committal of such a crime, not the slightest provocation was given. The fact that murders are being perpetrated and the guilty evade punishment, forces our minds to recall the state of affairs that existed among the Nephite nation, previous to, and instrumental of bringing about their downfall and destruction; also the prediction concerning the things that should exist in our day previous to Christ's second coming."

Ant Engineers.

Something new and interesting about ants was learned by a Mount Airy florist recently. For a week or so he had been bothered by ants that got into boxes of seeds which rested on a shelf. To get rid of the ants he put into execution an old plan, which was to place a meaty bone close by, which the ants soon covered, every one deserting the boxes of seeds. As soon as the bone would become thickly inhabited by the little creepers the florist tossed it into a tub of water. The ants having been washed off, the bone was put in use as a trap again.

Then the florist bethought himself that he would save trouble by placing the bone in the center of a sheet of fly paper, believing that the ants would never get to the bone, but would get caught on the sticky fly paper while trying to reach the food. But the florist was surprised to find that the ants, upon discovering the nature of the paper trap, formed a working force and built a path on the paper clear to the bone. The material for the walk was sand secured from a little pile near by. For hours the ants worked, and when the path was completed they made their way over its dry surface in couples, as in a march, to the bone.—Philadelphia Record

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder L. M. Nebeker.

"A sacred burden in this life ye bear,
Look on it, lift it, bear it solemnly,
Stand up and walk beneath it steadfastly.
Fail not for sorrow, falter not for sin,
But onward, upward, till the goal ye win."
—Frances Anne Kemble.

What a choice blessing and much to be desired, is the glorious privilege of being born of goodly parentage. This is a divine gift, a heavenly treasure! To be nurtured in the admonition of the Lord, and instructed in the perfect way of righteousness, while yet life's sun is dawning, is a boon priceless, invaluable, and of everlasting worth. Under such beneficial conditions, did our brother, whose firm and pleasant features are delineated on the fair page of this week's Star, make his advent upon this terra firma.

He comes of the good old pioneer stock whose industry and energy have redeemed the wilderness and converted the barren desert into a fruitful field. The favored spot where he first saw the light of day on this mundane sphere in a corporeal existence, is that peaceful little hamlet in Sevier county, Utah, known as Annabella, and the date of his inauguration as a mortal being was May 21, 1879.

It was only two days after his birth that his beloved father was summoned beyond the grave, leaving the faithful mother a sorrowing widow. The sweet balm of the Holy Spirit had scarcely soothed the troubled soul, when the good mother was again called to mourn; this time it was her oldest boy, whom the Lord had taken from her side to join his father in a Paradise of bliss.

The father having been dead some fifteen months, his mother was united in the bonds of matrimony with one, William N. Spofford, who proved a veritable father unto our brother, teaching him by example and precept to be honest, industrious, upright and obedient, which gained for him the everlasting esteem and respect of his stepson. Elder Nebeker was known among his playmates as an honest boy, truthful, and obedient, and during his boyhood days upon the farm, he struggled hard to assist in maintaining a livelihood.

His has been a varied experience for one so young in years. Timbering, railroading, farming and mining, all coming within the range of his experience. After attending the public school at Richfield, Utah, for some months, he entered the Brigham Young Academy at Provo, Utah, and here he engaged his time and talents in a twenty weeks' Y. M. M. I. A. course, which, in a measure, prepared him to begin work in a higher and more difficult class, even that of the missionary field.

On the 15th of March, 1899, Elder Nebeker reported at Salt Lake City as being ready for the mission appointed him of the Lord, and on the following day he boarded the train for the Southern States, in company with other Elders. The Chattanooga Conference was, at that time, being organized, and our brother was called to labor therein. For five months he remained in the Chattanooga Conference, being diligent in his labors and energetic in spreading the good word of salvation.

ELDER L. M. NEBEKER,
President of the South Ohio Conference.

When Ohio was transferred from the Northern States Mission and made a part of our Southern Mission here, Elder Neberker was called to operate in that state. President J. W. Funk chose him as a counselor, and upon his release, when Elder Maycock took charge, Brother Nebeker was retained in the office he held.

When the conference was divided in April, Elder Nebeker was chosen to preside over what is now known as the South Ohio Conference. He has proved himself energetic in all the scenes of life, and his work in the missionary grades is of the best type, at once winning for him the love, confidence, respect and high esteem of his brethren. Elders Ralph Cutler and Benham Hunsaker are his noble aids in the conference, together with a corps of valiant "Sons of Zion," of whom much is expected, and from whom, we firmly believe, much will be received.

June, 1898—On the 16th inst. President Kimball received a letter from the First Presidency at Salt Lake City, stating that he had been honorably released from his labors as presiding Elder of the Southern States Mission, and Elder Ben E. Rich had been chosen to succeed him. President Rich arrived in Chattanooga on the 19th inst.

June 21st, the following named Elders arrived from the West, and two days later were assigned to their various fields of labor: J. Urban Allred, Wm. T. Davis, Jeremiah Stokes, Jr., George R. Harris, Joseph H. Woolsey, Daniel J. Sparks, Joseph H. Lines, Thos. Preston, Thos. E. Norton, Woodard W. Crockett, Alva Stewart, Zeno M. Johnson, C. Warren Petersen, Geo. W. Fuller, Langley A. Moore, Heber C. Petty, Lewis P. Warren, Wm. P. Murry, M. H. Archibald, Albert Young, James Weaver, Wm. F. Tate, Stanley A. Hanks, Wm. H. Boyle, Hugh Dana, Peter Johnson, Robert Davidson, Samuel D. Fuller, John S. Allen.

Following is the semi-annual report of the Mission, for the six months ending June 30, 1898:

There were fourteen conferences, but the Georgia Conference was not organized until March 12th, 1898. Miles walked, 329,384. Families visited, 170,625. Families revisited, 69,284. Rejected Testimonies, 10,470. Refused entertainment, 9,383. Tracts distributed, 204,421. Dodgers distributed, 167,912. Books sold, 13,450. Books given away, 5,138. Books loaned, 4,270. Meetings held, 38,632. Gospel conversations, 169,981. Gospel letters written, 8,891. Children blessed, 620. Baptisms, 751. Sunday schools organized, 33. Branches organized.

The month closed with a good spirit prevailing throughout the mission. All the Elders reported good treatment, but some sickness.

July, 1898—On the 1st inst. President Rich took charge of the mission. On the 2d inst. the following letter was sent each Conference President, with instructions to send a copy to each Elder laboring in his conference:

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 2, 1898.

To the Elders of the Southern States Mission:

Dear Brethren:—In assuming the presidency of this, the Southern States Mission, I feel impressed to send you a few words. President Kimball having been released from a four years' mission, transfered the business of the office to me yesterday and started on his return homeward. I fully realize that in order for my mission to be successful, I must have the spirit of my calling, the help of God, and the love, confidence, faith and prayers of all the Elders who are laboring in this part of the Lord's vineyard. If I have the spirit of God it will be made manifest in my dealings with the humble Elders, who are laboring under my direction; the spirit of humanity, of meekness, of charity, of love and mercy, are all some of the attributes of Christ; we are all His servants and have been commanded to follow Him and carefully study the glorious example He has set for us. To be embassadors of Christ, is a mighty calling and carries with it a great responsibility. In order for us to fully magnify our calling we must be clothed with the spirit of God; we must follow our Master's teachings; we must banish from our hearts all enmity against those who at times despitefully use us. We are commanded to love those who injure us. Remember, brethren, that a kind word will often turn away wrath, and therefore I pray you to scatter seeds of kindness wherever you go, among friends or enemies. God has said He will forgive whom He will forgive, but has commanded us to forgive all men. When you see an individual engaged in persecuting the Saints, pray for that man. Perhaps his eyes may yet be opened to the truth, remember the glorious lesson taught us by glancing at the history of the Apostle Paul, who was once a persecutor of the Saints, but he eventually had his eyes opened and became valiant in the cause of Christ. Do not forget that false reports have been circulated against us everywhere; this seems to have been the heritage of the Former-day Saints, and also the misfortune of the Latter-day Saints. How necessary, then, that our words, our acts, and even our thoughts should bear testimony unto all men that we are falsely accused. You have been sent with authority to preach the Gospel of Christ, and to speak in His name, then be dilligent in crying, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Do not be anxious to engage in the work of tearing down the churches, but rather devote yourselves to explaining the Gospel in plainness and simplicity; point to the beauties of the principles and the perfection of the organization, when you have done this under the influence of the Holy Spirit, the honest in heart will see before them a vision of such a heavenly temple that they will admit in their hearts it is a better house than the one in which they now dwell; and then mankind will be more willing to come into that building and take up their abode, than they would if you were to use your talents in tearing their present religious house to pieces. You can afford to be patient because you are the followers of a Master who was the very embodiment of patience, and you can afford to be brave, because you are clothed with the power of God and His Holy Priesthood. Do not foolishly seek persecution, try to avoid trouble at all times, but should this be impossible, then let it come, and meet it as humble, charitable and brave men of God should.

Remember the first Sunday in each month, which is a day set apart by the authorities of the Church for fasting and prayer; observe it, brethren, and you will be blessed of the Lord; it will give you strength with Him; you will enjoy the sweet influence of His Holy Spirit, and the power of His Holy Priesthood will be with you; should you desire to fast and pray at other times, do so and you will be blessed and strengthened.

I have felt impressed to call to my assistance as counselors in this work Elder N. P. Nelson, who until recently presided over, the Middle Tennessee Conference, and Elder L. R. Andersen, who is at present laboring in the field. I feel that these brethren are filled with the spirit of their calling and will be a blessing to the Elders and Saints of our mission. When you meet them give heed unto their counsel, follow them because they are the servants of God, and a part of the presidency of this mission. The appointments have been sent out to all the Conference Presidents, giving dates for holding our conferences, and we hope soon to be able to meet you face to face, shake you by the hand and bless you. You have our faith and prayers, we ask for yours. Store up your minds with useful knowledge, and when you undertake to speak to the people, place yourselves under the direction of the Spirit of God, be led by its influences and follow its whisperings. May God bless you in your labors; may you have health, and may you find friends, but above all, may you have the spirit of your mission and make God your friend.

Your brother and fellow servant,

Ben E. Rich.

Neil D. Forsyth arrived from the West on the 7th inst. and was assigned to labor in the Middle Tennessee Conference.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

REPENTANCE—In our investigation of the subject—God's Greatest Gift—thus far we have adduced our evidences from the revelations He has given us, as contained within the sacred lids of the Holy Bible. In our previous issue we defined Faith, as the first stepping stone to glory and exaltation. Faith, once fully established (not necessarily perfect) in the mind of the individual seeking to please God and gain His smiles and approbations, there dawns this realization, "I am a sinner," and consequently a desire to be reconciled to that God from whom you were alienated by reason of the Fall. We shall need to exercise our faith in God all along the line, and as we pass from one principle to another, in pursuit of truth, we shall find that our faith is necessary, beneficial and helpful. We can make no progression, no advancement in this life without the operation and application of faith; therefore, as the field broadens before us, and our study deepens, so will our faith increase and our assurance ripen.

Having said so much in regard to the exercise and needful companionship of faith, we will now endeavor to define the second principle of the Gospel—Repentance—and discover perchance its essentiality and vital importance as a means of salvation. Repentance means a sincere desire in the heart of man to be forgiven of past sins and offenses, with a righteous ambition to overcome evil with good and sin no more. The truly repentent individual will be found forsaking sin, walking uprightly before the Lord, and manifesting a Godly sorrow for transgressions committed. Hear what the prophet Isaiah says: "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon." (Isaiah 55:6-7). This, then, involves a forsaking of evil ways, which constitutes a true, genuine, unaffected repentance; or as another ancient prophet has said: "Cast away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed." (Ezek. 18:31). To do this we need the help of our Father in heaven, the assistance of that spirit which strives with man to lead him aright, and the co-operation of that Light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." (John 1:9).

True repentance humbles the heart; and, coupled with the faith already existent in the mind, it leads one to draw nigh unto God, to call upon Him who is mighty to save, and to plead before His throne for mercy, forgiveness and redemption. We know that God is merciful, and although just and holy, we shall find that all His commands are fashioned in the mould of Mercy, and meted out with loving kindness. He says: "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves and live ye." (Ezek. 18:32). In pleading with ancient Israel, God continually remonstrated with them to "turn from their evil ways." "Return unto me, and I will return unto you." (Mal. 3:7). "Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin." (Ezek. 18:30). "Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." (Isa. 1:18). These are only a few of the many expressions of mercy and love which the Lord gave unto His erring and disobedient children; but notwithstanding these divine entreaties, and the many manifestations of His power they had witnessed, they continued to rebel against His will and word, became stiffnecked, hard-hearted, obdurate and obstinate, rejecting the counsels of God against themselves, and denying His tender mercies and all-wise, loving kindness. They would not repent as the Lord commanded; they refused to become reconciled to His laws; they repudiated the ancient seers, killed many of the holy prophets, and stoned those whom the Father had sent to prune His vineyard.

It was to this perverse and untoward generation, when the time was fully come spoken by the prophets of old, that Christ came, as a Redeemer and Savior. His advent was preceded by the proclamation of John the Baptist, who had made the wilderness of Judea ring with the startling declaration, "Repent for the Kingdom of God is at hand." Had the Jews have given heed to the words of this forerunner of the Messiah, this herald of a coming kingdom of righteousness, this harbinger of truth and glad tidings of great joy, they would have been prepared and in readiness to meet their Captain and Prince. Yes, had they straightway given heed to His call to repentance, after a godly manner, bringing forth "fruits meet for repentance" (Mark 3:8), then would they have welcomed their Savior, received their Redeemer, and been perfectly willing to become obedient subjects unto their King the Messiah.

Evidently many of them had the conviction of guilt, of sin, and of transgression, but they failed to exercise repentance toward God, and therefore the mere presuasion of offense against God, was not sufficient, it was not enough, there must be a genuine manifestation of repentance, a departing from sin, and a cleaving to that which is good. This is what the Lord requires, and this is what the Lord accepts and holds good, blessing the participant therein with a free pardon of past offenses, a forgiveness of sins.

Now repentance, kind reader, does not mean to feel sorry for wrong doing, and continue in the evil indulgence. It means just what the holy men of God said it meant, and that is, to forsake sin, and serve God. To keep His commandments, obey His will, and live up to every word that proceedeth forth from His mouth. There is no virtue in mourning, weeping, and sobbing because you are found a transgressor and your conscience smites you as a sinner, but there is virtue and forgiveness in forsaking the "downward road," in departing from the forbidden paths, and following the straight and narrow course marked out by Jesus our Lord and King.

Do you not know how very loving the Lord is and how abundant in mercy, and forgiving kindness? Ah, yes! One cannot fail to see the love of God and His never-failing mercy when we read, "When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right; if the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die. None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him; he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live." (Ezekiel 33:14-16). "None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him." This is the divine example of forgiveness and pardon, not to mention any more the sins forgiven, but to forever blot them out of His book of remembrance, provided we observe to keep His holy laws. Knowing this, then, we have the assurance that if we will repent as God has commanded, He will pardon our sins, and mention them against us no more. This at least should lead us to repentance, when we know of the goodness of God, in this regard. Well might the Apostle Paul exclaim, "Despisest thou the riches of His goodness and forbearance and long suffering; not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" Yes, it is the "goodness of God" which leads men to repentance, but how can we become convinced of the goodness of God save we exercise faith in Him, trust in His righteous promises, and become acquainted with His everlasting goodness. When we have been made partakers of the goodness of God by being blessed with the gift of faith, which comes from Him, then are we in a proper condition to be led in the way of repentance, and every other good and holy work. The goodness of God, then, through the exercise of Faith, will convince one of the error of his ways, and lead him unto repentance. Before he can repent, it must needs be that he is convinced of sin, and this conviction comes by reason of the Faith which operates within.

Thus far we have dealt with the Old Testament scriptures, but we shall find that the burden of the New Testament writers was to preach Christ and Him crucified, and call the children of men to Repentance and obedience. When that multitude of devout Jews assembled in Jerusalem at the Pentecost feast, and Peter stood up to defend the Gospel, we find that when his hearers were convinced of the divine mission of Jesus Christ, they cried aloud, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" and received in answer to their inquiry the command, "Repent and be baptized," etc. (Acts 2:37-38). Again the same apostle gives us to understand that "the Lord is not slack concerning His promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." (II. Peter 3:9).

In order to gain salvation, God's greatest gift, there must be a real sorrow of heart for sin, a genuine, true repentance toward God, without which there can be no deliverance. Nothing short of this will be productive of good. "For Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of, but the sorrow of the world worketh death" (II. Cor. 7:10), and "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." (Luke 13:3).

We should repent because we believe God loves us, and is able to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. We should repent because God has commanded us so to do; not so much from the fear of punishment as for the hope of reward, that the love for virtue, holiness and truth may be uppermost and foremost in our souls. You remember how, that when Paul went to Athens he stood on Mar's Hill and sternly reproved the superstitious Athenians, telling them that there was a time when God winked at their ignorance; "but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17:30). Yes, "all men everywhere" commanded to repent, and that decree has never been revoked, yea, more, it never will be! None are to be excused, but all are to repent!

You have the Holy Bible at your elbow, pointing out the many evils you should repent of, and therefore it is not necessary for me in this article to describe every particular evil. What is your offense before God; wherein do you err from the Holy command, and stray from the beaten path which lies in a straight course before you, and leads to Eternal Life? Are you guilty of defrauding your neighbor or employer; of speaking evil of things you understand not; of slandering, reviling and abusing those whose religious convictions differ from your own; of indulging in tradition and error, to the exclusion of righteousness and truth; of oppressing the poor; and of overburdening the weak? All these and many other evils must be repented of, or you cannot enter the Kingdom of God. How sweet and refreshing are the words of Jesus, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11:28). How comforting and soul-inspiring are those promising words found in the Apocalypse, "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." (Rev. 22:17).

"Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." (Acts 3:19). These are a few more of the words of the inspired Peter, when he, in company with the beloved John, was preaching to the multitude from Solomon's porch of the beautiful temple. Again went forth the cry of repentance, not only to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles, for we read, "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." (Acts 11:18). We can truthfully say, without fear of controversy or dispute, that the overthrow of Babylon, the fall of Rome, and the destruction of Jerusalem were owing to the disobedient, unrepentant natures of the people who inhabited these once beautiful, magnificent, grand cities. How necessary it is that we procrastinate not the day of our repentance, or delay to humble ourselves in lowliness and meekness before God. It is the contrite heart, and the broken spirit the Lord demands, offering unto us pardon, and forgiveness as a result of our obedience to His commands. He will not force or compel us to repent. He will persuade, gently lead, and divinely guide, and if we want to be kind to ourselves, to become agents in bettering our own conditions, to do ourselves a favor, we will repent, rely upon His tender mercies, and seek to gain glory and exaltation in His Kingdom. Whatsoever we do in advancing ourselves along the lines of sanctification and holiness, that we may become perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect, we should do willingly and with a cheerful spirit. Whatsoever the Lord does to elevate our fallen natures, to make us like Him, He does freely and with abundant loving kindness. Then we should be willing to serve God, because He is willing to bless us in this life, and raise us up at the last day to eternal glory.

Before we dismiss this principle of the Gospel—Repentance—let us take a glance at a few things mentioned by the Apostle Paul in the fifth chapter of Galatians, commencing at the 19th verse, "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Could the word of God be more plain or explicit? Shall not inherit the kingdom of God. What shall we do? Repent of these things, forsake them, shun them, make no compromise with any, but upon unconditional terms be forever separate from evil, free from guile, and unspotted from the sins of the world. We should constantly keep in mind these evils here mentioned, and that, too, with a fixed determination of overcoming them with righteousness. Let these words be burned in our conscience, printed in our thoughts and written on the fleshy tablets of our hearts, "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

"Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor; for we are members one of another. Be ye angry and sin not; let not the sun go down upon your wrath; neither give place to the devil. Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." (Ephes. 4:25-32). "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." (Rom. 8:6). This, then, we have found, that Repentance is a principle of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, that it consists of a heart-felt sorrow for sin, a sincere, deep contrition for guilt, creating a reformation in life, a forsaking of wickedness, a departing from every evil way. "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." (Psalms 34:18).

When Shall These Things Be?

The Apostles asked, "when shall these things be" "The times and the seasons the Father hath kept in His own power," was their answer. The destruction of Jerusalem was foretold, the succeeding desolation and spiritual death also, then the second coming was promised, which glorious event is to be preceded by the restoration of the Gospel, for He said, "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness, and then shall the end come." But in solemn warning He admonishes us to be always watching and praying; be in readiness for his coming; "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour the Son of Man cometh." "Therefore, to impress yet more indelibly upon their minds the lessons of watchfulness and faithfulness, and to warn them yet more emphatically against the peril of the drowsy life and the smouldering lamp, He told them the exquisite parables—so beautiful, so simple, yet so much in instruction—of the Ten Virgins, and of the Talents; and drew for them a picture of that Great Day of Judgment, on which the King should separate all nations from one another as the shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." —Farrar.

Our Heavenly Father sends us troubles to try our faith, and if it be worth anything, it will stand the test. Gilt is afraid of the fire, but gold is not; the paste gem dreads to be touched by the diamond, but the true jewel fears no test. —Spurgeon.

The man who seeks one thing in life, and but one,
May hope to achieve it before life is done.
But he who seeks all things, wherever he goes,
Only reaps from the hopes which around him he sows,
A harvest of barren regrets.
—Lord Lytton.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING.

The teachings of many of the most popular religious societies in the world today exhibit clearly the fact that they believe in the principle of something for nothing, with regard to the work of individual salvation. They seem to be laboring under the impression that the great sacrifice, which was made by the Lamb of God for the human family, is sufficient to save and exalt them in the Kingdom of God, if they only believe that Jesus is the Christ, and have their names enrolled on the church records. Perhaps we should add going to church and paying the preacher.

This idea, however, notwithstanding its popularity among religionists, does not accord with the terms of salvation as defined by Christ and the Apostles, as recorded in the New Testament Scriptures, and is simply the outgrowth of ignorance of God's laws on the part of our Christian friends. The atonement of Christ is greatly misunderstood, and misapplied, by a great many who profess to be learned in the Scriptures. The mission of Jesus Christ on earth was twofold in its nature. First, He came to atone for the original sin of our first parents and bring about the resurrection from the grave. From this portion of Christ's atonement all mankind who ever have, or who ever will live upon the earth, will derive an equal benefit, as it is general in its application and is wholly unconditional. The second part of His mission was to establish the Gospel in the earth with a promise that all who would obey its requirements should be saved and exalted. Now this part you see is conditional and the only ones who have any promise of exaltation are those who obey the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Belief in Christ, while it is entirely essential, does not constitute the whole Gospel of Jesus Christ, not by any means. Man cannot be saved in his sins, and belief will not remit them. There are ordinances named in the Gospel whereby we can obtain this blessing. That is by repenting of our sins and being baptized in water for the remission thereof. This part of the Gospel is just as essential as the commandment to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and the reception of the Holy Ghost by the impositions of hands is just as much a part of the Gospel as faith, repentance, or baptism.

Let us say, in conclusion, to all who are seeking after truth, don't allow yourself to be persuaded that you can sit idly by and ignore the commandments of God, and then enjoy equal glory and exaltation with those who obey them strictly. If you do you are deceiving yourself, and the result will be disappointment, misery and woe. To expect such a thing is contrary to all reason, contrary to all Scripture and contrary to sound judgment. God is a just God. Would it be in accord with the principle of justice, for Him to reward equally the righteous and the unrighteous, the obedient and the disobedient, when the promise of reward was only to those who should be diligent in keeping all His commandments? Answer this to yourself. The Lord says that every man shall be judged by his works. This being the case, then, all will know what to expect and certainly cannot expect something for nothing.

WEALTH.

The state of society in these, "the latter days," appears to be in a very deplorable condition. We still have the rich and the poor, with their class distinction; all striving after the same end, the attainment of wealth. The great gulf that exists between the rich Dives and the poor Lazarus has never been bridged. In many respects the rich and poor resemble each other, but the chasm of class distinction still remains, and if anything, widens. We have, as represented in Europe, kings, princes, dukes, earls, lords, knights, middle class, commonality and paupers, each moving in distinct circles. In America we have the select 400, societies of millionaires, Masonic orders, secret societies, and exclusive church organizations. Orders and societies, ranging from kings to paupers, and from millionaires to loafers, assemble to pass judgment upon their brethren, combining to protect industry and labor, as well as destroy life and property.

In these days of commerce, it would appear that without a man joins some one of these organized institutions, he may find it difficult to secure employment, and in many cases to live. We are prone to lose sight of the fact that all mankind were made of one blood and that we "should brothers be and a' that," and we continue to struggle for ascendency amid the scale of wealth and opulence.

In the whirl of business, that we might attain wealth, we act much like children, grasping at a soap bubble. Some in this giddy race appear successful, but generally at the termination of life, they die disappointed and confess that "all is vanity and vexation of spirit."

There is a saying in the Mahometan Koran, attributed to Christ, which reads as follows: "He who longs for riches is like a man who drinks sea water, the more he drinks the more thirsty he becomes, and never leaves off drinking till he perishes."

How true the above is, in nations, empires and individuals, ever seeking after power and wealth, until sunk with pride, luxury and debauchery, into an untimely grave.

The following clipping shows the spirit of the times:

"New York, June 2d, 1900.

"James Henry Smith, the richest bachelor in the world, has suddenly entered New York society. He has about $50,000,000 in ...s own right. Society is delightfully expectant and more than one mamma has an eye open to windward for her beautiful daughter."

We would say of the mother who would sacrifice her daughter at the altar of wealth, disregarding the finer feelings of love, which go towards making up happiness in this life, that she is equally as unnatural in her affections as the Hindoo mother who would cast her child in the Ganges, as food for reptiles, that she might appease the anger of her Pagan god.

Shame on such a civilization where trusts and combinations of wealth work a detriment to the whole human family, and enslave our beautiful American girls, whose mothers worship at the shrine of wealth.

Daily we read of some poor imbecile English lord, or French count, marrying some rich American heiress, whose good mother (?) has enslaved the daughter for a title.

These times would also indicate that merit, fitness and capability do not count for anything, against the influence and wealth of secret societies, and combinations of power in this corrupt age.

Greed and pride have destroyed empires in the past, and it was the main cause of the downfall of the Nephite nation on this continent, and "the love of money is the root of all evil." It is also hard for a rich man to enter into heaven; let us therefore take warning and not make a god of money, but let us seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all other things will be added.

Elder Willard Burgess, who is performing a faithful mission in the East Tennessee Conference, has received word that his beloved brother, Howard L. Burgess, 29 years of age, died on the 29th ult. The Star extends sympathy to Elder Willard Burgess and his loved ones at home. May God bless and comfort them.

SOUTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE

The South Alabama Conference convened at "Bodiford Old Field," Crenshaw county, Alabama, on the 14th and 15th insts. The first meeting, according to appointment, was held in the Latter-day Saints' meeting house, President W. H. Boyle, Elders W. T. Davis, O. M. Hess, J. J. Thompson, Daniel Bagley, A. L. Mecham, Alvin Warner, J. D. Frankland and E. B. Darmon, a local Elder, being present.

President Rich was unable to attend, but Elder Davis, from the Chattanooga office, was present.

The meeting house, a frame building, was well filled at each meeting, although the Campbellites were holding a protracted meeting about one hundred yards away, crying out, "Lo! here is Christ."

The first principles of the Gospel were explained in brief by the Elders Saturday morning, which brought joy to the listeners.

Sunday morning the house was filled to overflowing, the alleyways were also crowded with people desirous of learning of the true Gospel of Christ, as taught by the true servants of God. Meeting opened by singing "Ere You Left Your Room This Morning." The remarks that followed were upon Faith, Persecution of the Saints and the Restoration of the Gospel. Meeting closed with singing and prayer, after which all present sat down to a dinner prepared by the kind Saints of that neighborhood. A feast of spiritual food having been given those who attended meeting, then followed a feast of temporal things, prepared by willing hands. The tables laden with pies, cakes, jams, etc., were spread beneath large oak and pine trees, where all were invited to freely partake.

Meeting was again called to order at 2 p. m. After singing and prayer, Elders Boyle and Davis addressed the meeting. They plainly pointed out with reason and scripture the great apostacy which took place, a time when all mankind were destitute of the Gospel of Christ, when darkness covered the earth. The restoration of the Gospel to the earth again, and the divine mission of Joseph Smith were pointed out to those present and strong testimonies to the truthfulness of the Gospel were born. At the close of meeting many expressed themselves as being well pleased with the valuable instructions received.

Monday morning the Elders met in council meeting and were given instructions by President Boyle, who is loved and respected by all of the Elders in that conference. Companions were assigned them, fields of labor appointed to labor in, and then did the Elders, after a handshake and a God bless you, separate to go forth and warn their fellow-men.

The conference was a decided success and to the Saints and friends who worked so hard to make the Elders comfortable much praise is due. To the Elders who have left all for the Master's cause, it is a great pleasure to meet and mingle with the Saints and friends of righteousness. The Elders all feel well in the work of God and have gone forth with a renewed determination to do their best in getting the world to see us in our true light. To be sure, the South Alabama Conference was much enjoyed and the good time had will long live in the minds of those who were present.

HISTORY REPEATED

BY ELDER ELIAS C. ASHTON.

The history of Christianity is dotted by certain events that stand out like mile posts along the track of spiritual progress, each has its purpose to bring about the effects designed by God.

There are two events in the history of mankind that affect most materially the hopes of the spiritually minded man. They are, perhaps, of greater importance to him than any other two events that have transpired to adorn history's checkered page. They are important because they have to do with man's noblest aspirations and loftiest emotions. They are important because they concern the inmost desires of the human heart. They are important because they are inseparably connected with the salvation of fallen mortals.

Different as they are in character, a very close relationship exists between them. Although widely separated by the lapse of time, the conditions existing at their advents are more or less analogous. Each had a peculiar age to contend with. Each had a manifestly strange people to deal with. Each had the prejudices of centuries to overcome. And each was ushered in by an unusual train of events similar in some respects.

The one occurred in the Orient, the other in the Occident. The one is a tale of antiquity. The other graces the historical pages of the present. The coming forth of both is in fulfillment of prophesy. They both declare in emphatic language the mercy and love of God. They both add dignity to the Scriptures. They both offer a marked contrast to the age in which they transpired.

The effect of the former was to revive faith and in a sense dispel error. The effect of the latter was to stem the tide of infidelity and skepticism and divert the thoughts of men from the barren, unfruitful fields of sectarianism into the rich gardens of Gospel truth, where the fruits of the Spirit indicated vitality. The complete accomplishment of the first event required thirty-three years, during which brief period a new standard of truth was unfurled, truth radically different from the established customs of former years.

Nineteen hundred years ago Christ was born into a world unconscious of its Deliverer. He came to "save that which was lost." He came when the Jews were in a state of rank apostacy, when religious controversy waged hot. For 600 years Palestine had been the battle ground for the surrounding nations. The Jews, led from one captivity, endured another at the hands of a new power equally as oppressive and corrupt. The world was in a state of unrest. The Jews in their oppression looked for the advent of a great temporal ruler who would lead them out of bondage. They were narrow, bigoted and self-righteous. They were technical, childlike and carnal minded. They were materialistic in their views, following Christ, many of them, for the loaves and fishes. On this account they failed to understand the import of His mission. The bread of life they expected to satisfy their greedy appetites. How vain! How basely ignorant! How peevish! Yet with all they are God's chosen people and He will make them the glory and admiration of the world. He will subdue their enemies and lead them back to the land of promise, and there they will dwell in peace, no longer the hiss and by-word of the world.

Among these people Christ ministered and to them He preached the Gospel that was in itself a stern rebuke to the existing sects of the day. He came forth in fearlessness and marked humility, reproving and severely chiding them that worked iniquity. His message was ignored, and He, after much ridicule and persecution, became the victim of the cross, a martyr to the cause. The principles that He instituted, rejected by the Jews, were accepted by the surrounding nations. The center of civilization became the center of religion. The Christian religion carried to Rome, partook of her corruption and there lost its divinity like nations before her had there lost their liberty. The condition of Rome at this time was pitiable indeed. Virtue had taken her flight, the standards of morality lost their dignity and the banners of vice and licentiousness flaunted in every breeze. Depravity took possession of men and animal passion became the motive power of society. In Pagan Rome, Christians became Pagan, but still retained the name of Christian.

Christianity may be compared to the metamorphosis of the butterfly. The larva of the butterfly developes itself within the silken cocoon immediately before its transformation into the pupa state, which serves as a protection for the inactive and helpless germ from which develops the butterfly. So Constantine made for Christianity a silken cocoon of pride and power which protected the inactive and helpless germ from which developed the reformation. A change as radical as that from the larva of the butterfly had been effected with respect to Christianity.

The falling away so often referred to by the Prophets had now been accomplished.

After the religious world had become weak and morbid, after darkness had overshadowed the earth, after rank apostacy had "changed the ordinances, transgressed the laws and broken the everlasting covenant," after iniquity and sin had surged upon the face of the entire earth, causing the pure and virtuous to cry in tones of agony for a reign of godliness, I say, after these things, intellectuality began to awaken, new thought gave men a broader concept of life. Printing was introduced, literature had a new birth, Greek and Roman philosophy were disseminated broadcast over the civilized world. With intelligence came power, and power asked that the Pope be more tolerant. Catholicism began to wane and the Papal See lost much of its prestige.

No longer were men fettered by a priestly monarch, no longer did the populace remain enveloped in the mists of gross darkness, no longer was the canon of Scripture chained like a Bastile prisoner to the pillar of some dark monastery, only to be read out and studied by the pompous priest arrayed in his purple robe, but religious truth became commonplace, and men gave theological study a more prominent position. Theological study gave issue to ecclesiastical research. This was followed by a change in creed. Reform called for a religious revolution. Absurdities in creed were abolished to some extent. Then scisms and doctrines almost as adverse to pure, simple Christian doctrines were introduced. This gave rise to religious controversy and bitter denunciations. The conflicts that now raged were not settled like were those in the early days of Catholicism, nor were the contenders burned as heretics, but religious freedom became almost universal, and each religious contender formed a sect. These increased until now this multiplying of sects serves only as a bewilderment to confuse the honest seeker after truth.

It only needs to be said that we are now prepared to discuss the other event, of which brief mention has been made.

Now, as John the Baptist was the forerunner preparing the way for the Savior, so this intellectual awakening, this breadth of thought, this religious liberty, was the forerunner preparing the way for the life work of Joseph Smith. As John's life and message bore testimony of the necessity of Christ's advent, so the age preceding our second event gave evidence that such an event was necessary. And as Christ's life declares in the strongest terms His divinity, so the labors of Joseph Smith and the work accomplished by him assert the divinity of his message.

Christ came to save that which was lost. It was Joseph Smith's province to restore that which Christ had established that which was once pure but corrupted by ages. The age in which Christ appeared was characterized by apostacy. Joseph Smith appeared in an age when apostacy was most prevalent. The Gospel proved a successful weapon in the hands of each. A ridicule like that heaped upon the Master was heaped upon Joseph. The word Christian was as much a nickname to former day Saints as the word Mormon is to the Latter-day Saints.

The same charges brought against the meek and lowly Nazarene were brought against Joseph Smith. Their cause was the same, their mock trials were analogous, and they both met a martyr's death.

As Christ rebuked everything that was pretentious and arrogant, enjoining humility and self-abnegation, so Joseph Smith taught truths that conflicted the dogmas of the day. As the Scribes and Pharisees, who had been so severely and openly exposed in all their hypocricies by our Master, took the lead in causing His crucifixion, as the sophists and tyrants of Athens headed the fanatical persecution of Socrates because he exposed their shallowness and worldliness and stung them to the quick by his truthful satire, as Galileo aroused the anger of the Inquisition by his great scientific discoveries and made that august body a lifelong enemy, so Joseph Smith, denouncing the errors of man-made systems brought upon himself the rage of a vanquished world of religious professors.

Because of the message Christ bore He was crucified, because of the truth Socrates introduced he was hated, because of the discoveries Galileo had made he was ostracised, and because of the light Joseph Smith brought he was shamefully martyred.

Joseph Smith was not backward in reminding modern Christendom of her errors. While modest in his assaults, he displayed no reluctance in pointing out to the vision of reason doctrines that bore the imprint of human folly. It was not pleasant to the Pharisees and Sadducees of ancient times to face the criticism of the Savior, it was not pleaesant to the gay leaders of Athenian society to hear the utter vanity of their lives painted with such unsparing severity, nor was it pleasant to the sophists and rhetoricians to see their idols overthrown and they themselves exposed as false teachers and shallow pretenders. Neither was it pleasant to the clergy of 1830 to have the vanity of their worldly lives painted with such unerring clearness, nor was it pleasing to the well-paid ministers of the age to see their idols of luxury and pomp thrown down and they themselves exposed as shallow pretenders by the unassuming, humble Mormon Elder traveling in their midst without purse or scrip.

A very distinguished writer has truly said: "It is the fate of Prophets to be exiled or slandered or jeered at, or stigmatized, or banished from society, to be subject to some sort of persecution; but when Prophets denounce woes and utter invectives and provoke by their stinging sarcasms, they have generally been killed. No matter how enlightened society is or tolerant the age, he who utters offensive truths will be disliked and in some way be punished." So Joseph Smith must meet the common fate of Prophets.

In many respects the martyrdom of Joseph Smith was a blessing, a victory to an unpopular cause. It brought before the world the truths of a great religion in a manner more impressive. The Prophet knew well the greatness of a martyr's death, therefore took it calmly. Had he not met such a fate, he never could have filled his mission. At the moment when the mob was in a furore and his brethren in a rage of excitement, he was peaceful and acted with wonderful foresight. "I am going," said he, "like a lamb to the slaughter, but I am as calm as a summer morning. I have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward all men. I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, 'he was murdered in cold blood." He was not seeking the vain glory of man, he was not seeking the rude applause of mortals, his desire was to render to his God an humble devotion and gain for the cause a final triumph, which was best secured by martyrdom.

Joseph Smith, like Christ, bore an important message and sealed his testimony with his blood. Peculiar as that message appears to the world, it is either false or true. If true, it calls for an earnest investigation at the hands of every honest soul, and demands the recognition of every man who is concerned in the things of eternity. If false, its instigator, Joseph Smith, should be branded as a dangerous heretic or rank imposter, and we, his followers, as poor, weak, deluded creatures.

Joseph Smith, the faithful Prophet of the nineteenth century, declares that an angel had visited him; the world is startled and cries "imposter, messenger of strong delusion." How could delusion so great be manufactured by a boy so illiterate? How could he institute a doctrine so perfect, a creed so infallible? How could this insignificant lad promise miracles to the believer?

Yes, this man is dead, but the institution that found its inception in him still flourishes and is an everlasting monument to his never dying memory.

In conclusion, we would ask who gave to him this wisdom and superhuman virtue? Who gave to him this insight into the fundamental principles of religion? Who in this respect made him a greater light and clearer expounder than the Christian Paley? Who made him in all spiritual discernment a wiser man than Wesley? Who made him in government theory a greater character than the gifted John Stuart Mills? Who seems to have been a more sincere seeker after truth?

If the sceptical Gibbon could see in the crumbling columns and shattered palaces of Rome a God made manifest, can we not see in this boy Prophet the inspiration of Israel's God? His life and doctrines were a stern rebuke to sectarianism. Who cannot look upon him as an Elias rebuking the Pharisees and Sadducees of modern Christendom, a reformer, a forerunner to the Greater One who is to come in the clouds of fire?

The time has now come when Mormonism is no longer to be dismissed with threats and sinful vituperations, nor is this great spiritual force to be overwhelmed by the caprices of ministerial striplings, no longer are the tenets of this religion to be met by brute mobocratic force. They have proved themselves too powerful for such foes. Mormonism has already astounded the Christian world with her vitality, her philosophy has baffled the most profound scholars, and she has for a posterity a mighty race of men.

No, the age has not solved Mormonism, nor will it until she has worked out her destiny and accomplished her purposes—the brotherhood of man and the redemption of the human race. Thus history repeats itself, and the trials of the righteous in these last days are but a repetition of the scenes of early Christianity. Let no one infer from what has been said concerning Joseph in connection with Jesus, that we look upon the former as our Lord and Savior. No, no. Jesus is our Glorified Head, our Redeemer and King, while Joseph is a Prophet of the Most High.

PROMISES THAT SOMETIMES FAIL

BY ELDER CARL A. MILLER.

It is such an easy matter to make promises, but quite a different thing to fulfill them. An Elder tries to please everybody, but he cannot possibly do so. When asked by Saints and friends, in various parts of the mission, to write them, how apt are we to answer, "Yes, I will," before thinking of the many duties we have to perform and the responsibilities resting upon our shoulders. The ones who have been promised a letter look forward to its arrival, but how often does the promise fail. The Saints are interested in our work of righteousness, also being anxious to know how such and such an Elder who has been at their place is faring. Every Elder in the field knows how pleased a Saint or friend is to get a letter, and often do they keep those letters guarded as they would treasure. How often do they open that missive and read, and although it may have been received many months before, yet they never seem to tire of its contents. Many times do we meet with people who hold up to our gaze a letter, perchance written years and years ago, by such noble men as Wilford Woodruff, John Morgan, or many others whose good deeds shall ever live after them. Follow the course of all the successful missionaries who have labored here in the South, or elsewhere, and you will find men who always kept their promises. Dear brethren, when you make a promise be sure to keep it, no matter how much inconvenience it may cause you. When you read this let your mind wander back, and if you have made a promise may it be said of you, "He kept his word."

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM; OR, THE METALLIC IMAGE.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

At the death of Alexander, his vast dominions were divided between four of his chief generals: Cassander reigning over Greece and Macedon, with the western provinces; Lysimachus over Thrace and Bythnia, with the northern provinces; Ptolemy over Egypt and the southern provinces; and Seleucus over Syria and the eastern provinces. The two last dominions, the Egyptian and the Syrian, being the greatest and by far the most noted and powerful, are appropriately symbolized as the two brazen thighs, which came out of that Alexandrian or Macedonian belly of brass, they being in a flourishing condition in the days of the Maccabees.

In the division of the Grecian empire to the four generals of Alexander, as recorded, the western and northern provinces were soon swallowed up in the rising Roman power, but the eastern and southern provinces, governed by the Syrians and Egyptian kings, held out for some time under the Ptoyemies of Egypt and the Antiochus family of Syria, who were especially distinguished in their implacable hatred of the Jews.

The instance of the defiling of the temple by Antochus Epiphanes is especially mentioned by Daniel in his eighth chapter, eleventh verse. Judea was saved from his further ravages, by the heroic family from Modin, the Maccabees, with Judas Maccabeus as leader. That revolt from the Syrians is memorable in history, which is interestingly recorded by Josephus.

The Grecian empire held sway for upwards of 300 years, in literal fulfillment of that wonderful dream. The courage of the Spartans and their wonderful achievements in arms are engraven in the heart of every soldier, especially their doings at Marathon and Thermopylae, being the exemplification of great bravery and daring.

Athens and Alexandria became the seats of much learning, and the arts and sciences were highly developed during the sway of this great temporal government. They, like their predecessors, the Babylonians and Persians, became luxurious and wicked, devoting much of their time to lustful gratifications, which weakened and destroyed the physical manhood which had characterized their progenitors, the Spartans, and they were consequently overcome by their more hardy and progressive neighbors, the Romans, who were extending their possessions in the west.

We have successively reviewed the rise and fall of the Babylonian, Persian and Grecian empires, represented in the image, as the gold, silver and brass kingdoms, and we have descended to the legs of iron, or the fourth kingdom, the great Roman power, which, if anything, was more formidable and aggressive in military exploits than the Grecians themselves.

The kingdom of Macedonia fell, soon after the defeat of Perseus at Pydna, when 20,000 Greeks were slain and 10,000 taken captive. Subsequently the beautiful city of Corinth was destroyed and all the Grecian provinces brought in subjection to Rome.

At the time when Jesus of Nazareth was born, this vast Roman empire held sway over the whole known world, and Augustus Caesar was its first emperor. It had broken in pieces and trampled under foot every other power; it had lived under a petty monarchy for upwards of 250 years, was governed as a republic for over 450 years and existed and ruled the world as an empire for hundreds of years, until swallowed up in the kingdoms which were represented by the ten toes of that great image.

This mighty empire fell, like all its predecessors, into luxury and licentiousness and became so corrupt in its civilization that God allowed the barbarians from the north to despoil it of all its power and dominions.

As a republic she ruled the world, and fifty years before Christ, all the known world had acknowledged the supremacy of this "iron kingdom." Pompey and Cassius had invaded Judea and the south, and Julius Caesar returned as a mighty conquerer from his invasions among the barbarians in the north. The Dictator at Rome passed judgment upon kings and princes, and to be a Roman was considered to be "greater than a king."

Herod, the Great, received his crown from Rome, and his sons confirmed by the same power in state offices. The offices of Ethnarch, Tetrarch and Procurator were given to the favorites of the Emperor of Rome, and although they were called kings many times, and ruled as kings, they were simply governors of provinces and entirely subject to Rome. Herod, the Great, was virtually the last king of Judea; he had the kingdom given him by Augustus Caesar, who was the first Emperor.

After the assassination of Julius Caesar, who aspired to become Emperor, the great Roman republic became divided; Marcus Antonius, or Mark Antony, with Lepidus and Octavius (nephew of Julius Caesar, and afterward named by the senate, Augustus), took sides against Brutus and Cassius and utterly defeated them in the battle of Philippi. Rome was then governed by the triumvirate, or a government by three, namely, Mark Antony, Octavius and Lepidus. The last named had no force of character and was soon lost sight of. Mary Antony was a gallant warrior and a very successful leader, and undoubtedly would have gained the empire, had he not been led away by the luxurious and sensual Queen of Egypt, Cleopatra.

Octavius was ambitions, and by force of arms gained his ascendency over Antony, into the hearts of the people, and was elected by vote of the senate, the first Emperor of Rome and renamed Augustus.

It was in the days of this Emperor, at the general taxing of Juden, that Joseph and Mary were detained at Bethlehem and the great advent of the Messiah took place.

Herod, the Great, was King of Judea, which he held subject to Rome, and after his death, which occurred in the infancy of Jesus, Judea was governed by a Roman Procurator, which was duly appointed by the Emperor of Rome. In many places in the Scriptures these governors and tetrarchs are called kings, such as Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee, who had John the Baptist beheaded, also Herod Agrippa, the first, and Agrippa, the second, and many others, and a student of the Bible is apt to mix up the Herods and over-rate their kingly authority.

They were all subject to that great power, the Roman empire, and had to pay tribute to the same, holding office, as governors of provinces; scores of provinces existed, and they were all governed by a petty king, elected and duly appointed from Rome.

I have mentioned the above in detail, that the power of this iron kingdom might be better understood by the reader, showing how she ruled the world; bringing all other nations in subjection. Her laws were equitable and a certain freedom was granted all her subjects, which gave much license to the early Christians, as the death penalty was taken out of the hands of the High Priest and Sanhedrin, and the accused, as in the case of Jesus Christ, had to receive sentence from the Procurator, Pilate. In religion, Rome was Pagan and had thousands of Gods, which were worshipped amid scenes of lust, vice and debauchery. It was not until the sixth Caesar (Nero) that the Christians received any severe persecutions from the empire, but from that time until Constantine, for nearly 250 years, the empire was bathed in Christian blood, drawn by the tyrannous laws and exactions of a despotic and devilish power, controlled by Paganism.

The empire gradually declined and fell, and the kingdoms of the Vandals, Servians, Visigoths, Alans, Burgundians, Franks, Britons, Huns, Lumbards and Ravennas, which by some are considered the ten kingdoms, or ten toes of the image, were erected on its ruins. These kingdoms arose in the fourth and fifth century, and have been partly strong and partly broken, rising and falling in their times and in their seasons, and occasionally changing names. At the present time they may go under the names of England, Germany, Austria, France, Russia, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Holland and Greece, and there may be more or less, but nevertheless they still have the stamp of the ten original kingdoms, which were man-made institutions, organizations started and controlled by man, without the sanction of God, being under His ban and, are destined to fall. The histories of these kingdoms are written in letters of blood and have stained all Europe, millions of lives having been sacrificed to their corrupt and unauthorized institutions.

(To be concluded.)

GETHSEMANE

"Passing through one of the city gates, down the steep sides of the ravine, across the wady way of the Kidron (which is rather a ravine than a brook, no water runs in it, except occasionally, after heavy storms) they came to Gethsemane—a pleasant field or garden at the foot of the Mount of Olives. In the quiet olive and pomegranite shades of this spot Jesus and His Apostles often find rest and quiet for prayer and conversation. Leaving the majority of the Apostles to slumber on the grass, He took with Him Peter, James, and John and went about a stone's throw farther. But soon even the society of these chosen and trusted ones was more than He could bear. A grief beyond utterance, a struggle beyond endurance, an hour of great darkness, a giddiness and stupefication of soul overmastered Him, as with the sinking swoon of an anticipated death. It was a tumult of emotion, which none must see. 'My soul,' he said, 'is full of anguish, even unto death.' Stop here and keep watch.' * * * He then retired still farther, perhaps out of the moonlight into the shadow. And then, until slumber overpowered them, they were conscious of how dreadful was that paryoxism of prayer and suffering through which He passed. They saw Him sometimes on His knees, sometimes outstretched in prostrate supplication upon the damp ground; they heard snatches of the sounds of murmured anguish, in which His humanity pleaded with the divine will of His Father. The actual words might vary, but the substance was the same throughout. "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto Thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless, not what I will, but what Thou wilt." * * * And whence all this agonizing failing of the heart, this fearful amazement, this horror of great darkness, this passion which almost brought Him down to the grave before a single pang had been inflicted upon Him—which forced from Him the sweat that streamed like drops of blood—which almost prostrated body, and soul, and spirit, with one final blow? Was it the mere dread of death; the mere effort and determination to face that which He foreknew in all its dreadfulness, but from which, nevertheless, His soul recoiled? * * * No, it was something infinitely more than this; infinitely more than the highest stretch of our imagination can realize. It was something far deadlier than death. It was the burden and the mystery of the world's sin, which lay heavy on His heart. It was the tasting in the divine humanity of a sinless life, the bitter cup sin had poisoned; it was the bowing of Godhead to endure a stroke to which man's apostacy had lent such frightful possibilities. It was the sense, too, of how virulent, how frightful, must have been the force of evil in the universe of God, which could render necessary so infinite a sacrifice. It was the endurance, by the perfetal guiltless, of the worst malice which human hatred could devise. It was to experience in the bosom of perfect innocence and perfect love, all that was detestable in human ingratitude; all that was pestilent in human hypocrisy; all that was cruel in human rage. It was to brave the last triumph of Satanic spite and fury uniting against His lonely head all the flaming arrows of Jewish falsity, and heathen corruption—the concentrated wrath of the rich and respectable, the yellow fury of the blind and brutal mob. It was to feel that His own, to whom He came, loved darkness rather than light—that the race of the chosen people could be wholly absorbed in one insane repulsion against infinite goodness and purity, and love."—Farrar.

After once choosing your occupation, never look backward; stick to it with all the tenacity you can muster. Let nothing tempt you or swerve you a hair's breadth from your aim, and you will win. Do not let the thorns which appear in every vocation, or temporary despondency or disappointment, shake your purpose. You will never succeed while smarting under the drudgery of your occupation, if you are constantly haunted with the idea that you could succeed better in something else. Great tenacity of purpose is the only thing that will carry you over the hard places, which appear in every career, to ultimate triumph. This determination, or fixity of purpose, has a great moral bearing upon our success, for it leads others to feel confidence in us, and this is everything. It gives credit and moral support in a thousand ways. People always believe in a man with a fixed purpose, and will help him twice as quickly as one who is loosely or indifferently attached to his vocation, and liable at any time to make a change, or to fail. Everybody knows that determined men are not likely to fail. They carry in their very pluck, grit and determination, the conviction and assurance of success.—J. Lincoln Brooks, in Success.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Deseret News.

In the discussions that are taking place regarding the noticeable decline in the membership of some of the large Protestant denominations, one point has lately been made, which deserves more than a passing notice. A contributor to The Advance, a Congregationalist periodical, justly, we think, charges that much of this decline depends on the influence of secret societies.

Every little town has its lodges. The members meet every week. They all have a personal interest in the welfare of the lodge; hence they talk about it, argue about it and win members, while the interest of the church is left principally with the clergyman.

The lodge seeks to benefit its members, in some way, temporally, and generally appeals to the religious sentiment, too, in the prayers and rites they use. Human vanity is also catered to in the high-sounding titles and glittering regalia. In these and other particulars the secret societies have become the rivals of the churches, particularly the Protestant group, which has discarded most of the pomp that secret orders seem to have borrowed from older religious organizations.

It is not necessary to say anything against the charitable object some secret societies seek to attain. But the fact remains, nevertheless, that by their very work of charity they have become the rivals of the churches. They have established themselves in the consciousness of their members so firmly that many reject the church and actually say, "The lodge is good enough for me."

But is not this fact a serious reflection upon the churches? When the Church of Christ was founded upon this earth, its object was to bring salvation, both temporal and eternal; to save both from sin and its consequences. It was a fraternal society, in which the boundaries between Jew and Gentile, free and slave, man and woman, were eliminated, and all were made to realize their position as children of God. The Church of Christ set the seal of condemnation upon the arrangement of the human family in castes. It brought relief to the poor, comfort to those who were bereaved, healing to the sick, and hope to those ready to pass beyond the veil.

Some of these things the churches hardly consider as part of their work. It is a reflection on them, that lodges had to take up the neglected duties of religious organizations. There can be no reason why the church should not be all-sufficient.

The church is "spiritual;" it is not "of this world;" but unless its influence is to form the world in harmony with the laws of the Almighty—to make of "the world" the "kingdom of heaven," in which peace and happiness rule, its mission is a failure. It is this great truth, which the decline of membership and the spread of secret societies should impress upon the Protestant churches.

THE DEAD.

On the 12th inst. our beloved sister, Mary M. Dees, was summoned from this life by our Heavenly Father. She was born Feb. 21st, 1847, and was baptized March 11, 1899, by Elder O. S. Staples, and confirmed a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by Elder D. Dudley Jones. Sister Dees was born in Mississippi, emigrating to Arizona, where she was residing at the time of her death. She leaves a husband, five children and a host of friends to mourn her loss. While in Mississippi her home was an abiding place for the Elders, and they were always welcome to the very best in store. We sympathize with Brother Dees and family, and pray the Lord to bless, comfort and cheer them in their time of sorrow.

THE CHURCH.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the organization through which the Lord is accomplishing the declaration of the Gospel in the last days, gathering Israel, administering the ordinances of salvation, and in short accomplishing His purposes as predicted by the mouths of all His Holy Prophets since the world began. It is called the Church of Jesus Christ because it is His He directed how and when to organize it, pointing out by direct revelation the manner of church government, the principles and ordinances of the Gospel; the blessings to be enjoyed by those who obey Him, and also the respective duties of each quorum or council of the Holy Priesthood. The phrase of "Latter-day Saints" is used to designate it from the former day dispensation or the Church of Jesus Christ of Former-day Saints. The authority of God dedicated to man is called the Holy Priesthood. This Priesthood is arranged in two great heads, the lesser, which is called the Levitical or Aaronic, because it was conferred upon Aaron and his posterity. It holds the keys of the administration of angels, administering the outward ordinances of the Gospel, such as "baptism by immersion for the remission of sins," the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the receiving and distribution of tithes and offerings, all subject to the direction of the Higher Priesthood. The officers in the Aaronic Priesthood consist of Bishops, Priests, Teachers and Deacons. There is a presiding Bishop, who holds the keys of this Priesthood, also other Bishops, who preside over the interests of the lesser Priesthood in wards or branches, looking after the temporal interests of the Priests, who are standing ministers, all organized into quorums of forty-eight in each. The duty of the Priest is to visit the home of each member, expound the Scriptures, invite all to come unto Christ and exhort the Saints to perform every duty enjoined by the Gospel of Christ. Teachers are organized into quorums of twenty-four each. The duty of those bearing this office is to see that the Saints do their duty, entertain no ill-feelings toward their fellow-beings; to see that all perform their duties, and that no iniquity exists in the Church. These general duties, common to all Saints, consist in living a chaste, honest, upright, temperate and industrious life, attending to secret and family prayers, attendance at meetings of worship, partaking of the Sacrament, the payment of tithes and offerings, observing the Sabath day and kindred obligations, all made plain in the revelations of God to the Church. The Deacons are organized into quorums of twelve each, and are to assist the teacher in all the duties of his calling, as occasion may require, but their especial duty is to look after the houses of worship, keep them clean, see to the arrangement of seats and the seating of the people in public assemblies of worship, and such other labors under the direction of the Bishop as may conduce to the welfare of the Church. The Melchesidek Priesthood holds the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Power to seal on earth and it is sealed in heaven; to loose on earth and it is loosed in heaven; to receive the revelations of God; to guide the Church in all things, and to understand the mysteries of Godliness so far as they are ever revealed to men in the flesh. In ancient times these keys and fullness of authority were given to Peter when the Savior said to him, "And I give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven." (Matt. xvi.-18.) The offices of this Priesthood consist of the First Presidency, a quorum of three, bearing the Holy Apostleship, and as the organization of the Church on earth typifies the heavenly, these three symbolize the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and hold the keys of authority over all departments of the Church, on all matters, spiritual and temporal, even as the Godhead is the great ruling power of the universe, the heavens and the earth and all that in them is.

Next come the Twelve Apostles, who hold the keys of opening the door of salvation to all nations, kindred tongues and peoples. The reason that this quorum numbers twelve is in honor of the twelve tribes of Israel. Jesus said to the Twelve at Jerusalem. "Thou shalt sit upon twelve thrones, judging the whole house of Israel," and again upon the foundations of the heavenly Jerusalem were to be the names of the "Twelve Apostles of the Lamb." The Church in government is "built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone." (Eph. II:19-20.) The duty of the Twelve is to carry the Gospel to all nations and to send the same by their associates, the Seventies. The Seventies are organized into quorums of seventy in each, presided over by seven of their number. Their especial calling is, like that of the Twelve, to be witnesses of the truth in all the world, and are the ones especially appointed to associate with the Twelve in conveying the Gospel message to all mankind.

The office of High Priest is one of Presidency. They are not limited to any especial number to constitute a quorum, but any number existing in a Stake of Zion are a quorum, presided over by three of their members. High Priests are chosen to preside over Stakes of Zion act as High Counselors, preside over temples, officiate in the ordinances of the House of the Lord, and where the literal descendants of Aaron are not found the High Priest is chosen to officiate in the Bishopric. Where men are found among the Seventies or Elders in any ward or Stake, more suitable to fill a vacancy in the ward Bishopric, Stake Presidency, or High Council, than the resident High Priests, such men are selected and then ordained to the office of High Priest. As standing ministers in wards and Stakes the office of Elder exists, and a quorum of Elders numbers ninety-six. They have authority to preach the Gospel, baptize, confirm, administer the sacrament, anoint, and lay on hands for the healing of the sick, but differ from the Seventies in not being under the especial duty of traveling abroad to preach the Gospel.

There is in the church a presiding Patriarch, and other Patriarchs in all the Stakes of Zion. The duties of this high office is to impart blessings to the Saints of God. In presenting the general authorities of the Church the name of the Patriarch is presented next to the Twelve Apostles.

These general authorities, presented for the acceptance of the Church at every general conference, are the Presidency, the Twelve Apostles, the Patriarch, the Seven Presidents of Seventies and the presiding Bishopric of the Church. The names of the officers in the Priesthood are Apostles, Patriarchs, High Priests Seventies, Elders, Bishops, Priests, Teachers and Deacons. When difficulties arise between members of the Church and they fail to settle them by themselves and the assistance of one or two witnesses as the Savior directs, the Bishopric of the ward form an ecclesiastical court, to which they can refer their difficulties. If the decision is unsatisfactory to either party, there is a court of appeal in each Stake, called the High Council, consisting of twelve High Priests presided over by the Presidency of the Stake. From their decision an appeal can be had to the Presidency of the Church, which is the end of controversy. These courts are not paid for their services. They are supposed to exercise the functions of their calling without partiality and with the fear of God before their eyes, and to be guided by the Spirit of the Lord in their conclusions.

In the selection of any and all officers in the Church the Saints have a voice. "No person is to be ordained to any office in this Church, where there is a regularly organized branch of the same, without the vote of that Church." (Doct. and Cov., section xx: v 65). "And all things shall be done by common consent in the Church, by much prayer and faith, for all things you shall receive by faith." (Doct. and Cov., section 26, v 2.) The Gospel is a perfect law of liberty, and no people upon the earth have broader freedom and a stronger voice in government, religious or otherwise, than do the Latter-day Saints in the governmental and all other affairs of the Church. The reader is referred to the revelations of God in the last days to the Prophet Joseph Smith, for a more perfect understanding of the offices and duties thereof, pertaining to the Church of Christ. They are to be found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. These revelations throw great light upon the fragmentary statements of the New Testament, because in the latter no one can learn the relationship of one quorum in the Church to another, nor the explicit duties of these respective offices in the Holy Priesthood.

This Church was organized on the 6th of April, 1830, as far as could be with the limited membership of six men—Joseph Smith, Jr., Hyrum Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Samuel H. Smith, Peter Whitmer, Jr., and John Whitmer. It was truly as "a grain of mustard seed, the smallest of all seeds," in comparison with other organizations. A less number could not have been organized under the laws of New York. The great founder under God of this Church had never belonged to any other. It was not the offshoot of Catholic or Protestant, but as "a little stone cut out of the mountains without hands," bore no relationship to any human system, and as the stone should increase in velocity as it rolled on, so has the Church grown in magnitude from the "mustard seed" to a great tree. It is believed by the Saints that the Savior was born on the 6th of April, and that the organization of this Church commemorates that great event. On the 4th of April, 1830, Oliver Cowdery preached the first Gospel discourse of this dispensation. Soon branches of the Church were raised up in New York and Pennsylvania. Men were being brought into the fold, who later filled such notable places in the Church. Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Lorenzo Snow and other leading men embraced the Gospel between 1830 and 1837. The Book of Mormon had been previously translated and published to the world. News of the new dispensation was heralded abroad by friend and foe. At that time many were prepared to embrace the Gospel, for the Lord had shown unto them that the Gospel in its fullness and purity did not exist in the Catholic and Protestant systems of so-called Christianity. The ministration of heavenly beings had been renewed, and during the entire lifetime of the Prophet Joseph Smith he was the recipient of messages from the eternal worlds. Persecution arose, and bitter opposition was arrayed against the Church. The Prophet was at times waylaid by wicked men, and sometimes arrested upon unfounded, trumped up charges. From all these he was delivered until the time came for him to offer his life as a martyr. In the fall of 1830 Oliver Cowdery, Parley P. Pratt, John Whitner and Ziba Peterson were called to carry the Gospel to the Indians (Lamanites), located in what was then the western wilds of these United States. Near Kirtland, Ohio, they met Sidney Rigdon and other followers of Alex. Campbell. The Elders presented to them the restored Gospel, with the Book of Mormon. Many of them received the truth, and the town of Kirtland became a gathering place for the Saints. Joseph Smith, the Prophet, removed to that point, and the Church as a body were chiefly located there as early as 1831. In the meantime the future site of the chief city of Zion was designated by revelation to the Prophet, dedicated and set apart for the gathering of the Saints. In 1832 the first periodical in the Church was published, the "Evening and Morning Star," at Independence, Mo. The press and property of this publication was subsequently destroyed by a mob. Persecution in Missouri became very bitter. Many of the Saints were treated with bodily violence, their houses and property destroyed by fire and themselves expelled from the county by armed mobs. In the meantime Kirtland was being built up. The Lord required the Saints to build a temple, in which to receive sacred ordinances for the salvation of the living and the dead. To this labor they devoted their energies, and notwithstanding their poverty the temple was completed and ready for dedication in March, 1836. Joseph Smith, the Prophet, translated by inspiration the New Testament, completing the work Feb. 2, 1833. Five months later he finished the translation of the Old Testament, so far as the Lord indicated the necessity of so doing. The Latter-day Saints Messenger and Advocate was published in Kirtland. The Church, though organized by the authority of the Apostleship, did not contain sufficient adherents at first to organize the Councils of the Priesthood, so as time went on and numbers increased, the Lord would indicate when and how to organize these quorums. The quorum of High Priests was organized in Kirtland March 18, 1833. The Presidency and High Council of the Church was organized Feb. 17, 1834. That of the Seventies commenced Feb. 28, 1835. Thus from time to time, as the Church grew and developed, the Lord made plain by revelation how to organize every quorum, and finally Stakes of Zion and branches in them and branches scattered abroad. On Aug. 17, 1835, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing the revelations of the Lord to the Church up to that date, was accepted as a rule of faith and practice. Between that date and the martyrdom of the Prophet many revelations were given, but owing to the poverty and unsettled condition of the Church many of them were not published until subsequent to the decease of the Prophet. During the troubles in Missouri a body of men called "Zion Camp" left Kirtland May 5, 1834, to carry supplies and relieve the distress of their co-religionists, who had been exiled from their homes in Independence, Mo. They performed the arduous journey on foot, through the wilderness of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, accomplished their mission and returned to Ohio. Early in the year 1836 the ordinances of blessing and anointing were attended to in the Kirtland temple, and that sacred edifice was dedicated to the Lord March 27, 1836. In the temple the gifts of the Holy Ghost were poured out in abundance. Many saw visions. The Savior, Moses, Elias and Elijah appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery. Previous to this, Joseph's first vision was a personal visit of the Father and the Son. Again, on Feb. 16, 1832, the Savior appeared to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon and revealed unto them the glories of the celestial, terrestial and telestial worlds, and the suffering and condemnation of those who are unworthy a kingdom of glory. In 1837, during the financial panic, a great apostacy took place in Kirtland, which involved the standing of several of the Twelve Apostles. Persecution raged in Missouri. Elders Kimball, Hyde and Richards introduced the Gospel into England and performed their first baptism July 30th, 1837, in the River Ribble. From then until the present date a prosperous mission has been conducted in Great Britain. Thousands have joined the Church in that land and gathered to Zion. Subsequently John Taylor introduced the Gospel into France, and with others into Germany, Erastus Snow to Scandinavia, Lorenzo Snow to Italy, and from these countries, especially Germany and Scandinavia, thousands have come to swell the ranks of the Latter-day Saints. Into each of these tongues, and in others, has the Book of Mormon been translated in fulfillment of prophecy.

The Gospel continued to spread in Canada, where it had been introduced by Parley P. Pratt, the United States and Europe. Persecution raged in Ohio and Missouri. The Saints as a body left Kirtland July 6th, 1838, for Missouri, chiefly locating at Far West, Caldwell county. In the fall of the year Apostle David W. Patten fell a martyr at the hands of a mob on Crooked river. Joseph, Hyrum and others had been sent to prison without trial or conviction, and yet the work prospered and spread abroad. During these sore trials, when death to the Prophet and others appeared inevitable, he prophesied of their safe deliverance from the mob in Missouri. While Joseph and Hyrum were still in prison Presidents Young and Kimball led the suffering Saints to Illinois, where they established the famed city of Nauvoo. To this point Joseph and his brethren made their escape and enjoyed a brief respite from mobocracy. The Prophet predicted, however, that Nauvoo would not be a long resting place for the Saints. In keeping with this inspiration, he prophesied Aug. 6th, 1843, of their coming location and greatness in the Rocky mountains. He also prepared an expedition to explore the west, but died a martyr before its consummation. Although Nauvoo was a sickly place, the industry of the Saints, attended with the blessings of Divine Providence, the city grew with magic speed. A temple was soon commenced. A charter was obtained from the State Legislature to establish a University, and prosperity almost unparalleled characterized their labors. However, the combination of political intrigue and religious bigotry on the part of religious professors, coupled with transgressing apostates, soon conspired to spread death and destruction among the Saints. In Missouri, at Hann's mill and elsewhere, many had been shot down in cold blood, property burned and a whole people exiled from the State. In Illinois the trouble was inaugurated by Missourians. They sought on one occasion to kidnap the Prophet, but failed. Trumped up charges were made against the Prophet. He was tried as before, and every time acquitted. When his last trial was conducted, the mob (like the rabble in the halls of Pilate) said if the law cannot touch him powder and lead shall, and their nefarious purposes were permitted to be carried out, and on June 27th, 1844, Joseph and Hyrum, while under the pledged protection of Gov. Ford, were assasinated by a howling mob in Carthage jail, Hancock county, Illinois. Previous to his martyrdom he had received more than one hundred revelations, organized the Church in its fullness, and bestowed the keys of the Kingdom of God upon the Twelve Apostles. To Nauvoo were gathered thousands of people from the several States, Canada and Great Britain. At the time of the Prophet's martyrdom the Twelve were abroad on missions, with the exception of Elders John Taylor and Willard Richards, who were with the Prophet and Patriarch at the time of martyrdom, Elder Taylor himself being wounded with four balls. While the Saints were in Missouri the Lord commanded that they should importune the officers of the law in the districts where the trouble occurred, and not being heeded should appeal to the Governor, thence to the President of these United States. All this was done, without avail. The President answered their appeal by saying, "Gentlemen, your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you." Governors of States were written to, to use their influence to adjust the wrongs heaped upon the Saints, but from one or two only came a favorable response. On the failure of the State and Nation to protect her own citizens against mob violence and plunder, the Lord promised to vex the nation with a sore vexation. This was done in the millions of lives and treasure lost in the civil war. Of this war, the Lord revealed to Joseph twenty-eight years before it came to pass. The Church was not founded by men, nor did it depend upon any particular man or set of men for strength, growth and progress.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

BAPTISM, ITS ESSENTIALITY—We now come to the important ordinance of Baptism. From what has been previously written, it is evident that this ordinance must be preceded by a living, operative, saving faith; a true, genuine, godly repentance. Then Faith and Repentance are prerequisites to Baptism. This, we have shown, is the Gospel order, and we cannot reverse it without incurring the displeasure of Almighty God, and stand convicted as false teachers.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ contains the truth, and is presented to the mind as the power of God unto salvation to every one who will believe and obey. We have no right or authority to change or alter God's holy plan. It has been given us for our redemption and exaltation, and must be obeyed in the order of its establishment, viz.: to follow in the course marked out by Christ. Suppose we should receive and adopt another plan—a plan which has been instituted of man, that which is not true—and believe it firmly and defend it vigorously. Will our faith save us? No, it will not. Why? Because, in the first place, it is not the truth we have believed in, and consequently our faith is vain, and unprofitable; and, secondly, our faith fails to embrace the proper plan, or saving code. Error may be believed with as much intensity as is possible for a man to believe a thing, and vindicated with zeal and energy; yet, it can never save the one thus believing. He may be sincere, and think that he is doing God's service; yet if his faith is not rooted and grounded in the truths offered for his salvation; if his faith is not firmly established in the perfect plan of life, he will fail to obtain that precious, everlasting boon—exaltation and life eternal—God's greatest gift.

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." (Isa. 8:20). Keeping in mind this injunction written by the zealous Prophet Isaiah, let us turn to Luke 7:28-29, where we read, "And all the people that heard Him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him." Here we see that those who failed to obey the ordinance of Baptism "rejected the counsel of God," then Baptism is "the counsel of God," and hence essential to the salvation of man, for no man can be saved in rebellion to God and His laws. Furthermore, we find that it is a law of God, "He that believeth (the Gospel) and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not (and as a consequence of nonbelief fails to be baptized) shall be damned." (Mark 16:16). Again, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28:19-20.)

That Baptism is essential to the salvation of man, we need only to review the incident of the conversion of Cornelius, the devout Gentile. Cornelius was a good man and one who feared God, who distributed alms to the people, and prayed to the Father of Mercies, for light and understanding. It pleased the Lord to send an angel to visit this devout Gentile, who informed him that his prayers and alms had come up for a memorial before God, and who told him to send to Joppa for Peter, that he might hear words of salvation and truth. Peter responds to the call of Cornelius, visits his home, preaches the word of God, and commands them "to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10:1-6-47-48). When Peter returns to Jerusalem and is questioned by the Apostles as to the propriety and appropriativeness of ministering unto the Gentiles, he repeats the narration of Cornelius' conversion. (Acts 11:14-19.)

For another example take the record of Paul's adventures. You remember how that he had zealously persecuted the Saints of God, casting them into prison, compelling them to blaspheme the Holy name of Christ, and giving his voice against them when they were put to death. (Acts 26:9-12). On his way to Damascus, with writs of authority from the chief Priests to lay hold on the Saints of God, and punish them, he receives a vision from the heavens of glory, the brilliancy of the light is so great that Paul is stricken blind, and prostrated to the earth. In his humility and affliction he cries from the very depths of his heart, "Who art thou, Lord?" and the answer comes, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" inquires the repentant Saul, and then comes the command from the lips of Christ, "Arise and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." (Acts 9:1-6). Something is going to be told him which Jesus says he "must do." Let us hear the important decree, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins." (Acts 22:16). It looks as though Baptism was essential to salvation, does it not? Here was Cornelius, a good man, worthy of an angelic visit, "commanded to be baptized in the name of the Lord," by obedience to which he might be saved; then we have Paul calling upon the Lord to know what he should do in order to be redeemed from his many sins and transgressions, and he is commanded to "Arise and be baptized in the name of the Lord."

The evidences to prove the essentiality of Baptism as a means of salvation are so numerous and striking, that for any one to deny the same is to contradict the word of God through and through. It was taught by the Prophet John (Matt. 3:13-17; Mark 1:1-11), by the Apostles (Mark 16:15-16; Matt. 28:19-20; John 4:2), by Paul (Acts 16:29-34; Gal. 3:26-27; Heb. 6:1-2; Acts 9:1-18; Acts 26:19-20), by Peter (I. Peter 3:17-22; Acts 10:47-48; Acts 2:37-41), and finally by our Savior (John 3:22; John 4:1-2; Mark 16:15-16; Matt. 28:19-20). Surely it is essential to our soul's salvation.

Our glory and exaltation is predicated upon obedience to the commands of God. If we do just what Christ has commanded, regardless of modern speculation, we shall then occupy a safe and secure position. Let the world wrangle and jangle concerning the import of this sacred and holy ordinance—Baptism; let them quarrel and quibble upon the very brink of the water as to whether it is necessary to the salvation of the soul, but let us who believe the word of God, take heed and obey. It is enough for us to know that Baptism is a command of God, and that the whole duty of man is to "fear God and keep His commandments." (Eccles. 12:13).

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul. "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

SOME MEN ARE NOT MEN.

There should be a vast difference between man and beast; but sometimes man so degrades himself by subverting his talents and his liberties and sinks to such a level that, almost with propriety the dumb beast can protest against the superiority of the great biped race. Beasts are dominating by their animal, muscular power, contented with food and comfortable shelter and satisfied with these if permitted to propagate their kind and protect their offspring. But a beast is moral. Man has these characteristics to a greater or less extent; but he, in these fast times, is generally immoral. When a man has no other attributes than those mentioned of brutes, he virtually ceases to be a man and for all purposes becomes a brute. If he is a selfish man—selfish in not allowing his fellow-creature to unmolestingly enjoy the rights to which the Great God has made him heir—he is unworthy the appellation, "man." Think how despicable a person must be who by physical strength would prevent a neighbor from worshiping his Creator in the manner he desired. Yes, there are men, white men (?) who profess Christianity, call themselves civilized and enter the social circles of intelligent people, who would have their fellows rocked and scourged, incarcerated and decapitated, if a refusal was made to accept their style of worship or a charge made against the infallibility of their systems of theology. Nearly every one of the five hundred "Mormon" Elders in the Southern States can truthfully bear testimony that there are still living, men who would, if they had authority, again crimson the skies with the flames from the stake. All the infamy and cruelty and degredation of which the human heart is capable, grows clamorous and bears fruit in the breasts of such intolerant creatures. A man who would prevent religious liberty by brute force, is the embodiment of every black attribute which alienates him from God and adopts him, body and soul, to the bosom of the fiend of all crime and misery. Direct such a wretch to the black savage of Africa for wisdom. Show him that a century and a half ago in the Dark Continent, the unclothed cannibals, little above beasts themselves, whom the slaver stole for merchandise, would enslave to themselves a fellow black if he even attempted to interfere in their strange worship of rocks, trees and animals. These inferior human flesh eaters evinced more manhood in this important direction than he who is a religious intolerant, though he be dressed in broadcloth and make a show of learning. A man who will not allow another man perfect freedom in his holy prayers and practices, if those practices and prayers do not encroach upon the privileges and rights of anybody else, is not a man. He is a beast; his attributes are brutal. He disgraces humanity because he is called a man. He blasphemes the personality of God; because he is made in the similitude of His person.

TRIALS OF LIFE.

While we journey upon the earth in mortal probation it has been wisely destined that we should encounter difficulties, endure trials, and bear tribulations. From the moment we launch our frail barks upon the stormy sea of life to battle with the rough waves of stern reality, until we reach the blessed haven of rest, where time is no more, we shall meet with rugged gales, fierce breakers and perilous squalls.

We are not alone upon this voyage of life, for if we look around we shall find that others are scudding before the gale, that they are braving the tempest, and striving manfully to reach the Port in safety. Are we discouraged? Do we become despondent and downcast? Is there a gloomy shadow of sorrow upon our faces; a look of sadness in our eyes? Let us take courage from the life of Him who walked the shores of Galilee, who rebuked the winds and the waves, and quelled the threatening storm.

It sometimes happens that the honest in heart who hear and accept the Gospel of Salvation in the nations of the earth, leave the land of their nativity and emigrate to the west, where the Saints of God are colonized. The Gospel was the sweetest morsel their hungry souls had ever tasted, and with joy and gladness they hastened to the land from whence came the messengers of Truth; but when they reached the land of the setting sun, they found the Saints of God not quite so good as the joy of their souls had depicted. As a consequence they became dissatisfied, discontented and discouraged. Their expectations had almost led them to look for a perfect heaven on earth where the Saints dwell, and they had overlooked the fact that the Gospel net gathers all kinds of fish. This was an exceedingly hard trial of their faith, a rigid test of their religion.

We should not look for perfect peace and heavenly rest on earth, for our Glorified Head has told us that in this world we shall find tribulation. The "tares and the wheat" are permitted to grow up together until the reaping time, when the wheat shall be bound in sheaves and carried into the garner, while the tares shall be plucked up, rooted out and destroyed.

If we will do as Peter has commanded, 'Let your faith and your trust be in God," and not man, we shall never fail or weary in well doing. "Trials make our faith grow stronger" if we only use them as stepping stones to higher glories and more eternal rewards. Then do not be discouraged because of the acts of fallible men, but let your light shine, and it cannot fail to lead some honest soul aright. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." We, as a people, are too apt to look at the acts of men, and neglect to observe and realize the beauty and holiness of the Gospel. Let us look to our Father in heaven, and lift up our heads, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh.

Paul in his epistle to the Roman Saints says, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? * * * Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Rom. 8:35-39). The misgiving and discouragement which will creep sometimes over the brightest faith, has, in the above expression of the inspired Paul, received a rebuke which should silence them forever. In all things we are more than conquerors.

Now then, dear Saints, if you have been called upon to bear such trials as we have herein mentioned, take joy and consolation from the words of holy men of God. There is a beautiful hymn found on page 212 of our Missionary Hymn Book, which each and every one of us should learn and comprehend. "Think not when you gather to Zion," etc.

PIONEER DAY.

The following is from the pen of C. C. Goodwin, of the Salt Lake Tribune. We are pleased to give it space, because recently we were almost converted to the belief that the man, whose pen is mightier than the sword, had departed this life:

"It is good for the people of Utah to celebrate the 24th of July. It is a most memorable anniversary. It signals a day when some men who were poor and worn out and filled with both sorrow and apprehension had turned their backs on civilization, by weary marches had crossed the then tenantless plains and stubborn mountains, and planted their stakes in the desert, and began the building up of a State. That was but fifty-three years ago, but it has been sufficient time in which to transform this region. Save the mountains, the lake and the summer air, there is nothing here as it then was.

"That band of men, with but rude appliances, went to work, but the zeal of youth was upon most of them. They went to their work with songs, and the smiles on their faces were pencilled by sunbeams.

"Most of those faces have since grown withered and seamed and have disappeared, overborne by the irresistible friction of toil and care and time. But before they departed those smiles that they brought here went out and lighted the desert, and what was the desert reflects them now in tree and flower and meadow and the waving gold of the harvest, and thus the youth of those pioneers is made perpetual in the radiance of the beautiful valley.

"It is well to celebrate the day, to recall the old names, to do reverence to their memories, and to be sure to do nothing that will grieve the old pioneers if their spirits are watching what may be done."

PRESIDENT OF B. Y. COLLEGE.

Professor James H. Lindford was unanimously elected president of the Brigham Young College, Logan, Utah, on July 28th ult. He is a popular man among the residents of Cache county and his selection meets the approval of all who know him. He was born August 27th, 1863, in Centerville, Davis county, and is a graduate of the University of Deseret, and has also taken a course of study in the Wesleyan University of Illinois, and the Chicago University. His ability fully qualifies him for the position he has been elected to occupy, and we wish him success in his new field of labor.

Unveiling of Pioneer Monument.

Deseret News, July 25, 1900.

The principal feature of the observance of the twenty-fourth was the unveiling of the completed Pioneer monument at the intersection of East and South Temple streets this forenoon. While the number of citizens present were not as great as at the time of the laying of the corner-stone or as on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue of President Brigham Young just three years ago, it was, nevertheless, a large and reverential one.

The ceremonies today were brief and impressive and were conducted under the auspices of the Brigham Young Memorial Association, Hon. James Sharp, president, and were highly reminiscent, and extremely interesting throughout, and a testimonial to the energetic men who for the past ten years have had the memorial project under way; for it is just that length of time since they began the work, the completion of which they thankfully celebrated today. Only those who for a decade have labored for the building of a lasting monument to the memory of the founders of Utah's commonwealth understand the difficulties that have beset their path.

What It Has Cost.

The monument when completed in its entirety will cost $27,500. Of this amount $15,000 goes to Sculptor C. E. Dallin, the designer and construction supervisor. About $25,000 in all has been expended. The remaining $2,500 will be used in putting a handsome granite coping that is to replace the wooden fence that now surrounds the monument. The story of how the money was raised to erect the shaft is of itself an interesting one. At first the work of securing the funds was divided among the various Stakes and for a time subscriptions came in gradually from all classes of the community, including the widow and Sunday school child, who contributed their five cents with the same willingness that characterized the donations of those who were able to give larger sums. A pleasing fact was that many of those who sent their checks to the committee were not of "Mormon" faith. They simply admired the greatness of Brigham Young and his sturdy followers and desired to show substantial evidence thereof. It was during the Semi-Centennial Jubilee that the movement to erect the monument received a marked impetus under President Woodruff, who came to its rescue at a time when the work was lagging. Recently President Snow gave much personal attention to the completion of the work, though the general committee of course performed the more arduous part of it, and are entitled to all praise.

President George Q. Cannon made the first address. He said that being one of the pioneers who came here in 1847, many reminiscences crowded his mind and he could not help drawing contrasts between conditions now and those existing here fifty-three years ago. While some people cannot or will not acknowledge that Brigham Young was an inspired man and a Prophet of God, all will concede the fact that he was a great man and a strong leader of men. When the Pioneers first looked into this valley all was desolation; the courses of the streams running into the valley being marked by willows, the only green to be seen. When Brigham Young saw the valley he declared it to be the stopping place of the pilgrims, and this in the face of assertions of trappers and hunters that it would be impossible for a community to live here. He sent exploring parties to the south and to the north to investigate the country and all returned declaring that the decision of Brigham Young was a wise one. The people suffered almost untold hardships during the first years of life in this valley when the elements were more inclement than now. They suffered the pangs of hunger in their most extreme distress. Once a week in my uncle's house, where I lived, said the speaker, we would weigh out our provisions in the family and then eke them out for the week. Our rations were very short; we did not have enough to eat; we were hungry, very hungry—hungry to the ends of our fingers; hungry to the ends of our toes; always hungry—one good meal would not suffice to satisfy us, our hunger was so great. We cut thistle tops to eat and I never tasted such "greens" in my life. I actually began to get fat on thistle tops. Even boiled hides were eaten by the people, and even after the grain had been planted and began to grow, giving promise of a bread supply, the crickets came and swept it all away and added more hardships to those already endured by the settlers.

When gold was first discovered in California, Brigham Young advised the people to remain here and cultivate the land, promising them that they should be prospered if they did so. And while it has been charged against Brigham Young that he discouraged the development of the mineral industries of Utah, the sequel proved that his advice was wise, for by remaining at home and producing food the people placed themselves beyond the danger of a shortage of food supplies and put them in a position to pursue the search for gold and silver without jeopardizing the lives of their families by lack of something to sustain life.

I am not much of a believer in monuments, for I think that men and their good deeds should live in memory; but this present monument is a very proper one. The story of the pilgrimage of the Pioneers and their settlement here should be told and retold to our children in order that they may know of the heroic deeds done by their forefathers.

Hon. James T. Hammond.

Hon. James T. Hammond said that he did not believe in the worship of a monument, but thought the accomplishment which it represented was the thing to be revered. Mr. Hammond reviewed the history of the erection of the monument and the life of the sculptor, Mr. C. E. Dallin, and introduced that gentleman.

The Sculptor.

Mr. Dallin excused himself for reading his address, saying that he was an artist, but not an orator. Continuing, he said:

"Friends, it is some twenty years since I turned my face eastward toward the unknown land of my hopes and aspirations, and as one who has visited strange lands and seen many sights, I return to the font where I first drank the life-giving waters of pure inspiration. To those who are born and reared amid these circling hills I have little need to tell what a potent spell they have, and as whatever little I have done has been directly traceable to their influence, you can well understand how they are intimately connected with the most sacred part of my being. To the mighty forms of sculptural beauty and the ever changing lights and shades of the peaks, my mind was ever atuned and as the history of sculpture plainly shows, sculptors have ever been reared amid the mountains. These silent, formative influences are even deeper and more lasting than we realize, and to you who have the privilege of this silent communion of the hills your spirits must ever be awake to the beauty and poetry that daily speak to you from the mighty heights.

"Art of every kind is simply the realization that beauty lies around us on every hand, and the artist is only he who possibly realizes more fully this truth, and he only becomes an artist in trying to reveal this truth to his fellow man. Art to the many is considered a luxury or an accomplishment, whereas in truth it is one of the most necessary functions of a well ordered life, and to deprive man of this means of expression would plunge him into a barbarism from which there would be on hope of ever rescuing him.

"I want to impress upon your minds thes few truths, as the dignity of our art demands it, and although I cannot claim for my own work any small degree of these attributes. I still live in hopes that some day I shall realize some part of my dream. And in regard to the monument which is now completed after many delays, I can only trust to your indulgence. In unveiling it now, after nearly eight years since I did the work, I feel somewhat as though I were exposing some early sin, and I only regret that I could not do it over again, as I am confident I could do it better.

"The monument as it now stands is an attempt to depict the early history and condition of Utah, and with the exception of Brigham Young, the statutes are representative. Thus the 'Indian' represents the early condition that prevailed in this valley before the advent of the whites, and the 'trapper' represents the first white man that ever penetrated the wilderness. The 'Pioneer' group represents the hardy, indomitable family that first made their home in the wilderness, and from them sprang the first civilization of the great west."

The Unveiling.

It was just 10:58 a. m. when a trumpet call was sounded and the veil of banners was loosened and fell from around the monument, disclosing the new bronze figures, while the band played "America." Then there were cheers and the crowd surged about the monument to view the figures that finished the monument to the Pioneers and their brave deeds.

Miss Margaret Young, a daughter of Major R. W. Young, and a granddaughter of Brigham Young, drew the cord that released the veilings.

History of the Southern States Mission.

July, 1898—On the morning of the 8th inst. President Rich and Elders Nelson and Anderson left the office to visit the Georgia Conference held at Monk, Campbell county, Ga. A most pleasant time was enjoyed.

July 25th the following Elders arrived from Salt Lake City and were assigned to their various fields of labor: Robert L. Shepherd, Samuel O. White, Francis P. Carlisle, Lewis Bastain, George May, LeRoy Farley, Hyrum K. Mortensen and Jesse W. Richins.

On July 27th, Elder N. P. Nelson returned from Middle Tennessee Conference, held at Byrdstown, Pickett county. Reported and excellent time and Elders feeling well in the work. Elder John W. Bench, Jr., was called to labor in the office.

On the 28th, inst. President Rich and Elder Nelson left for a tour of conferences not yet visited. July 29th, at about 6 p. m. the following significant telegram was received from President Rich, dated at Bentonia, Miss., July 30th, 1898: "Don't send mail here. We leave tonight to hold conference at Jackson. Have been driven out by one hundred and fifty men with rifles and shotguns."

The above telegram explained the reason why conference was not held at Mechanicsburg, Miss., as intended. There being a number of Saints in Yazoo county, Mechanicsburg had been chosen as a desirable place to hold meetings.

While riding through the country to the appointed place of gathering, President Rich and the Elders who had met him at the train noticed men all along the road. Some of them looked very tough and carried guns. The driver was asked why so many men could be seen and he told them that it was their intention to break up the Mormon Conference, which was to be held on Mr. Martin's farm, about one mile from Mechanicsburg. He further stated that the men had been gathering their forces for several days. When asked who the men were he mentioned several names of men who were engaged in the movement. Nearing the place of stopping, the brethren were met by a crowd of nearly two hundred men, armed with rifles and shotguns, pistols also being carried by many. When asked by President Rich to step aside and let them pass, the mobocrats did so, but not without some mutterings. When the passage through the lines had been made, and the house where some of the Elders had congregated was reached, a committee was sent to await upon President Rich and notify him that there would be bloodshed unless they left the country immediately. "I would like to go down the road and talk with the crowd," remarked President Rich to the committee, "because they are American citizens and will surely allow us our right to practice and preach the religion guaranteed to us under the constitution of the United States."

Major Dill and Captain Lee, two members of the committee, were opposed to such a move. They were not in sympathy with the mob, but wanted to see peace and avoid violence. They further said that the men were hot-headed and if their desires were not granted blood would surely flow. When told that meeting could be held and the place vacated by the Elders before 6 o'clock, the committee would not consent to this, agreeing to give them until 2 o'clock to leave the country, which was consented to.

In spite of the mob, the people were preached to for one hour, the situation being explained. President Rich while speaking remarked that he did not desire to have trouble, and would, therefore, withdraw. He took occasion, however, to pay his respects to the mob, telling them they were a set of cowards, who were unwilling to allow others to enjoy the religious liberty they themselves possessed.

It was a lawless crowd and they refused to listen to reason, therefore the brethren consented to leave, being marched down the middle of the road between the mobbers, who, armed to the teeth, had lined up on either side.

The train was boarded in the afternoon and the thirty-four Elders were allowed to hold conference in Jackson, Miss., the capital, and very good treatment was received. The Daily Clarion Ledger, published in that city, on August 1st, gave a very fair account of the mobbing in Yazoo county. The Elders were brave, and although forced to leave the place first appointed to hold meeting, yet they realized it was but fulfilling prophecy uttered by our Lord.

The month closed with the Elders in the field generally feeling well spritually and physically. Some little sickness and suffering owing to the intense heat.

BRANCH CONFERENCE HELD NEAR SOCIETY HILL, N. C,

July 21 and 22, fourteen Elders of the South Carolina Conference, together with numerous Saints and friends, met in branch conference, near Society Hill, according to previous arrangements made by President Sylvester Low. A neat and comfortable bowery had been erected for the occasion, near the one from whose platform Apostles Lyman and Cowley declared the word of the Lord, some few years ago.

President Low, Elders Lewis, Illum and Jensen occupied the time at the morning services on Saturday, speaking very forcibly upon those principles and doctrines of the Gospel which effect the salvation of mankind. A large and appreciative audience listened with much interest, some of whom came from many miles around and camped about the grounds during the conference.

All were surprised and much disappointed at the afternoon services, when they learned President Rich would not be present. The time was occupied by Elders Nix, Taylor, Thorne, Severe and Humpherys, all of which in their turn spoke upon the principles of the Gospel and bore firm testimonies of the mercy and goodness of the Lord and to the truthfulness of the Gospel. The peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit was richly manifested during the meetings, and after all disappointments the people thought it good to be there.

Sunday morning the bowery was crowded beyond its seating capacity with Saints and friends, eager to learn more of the Gospel. All listened attentively to President Low, Elders Anderson, Adams and Humpherys. Sunday afternoon Elder Lazenby was first called upon to speak, which he did with interest upon the first principles of the Gospel, after which President Low, being released to return home, preached his farewell sermon, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit spoke with power, proving the necessity of a visit and message from heaven in these last days in order that the people might be redeemed, and that the prophecies and predictions of ancient men of God might have their fulfillment.

Priesthood meeting was held after the afternoon services, where much good instruction was given. The Elders were assigned their fields of labor and went their way rejoicing, and with a determination to do their whole duty.

Our retiring President—Sylvester Low—is succeeded by Elder C. R. Humpherys, and we all feel to press on the work of the Lord. Elder Low has been an ardent, energetic worker, and he carries with him the love and esteem of all the Elders.

GLEANINGS.

On the morning of July 20th, Elders Jesse W. Richins and John Banks entered Gibsonville, N. C., with the intention of canvassing the place, and, if possible, secure a place to hold meeting in. They were kindly received by a friend, who had previously invited them to call and preach. A visit was made to the Lutheran minister, who treated the brethren with silent contempt, would not let them use his church under any circumstances. Next they paid the owner of the school house (he is also the owner of the Methodist church building, a leading merchant and a magistrate) a visit and were treated very roughly; he would not reason with them and finally ordered the Elders to leave his store. They at once called upon the mayor (the Lutheran minister had been to see him before they arrived), and he would not shake hands, but inquired if they were Mormons. When told that they were servants of God, commonly called Mormons, the Elders were plainly told to "get out." "Are you not the mayor: inquired the brethren. "Yes; and I want you to get out at once," was the response. Withdrawing the Elders walked up the street and could see the minister and magistrate following them up, inciting people to run them out. A crowd of leading men of the town fell in behind and prepared for action. The magistrate then went to where the Elders were and told them that he did not want to see them receive injury, but that they must leave the town, "for," said he, "the people do not want any of your rotten dogmas here."

The Elders endeavored to reason and explain, but to no avail, for ignorance was bliss, and hatred held sway.

Elder John Bankhead has been appointed to preside over the Florida Conference. We trust that the spirit of God will be with him in his labors down on the Balmy Peninsula, and that the proverbial "Land of Flowers" may blossom with the fruits of righteousness and peace. Florida has many good Saints and kind friends to whom we extend a welcome greeting and a hearty "God bless you."

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM; OR, THE METALLIC IMAGE.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

Daniel, in his seventh chapter, relates a wonderful vision or dream, which he afterwards recorded. I presume this dream was written by Daniel as he recollected it, appearing as a panoramic picture of events that would transpire down through the vista of time, even until the Ancient of Days sat in judgment upon all the children of men.

He did not only see the decline of the empires of Babylon, Persia, Macedon. Rome and the ten kingdoms, but tells of a power, that appeared boastful and more stout than his fellows, speaking great things, which subdued three kingdoms and made war upon the Saints, prevailing against them, and it appears that this condition of affairs was to exist until the Ancient of Days came in judgment. We all know that this event has not happened yet, and if I were to attempt the translation of this dream of Daniel's, as contained in his seventh chapter, I would say that the horn referred to, which was so stout, and that arose in the wake of the ten kingdoms, is the great American republic.

This government gained its power, territory and pre-eminence through the subjection of England, France and Spain. I would also add that this power has made war with the Latter-day Saints and prevailed mightily against them, insomuch that the Saints have been driven from pillar to post, and at present are trying to enjoy peace in the confines of the Rocky mountains. In my further interpretations I would place the 25th verse immediately after the 23d, as the primitive Saints were worn out and time and laws were changed under the Roman empire, before the ten kingdoms, as spoken of in the 25th verse, were instituted.

One might think it presumptious and unlawful in me to make such changes, but who has ever dreamed or seen visions and been able to retain a true chronology; let me illustrate. For instance: John, the Divine, on Patmos, had a vision, part of which is recorded in the 12th chapter of Revelations. Let us note the chronological order of that short chapter. He first records seeing the coming of the Savior and the twelve Apostles, then he saw the Devil and a third part of the hosts of Heaven cast out, which was a primeval occurrence; then he returns to the primitive days and saw the church driven off the earth; then again he speaks of the great war in Heaven, and so on.

If this great history of Israel, contained in the Bible, had been told in chronological order, it would have cleared up many apparent mysteries. I take it, the things of God are only understood by the spirit of God, therefore it would be well for every reader of the word of God to be in possession of the spirit in which the things therein are written.

To return; I would say that the events in history, profane and divine, corroborate the above explanation of this chapter, and all the institutions and kingdoms that will not serve God nor keep His laws and commandments, will come to naught, be broken in pieces and utterly destroyed. It is true that America is the promised land of Joseph (who was sold into Egypt), and choice above all other lands, and that this government is superior to all the kingdoms of Europe in its magnanimous treatment of the oppressed. However, it is far from perfection, and must be purified from center to circumference, politically, socially, intellectually and spiritually.

It is true that the Church of Jesus Christ has been established once more on the earth, and a nucleus of the kingdom formed, but the kingdom of God, which is a theocratic government; where Christ will reign in person and issue laws from Zion, has not been fully established on the earth. At present, subjects are being prepared, as anciently, and the Elders cry out still, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," and He, who will come in glory and splendour, will have subjects prepared for His reception, but that temporal power with all its laws and enactments has not yet been instituted on the earth.

The gradual growth of the Church of Christ will cause the world to become pure and holy, and when the people are prepared, they will demand higher laws and nothing but a pure government of the people, for the people and by the people, with righteous laws administered by holy and pure men, will satisfy the children of the Kingdom of God.

The world is still subject to the kingdoms of men, but the God of Heaven has decreed that in the latter days, He would set up His kingdom, which would overthrow and entirely break up the image of gold, silver, brass, iron and clay. Daniel says: "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth."

In the face of history, which so clearly interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream, can we who are living in "the latter days" not see the pending breaking up of the man-made unauthorized systems and governments that now exist in the world, and the necessity of the establishment of a kingdom of peace and righteousness?

Their doom is fixed, the fiat went forth from the Almighty, and the idolatrous Chaldean, Nebuchadnezzar, with Cyrus, Alexander and the Caesars, testify to the literal fulfillment, in the downfall of their empires. The kingdoms of today present a picture of wealth, luxury and rapacity; ready to pounce on each other on the slightest pretence. Their vast armies and navies, with the continued manufacture of high explosives, explains to us that they design to destroy life and property, and that they are operating contrary to the principles of peace, justice and equity, and not in harmony with the Gospel of Jesus, and therefore they will go to destruction.

It would appear, at this writing, that we are on the eve of a terrible war with the Celestials in the far east. This might terminate in the loss of many lives and the division of the Chinese empire; but who dare say that, in the division of the spoils, other troubles will be averted. Jealousy exists between Russia and Japan, France, Germany and England, and they all appear anxious and ready to leap at and rend and destroy each other. When the time comes, the Almighty will fully vindicate His position, and allow the "Gods of war" to destroy the ten kingdoms and all the institutions, established contrary to His principles, and in their place He will set up His theocratic power, which will usher in the reign of peace, when swords will be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks.

I have taken some of the following ideas from the Millennial Star, which will close this argument.

Being aware that it is quite popular among professing Christians to believe that the kingdom specially referred to as being set up by God, was a spiritual kingdom set up by Jesus 1900 years ago. Such a view of the matter we consider entirely erroneous, insomuch as it does not agree with the facts in the case. The kingdom mentioned by Daniel and other Prophets was to be a literal kingdom, it being so catalogued with others which we have proven to be literal. Again it was to be a kingdom set up "in the latter days," which would be superior in its orgnization and entirely different and distinct from its predecessors, and would also be the last kingdom set up.

The days of Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus or Alexander, could not be called "the latter days," and inasmuch as the Roman power was broken up, and other kingdoms arose from its ruins, the days of the Caesars could not have meant "the latter days."

Upwards of 1900 years have passed away since Christ, and we believe these to be "the latter days" spoken of by Daniel. If not, they must come, and the Kingdom will also come, as predicted. and "stand forever."

Again, it was to come "in the days of these kings." The Emperor of Rome, the ruling sovereign in the days of Christ, could not be designated "these kings," neither could his predecessors on the thrones of Babylon, Persia, or Macedon, who were dead and their kingdoms subverted. Evidently, then, "these kings" or kingdoms referred to, are those denoted by the toes of the image, and also by the ten horns of the fourth beast in the corresponding vision, in respect to which Daniel expressly says, "and the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." Kings are here used as representatives of their kingdoms, so that what was said of them referred to their respective dominions, as in the case of Nebuchadnezzar. Said Daniel, "thou art the head of gold; and after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom." Nebuchadnezzar died, and Belshazzar succeeded him on the throne; so that it was the latter king who was dethroned by Cyrus, and not the former. As, however, Nebuchadnezzar is merely named as the representative of the empire over which he presided, so the "ten kings" alluded to are merely introduced as the representatives of the dominions which they held. The Medio-Persian empire did not succeed Nebuchadnezzar, as he had long been dead, and his place filled; but it did succeed the Babylonian empire, over which Nebuchadnezzar had been, and Belshazzar was then, reigning. The Greco-Macedonian kingdom did not succeed "Darius, the Median," nor Cyrus the Persian, for they had been dead nearly 200 years; but it did succeed the Persian empire, over which Darius Codomanus last wielded the sceptre. The Roman empire did not succeed Alexander, for he had been dead nearly 300 years; but it succeeded the Greek empire. So, in like manner, the "kingdom" which it was declared "the God of Heaven" would "set up" on the earth "in the latter days" was not to follow the immediate reign of the "ten kings" who first occupied the ten thrones, but it was evidently to succeed and "consume all these kingdoms," which their regal successors would be found presiding over. These kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided are still in existence. Royal intermarriages and military subjugations have effected various national amalgamations, and numerous political changes; provincial extensions have from time to time taken place, since the original "ten kings" first sat upon their thrones of power; but still their dominions exist.

In conclusion, I will say that, inasmuch as these toes of the image, or kingdoms, were not formed, nor even begun until centuries after Christ and His Apostles, it must, of necessity, follow, that the "kingdom" represented by "the stone," which "was cut out of the mountain," could not have been "set up" in those days, and those days certainly cannot be regarded as "the latter days."

We testify in all soberness that the nucleus of God's government has been formed and His Church is established, that the people might be prepared for the reception of His kingdom, His laws, His government in every detail and ramification.

CALLED HOME.

BY W. T. WEBB.

"Death with his sickle keen
Gathered the bearded grain at a breath
And the flowers that grow between."

Elder Thomas E. Norton, a promising young man, died of lung trouble at his home in Pima on the 16th of July, 1900, after an illness of several months. He leaves a wife and five little girls to fight life's battle alone.

His funeral services were held July 17th, in the Pima meeting house, which, large as it is, would scarcely accommodate the hosts of friends and relatives who gathered to pay their last respects to their departed brother.

Elder Norton was never very robust, but still able to lead an active, useful life. He was engaged in the confectionery business up to May 25th, 1898, at which time he was set apart for a mission to the Southern States, where he labored as faithfully and energetically as his health would permit until March, 1900, at which time he was released and returned home.

Elder Norton was a son of Henry E. and Sarah A. Norton. He was born at Lehi, Utah, Oct. 23d, 1860, his parents moving to Arizona in 1880, where they have since resided.

Had Elder Norton's true physical condition been made known to the Church authorities at the time he was called on his mission they would probably not have permitted him to go, but with his usual unselfish devotion to the cause he so loved, he made no excuse, but promptly responded to the call. His contitution, however, could not long withstand the inroads made upon it by the damp, fever-stricken districts where his labors called him, and after twenty months spent amid the swamps of the south, handicapped by sickness and disease, continually growing weaker until worn out nature could stand no more, he returned to his family and friends, where loving hands did everything possible for his comfort and to aid in his recovery, but in spite of the many earnest prayers which ascended in his behalf, an all wise Father saw fit to call him home, and since he has laid down his life in the cause of truth, which no man could do more, his friends should find consolation in their grief from the assurance they have that the smiles of an approving Heavenly Father will welcome him on the other side, where he will dwell in the society of the noble and good of God's children. While the cold, inanimate clay, the house he used to live in, is left to be cared for by his loved ones here until the morning of the first resurrection, it, too, will come forth again covered with immortality and eternal life and in the full enjoyment of the exaltation he has earned by his faithfulness.

Apostle Anthon H. Lund.

We are pleased to announce the appointment of Apostle Anthon H. Lund as Church Historian to fill the vacancy occasioned by the demise of the late president and Church Historian—Franklin D. Richards. Apostle Lund, like his predecessor, is diligent and energetic, blessed with wisdom and understanding; and together with his expeditious nature, and painstaking spirit, we predict success to follow in his steps.

Herald and Presbyter, July 25, 1900.

Which is the best educated state in the Union?

Don't answer offhand. Take a little time to think it over. Your first and most natural guess would be Massachusetts, wouldn't it?—the proud parent of Boston, that center of poetry, music and art, the Hub of the universe, the locality of Emerson, the apex of culture and the home of the gentlemen most noted for their science in literature and fistics.

Well, you're wrong. Massachusetts isn't among the first six states which stand for the higher education. Now, try again. Which state gathers within its borders the more students? Not the greatest number of children engaged in puzzling out the mysteries of the three "R's," but the commonwealth boasting the largest total of attendants at the universities and colleges, where the most advanced ideas are handed down by learned professors and grave and reverend seigneur.

Illinois it is. Yes; Illinois, the place where the Chicago river flows. Didn't associate Chicago with higher education, did you? Didn't give the city and the rest of the state credit for teaching the greatest number of young men and young women the principles of advancement, did you? Listen: Illinois leads the United States in learning. There are 13,787 students enrolled in the various colleges and universities of the Sucker State. And, remember, Illinois isn't the first state in point of population in the Union. New York has more people within its boundaries. So has Pennsylvania.

New York comes second. Her record is not far behind that of Illinois. The figures are 13,007. And after her comes another eastern state—Pennsylvania. The Keystone institutions hold 11,396 persons who are being familiarized with the higher forms. Ohio is close up. Her record for students of this class is 11,239. And then comes a point for our southern friends. Tennessee stands fifth. They run to learning down in Dixie. Tennessee has 7,139 students to her credit. Missouri is sixth, with a showing of 6,513.

So much for the higher education. Now, try the same questions as applied to the common schools. Where does the greatest percentage of enrolled scholars obtain? You might as well save yourself the trouble of guessing. You would hardly pick it out in a dozen trials. Kansas! Bleeding Kansas! The home of the cyclone and the corn crop! Considered with regard to its total population, the enrollment in Kansas is really remarkable. The percentage is 27.87, and the figures showing the number of scholars of the public institutions are 370,240.

The west is away ahead of the east in this proposition of public schooling. Following Kansas comes West Virginia, where the number of enrolled scholars is 236,188, which is 27.27 per cent. of the population. And Utah, which we are hurling stones at—Utah, which we consider lost to saving grace and lots of other useful things—Utah looks after the schooling of its young. The figures show that there are 70,878 scholars, a percentage of 26.75. And then comes Iowa, with a percentage of 26.13, and again Tennessee, where 25.66 per cent. of the population are enrolled scholars. Mississippi is sixth, with a percentage of 25.38 to her credit. Massachusetts has a percentage of only 18.00, and New York isn't much ahead of the Bay State, for its figures are 17.56. Verily, there is more common school education in the west and south than was dreamed of in the eastern philosophy.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder Herbert Z. Lund.

In these days of dishonesty and deception, when avarice and the desire for personal gain employ and subvert the finer and ennobling qualities of manhood, it is pleasing to meet a man who possesses a brilliant, active intellect, whose life is untinctured by the sins of the world and whose personality, because of his virtues, inspires confidence, respect and honor. Elder H. Z. Lund, whose portrait is herewith presented, is such a man. He is a type, a fair type, of "Mormon" manhood. And people who are acquainted with the pure and elevating influence of the teachings of the Latter Day Saints, will readily appreciate the importance of the term "Mormon" manhood," and will know that the subject of this sketch is a character of no common virtues.

Elder Lund first saw the light of day in Ephraim, Sanpete county, Utah. There in the tops of the mountains, where nature smiles and the air is fresh and the waters pure, far above and away from the smoke and dust and the weakening influences of the dense populations of the east and the west, the boy Ray grew in strength and purity. During his infancy and youth his parents inculcated into his life those principles which ever enter into and make up the man in after years. And now that he has merged into manhood, he serves as a living reflector of the worthiness and chastity of his "Mormon" mother and father.

Elder Lund spent the first twenty years of his life in his native county. He completed the school courses prescribed in the grammar grades and Stake academies of Sanpete county, and did credit to his scholarship in the Brigham Young academy at Provo, Utah, where so many princes of Zion have studied and developed. And for the past three years, previous to his missionary life, he assisted in the instruction of the young people of southern Utah. Whether as instructor in the school room or as teacher in the Sabbath school, Brother Lund always wore a smile and was never found without a kind word of advice or sympathy for the most obstinate and unruly pupil. By the employment and observance of the same deportment, he has won the love and confidence of his fellow laborers in the missionary field.

When Ohio was divided into two conferences, Elder Lund, who had acted as President Maycock's counsellor at Cincinnati, was called to preside over the North Ohio division, the baby conference and the northernmost of the mission. His headquarters are at Cleveland, on Lake Erie.

ELDER HERBERT Z. LUND,
President of the North Ohio Conference.

Although President Lund has been in the missionary field but ten months, he has made great advancement. His friends love, honor and respect him, and he has many friends. The work in Northern Ohio cannot do else than progress under President Lund's management. And success and prosperity will accompany him in whatsoever pathway his judgment may direct his footsteps.

AUGUST, 1898.—On the 6th and 7th inst. conference was held with the Florida Elders at New Zion, Columbia county, Florida. A good time was enjoyed by all present. Several public meetings were held and much choice counsel and timely instruction were given. The Elders of the South Carolina conference were called together at Bridgeway, those of Louisiana, North and South Alabama meeting in conference assembled a few days earlier. In South Alabama a wonderful outpouring of the gift of the Holy Ghost was manifest, while in the North Alabama district the Elders were presented with two notices, in the form of petitions or lists, warning them to leave. The names of two prominent ministers of the community headed the lists or petitions.

While Elder Nelson was over in Kentucky holding conference, President Rich was journeying among the Elders and Saints of North and South Carolina. Both reported enjoyable times and Elders feeling well in the work. Just before the close of the month conferences were held in East Kentucky, East Tennessee and Virginia. At the first named place Elder John Woodmansee was appointed to preside.

The month closed with considerable sickness among the Elders. At one time all the Elders but five in the Mississippi conference were reported sick. On the 23d inst. Elder Jos. E. Caldwell arrived from Zion, and was appointed to labor in the state of North Carolina.

September, 1898.—The month opened with much bitter opposition manifest in many parts. On the 3d, President Rich left for St. Louis, and returned a few days later in company with Sister N. P. Nelson, Lorin F. Rich, his son, and Le Roy Pugmire, just from Zion. On the 8th inst. a letter from Apostle M. F. Cowley conveyed the sad news of President Woodruff's death. A circular letter was at once sent to presidents of conferences, notifying them of what had occurred and instructing them as to succession in the Presidency. President Woodruff had lived a long and useful life, being sincerely devoted to his God, and for the salvation of his fellow-man. Many hundreds have been brought to a knowledge of the truth through his unselfish, diligent, energetic labors in the work of God. He has gone to receive that never-fading crown of righteousness which will adorn and enwreath his brow forever and forever.

The weather begins to be more mild, and the heat not so oppressive. With this moderation in the weather comes favorable reports from nearly all the sick Elders. President Rich left on the 8th inst. to attend general conference in Zion.

A letter from Elders James A. Kelley and Albert O. McMullen gave information that a band of seven men (?) dressed in the Ku-Klux garb, had paid them a visit and threatened them all sorts of uncomfortable treatment if they did not leave the community. The Elders left to avoid further injury, and thus escaped the ill treatment which would have otherwise followed.

Elders Melvin Henderson and John S. Sears arrived from Salt Lake City on the 13th and 14th inst., respectively, and were both assigned to labor in the East Tennessee conference. These two Elders were closely followed by a company of thirteen who arrived on the 16th inst. and were assigned their various fields of labor. Their names are as follows: E. Jerome Child, Frank Corbett, Pearis Raymond, Peter Anderson, Alfred Jensen, Sextus E. Johnson, Wandle H. Mace, Leonard D. Cox, Wm. Ruesch, Geo. B. Folkman, Geo. A. West, Alma Iverson and Leslie George.

The close of the month much sickness was still reported, the dreadful yellow fever raging in Mississippi and Louisiana. President Condie and companion were quarantined in Jackson, Miss.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

BAPTISM—ITS MODE, OBJECT AND PROPER SUBJECTS.

While it is almost universally believed by the Christian world that baptism is a law of God, taught by precept and example by the Savior and His Apostles, still there exists a variety of opinions as to its mode, object and proper subjects. We believe that the word of the Lord is sufficiently clear upon these things, and by the aid of the Spirit of God they are made plain and explicit, being unfolded in a clear, simple, beautiful way, to the convincing of every honest inquirer for truth. Now we know that whatsoever is commanded of the Lord for us to obey is essential to the salvation of our souls. The Father does not deal with non-essentials, but all things spoken by Him are for our profit and learning, that we through obedience to His holy laws and righteous commands may enjoy life eternal.

As to the mode of baptism, first, then, let us glance at the example of that Great One who truly said, "I am the Light, the Truth and the Way." Was He baptized? Verily so! and you remember how that "example is better than precept," that "actions speak louder than words." Yes, example is as the record deeply engraven upon the rock, which neither wind nor storm can erase; while precept without practice is written in the sand only to be washed away by the waves and obliterated by the storms. Our Lord's example is before us—His life and labors are the exact pattern of what the Lord requires of us, therefore it becomes necessary for us to shape and govern ourselves according to the same. If the pattern as given by Christ is acceptable unto the Lord, and we so order our lives as to coincide thereto, does it not appear self-evident that the Lord will be pleased to own and bless us as He was His only begotten Son, when He said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Let us see what act the Savior had performed to bring forth this approbation and sanction of His Father. The Apostle Matthew informs us that while John was baptizing at Bethabara in the river Jordan Jesus presented Himself as an applicant for baptism. John, either by divine inspiration or prophetic revelation, recognized and acknowledged the superiority of Christ's mission and work, and said unto the Lord, "I have need to be baptized of Thee, and comest Thou to me?" The Savior did not deny his preeminence above that of the Baptist, but He told John that this act of baptism was one of the needful accomplishments in order "to fulfill all righteousness." Then Jesus was baptized, and "went up straightway out of the water; and, lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon Him; and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3:13-17.) It was a righteous decree ordained of God in the heavens that Jesus should come upon the earth to set mankind an example in righteousness, to show them the way of life by His loving acts as well as His righteous commands. Baptism, we have seen, was His first step in attending to ordinances. Baptism is an external, physical act, consequently it is a work of righteousness, the participant therein having believed in God and the Plan of Redemption, and repented of his sins with a godly sorrow, and a soul's sincere desire to sin no more.

John tells us that Jesus went up straightway out of the water." Now the end defines the means. If Jesus "went up out of the water," is it not a logical antecedent that He also went down into the water and was buried there beneath the wave? The end is plainly asserted: "He went up straightway out of the water." The means are that He went down into the water, which would constitute a complete submersion. Baptism, we believe, then, so far as our Lord's example governs and controls our faith, should be by immersion. Some may suppose that the mode of baptism is not an important clause in the injunction given unto us to "Repent and be baptized," but we fail to see why it should be so considered. If obedience in all things is necessary to salvation, then why not obedience as pertains to the exact mode be essential and vital? Who has assumed the prerogative to draw the dividing line? If baptism, which (we have clearly proven) be requisite for each to obey, why not the mode be carried out in connection with all other things which pertaineth to life eternal? It is not for us to tamper or trifle with God's holy laws, and the Savior's divine pattern, but we, as obedient children, should render ourselves subservient to His will and word.

The rite of baptism is significant; its mode, symbolical, and the element in which it is performed, typical. The significance and importance of the ceremony is owing to the fact that it is the counsel and law of God; the symbolism of its mode signifies the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ and our union with Him by being baptized by one spirit into one body; and the element in which the ceremony is performed typifies a birth, for as the child comes from the womb and gasps the breath of life, so we come forth from the watery tomb to walk in a newness of life. This, then, gives us a better understanding of the words of Jesus to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again. Born of the water, and of the Spirit." This "again" birth is the birth or baptism of water and the reception of that sanctifying additional grace, known as the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Paul tells us (the Saints) that we are "buried with Him in baptism; wherein also ye are risen with Him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised Him from the dead." (Col. 2:12.) To be "buried with Him" certainly implies a complete immersion, and when we take this passage in connection with the Apostle's words to the Roman Saints, we shall find the self-same idea involved: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death? Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection." (Rom. 6:3-5.) Here the Apostle not only likens baptism to a 'burial" but also to a "planting," which most assuredly signifies immersion, for a "burial" and a "planting" certainly means a complete covering, and for baptism to resemble either of these it could not be other than immersion.

Moreover, we read concerning John the Baptist: "And John also was baptising in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came and were baptized." (John 3:23.) "John also was baptizing in Enon." Why? "Because there was much water there." The conjunction 'because" gives evidence of the matter of fact that John selected a place in the river where there was "much water," at least sufficient to completely immerse the repentant believers.

Perhaps it would be well in treating upon this subject to digress just a little from precedents and give a few historical notes from profane writers who are credited as authentic historians: Mosheim, the great German ecclesiastical historian, says, Vol. 1, p. 129, that baptism by immersion was practiced in the first century. Also (p. 211) it was practiced in the second century. Calvin, the founder of the Presbyterians, says that baptism by immersion was practiced by the ancient church. Shaff, the Swiss historian, says it was not until the end of the thirteenth century that sprinkling became the rule, and immersion the exception. Gahn the Catholic historian, says that Novatian was the first man to be sprinkled, this innovation being substituted about 200 A. D. Euseblus also says that Novatian was the first man ever sprinkled (p. 113), but admits that it was not baptism. Surely the writings of these men, who are accounted historians of no small repute, should be regarded with some degree of acceptance.

The object of baptism, the holy writers of the Bible have declared to be for the remission of sins and that we may become members of the Church of Jesus Christ, citizens of the Kingdom of God. We read that "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." (Mark 1:4). Luke makes a similar declaration, "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" (Luke 3:3.) To the inquiring multitude on the day of Pentecost Peter taught "baptism in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," (Acts 2:38), as a condition of salvation. To the converted Paul came the divine command, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22:16.) This was altogether useless if Paul' sins had already been remitted unto him, as some will declare, who claim that remission of sins is not suspended on baptism, but on faith Paul had great faith, he had truly repented, and yet the one thing he must do in order to gain a remission of his sins was, "Arise and be baptized." This is plain, and beyond controversy or cavil. Some will say that we are baptized because we are saved and not saved because we are baptized. How do such assertions harmonize with the words of Jesus, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." The fact of the matter is this: They make baptism the effect of salvation, when in reality it is the cause. Every student who has any knowledge of mathematics knows that the sum or problem must be in existence before there can be answer of it. The sum is never produced by the answer, but the answer is produced by the sum—the answer grows out of it. Now the sum of all righteousness is obedience, the answer salvation. Well, then, kind reader, baptism being a command of God is the sum to be wrought out, and the answer thereto is a remission of sins, with a promise of the Holy Ghost. To argue otherwise would be to reason fallaciously and to the detriment of our soul's salvation. As well might you hang a sign out over the door testifying to the world that goods are within, when at the same time the houses is empty, as to profess a remission of sins through faith only without a strict compliance to that ordinance which God has ordained for the remission of sins —even baptism.

It is clearly seen from the Scriptures that baptism was taught and practiced for the remission of sins. Thus it had been instituted, and thus it was preached unto the people. All the petty objections that may be offered, and all the frail ingenuity and false reasonings of uninspired men cannot set aside these divine truths. Furthermore, we have additional proof in the Holy Bible. Paul taught the Roman Saints that in baptism the "old man is crucified with Him (Christ) that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." (Rom. 6:6.) This, then, should convince and satisfy all who profess to believe the word of God holy and divine.

Who are the proper subjects for baptism? may now be asked with propriety and reasonableness. Jesus said to His Apostles, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," etc. The subject for baptism, then, should be a true believer. This will exclude little children, and admit only those who are capable of knowing good from evil, and who are willing to accept the good, and depart from evil. The Apostles were also commanded to go and "teach all nations," baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28:19-20.) Little children are not capable of being taught the principles of eternal life in infancy, therefore they are not proper subjects for baptism. "Repent and be baptized," was Peter's counsel to the Jews thus showing that repentance was required before baptism. Little children are freed from sin by the atoning blood of Jesus. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." (I Cor. 15:21.) These little ones are "made alive" to things eternal in Christ by reason of the atonement, for by our own transgressions we alienate ourselves from the Kingdom of God to which by birth we are rightful heirs, but by offenses become strangers and foreigners. Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." This leads us to believe that hell never heard the wail of the infant's plaint, but Heaven is graced with their sweet faces.

When Philip went to Samaria to preach concerning the Kingdom of God, the people readily gave heed, and were baptized, "both men and women,"—no mention being given of little children. The proper subjects for baptism, then, are they who believe and repent and are willing to serve the Lord God. Baptism is a positive law, and must be obeyed according to the very letter of the law, and in the order given, and for the specific design prescribed by the Law-Giver.

Baptism is a good work, a righteous work, and is the cause of salvation and not the effect. The divine fiat has gone forth: "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit he cannot enter the Kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) This is an irrevocable decree, eternal and unchangeable. "I am the Lord God, I change not." "Follow thou Me." Baptism is the initiatory ordinance, the first ordinance of induction into the Kingdom of God. It is the law of adoption, necessary and essential as a preparation for the seal of the Holy Ghost—the witness of God's acceptance of our works of righteousness. In conclusion of this subject let us consider with diligence a few historical notes from eminent writers, as pertain to the proper subjects for baptism: Tertullian, one of the Latin fathers, says: "Let them become Christians when they can know Christ." Calvin admits that baptism is not properly administered unless it is preceded by faith. Dr. Neander, another German historian, remarks: "It is certain that Christ did not ordain infant baptism." Martin Luther, the leader in the Reformation, and the father of all Protestant churches, says: "It cannot be proved by the Scriptures that infant baptism was instituted by Christ, or begun by the first Christians after the Apostles."

The words of the poet upon the subject of baptism are beautiful and worth our careful perusal:

Behold the Lamb of God,
In His divine array,
Go down into the flood
His Father to obey—
In Jordan's stream to be baptized,
Though by a carnal world despised.

Can we pretend to know
More fully God's design?
Can we pretend to show
A conduct more divine?
Can we neglect this ordinance
Without an insult to our Prince?

The Queen of Saxony is of a most philanthropic and charitable nature. In her youth her zeal far exceeded her knowledge, but was never abated. Indeed, she was often in the habit of visiting the poor, under the guise of the Countess of X, in order to come in closer contact with their misery and want. Many laughable mistakes resulted, and at one time she even equalled Marie Antoinette's famous remark about cake as a substitute for bread, when the latter was not obtainable. It happened that the "Countess," entering unexpectedly upon one of her favorites, who felt the pinch of poverty in its most acute form, found the good woman's little boy in tears over a swollen cheek. "What ails the child?" inquired she. "Nothing much," replied the mother unconcernedly; "he was naughty, so I boxed his ears." "Ah, you should never strike a child," said the sympathetic "Countess." "Next time you ought to punish him by depriving him of his dessert."—Exchange.

A Joyful Time.

BY ELDER EDWARD SAMUELSON.

The Saints and friends of the Heber branch desired to celebrate the 24th of July as "Pioneer Day." Therefore invitations were extended to several of the Elders (in near counties) to attend. The grounds and bowery having been prepared, all was in readiness when the people began to assemble at 10 a. m. Forty minutes later the meeting began and an excellent programme was rendered, commencing with Elder Edward Samuelson giving an explanation of why the Latter-day Saints celebrate the anniversary of the pioneers entering Salt Lake valley. Singing by the congregation, "Gladly Meeting." Prayer by the chaplain, Elder R. E. Skinner. During the programme, several pieces of music were beautifully rendered by the Walthington Brothers' string band. Short sketches of Church history were delivered by several of the Elders, showing the circumstances under which the Latter-day Prophet made his advent, the rise of the Church, and its steady growth and progress during the severe drivings until entering Salt Lake valley, also the hardships of the first few years and the condition and the circumstances that now exist in Utah, educationally and financially, as well as spiritually. Very pointedly was it shown that the Latter-day Saints are loyal to the Stars and Stripes by referring to the fame gained by the Utah batteries in the Philippine Islands. Although the Mormon Elders are persecuted from place to place in this boasted "land of liberty," still those same Elders are willing to don the uniform of Uncle Sam and defend the rights of the American Christian ministers in China. Several songs and recitations were rendered by members of the branch and also by some of the Elders, after which six of the young ladies and their assistants commenced to spread on the table roasted chicken, pies and cakes, etc., which had been prepared by the kind ladies of the branch; then it was evident that all were willing to "work," or at least to partake of those things which we should take to sustain the "inner man." While some were preparing the ice cream and lemonade, the rest were enjoying themselves, making or listening to "stump speeches," recitations, etc.

So ended one of the most joyful days ever spent by the Saints of the Heber branch. After a short rest, many of the Saints and friends met at the home of Brother Hopkins to listen to the Elders preach. From the beginning of the meeting it was evident that the spirit of God was with us, as the Elders all bore a strong and faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the Latter-day work. So abundantly were we blest with the Holy Spirit that the gift of tongues was enjoyed, which was a warning for the people to prepare for the judgments of God that were soon to come upon this land. All seemed to realize their position and felt very humble, many being melted to tears. We hope the celebration did some good in allaying prejudice, as many were there who otherwise would not have come. Those who attended the meeting went away with a new determination to serve the Lord more in the future than they have in the past.

Abstracts From Correspondence.

We are just in receipt of an appreciative letter from Mr. W. C. Rose, of Dallas, S. C. Mr. Rose is not a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but is numbered among the few broad-minded of the earth who are willing to investigate our claims, and do as Paul says, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." He is a close and studious reader of the Star, and here is what he says concerning the same—his words of appreciation being commendable, and his example worthy of emulation: "You will please find inclosed, One Dollar ($1) to pay for the renewal of my subscription to that valuable little paper—the Southern Star. I am not a member of any church, but I am a friend to the so-called Mormons, and I like to read their literature, for I can gain more light from it than any other missionary work that I have ever read."

Facts About China.

Ancestral worship is said to cost China $151,752,000 yearly.

The historical works of the Chinese cover mythological periods of from 45,000 to 500,000 years.

China's coal measures are twenty times more extensive than those of Great Britain.

The Chinese are gardeners, rather than farmers, and every kind of fertilizer is used, including the hair from the barber's razor.

Jesuit missionaries surveyed China in 1708-18, but the people have wild ideas of any localities except their own immediate one.

To the average Chinaman the world is a synonym for China. He calls his country "T'ien Hsia," all beneath the sky, and "Ssu Hai," all between the four seas.

No people attach such importance to their education, such as it is. The gradation of society are, in their order, scholar, farmer, mechanic, tradesman and soldier.

The Americas and Africa are entirely omitted on most Chinese maps, and England, Holland and Portuguese Goa, Luconia, Bokhara, Germany, France and India are arranged on the western side from north to south, in a series of islands and headlands. Russia significantly occupies the whole north, and Siam, Java and Japan the south and east.

If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

WHAT IS HEATHENISM?

Under the above caption there appears in the Christian Observer of Aug. 1st, an article written by Rev. R. E. McAlpine. The article for the most part is good, and that which is good meets our approval and indorsement; but Rev. McAlpine, like many of his colleagues, must make an attack upon Mormonism, before his article could be complete for a Christian journal. Here is what the learned divine says: "And when we see how 'Christian Science' and Mormonism are spreading abroad, and even such a transparent money-loving fraud as 'Doctor' Dowie can gull the public, can we deny that superstition is abundant in our home land?" We shall leave the "Christian Science," and "Doctor" Dowie factions to appear in their own defense, and simply treat upon that which most vitally concerns us as a people.

The reverend gentleman defines superstition as a branch of heathenism, and then indirectly accuses the "Mormon" people, so-called, of being superstitious, hence as a logical sequence of his assertions: Mormonism is Heathenism. This is not strange or new, for we are well aware of this fact, that our good Christian friends have been toiling for the last seventy years to prove Mormonism heterodox, but all in vain. Assertions have been made, it is true, but when brought to the touchstone of truth they have dwindled away into oblivion. It is the truth we want, and the truth we must have, if we would be made free from the entanglements of sin. "The truth shall make you free."

We agree with the gentleman when he declares that heathenism is not limited to so-called heathen lands, but that she stretches her scrawny fingers over the dominion of our own fair Republic. If the worthy preacher would only study the travels and wanderings of the Mormon people from the east to the far west of our home land; how that they have been scourged and flogged, whipped and imprisoned, driven and slain, for the cause of truth! Yes, if he would only give the trials of this people a fair and impartial investigation, we are fully assured that he could not fail to recognize in their persecutors and tormentors the very essence of barbarism, heathenism, and Paganism. Was it because they were superstitious, as the Reverend alleges they are? No, for from it. If there is one tenet in the Mormon faith which calls for a superstitious acceptance, we have not yet discovered the mite, and we would invite our good brother to dust his dogmatic spectacles, and gaze upon the religion of this "peculiar" people in search of the same. On the other hand, the leaders and shining lights of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints have constantly exhorted the people to rid themselves of superstition; to root out the vain traditions of men, and seek the guidance of God's Holy Spirit.

True, Mormonism is spreading abroad: but with the sword of truth—the word of God—she intends to smite the chains of error, tradition and superstition which bind the sons of men in ignorance, and spiritual darkness. Her mission is one of peace; her message one of good will, and her labor one of love. She calls upon all to investigate her claims, and submit themselves to God's holy will with a repentant heart, and a believing mind. Her declarations are bold, but her fortress is strong, for it stands upon the Rock of Revelation—the foundation of all righteousness and truth. She has withstood the wicked assaults of the ungodly for seventy years: she has stemmed the torrent of vile abuse, and braved the storms of fierce persecution, and today she sails on and on, weathering the gale—her destination being the shores of eternal bliss. Let the gloomy shadows of superstition, heresy, and unholy tradition give way, that the rays of living light divine may shine out in perfect brightness, and everlasting splendor, until the earth is full of the glory of God, and the will of God is done on earth, as it is now done in Heaven.

PERILOUS TIMES.

Paul, the great Apostle to the Gentiles, in writing to the beloved Timothy, uses these prophetic words: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." (II Tim. 3:1.)

In scanning the news of the day, one cannot fail to be forcibly impressed that the very "times" spoken of by the Apostle Paul are at hand, and that we are even now passing through these "perilous" scenes.

In the far East the black war clouds are gathering thick, soon to burst forth in terrific fury, and cause a torrent of human blood to flow. "On to Pekin," seems to be the universal shibboleth of the civilized nations of the earth, and the "powers that be" stand ready to avenge their countrymen's lives, and assert upon the gory battlefield that religious liberty and freedom shall prevail in heathen China.

We read, also, that King Humbert, of Italy, has been cruelly assassinated by a ruthless fiend; that a murderous attack was made upon the Shah of Persia, who barely escaped the villain's thrust; and that the Czar of Russia has been informed that he is the next victim in the assassin's bloody catalogue. With these things before us, can any one deny that we are now living in perilous times? Dare any one assert that in this present age we have an era of peace, harmony and good will?

Instead of peace, harmony and good will, we have strife and contention, avarice and deception, hatred and malice, envy and murder, war and desolation. These are manifest in "perilous times"—the times that try the very souls of men. The hour of God's judgment has come, and it behooves each and every one to stand firm in their integrity to do the right and let the consequence follow.

OPPRESSIVE AND UNJUST TREATMENT.

The clippings here given below are taken from The Chattanooga Times of July 30th, August 1st, and August 6th, respectively:

Ducktown, Tenn., July 29.—(Special.)—The people of Shoal Creek, Cherokee county, North Carolina, six miles east of this place, are in open rebellion against a class or sect that professes and preaches sanctification or the second blessing. One hundred and ten of the citizens of that community met yesterday at this church, demolished it, and burnt it up. Rev. Gay Bryant, a Methodist minister, preached a sermon to the excited and infuriated crowd, while the building was burning. It appears that some three years ago, that this doctrine of sanctification was brought to this community, and within a short time, it had a considerable following, and they erected a church in which to worship, as the other denominations refused them the use of their churches.

The teaching and preaching of such a doctrine created a great deal of excitement and confusion. They soon began to teach baptism of fire, the holy dance, the dynamite, the liddyte, the exite, the selite and many other things never heard of before. They claimed that God had revealed things to them in various ways, such as total abstainance of coffee, meats, medicines, etc. About ten days ago the son of Andy Bryant, who is one of the members of this church, was taken down sick with typhoid fever, and Drs. Kinsey and Pastelle, of this place, were called to treat him. Henry Robinson, Pink Berrang and other leaders of this church went to the home of Mr. Bryant and induced the young man to take no more medicine, and to destroy the medicine that he had in his possession, claiming that they could cure him by "laying on of the hands," and they worked and prayed with the young man over night. In a few days the people and neighbors began to realize that Pink Berrang was becoming insane.

They arrested Berrang and took him to Murphy, N. C., where he was adjudged insane by the proper authorities and is now confined in the jail at Murphy. Young Bryant grew gradually worse and received no medical attention for ten days. All this aroused the indignation of the citizens, so on last Friday P. E. Neelson, Rev. Gay requested all the people to meet them at this church on yesterday morning, for the purpose of destroying it. About 110 people met them there, and of this number six refused to assist in destroying the church, claiming that every man had a right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and that no one had a right to destroy his property or put him in fear. The other 106 razed and burned the church, and Rev. G. Bryant delivered a sermon while the building was burning.

They passed a resolution notifying the members of this church not to build another church anywhere in that county.

Great excitement prevails throughout that county.

Columbus, O., July 31.—Last night a mob stormed a residence in Mansfield, where Zionist Elders were holding services, and captured the Elders.

Two of them—A. McFarland and G. Stevenson, of Chicago—promised to leave the city and were released. The others, C. P. Fisher and A. W. McClurkin, of Chicago, refused to make such a promise, and the mob, after stripping them of their clothing, painted their bodies with ultra marine and paraded them through the streets.

Today John Alexander Dowie, head of the Zionists, telegraphed Gov. Nash from Montague, Mich., asking for protection for the Elders at Mansfield.

The Governor communicated with the Sheriff of Richmond county, who replied that the Elders had left and everything was quiet.

Mansfield, O., Aug. 5.—Overseer John Piper and Elders E. P. Fisher, A. W. McClurkin and A. McFarland, of Dowie's Christian Catholic Church, arrived here this morning at 6:35, as scheduled. A mob of over 2,000 was in waiting.

The policemen refused to allow them to get out of the car, and amid cheers and shouts they went on to Ashland, fourteen miles east. There they attempted to hire a carriage to drive here, but all the liverymen refused their requests.

They telegeraphed back at noon that they would be here again at 2:20, and they came. Nearly 4,000 peopel were at the depot, and again they were not permitted to leave the car. They then said:

"If we can't get off here we will go on to Chicago, but we cannot promise that we will not be back here next Sunday."

The city is quiet again for a while.

These things go to prove that the Chinese Boxers have some very bigoted rivals upon this land of professed religious freedom, where the Flower of Liberty is supposed to bloom in rich abundance, and every son enjoy its sweet perfume, and bask in its delightsome fragrance. The patriots' loyal blood was made to flow because of fealty to the cause of freedom, and yet we find such inhuman and ungodly atrocities perpetrated upon the very soil their life's blood defended. Such heathenish acts as these, committed in an avowed Christian land of liberty, consummated by a professed religious people, outclasses the cruelty of the heathen, and totally eclipses the barbarism of the idolatrous savage; because we have been given light, knowledge, and understanding, while the untamed barbarian is destitute of these gifts of enlightenment and civilization; hence "where much is given, much is required," therefore the citizens of this blest land will be called upon to make a better showing, to exhibit more fervent love, than the denizens of Africa, or the heathen Chinee.

We have a land full of Bibles, and there is no need for us to resort to the inhuman practices of those poor creatures whose souls have never been enlightened with the rays of civilization. Where the people are devoid of intelligence so far as culture and refinement are concerned; where the light of man's duty to his fellow-man has never shed its brightness, we may look for brute force in opposition to religious differences; but in this favored land above all other lands under the sun's vast circuit, let us not degrade ourselves by indulging in such brutish, merciless acts as those recorded in the above clippings.

"Wisdom is better than weapons of war." The Lord offers wisdom unto all who call upon Him in faith. If we are Christians let us so live and act as Christ has commanded, "Love your enemies. Return good for evil. Bless and curse not. Pray for those who despitefully use you." These are a few of the duties enjoined upon Christians by the Captain of our salvation—Jesus. If you do not consent to the teachings of Christ, and follow in His steps, then throw aside your hypocritical guise of Christianity, discard the cloak of religion and cease to try and deceive God and your fellowman.

We do not believe, as the "Sanctificationists" do; we do not believe as the Chicago Zionists do; but we do believe in law, order, justice, and equity.

Let the law take its course, and then all is well; but allow Judge Mobocrat to prevail, and the whole land will reek with the blood of all who oppose his ruthless violence, and unjust measures.

A TESTIMONY.

(The following testimony of the truthfulness of the Gospel, and the power of God, came unsolicited from Sister Domey C. Ross, of Radford, Montgomery county, Virginia.—Ed.)

Please allow me space in the columns of your paper to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ for over twenty-nine months, and I can truthfully say that I have seen the power of God made manifest in my behalf. In June, 1899, a very painful accident befell me. My face and eyes were severely scalded with boiling coffee, and for four days I was so injured that I could hardly see. I could not rest, but was in agony and pain.

Elder Charles T. Furrow came and administered to me, and in one hour from the time of his administration, the acute pain left me, and I was able to sleep and rest, which was indeed a relief to me, for I had not been able to do either for four days past. My neighbors said, "Send for a doctor," but I did not want human aid, it was divine power that I rested upon for assistance. I remembered how that Jesus had said, "These signs shall follow them that believe. * * * They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." I also kept in mind the injunction given by James, "Call for the Elders of the Church." I had done so, and by the prayer of faith, through the power of God, I had received the promised blessing.

Should any have occasion to doubt my word, there are something like fifty persons here who can testify to my veracity. They are not all members of the so-called Mormon Church, but are uninterested witnesses.

I thank God that He has sent the "Fishers and Hunters" with the everlasting Gospel, and that He gave me the spirit of investigation, for so many seem careless and indifferent to this good word of salvation. I know that, in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, that the signs promised by Jesus do follow the true believers. (Mark 16:16), and I am not ashamed to own the same before all men, and decelare it unto the very ends of the earth if need be.

THE MORMON GOD.

Under the above head there appeared in the Charlotte News of North Carolina, July 31, 1900, the following article penned by one of our Elders in reply to a tirade of abuse on "the Mormon God," written by a Rev. Mr. Belk. We are pleasd to note the fairness and generosity of the News in giving the Elder an opportunity to defend his belief and that of the Mormon people. Other journals would do well to follow the good example of the Charlotte News.—Ed.

Editor Charlotte News:

I find in your issues of the 13th and 21st of July, a diatribe written by a reverend gentleman named Belk. If you would kindly give me space for an answer, it would be appreciated and I will gladly avail myself of the opportunity in defense of that denounced system, "Mormonism."

The fact is that the "Mormon Elder" travels through the states of this free government, laboring like the apostles and disciples of old, "without purse and scrip," offering salvation without money and without price, and the reverend divines of the day preach "for hire and divine for money." Fearful lest they might lose their prestige and converts, they villianously attack a pure system of religion of which they are in ignorance.

The two articles referred to above, are mainly an attack on the "God of Israel." Mr. Belk calls Him "the Mormon God" and says that He is a tangible being like a man and declares such to be the doctrine of the "heathen Chinese." Knowing that Mr. Belk is ignorant of the God of Israel with His attributes, I will refer him to "the word of God," the "law and testimony," to find out what kind of a being He was thousands of years ago, and as He is unchangeable, of course He will be the same today; I will then describe the being Mr. Belk worships and the reader can decide who are the "heathen."

The God of the Bible could walk, talk, see, hear, feel, taste and smell—in fact, He had all the attributes of man, only in a more perfect way. He walked with Adam in the garden; walked, talked and partook of food with Abraham on the plains of Mamre; wrestled with Jacob; conversed with Moses in the burning bush, and talked with him as one man speaks with his friend; was seen by Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu sitting on a sapphire throne; afterwards was seen by Isaiah, who described His glorious appearance; and when Stephen was stoned to death He was seen on the left hand of the Son of God, who is described as the EXPRESS IMAGE and brightness of His glory.

The God of the Bible is in every way an exalted being, and the Bible speaks of Him as being in the likeness of man. It says: "Let us make man in our own image," and in the image of God man was made. We must conclude, then, that God, our Father, who sits on His throne with His Son Jesus, is an exalted being, patterned in the likeness and after the image of man, as man was made in His likeness and image, much like the appearance of His Son Jesus, our Elder Brother, who was declared to be the express image of His Father. When Philip wanted to see the Father, Jesus said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," which all would imply that God the Eternal is like His Son Jesus. The Son Jesus was in every way like unto man in appearance and traveled about as the "son of Joseph, the carpenter," in the valleys of Judea.

The "Mormons" accept this God of the Bible, as described in "Holy Writ" as their God, and worship the Father of the spirits of all flesh. They claim to be His offspring and to have the right to address Him as "Our Father who art in Heaven," notwithstanding the objections of such reverends as Mr. Belk, who would have us worship a nonentity, a heathen God, who was manufactured in the early part of the fourth century, when "paganism" intermixed with Christianity and polluted the whole system. Then it was that a renowned bishop by the name of Athanasius instituted a creed, which has been adopted universally by modern Christendom. From his theory of the Godhead sprang the first article of religion in the Episcopal church, which reads as follows: "There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts or passions." Other authorities declare God to be an "incorporeal" being, and it is common for the modern long-faced pharisees of today, who pose as shining lights to guide the unsophisticated, such as the Rev. Belk, to say they have Jesus in their hearts. Let us consider the fallacy of such heathenism: Jesus, who after His resurrection, was a man of immortal tabernacle, having flesh and bones, who sits at the right hand of His Father, in His express image and glory, as seen by Stephen. Think of such materiality dwelling in the heart of such a small-souled being as Mr. Belk has proved himself to be. Is it not generally believed that God is so large that He fills the universe and so small that He can dwell in man's heart?

Mr. Belk ventures the assertion that "God is a spirit." I agree with him and go further and say that man must worship Him in spirit." This does not mean that a man must die and become a spirit to worship God. All theologians recognize the duality of men—the blending of spiritual essence with temporal substance, but generally the spirit is looked upon as immaterial. I have asked the question, "What is a spirit?" and invariably the reply has been, "Spirit is nothing," or in other words, God is nothing, or a nonentity, without body. To assert the immateriality of God is not only to deny His personality, but His very existence. It is the description of an infinite vacuum and the only difference between the modern Christian and the atheist is one of terms and not in fact. The latter says there is no God, and the former in his creed says "God is nothing." I say that this airy, mystical being is the God of modern Christendom, and a "Mormon" who presumes to worship a tangible reality, who can hear, see, taste, smell and has all the passions with which He has blessed His children, are called "Heathens."

Mr. Belk speaks falsely when he says that Mormons worship more than one God. It is true that we believe with Paul that there are "Gods many and Lords many," and with Moses that the Lord our God is "God of Gods and Lord of Lords," and we believe like Daniel and all the Prophets in a plurality of Gods, but we believe in worshiping the Father and Creator of our spirits, the true and living God, who, with His Son and the Holy Ghost, constitute the one "Godhead."

Moses, thousands of years ago, saw the time when Israel would bow down to a senseless nonentity, such as is worshiped today, and in the 4th chapter of Deuteronomy, commencing at the 27th verse, he said that Israel would be scattered and would become so idolatrous that they would worship a God that could not see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell.

Is not the above prophecy verily fulfilled today in modern Christendom? Are they not worshipping at the shrine of such a God?

Paul says, in the last days, the people would not endure sound doctrine, but would heap up to themselves teachers, having itching ears, who would turn them away from the truth and turn them to fables.

The Mormon Elders are warning them to keep away from these hirelings, who are ever learning but never come to the knowledge of the truth, and they simply ask the people to adopt the teachings of Jesus, as they were taught and practiced in Judea 1900 years ago. If the people will do this, they will repent and be baptized for the remission of sin and have hands laid upon them by one holding authority, for the reception of the Holy Ghost. They will believe in the "God of Israel" and be led by His spirit and not by blind guides, and they will know the Lord, whom to know is life eternal. They thus will be born again, and become adopted sons of God. Space forbids me to say more, but I would refer the readers to the "word of God, the Bible," to support the "Mormon" in his belief in a tangible God. See Gen. 5:1,2. male and female made in the likeness of God; Gen. 18, the Lord ate and talked with Abraham; Gen. 32:30, Jacob saw God face to face; Exo. 15:3, the Lord is a man of war; Exo. 24:10, they saw God and did eat and drink; Exo. 33:11, the Lord talked with Moses as one man speaks with a friend, and, as before stated, man was created in the image of God. See Gen. 1:27.

The above shows some of the attributes of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, whom the Mormons are proud to worship, and to whom they make their petitions.

The nonentity that the world has set up and been worshiping so many hundreds of years does not answer prayer, and it is little wonder that such men as Bradlaugh and Ingersoll defy such a being, an immaterial nothing. The priests of Baal, on Carmel, could get no reply from their God and in their chagrin, cut themselves with knives; they were worshiping a myth, a nonentity; Elijah's God responded to his prayer, he worshiped the tangible reality, the material God of Israel, and the priests of Baal were compelled to acknowledge His supremacy.

The day will come when Mr. Belk and others of his divine order, who have gained their seminary idea of the Godhead through the perverted Athanasius channel, will forsake such paganism and worship "the true and living God."

A MINISTER'S DEFENSE.

BY ELDER S. H. FOTHERINGHAM.

We are sorry to say that some of the religious hirelings are still pursuing their wicked course, and are hiding their meanness behind the cloak of religion. Still, the deception can easily be detected by the true servant of God, or a truth seeking people. Strange it is that intelligent people in this fair land of ours will take such a delight in slandering and abusing the servants of God. Intolerance and persecution seem to furnish sufficient evidence to the narrow-minded and ignorant as proof that the Mormons are wrong, but a more stubborn or erroneous opposition never could be resorted to.

All kinds of resistance and rehashed fables, too old to keep, are quite frequently resurrected, with the necessary changes and additions, calculated to deceive the people. They have been quite successful in poisoning the minds of mankind. Many of the Elders have been brutally treated at the hands of hard-hearted Christians (?). The campaign is usually conducted or led by a minister falsely called a servant of Christ. A few days ago myself and companion met a learned "divine" of Patrick county. The eminent gentleman (?) informed us that he knew all about Mormonism and was very familiar with our teachings. He called our attention to the fact that he himself was well posted. We commenced what we thought would end in a friendly talk, but to our great surprise, he arose with trembling voice, and without cause or provocation he pulled from his saddlebags a pistol, and in tones of thunder he denounced us as "false teachers." His defense was strong, too strong to be refuted by Scripture, or reason. We surrendered at once, realizing that his gun was all he had. Oh, ye ministers of modern Christendom, why do ye fight against God's righteous purposes? Why do you resist the truth and resort to such cowardly methods? Why not leave your guns at the arsenal, and bring along your Bible, and a better spirit will doubtless prevail.

Who ever heard of God's servants defending the Gospel with a "six shooter," instead of our reverend brother being equipped with the armor of God, and being influenced by the spirit of truth, he was led by another spirit, or spirits.

While in the act of drawing his gun from the saddlebags, I informed him that the New Testament was our only weapon; and the only one we had any use for. To this he had little to say. His eyes sparkled with anger. We said no more to him, as a word from us would only rekindle the fire of hatred that our friend (?) seemed to possess.

We bade him good day and went on our way rejoicing, willing that a just God should judge between us and him. We believe the Lord will come to our rescue and bear us out triumphant over those that oppress us. We have no desire to force our teachings on the people, but we do protest for our rights. We demand the rights of American citizens. We are loyal to our country, so are we loyal to our God, and will ever be found with devoted efforts, zeal and vigor, faith and works, to promote a cause that is noble and elevating, and a cause that we are proud to proclaim.

Now we ask the people, in all humility, to be careful as to what ye do to these men, that claim to be the servants of God. Put them forth a little pace, investigate their teachings, listen to the words of Gamaliel (Acts 5:38-39), and now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this council or this work be of men it will come to naught, but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it lest haply ye be found fighting against God.

Give us a fair and impartial trial. Give us a hearing, for we testify that this is God's work and cannot be overthrown. It will cause the wicked to revile and the righteous to rejoice.

Utah Boys at West Point.

Once more have sons of Utah demonstrated their ability to hold their own with the brightest young minds of the nation in crucial tests for high honors. Edward D. Le Compte, of Park City, and Rupert A. Dunford, of Salt Lake, who, last June, in this city, scored the highest in the preliminary examination for appointment to cadetships at the military academy at West Point, have successfully passed the recent final examinations at the academy.

In a special dispatch to an Eastern paper last Tuesday appear the names of Le Comte and dunford among the eighty-three successful candidates. Seventy-five of the applicants were disqualified. Several were appointed from the country at large, and Utah is one of the few States whose two candidates won their spurs.

Altogether the boys from the West did extremely well in the final entrance for examinations for place at Uncle Sam's military school. Besides the names of the Utah lads there are mentioned in the triumphant list Otto L. Brunzell, of Idaho; Fred A. Garges, of Nevada; Stanley Koch, of Montana; Torrey R. Maghee, of Wyoming, and James R. Walker, of Colorado.—Salt Lake Herald.

Tickets good for return until October 31st. For full particulars address J. F. Aglar, General Agent, St. Louis, Mo.

THE CHURCH.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

God has founded, protected and is perpetuating His Church in the earth, so that when the Prophet passed to the life beyond, the work continued and grew with great rapidity. It is said, "The blood of the martyr is the seed of the Church." President Brigham Young and his associates of the Twelve, according to the voice of the Spirit and the order of the Holy Priesthood, succeeded to the Presidency of the Church. The work of the Lord continued to prosper, contrary to the prediction of its enemies that when the Prophet Joseph was out of the way the work would come to naught. The foundation of a temple had been laid, and this was pushed to completion, dedicated to the Lord and ordinances performed therein. Mobocratic hostilities were renewed, however, with determined vigor. Nauvoo was besieged. The temple was burned. Elder William Anderson and his son were killed, and the Saints expelled at the point of the bayonet. They had built up a flourishing city in an incredibly short time, were quiet, peaceable, law-abiding, industrious citizens. The killing of their leading men, burning of their homes, the numerous indignities heaped upon them was as dastardly and cold-blooded as any persecution chronicled in the annals of history, especially when we consider that it occurred in a free country, where freedom to every race and religion is the proud boast of its people. Many of the people left Nauvoo in the dead of winter, 1845-6, crossing the Mississippi river on the ice. The day after the general exodus nine children were born in the camp of the exiled people. Under the leadership of President Young and his associates they moved westward across the State of Iowa and built up a settlement called Winter Quarters, where the people remained to recruit until 1847. While there the government called on the Saints for 500 men to engage in the war with Mexico. They were promptly supplied, and the most able-bodied men were sent to defend their country.

In the spring of 1847 President Young and a small company, numbering 143, including three women, started from the Missouri river to find beyond the Rocky mountains a place of rest, where they might build and inhabit; and worship God "free from the furious rage of mobs." After an interesting and trying journey of about three months this noble band of patriots entered Salt Lake Valley July 24th, 1847, over 1,000 miles from the Missouri river. As they emerged from the mouth of what was afterwards named Emigration Canyon, they stood upon a plateau facing westward, and to the north and south a great valley extended, bordered on the west by mountains and a great inland sea of salt water, which is the Great Salt Lake. The islands in the lake are mountains, almost destitute of timber, but supplied with grass suitable for the grazing of horses and cattle. The valley was poorly watered, and dry sterility was the appearance of the country before them; but God was their leader, and He had shown to President Young beforehand the Salt Lake Valley. When they entered the valley the Prophet said, "This is the place. Here we will build a city." When they came upon the ground where the temple now stands President Young, thrusting his cane into the ground, said in substance, "Here we will stay, and upon this ground we will build a temple." All the events conducing to the growth and development of the valleys prove that President Brigham Young knew whereof he spoke, and God has confirmed his words by the many blessings of Divine Providence showered upon the people in building up a commonwealth in what was in those days a great barren waste. The soil upon which they then stood belonged to Mexico. These pioneers were as truly exiles from their country as the Puritans who ploughed the trackless ocean and planted their feet upon Plymouth Rock. And yet the Latter-day Saints had now 500 men in the American army, in the contest with Mexico. Upon a prominent mountain peak, called Ensign, these pioneers planted the Stars and Stripes, the flag of their country, and possessed the land as citizens of the United States. Upon the arrival of this first company the work of plowing and building immediately commenced. It would take volumes to tell the history of their growth and progress from then till now. But these volumes are written both in books, upon the mountains, and in the valleys, which are an open book for the inspection of all people. In the fall of 1847 a large company of Saints crossed the plains, led by President John Taylor and other prominent men. The companies continued to pour into Salt Lake Valley and spread into the valleys north and south each year from 1847 to 1900, coming as Latter-day Saints under the regulations of the Church. The leading brethren had made covenant that they would not cease their energies until all the Saints who would remain faithful should be gathered to the place appointed.

Before the death of the Prophet Joseph many had apostatized. The Saints were not so well established in doctrine as they are today, and some were led astray by the pretensions of prominent men who were disposed to leave the Church and follow in their own course. The Twelve Apostles stood next in authority to the Presidency of the Church, by the order pointed out in the revelations of God. At the time when Sidney Rigdon was asserting his claims to the guardianship of the Church, President Brigham Young stood up to address the Saints. A remarkable manifestation of God's power took place. President Young was transfigured before the people. He appeared to increase in height and in the form of his face and body to the exact personal appearance of the Prophet Joseph Smith. When he spoke his voice was as that of the martyred Prophet. People who were present on that occasion say that had their eyes been closed so that they had not seen President Young when he arose from his seat they would not have believed the speaker to be other than the martyred Prophet, Joseph. Truly the mantle of Joseph had fallen upon Brigham, and while Joseph had received all the keys of the Priesthood and bestowed them upon the Twelve, and the revelations upon which to build the Church of Christ, President Young as truly built upon those revelations during his entire administration. In 1849 at Winter Quarters he was sustained as President of the Church by the unanimous voice of the Priesthood, with Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards as Counselors, and by the voice of the Church thereafter at each general conference during the remainder of his lifetime. President Young presided over the Church as the Senior Apostle for thirty-three years, five years in connection with the Twelve and twenty-eight years in the Presidency. Soon after the settlement of the Saints in Salt Lake Valley other valleys were explored north and south, and settlements established wherever water could be obtained, as rapidly as the strength and numbers of the Saints would justify. As early as the year 1860 settlements were founded and the Saints organized in wards, with quorums of the Priesthood from Cache Valley to St. George, a distance of over 400 miles from north to south. Wherever the Saints locate in settlements of a few families, or more, they are organized with a Bishop or Counselors to preside over them, with Priests, Teachers and Deacons, as before explained, for a local ministry. As helps in government they had in those early days the Relief Society, to relieve the poor and afflicted. The society is composed of women, and was first organized March 17, 1843, by the Prophet Joseph Smith in Nauvoo. In 1849 the first Sunday School was established in the Church by Richard Ballantyne in the Fourteenth ward, Salt Lake City. Later, and during the administration of President Young, the Young Men and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations were inaugurated. Still later, by suggestion of Sister Aurelia Spencer Rogers, under the administration of President John Taylor, the primary associations, presided over and conducted by capable sisters, were established for the especial benefit of little children. All these are helps and governments to meet the growing requirements of the Saints in matters of religious, moral, and intellectual training and development. Each of these organizations exist in every Bishop's ward, unless the number of any class who properly belong to one particular of the association named are too limited to make the organization profitable. In such cases those who would take part in such associations are not unprovided for, because the Sunday school, more than any other association in the Church, takes in all ages of both sexes. Our Sunday schools now have a population of nearly 121,000 pupils. Where there are a sufficient number of wards in any section of the country, these wards are presided over by a President and two Counselors, with a High Council, who have certain jurisdiction over matters pertaining to the Church in this group of wards. The associations, Sunday schools, societies, etc., have a general superintendency of three, with aids to assist them, and this organization over these wards is called a Stake or Zion. For convenience sake, the geographical boundaries of the Stake are usually the same as those of the county, but not always or necessarily so. Sometimes the population of two or three counties is not too great to be one Stake, were the settlements close together, or not separated by mountains, which render the attendance of the people at Stake conferences, especially in the winter season, very laborious, and in some instances almost impossible. We now have forty-two Stakes of Zion. They extend from Canada to Mexico. They exist in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Wyoming, Colorado, Canada and Mexico. Many of them were organized just prior to the decease of President Young, the remainder under his successors, respectively: Presidents Taylor, Woodruff and Snow. April 6th, 1853, the temple in Salt Lake City was commenced. It was just forty years in building. It is built of granite. The rock was first hauled, for fifteen years, with ox teams a distance of sixteen miles, two yoke of oxen frequently being required to draw one huge stone, but many years before its completion the locomotive, with many car loads of stone at a time, rolled into the temple block and left its cargo by the side of the growing temple. The cap stone of this magnificent house of the Lord was laid by electricity. The current was applied by the finger of God's Prophet, Wilford Woodruff, then 84 years of age, and one of that noble band of 143 who entered Salt Lake Valley July 24th, 1847. President Young was instrumental in laying the foundation of four temples in Utah, Salt Lake, St. George, Logan and Manti, They have all, years ago, been completed, the Salt Lake temple being dedicated April 6th, 1893, by President Wilford Woodruff. The ordinances of salvation for the living and the dead are performed therein, and tens of thousands have been officiated for since their completion. Subsequent to the exodus of the Church to Salt Lake Valley, the Gospel was introduced to the Pacific Isles by President George Q. Cannon and other Elders in 1853. In the work of preaching the Gospel many countries have not accorded perfect religious freedom, and to penetrate these the Church awaits only the providences of the Almighty to break down the barriers and make it feasible to promulgate the Gospel in those countries. In other lands, where freedom reigns, the Elders have carried the glorious message. The Book of Mormon has been translated into German, Danish, Swedish, French, Spanish, Italian, Hiwaiian, Maori and other tongues, and will continue to be until the truths of the Gospel upon its sacred pages shall be read in every nation, kindred, tongue and people. The thousands who have embraced the work with honest motives have received the witness of the Holy Spirit to their own satisfaction. Gifts and blessings which the ancient Saints enjoyed have been renewed in this glorious dispensation.

The external history of the Church has been the same as in other times. "If ye were of the world, the world would love its own, but because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

"And they that live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."

Prophecy has been and is being fulfilled. "What is prophecy but history reversed?" History repeats itself. When Joseph Smith declared a new revelation, religious and irreligious fought against such an idea. Professing religionists sought to prove by the Scriptures that revelations were not for our day. In this they fail, because the Old and New Testaments abound in predictions of future revelations and events which cannot be fulfilled without revelation. Next the wicked resorted to slander, ridicule and lies, then to violence, resulting in the destruction of property and human life. All this being futile, they moved the nation by the falsehoods of Judge Drummond to send an army to Utah. But when the army came they found that this United States officer had basely deceived the President of the nation by telling that the Mormons were in a state of rebellion and had burned the court records. The court records were unharmed. The Mormons were at peace with God and all mankind, quietly minding their own business, pursuing their avocations of life and building up the country for the benefit and blessing of all who should come within their gates. The army came to Utah in 1857, and subsequently returned to the South, their leading officer to take part in the Confederate army in the great rebellion. He fell upon the battlefield April 6th, 1862, at Shiloh, thirty-two years to the day after the Church was born in this dispensation. The army, sold to the Mormons, mules, wagons, harnesses and other material much needed, at a mere nominal figure, and thus being a blessing, proved the words of Isaiah true, "I will make the wrath of man to praise me." As the Saints grew in prosperity and importance, avarice and prejudice seized political demagogues, adventurers and religious bigots, to stir the nation to a systematic effort to crush out Mormonism. Special legislation was enacted and enforced beyond the severity of its own provisions. About 800 men went to prison; a few women were incarcerated because they would not testify against their husbands; heavy fines were paid, and hundreds went into exile, rather than prove untrue to the solemn covenants and obligations they had entered into under their religious convictions. Finally confiscation of church property took place, but much of it was afterward restored. In 1890 President Woodruff issued his manifesto regarding plural marriages, feeling that the courts of the country had been placed upon record, by legally contesting the unjust rulings of lower courts, and that justice was in the hands of God, and eventually would be maintained by the administration of righteous men in the nation. In this form of opposition to the Church a prophecy of Joseph Smith is fulfilled in which he said, in substance, that persecution against the Saints would extend from township to county, from county to state, and from state to nation. His words have been remarkably fulfilled. The Saints, in enduring persecution, did so with patience and forbearance. They have no spirit of revenge. They allow that much of the popular sentiment against them is based upon misunderstanding, founded in the falsehood of wicked and designing men. The Spirit of the Gospel teaches them that it is better to suffer wrong than do wrong, and that patience and charity is necessary as a testimony of the truth, for without the approval of the Lord they could not endure the trials and temptations which beset them. From the commencement the Church has taught the utmost freedom of mankind to worship as they choose, such liberty being curtailed only when it runs into license and infringes upon the rights of others. In the early inception of the Church God commanded His people to study and learn from the best of books; to acquire an understanding of the laws of God and the governments of men; to become acquainted with the heavens and the earth. See section eighty-eight of the Doctrine and Covenants. Thus they are the friends of all true education. Joseph Smith established a school in Kirtland for the study of Hebrew, and other branches of knowledge. In Nauvoo he founded a university. Brigham Young and his associates founded the Deseret University, now called the University of Utah. They have also established Church schools. The Brigham Young Academy in Provo, the Brigham Young College in Logan, Stake Academies and other schools. The sons of Latter-day Saints have graduated with honor in the Military Academy at West Point. In Ann Arbor, Michigan, they have a record unsurpassed in the law school and in other branches taught by that noted institution, and this is true of their record at Harvard and elsewhere; as also graduates of medicine, dentistry, civil engineering, etc., as taught in the great schools of Chicago, Philadelphia and other places.

Mission conferences are established in almost ever State of the American Union, England, Ireland, Wales and Scotland, in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, in Germany, Holland and Palestine, in New Zealand, Australia, the Hawaiian and many other isles of the Pacific Ocean. The population of the Church, men, women and children, is not far short of 375,000 souls. While there has been steady progress in the numerical strength of the Church, it is not in numbers that strength consists, for we fully realize that "straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth into life. and few there be that find it." The strength consists in the purity of principle and the impossibility of the wicked and corrupt to long remain in the Church. God is the Founder and Builder. He established the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It will stand forever, for "whatsoever the Lord doeth, He doeth it forever."

A SHORT SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE ORSON PRATT.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

This great Apostle was born in Hartford, Washington county, New York. Sept. 19th, 1811. His father's name was Jared Pratt, his mother, Charity Dickinson Pratt. They were of the sturdy, hard-working element who furnished the muscle and sinew which founded and builded the Nation in the early days of our country. Orson was a younger brother of Parley P. Pratt, both of whom became members of the first Quorum of Twelve Apostles chosen in this dispensation. They were accustomed to hard work, and throughout life were very industrious. The Pratt family moved to New Lebanon, in Columbia county, at which place Orson obtained a common school education. Brother Pratt early became a student of the Bible, as well as manifesting a strong desire for useful knowledge in whatever line and from whatever source he could obtain it.

In the fall of 1827, he went to Ohio. One year later he walked nearly 700 miles to Connecticut. From there he went to Long Island, where he studied in 1829-30, grammar, surveying and geography, at a boarding academy. Although studious and prayerful, neither he nor his parents joined any of the sectarian denominations.

His brother, Parley, who had a few months previously embraced the Gospel as revealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith, now came to Caman, N. Y., with another Elder to preach the Gospel. Orson at once received their testimony and was baptized Sept. 19th, 1830, the nineteenth anniversary of his birthday. In October the same year he traveled 200 miles to see the Prophet Joseph Smith. It was on this occasion, Nov. 14th, 1830, where the Lord, through His Seer, spoke to Orson Pratt, giving the revelation found in section 34 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This revelation told the calling of his future life. Prior to this, though studious and industrious, he had wandered much, and felt that there was something lacking. He longed for the Pearl of Great Price. Now he had found it. What a glorious blessing to thus be called and directed by our Heavenly Father. Such was the blessed privilege conferred upon Orson Pratt when 19 years of age. His calling was to lift up his voice, and cry repentance to a fallen world, and thus, like John the Baptist, prepare the way for the coming of the Lord. He was confirmed and ordained an Elder Dec. 1st, 1830, and immediately performed his first mission to Colesville, Broome county, N. Y. Early in 1831 he walked 300 miles to Kirtland, Ohio. From Kirtland, as headquarters of the Church, Elder Pratt performed several short missions in Ohio, Illinois and Missouri. He was greatly blessed in bringing people into the Church, most of them proving to be good reliable people, who proved a blessing to the cause. June 25th, 1832, he was chosen to preside over the Elders of the Church, and was sent on a mission to the Eastern States. Subsequently he was ordained a High Priest, and continued missionary work through Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, traveling without purse or scrip. He traveled on foot and extended his labors into New Hampshire and Connecticut. Upon returning to Kirtland from his mission in 1832, he had walked about 4,000 miles, baptized 104 persons and organized several branches of the Church. In Kirtland he attended the School of the Prophets, and in the spring of 1833 performed another mission, traveling 2,000 miles and baptizing over fifty persons. Succeeding this he filled a special mission with Elder Orson Hyde, and next he was one of that noted body known as Zion's Camp.

April 26th, 1835, he was chosen one of the Twelve Apostles. During the winter of 1835-6 he studied Hebrew and received his endowments in the Kirtland Temple. After this he filled a mission in Western Canada, baptized a number and organised several branches of the Church. July 4th, 1836, he received in marriage Sarah M. Bates. In April, 1839, he joined the Twelve at Far West to fulfill a revelation, and from thence started on a mission to Europe. On his way he preached to the branches of the Church in the East, and embarked for England in the spring of 1840. He labored principally in Edinburgh, Scotland, where he raised up a branch of over 200 people. He returned home in the spring of 1841. In Nauvoo, to which point the Saints had removed, he taught a mathematical school. In 1843 he filled a mission in the Eastern States, and on returning to Nauvoo was made a member of the City Council. He assisted in drawing up a memorial to Congress and repaired to Washington to present it in the spring of 1844. He labored in the East until the martyrdom of the Prophet and Patriarch, when he returned with the Twelve to Nauvoo. During the troubles following the martyrdom of the Prophet, Brother Pratt shared in all the trials and toils incidental to those times. He was in the exodus from Nauvoo, and when the pioneer company to cross the plains was made up Orson Pratt was one of that historic body. While en route he made astronomical observations, and by the aid of the sextant and circle of reflection, determined the latitude and longitude, as well as the changes of elevation in different points above sea level.

He entered Salt Lake Valley with Erastus Snow three days in advance of the main body of pioneers.

In 1848 he was appointed to preside over the British mission, which then included the Conferences in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. During his Presidency of two years, over 12,000 people joined the Church in that mission. While presiding in England he edited the Millennial Star, published fifteen pamphlets of his own production, and circulated several thousand of them in different languages. He traveled and preached much, and started for Zion twenty ship loads of Latter-day Saints. Soon after his return he delivered twelve astronomical lectures to crowded audiences in the old Tabernacle. He became a member of the Utah Legislature at its first session, and for many sessions thereafter when he was in the Territory, and was seven times Speaker of the House. In 1852 he went to Washington, D. C., and published the Seer, which contains much of his choicest writings. In 1860-61 he performed a mission in the United States, and in 1864-5 himself and Elder William W. Riter went to Austria to introduce the Gospel, but the stringency of Austrian laws prevented them from accomplishing the object of their mission. He bore his testimony to government officials, and left them. Returning, he visited the Conferences in England, and labored there until 1867. In 1869 he went to New York City, translated and published the Book of Mormon in phonetic characters. In August, 1857, he held the famous three days' discussion with Dr. J. P. Newman, on the question, "Does the Bible Sanction Polygamy?" A verbatim report of the discussion is published, and all who wish may read and judge for themselves.

In 1874 he became Historian and General Church Recorder, which position he filled with ability to the time of his decease in 1881. He crossed the ocean again in 1876, this time to transcribe and publish an edition of the Book of Mormon in the Pitman phonetic characters. About one year later he published editions of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, with extensive references and foot notes, making for that purpose another trip to England. Upon returning home, he was again elected to the Legislature, occupying his usual position as Speaker of the House.

His health failed him in 1880, and he suffered with kidney troubles for over a year. His last public address was delivered in the Tabernacle Sunday, Sept. 18th, 1881. The writer was present and heard this last earthly address of one of the greatest Apostles who ever lived. In his remarks he expressed a desire, were it the Lord's will, to continue in this life to preach and publish the Gospel abroad. When he concluded, Apostle Woodruff arose and said in substance: I have known Brother Pratt for forty-five years. I have traveled with him by sea and by land. He has been faithful and energetic in his calling. I have never known the winds upon the mighty ocean to toss the vessel too much, and we have been in storms, when Orson Pratt could not sit calmly upon the deck or in his room and study astronomy, mathematics or the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Orson Pratt died Oct. 3d, 1881, at his home in Salt Lake City.

When Brother Pratt died he was 70 years of age. He had been in the Church fifty-one years. During that half century he traveled thousands of miles in his own country, much of it on foot, and crossed the Atlantic ocean sixteen times, bearing the glad tidings of salvation to the nations of the earth. Besides his incessant industry as an Apostle of the Lord in preaching and publishing the Gospel, he studied astronomy and higher mathematics. He left in manuscript a work on the Differential Calculus, containing original principles. He also published Pratt's Cubic and Bi-quadratic Equations, and another work entitled Key to the Universe, or a New Theory of Its Mechanism. Learned professors in the Universities of America and Europe who knew Orson Pratt pronounced him one of the profoundest scholars of the age, especially in mathematics and astronomy. He had conferred upon him the degree of M. A. Elder Pratt, while a profound thinker, acknowledged that the key to his success in science as well as religion was contained in the revelations of God to the Prophet Joseph Smith and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit to himself.

Elder Pratt was blessed with such profound concentration of thought that he was frequently oblivious to everything around him. He was not disturbed by the noise of children in the house or the passing railroad trains or wagons in the streets.

Members of his family relate that on one occasion, during several days of constant study on some problem, he came down stairs in the morning trying to button his spectacles around his neck. When one of the family, much amused, called his attention to the fact that spectacles were not worn on the neck, he said, "Oh, I thought it was my collar." Owing to his profound study, he was not given to ready conversation, and perchance at times he felt that he should talk more in private to his associates. He said once to Brother Joseph Bull, in England: "Brother Bull, I almost envy you your powers of conversation." Notwithstanding his deep researches for knowledge, his great learning and the rich measure of inspiration he enjoyed, he was humble and meek, as all truly great men are. He acknowledged that God was above all, and the source of all true knowledge. He saw so much ahead to be learned that what he knew he recognised to be only a grain of sand upon the sea shore, or a drop in the mighty ocean.

Orson Pratt was of medium height, square built. He wore a flowing full beard, white as the driven snow, which made him appear truly patriarchal, and reminded us of the title given to our first progenitor, "The Ancient of Days."

He bore his trials with patience and "acknowledged the hand of God in all things."

As a fitting conclusion of this brief sketch, we quote from the Deseret News the finale of the editorial at the time of Elder Pratt's decease:

"Orson Pratt was truly an Apostle of the Lord. Full of integrity, firm as a rock to his convictions, true to his brethren and to his God, earnest and zealous in defense and proclamation of the truth, ever ready to bear testimony to the latter-day work, he had a mind stored with Scripture, ancient and modern, was an eloquent speaker, a powerful minister, a logical and convincing writer, an honest man, and a great soul who reached out after eternal things, grasped them with the gift of inspiration, and brought them down to the level and comprehension of the common mind. Thousands have been brought into the Church through his preaching in many lands, thousands more by his writings. He set but little store on the wealth of this world, but he has laid up treasures in heaven which will make him eternally rich."

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

Spiritual Gifts Must Exist in the Church of Christ—Their Absence an Indication of Unbelief.

Discourse delivered by Apostle Anthon H. Lund, at Salt Lake City, April 7th, 1900.

I hope, while I shall address you, that the same good spirit may guide me as has assisted my brethren who have already spoken in the different meetings of this conference. I have enjoyed their remarks very much, and I believe all who have been present have felt to rejoice in the good teachings that have been given us.

This morning, when Brother John W. Taylor read the testimony of the Prophet Moroni to us, I was much struck with some of the words he read. We were told that the spiritual gifts should always be found in the Church, and that if there ever came a time when these gifts were not in the Church it would be on account of unbelief; and a woe was pronounced upon the inhabitants of the earth if such should be the case. I thought how clear the Prophet Moroni made this; that the Church whenever it is upon the earth must have the Holy Spirit within it; the members of the Church must have this Spirit, and the spiritual gifts must be manifested; otherwise it would be a dead Church. These words are recorded in the Book of Mormon—this wonderful book that has been brought forth by the power of God in our age. This book was printed before there was a Church organized, and yet we find these remarkable words in it, which at once furnish the world with a test whereby they can judge if this is the Church of Christ or not. It says that in the Church there must be found these gifts. Now, if Joseph Smith had not been an inspired man; if the Book of Mormon was not the word of God, but written by man, how careful such a man would have been not to furnish the world with a test like this whereby they could at once detect whether it was the Church of Christ or not. A man who should fraudulently give himself out to be an inspired man, would be careful that such words should not be given to the world. But these were not the words of Joseph; they were the words of a Prophet that lived some fourteen hundred years before, and one who understood the Church of Christ.

When we look back upon the history of the Church we find that the spiritual gifts were very abundant in the original Church, and that whenever the Saints met they were much blessed with the power of the Spirit. They were so eager to attend their meetings and to speak, prophesy and talk in tongues, that the Apostle Paul had to regulate their meetings and give them counsel in regard to the manner of conducting them, that order might prevail. The Saints were abundantly blessed with these manifestations of the Spirit. But when the apostasy took place, the Spirit of the Lord departed, its manifestations were fewer, and at last they were not known in the Church. Then it was very convenient to teach the people that revelations were no longer needed, that Prophets were not needed; that these spiritual gifts were given only in the beginning of the Church, to convert men; but that they were not to continue with the members of the Church, and therefore they were done away. When Jesus appeared to the Nephites, upon this continent, He taught them the pure Gospel and organized His Church. He left this power of the Priesthood with His servants here, the same as He had with His servants upon the Eastern continent, and the spiritual blessings were enjoyed as long as the Church was in existence upon this continent. Moroni understood this so well that he said these gifts must always be found in the Church, and if not it would be a sign of unbelief.

After the Book of Mormon was published, the Church was organized, and then men could read the book and test the words, and judge whether or not the Church that was afterwards organized corresponded with what the Prophet had said the Church should be.

It was but a few days after the Church was organized before the Spirit uttered itself in power, and spiritual manifestations were given and miracles performed, showing that the Church which had been so recently organized was not an imitation, but that it was the Church itself, containing the same power and spiritual blessings. In fact, this wonderful book itself was translated by the power of God. Joseph Smith was an unlearned man; he had not studied at colleges; he was not much of a writer at that time, but had to employ others to write for him, and those who wrote for him wrote as he dictated. Now, you who have tried to dictate to a person know how hard it is to dictate, and to continue to do this, without altering or without having the last sentence repeated; but Joseph dictated to these men, and was not under the necessity of asking them where they had left off, because he translated by the power of God. The Urim and Thummim was in his possession, and with this instrument he was able to translate the characters that were engraven upon the plates. This was a miracle in itself, and these men who wrote for him would soon have been able to detect whether he was inspired in the translation, or whether it was his own brain that furnished them the material to write. And let me say that no man could write such a work, if he were ever so gifted. He would be detected in some fault or other.

The book has been given unto us by the Lord, and we find in it prophesies concerning our time and prophecies concerning the time that is already past, which have been fulfilled, proving the book to be an inspired one. These gifts which the book mentions should be found in the Church; my testimony to you is that they are found in the Church. Talking in tongues has been very common in the Church. Nearly all the members have at some time or another heard this gift, as well as the interpretation of tongues. Some may say, But how can we judge whether this is a true tongue or not? You can judge by the Holy Spirit whether it is prompted by that Spirit or not. There have been times when the proof of the tongue spoken has been overwhelming. When President Peterson, of the Sanpete Stake, was a young man he attended a meeting in Illinois. There were many present, and the Spirit of the Lord was poured out upon the Saints in a great measure. He felt urged by the Spirit to talk in tongues, and when he sat down a young girl arose and interpreted it. She was but 17 years of age, perhaps younger, and she interpreted what Brother Peterson had spoken. Some of the brethren there, then in good standing, but who afterwards left the Church, were told that if they did not take heed they would apostatize, and that the balance of the branch should emigrate to the West and travel in wagons like houses, across large plains. This was the interpretation of the tongue. They did not then know that there would come a time when they should travel in covered wagons and go to the West. But a remarkable thing happened at that meeting. Two young girls that had been stolen while children, by the Indians, and been brought back by the government, were present. They heard Brother Peterson speak in tongues, and they declared that he spoke in an Indian tongue, which they had heard before, and they understood most of it, though they said he spoke it better than they ever heard the chiefs speak it, and the young girl, they said, had translated what they understood correctly. This is a great testimony of the truth of that gift, and many other instances could be mentioned, showing that this gift is in the Church. The gift of prophecy we know is in the Church. How many of the prophecies of our beloved Prophet Joseph Smith have not been fulfilled to the very letter? You take the book of Doctrine and Covenants, and you will find there many prophecies that have been fulfilled already, and many relating to time yet to come, which we believe will be fulfilled just as literally as have those that have already been fulfilled. Let me read a few words of a revelation given March, 1831, some eleven months after the Church was organized. In talking about what should come to pass, the Lord revealed to Joseph:

"But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness, and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose.

"Zion shall flourish upon the hills and rejoice upon the mountains, and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed."

This was many years before the Latter-day Saints were driven from the States, and it talks in such plain terms concerning the gathering. The gathering is a unique principle in this Church, one that is not found in other churches. It is referred to in the Book of Mormon, and in the early revelations to the Church it is given to the people in great plainness. We are told in some of the revelations that the people should be gathered from all nations unto this land, which should be the land of Zion. When we now read about this, it may not seem so remarkable. But let us put ourselves back to the time when the Church numbered but a few members and was hardly known outside of a few counties, and remember that then the Lord told the Prophet that the work should be known in other lands and that the people should be gathered from all nations, and it becomes, indeed, marvelous unto us. Gradually our missionaries are reaching the different nations of the earth, and we have people here from every part of the earth, if not yet from every nation. Our missionaries are going in faith, proclaiming the truth. They are reaching one people after another. Nearly every nation in Europe has had the Gospel offered to them. I was reading a letter last night which Brother Hintze had received from Athens, Greece, a country where we have not yet done much missionary labor. Brother Hintze went there and preached the Gospel and the seed sown is germinating, and they want to be informed concerning the truth. Certain principles have struck them as true: others they do not understand yet. In the Donaw principalities we have a man laboring, who has already baptized several persons, and it will not be long before it can be said that all nations in Europe have been informed concerning the Gospel. And the myriads in Asia and Africa will yet have to hear the Gospel. The Lord is in His marvelous way preparing the way for the Gospel to be taught to men. I rejoice in contemplating the dealings of the Lord with this work of His, and my testimony to you is that God has established this work, and that He will see that it shall triumph in the earth. God bless you all, amen.

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

INVINCIBLE DETERMINATION.

"The longer I live," said Fowell Buxton, "the more deeply am I convinced that that which makes the difference between one man and another—between the weak and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy—invincible determination—a purpose once formed, and then death or victory." These beautiful words bespeak with spotless eloquence the secret of true greatness. The old maxim, "It is better to be born wise than rich," is a true one, and worthy our consideration.

The great men of the earth—the men whose names are chiseled on the monuments of history, whose records are engraved as examples of worth and honor; have not been men to lounge in wealth and splendor, to spend their precious moments in some trifling amusement, or trivial enjoyment. No! They were valiant, sturdy, energetic souls, whose invincible determination knew no defeat, and whose vigorous efforts surmounted every seeming obstacle. The men who have been truly great, whose lives we honor, whose acts we should emulate, and whose names we cherish and revere, have been men of muscle, brain, and power, who trod life's rugged way, and walked through trials, hardships, and temptations, instead of riding in the cushioned carriage with coachman, lackey, or postilion.

True greatness consists in doing, not in being done for; in helping one's self and others, instead of standing with arms akimbo and calling for assistance.

This was the divine counsel of the Lord Jesus to His Apostles, "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." It is the invincible determination, "to do," that characterizes the great man or woman. No matter how lowly one may be in the walks of life, how hidden and obscure from the public gaze or the world's plaudits, it is possible for such a one to be great, to wield an influence for good among those with whom he may associate. Those who have risen to eminence, whose names are found in the immortal niches of fame, have been perfectly willing to do the task alloted them to perform, without grumbling or shirking. Would we become as Paul and Timothy, "able ministers of the word of salvation," then we must shoulder the Cross, brave the perilous storms, stand close to the banner of Truth, unfurl the flag of righteousness, and be determined that, in the providence and will of God, we will win souls for Christ, and lambs for the Shepherd's fold.

We have the most glorious opportunities of becoming great, for unto us has been committed a dispensation of the Gospel, and we are placed in a position where we can exercise those traits and qualities which go to make illustrious men and women. We can be great, and wise, and good. We can wield an influence for righteousness, and become powers in the earth. It is not a lack of opportunity that makes one destitute of power and influence, but an inability to grasp the many opportunities and apply them to a proper use.

We can all be instruments in producing human happiness as well as human salvation. The secret of success, the keynote to the whole situation, is to have something righteous to do, and a determined will to do it. "I can't" has never accomplished anything, while "I'll try" has wrought apparent wonders. Invincible determination is what we all need to possess and practice. The exercise of this resolute will power will prove a help, a stimulus and an inspirer to noble deeds, and lofty accomplishments. Be humble, obedient, energetic and determined, then success awaits you in this life, and glory in the life that is to come.

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

It has been said that the turtle is the embodiment of several fleshy meats, such as chicken, beefsteak, veal, and possum, etc. This is very wonderful, it is true, but yet we have in Chattanooga one greater than the hard-shelled turtle—not in the line of fleshy varieties, but in the modus of entertaining specialties. Its crowning roof somewhat resembles the concave shell of the tortoise, but in other respects they differ widely. The denizens of Bushtown, Ninth street and other remote parts of Chattanooga, call it the Ninth Street Car, and, as such, it will ever grace the history of the municipality. Like many other good things in this world, the value and accommodation of this noted car can never be appreciated until one proves it for himself.

It is only five cents from transfer station to terminus, and if perchance your feet and sides are sore indeed from the ride, why you are at perfect liberty to walk back, providing you step from the track for regular cars. As to the variety of sports and amusements, a brief enumeration will suffice to arouse the curiosity of those who never stepped aboard this car. You can have a horseback ride with a medley of gaits—galloping, trotting, pacing, and single footing (but it is not wise to stand on a single foot), all being on the bill of out-door sports. The car will snort, pitch, rear and buck, and the railroad managers think in the near future that they can give you a fair example of a voyage on the large ocean liners, by letting the grade decline just a trifle, and the incline fall away a little span. High joints and low centers are the sole cause of this rock-away inland (or onland) bark, or vice versa. On Saturday, when the sun is hidden in the west and the arc lights cast their brilliant rays upon this level track, there is a fight between heavy colored-weights, or colored heavyweights, all seen and enjoyed for the one nominal sum—five cents—the scene of the affray being on the Ninth street car. It has been whispered that the decree has gone forth to the effect that hereon and after date all patrons of this famous charger shall supply themselves with a pair of extra heavy Spanish spurs, and prepare to hunt for leather; No class distinction is shown, but, like the famous Rough Riders at Santiago, every man takes his life in his own hands, pays his nickle, and keeps his standing, if he can't sit down or fall off.

The wise man, Ecclesiastes, says, "Is there anything whereof it may be said, See, this is new? It hath been already of old time, and there is no new thing under the sun." If perchance the great preacher lived in the days of old when Ninth street cars held sway, we are not surprised when we hear him exclaim, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit." "That which is crooked cannot be made straight; and that which is wanting cannot be numbered;" still there is room for redemption and plenty of chances for improvement on this railroad line.

The Secret of Health.

A contemporary gives these ten rules for maintaining one's health:

1. Keep warm.
2. Eat regularly and slowly.
3. Maintain regular bodily habits.
4. Take early and very light suppers, or, better still, none at all.
5. Keep a clean skin.
6. Get plenty of sleep at night.
7. Keep cheerful and respectable company.
8. Keep out of debt.
9. Don't set your mind on things you don't need.
10. Mind your own business.

Nothing wastes time like miscalculation. It negatives all results. It is the parent of incompleteness, the great author of the unfinished and the unserviceable.—Hamerton.

Without force one becomes the plaything of circumstances, the slave of the bread one eats, of the woman one loves, of the wealth that one possesses.—Success.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

THE HOLY GHOST.—Following the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins comes the promise of the Holy Ghost, and it is to this principle of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that we now direct our attention. In our brief investigation of this subject there is a passage of scripture which it would be well to learn and comprehend. The same is found in the writings of the beloved Apostle John, and is as follows: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." (II. John 9.)

Undoubtedly there is no principle of salvation so grossly misunderstood by the so-called Christian world, as this principle of the Holy Ghost. When it is received, its manifestations, power and effect, are a total mystery to modern Christendom. This is one of the doctrines of Christ, which has been clouded with error, shadowed by apostacy and hidden from the knowledge of men by the vain traditions and superstitions of the "Dark Ages."

To enlighten the mind of poor traditionated, deluded man upon this subject, required a beam of divine revelation, a bright ray of heavenly truth—the light and inspiration of the Spirit of God. When once this holy light was shed upon the good old Book the way of salvation was made so very plain, the path of life so simple and clear, and the office, work and mission of the Holy Ghost so easy to be understood. Without the inspiration of heaven mankind will ever wander in darkness; by the aid of the same, all may walk in the light.

We have said that the Holy Ghost is a principle of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, let us proceed to the "law and the testimony" as heretofore, and see if the word of God supports or condemns us in this declaration. Paul, in his letter to the Hebrews, says: "Let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands." (Heb. 6:1-2). Here we have mentioned as the "principles of the doctrine of Christ," faith, repentance, baptism and laying on of hands. (We shall find hereafter that the "laying on of hands" is for the reception of the Holy Ghost—the subject under consideration.)

Now, if the "laying on of hands" be, as Paul emphatically declares, a "principle of the doctrine of Christ," it, too, with the other principles mentioned, must be observed and obeyed, else the consequence —hath not God. "Without me, ye can do nothing," says the Lord, and here we have the "laying on of hands" given as a doctrine of Christ," with this distinct and definite understanding, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God."

Peter, we understand, preached unto those believing Jews on the day of Pentecost, that if they would repent and be baptized for the remission of sins, they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 2:39-41). And, furthermore, he gave them this blessed assurance, that the promise was unto "all that are afar off. even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Wherever the Gospel of salvation is preached, and men called to repentance, the promise of the Holy Ghost is given. Again, when the Apostles were being charged not to preach in the name of Jesus, by the council of the High Priests—Peter and the other Apostles answered and said, "We are His witnesses of these things (Christ's crucifixion and exaltation on the right hand of God as a Prince and Savior); and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts 5:28-32). Can anything be more plain than this; that God hath promised, and will give, the Holy Ghost unto those that obey Him? Is it not then recognized as a principle of salvation? And is it not essential that mankind should be in possession of the same, and understand somewhat of its gifts, powers and graces? Of course, we realize that our knowledge, at best, is imperfect, and merely "in part," but it is possible for us to obtain sufficient understanding concerning this power, that shall prompt us to desire its aid and assistance.

Our Savior said unto His Apostles: "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." (Luke 24:49). From these words it will be readily observed that this "power" was necessary to fit and qualify His chosen ones to preach His everlasting Gospel. He had told them that it was expedient that He should go away, "for," says He, "if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you" (John 16:7), "that He may abide with you forever." (John 14:16).

At the baptism of Jesus we read that "the Spirit of God descended like a dove." On the "day of Pentecost" "there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind," and to the Apostles there appeared "cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2). Being a spirit of intelligence, of power, wisdom, and knowledge, it is able to come, as we have seen, in the form of a dove, or as a mighty rushing wind, or in cloven tongues, like as of fire. If we would know some other forms it may take upon itself, let us turn to the 19th chapter of I. Kings, where we shall find that it may come as a "strong wind," "an earthquake," "a fire," and a "still small voice." (Verses 11-14).

The mission of the Holy Ghost can readily be understood from the words of Jesus, "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." (John 14:26). Here we have the direct words of the Master telling us that the Holy Ghost shall come to teach and bring past things to our remembrance. Again, the office work of this Spirit is defined by the Lord Jesus, when He says, "Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself, but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak; and He will shew you things to come. He shall not glorify me; for He shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you." (John 16:13-14).

The Holy Ghost is a Spirit of Truth, given unto all who obey God. It will teach the blest possessor the peaceable things of the heavenly kingdom, bring past things to his remembrance, show him things to come, and take of the things of the Father and reveal them unto him. These are some of the things which Jesus said the Holy Ghost would do for those who were made the recipients thereof: but, mind you, kind reader, this spirit of wisdom, of revelation, of prophecy, and of truth, is only bestowed upon the followers of the Lamb—those who render implicit obedience to the Gospel.

Paul, in writing to the Saints at Corinth, with a desire to have them become enlightened concerning spiritual gifts, says: "Wherefore I give you to understand that no man speaking by the Spirit calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." The manifestation of the spirit, then, is a testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ. He continues on to tell them how the gifts and operations of the Spirit are diversified. How that to one is given the spirit of testimony, to another "the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge; to another faith; to another the gifts of healing; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues." (I. Cor. 12:1-11). These gifts and manifestations are all the operations and work of the Holy Ghost, "dividing to every man severally as he will."

One may possess the spirit of God, and still not be blessed with all the gifts thereof; however, such a one will receive some manifestation of this divine power, which if cultivated and trained, will grow, increase, expand and enlarge.

The fruits of this spirit are clearly defined by the same Apostle in his epistle to the Galatian Saints: "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." (Gal. 5:22-23). It never ceases to bear these righteous fruits, and the manifestation of these Christian traits enables one to distinguish between the true possessor of the Spirit of God and the mere professor of the religion of Jesus. "By their fruits ye shall know them," was the counsel Jesus gave, so, therefore, we may know those who have been born of the Spirit by the exhibition of these precious fruits, and no matter how loud a man may profess to be a Christian, if he fails to reveal the fruits of the Spirit, we know he is lacking the same, for it is fruitful and fertile; consequently he is not a true follower of the Lord Jesus.

Having seen that it is a principle of the doctrine of Christ; having briefly reviewed some of the forms taken; having seen what it will do for those possessing its divine influence; having touched upon the manifestations and fruits thereof, let us now see when we may expect to receive it, and the preparation requisite to its reception. We find in our study of the good word, that the Apostles of the Lord Jesus had labored in the ministry with Christ some three years after baptism before they received the Holy Ghost as an abiding comforter. (Acts 1-5; 2:4). The people of Samaria, to whom Philip preached the word of God, "believed and were baptized," the scriptures inform us, before they received the Holy Ghost. (Acts 8:5-20). Then we have those twelve disciples at Ephesus whom Paul met. They had believed, for the Apostle said, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" (Acts 19:2). Before they received the Holy Ghost, however, they were "baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." (5th verse). The sign of the Holy Ghost descended upon the Lord Jesus, after His baptism in the waters of Jordan. (Matt. 3:16). And to Nicodemus the Master said, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3:5). In all these examples, then, we have the Spirit of Truth following, and not preceding obedience to the principles of faith and repentance, and the initiatory ordinance of baptism. Of course, it is the spirit and holy influence of God's might and power which leads us to render ourselves obedient to His will; but for us to possess this Gift of the Holy Ghost, as a Guide and Companion, that it may be the Man of our counsel, our Comforter, and Instructor, it becomes absolutely necessary that we comply with God's command, i. e., that we exercise faith in Him, repent of all sins, and be immersed in baptism for the remission thereof. Thus we see and understand from the scriptures quoted that we must be prepared for the reception of the Gift of the Holy Ghost. Our bodies become the receptacle or tabernacle of the Holy Spirit, hence the vital importance of a thorough preparation, that we may receive the same to the awakening of our souls, the quickening of our spiritual facties, the enlightening of our minds, and that it may continue to abide with us forever. The prayer of David, the sweet singer of ancient Israel, was this, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me." (Psalms 51:10). The Psalmist knew that the cleansing of the heart was the first thing required, and the renewing of the right spirit a blessing to follow. So it is, and thus it will always be. The destruction of the body of sin in baptism, the crucifixion of the "old man" with all his evil ways, and then the bestowing of the Gift of the Holy Ghost as an additional grace to help fallible man to shun the ways of wickedness, to depart from the precipices of vice and ruin, and cling to the truth, hold fast to the good, and gain the best of all good gifts—Eternal Life—is the order of procedure in the Gospel plan.

Upon one occasion, when Jesus had been declaring Himself to be the bread of life to believers, He said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." (John 6:63). "It is the spirit that quickeneth." The theory and philosophy of life is that, like life produces like life, and proceeds from antecedent life. The spirit of God proceeds from the throne of God, and is a spirit of life, of light, intelligence and power. In imparting life, contact becomes a necessity. To impart or bestow this spiritual life, contact is likewise necessary, as in the vegetable or animal kingdom. This, then, leads us up to the subject as to how the Holy Ghost is conferred as a Gift upon repentant, baptized believers. Just a few citations as conclusive proof of the value of contact or touch, in the imparting of this spiritual fluid, known as the Holy Ghost. Mark, the sacred historian, records a very remarkable incident in the life of Jesus. "A certain woman which had an issue of blood twelve years," having faith in the Lord, and desirous of being healed, pushed her way through the crowd that thronged about Him, and touched His garment. Immediately was she healed of that plague. "And Jesus immediately knowing in Himself that virtue had gone out of Him, turned Him about in the press and said, Who touched my clothes?" (Mark 5:25-34). The Apostles marveled at His question, "Who touched my clothes?" for they knew that the crowd were thronging about Him. Here is an instance where the efficacy of touch was made manifest. Again Luke tells us, that "the whole multitude sought to touch Him; for there went virtue out of Him, and healed them all." (Luke 6:19). Matthew also says that the people "besought Him that they might only touch the hem of His garment; and as many as touched were made perfectly whole." (Matt. 14:36).

The significance of touch or contact to impart, from one organism to another, the eternal fluid of spiritual life, is readily perceived in the divine examples given above. The Savior, a holy, perfect Being, was full of the spirit of His Father; yea, more, His very garments were charged with that heavenly influence, and by preparation and faith they (who desired to be healed) touched His clothing, and sufficient of the healing spirit passed from Him to them to cleanse their infirmities. He perceived the same, and said, "Who touched me?" In the scientific world it has been proven by varied experiments that Life can only come from the touch of Life. Huxley declares that this doctrine of "life only from life, is victorious along the whole line at the present day."

The healing properties of the Holy Spirit were received by the faithful, by reason of touch or contact. Jesus possessed the same, with all power to impart unto others, and we shall see that this same power was conferred upon His servants. Inasmuch as this theory of life (Life can only come from the touch of Life) is proven in the scientific world, we shall proceed to see how the Gift of the Holy Ghost was bestowed upon the obedient believers in the days of Christ and the Apostles, and endeavor to find out if such is verily true as pertains to the spiritual life. "It is the spirit that quickeneth." The gift of healing, as illustrated in the examples of our Lord, is only one of the many gifts of the Holy Ghost. This gift came by virtue of touch —faith being co-existent with the act. Does the Gift of the Holy Ghost, promised unto all that obey God, come in like manner, that is, is this Gift imparted or bestowed through the method of touch or contact?

Do What You Feel You Should.

If you've any task to do,
Let me whisper, friend, to you,
Do it.

If you've anything to say,
True and needed, yea or nay,
Say it.

If you've anything to love,
As a blessing from above,
Love it.

If you've anything to give,
That another's joy may live,
Give it.

If some hollow creed you doubt,
Though the whole world hoot and shout,
Doubt it.

If you've any debt to pay,
Rest you neither night nor day,
Pay it.

If you've any joy to hold,
Near your heart, lest it grow cold,
Hold it.

If you've any grief to meet,
At a loving father's feet,
Meet it.

If you know what torch to light,
Guiding others in the night,
Light it.

THE DEAD.

Willie T. Fielder passed away from this mortal probation July 2d, 1900. He was born Sept. 3d, 1866, and the cause of his demise in the very prime of manhood was a severe attack of typhoid fever. His death was peaceful, and when the last breath of life left its mortal tabernacle, he passed away, as a little one rocked to sleep. Brother Fielder was not a member of the Church, but was a bold and fearless defender of the faith of the Latter-day Saints. His house was always open as a refuge for the weary Elders, a haven of rest for the pilgrim of peace. Brother Fielder leaves a sorrowing wife and three sweet children to mourn his loss. May God bless and prepare them to meet their loved one in the morning of the first resurrection.

J. F. Forns, of Grantsboro, Pamlico county, N. C., died July 14th, 1900. Like Brother Fielder, he was not a member of the Church, but was a warm-hearted, true friend to the Elders. May the peace and blessings of Heaven attend all those who are called to mourn his loss. The time of meeting soon cometh, and we can then lift up our heads and greet our blessed loved ones.

It is with a feeling of sorrow that we record the death of Gracy Peters, the little daughter of Brother and Sister J. H. Peters, of Wolf Valley, Tenn. She had been sick but four days, and passed away on the 23d ult. The sympathy of Elders, Saints and friends is extended to the loved ones, and may they enjoy the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit in their time of sorrow.

A skeptical young man confronted an old Quaker with the statement that he did not believe in the Bible. The Quaker said:

"Dost thou not believe in France?"

"Yes, though I have not seen it, I have seen others that have; besides there is plenty of corroborative proof that such a country does exist."

"Then thee will not believe anything thee or others have not seen?"

"No, to be sure I won't."

"Did thee ever see thine own brains?"

"No."

"Ever see anybody that did?"

"No."

"Does thee believe thee has any?"

Much of the failure in this world may be attributed to the fact that too many people are firing at the bull's-eye of success with blank cartridges.—Success.

History of the Southern States Mission.

October, 1898.—On the 9th inst. a special fast day was sanctified in behalf of the sick Elders—especially Elder Thos. R. Condie, who was stricken down with yellow fever. By the blessings of the Lord and the prayers of faith, with fasting, he was restored from the dreadful plague.

For some time there had been much talk of publishing a Mission paper, as an aid to the work in the Southern States, a comfort to the Saints, and a benefit to the Elders. The subject was laid before the authorities, the result being a favorable response, and a hearty approval. Elder D. P. Felt was called in from the field to take charge of this important work, under the direction of the Mission President.

Another matter which had been suggested many times now came up for due consideration and adoption. It was this: The Elders had long felt the need of some book which they could use as a "running mate" for that choice little gem of inspired truth, "The Voice of Warning," and "Mr. Durant, of Salt Lake City." "That Mormon" was chosen to fill the emergency. With the consent and indorsement of the First Presidency, President Rich permitted his little work to take its place as a co-laborer and silent preacher of righteousness with the choice catalogue of books, tracts and dodgers then in general use, publishing the same on his own responsibility, and it was decided to print the book in size like "The Voice of Warning," the cost about equal thereto.

On the 25th inst. the following Elders arrived from Salt Lake City: Sylvester Low, Jr., Wm. I. Burk, Elijah Orton, John F. Perkins, Andrew O. Madsen, Chas. S. Anderson, Benham Hunsaker, W. W. MacKay, Willard G. Atkin and Brigham L. Tippets.

The month closed with the work prospering for the most part, although in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana the Elders were handicapped to some extent, owing to quarantine regulations. Elder Orson Wilkins arrived from Zion on the last day of the present month.

November, 1898.—The following Elders arrived on the 3d, 7th and 10th, respectively: Keenes R. Sowards, Christo Hyldahl and W. B. Parkinson. President Rich returned from the west on the 9th and reported an enjoyable time with the Saints and leaders in Zion. The Elders in Atlanta were visited and counseled as to work in that city.

From the North Carolina Conference came the following letter, which explains the bitter feeling prevalent on the east coast, where the Elders met with such marked success just one year ago. The letter was headed Colon, N. C., and dated Nov. 9, 1898, being addressed to President Ben E. Rich: "Dear Brother:—The Elders are having a hard fight in the eastern counties. The ministers are well organized and doing all they can to prejudice the people and stay the progress of the work. Two of the Elders who are laboring in Pamlico county received a very warm reception the first night they conducted services. Sixteen buckshot were fired into the building and several pistol shots were heard on the outside. Lewis Swensen."

On the 21st another company of Elders arrived in Chattanooga, to spend Thanksgiving day with the good, hospitable people of the south. They were given some excellent and timely instructions before leaving for their fields of labor. Sixteen composed the chosen band, their names being as follows: Riego S. Hawkins, Philo V. Carter, James J. Facer, Wm. J. Sutherland, J. W. E. Scott, Ulysses S. Cline, James T. Rich, Daniel Wells Grover, Joseph S. Cazier, Chas. C. Town, David C. Shupe, W. A. Call, Matthew A. Clouse, Elijah R. DeWitt, Wm. Larson and Milan C. Miller.

Very little sickness existed at the close of the month, and the general report showed the Elders to be making good headway and feeling well spiritually.

December, 1898.—Word was received on the 1st that another of our meeting houses had been burned in Kentucky by some red-handed, lawless incendiary. The scene of the conflagration occurred in the East Kentucky Conference, at Vanceburg, Kentucky. It was near midnight of Sept. 18th when the Church on Blaine creek was set on fire by a drunken mob, and now the good Saints of Kentucky once more suffered the loss of a meeting house.

President George A. Lyman sent in a full report of the occurrence, which can be found on page 63 of Vol. I.

Twenty-one Elders arrived on the 20th inst. to swell the ranks of Zion's army in the South. Their names were as follows: W. D. Rencher, George F. Cornish, James Smith, Peter Kingsford, Charles J. Howard, R. L. Jensen, David R. Morgan, Edmond S. Parkinson, Chas. E. Wright, Samuel A. Watton, L. J. Willis, Orin M. Hess, W. J. Staples, Jas. D Taylor, Chas. Edward Hancock, Chas. N. Corbridge, Chas. Gilbert, Geo. A. Griffith, Edwin S. Budge, Wilford Bennion, and R. L. Houtz.

With the close of the month came also the close of one of the most eventful years in the history of the Church, and also of the mission. President Wilford Woodruff had been called to leave this sphere of mortality and soar aloft to brighter worlds and fairer scenes. Apostle Lorenzo Snow had been called to stand at the helm of the Ship of Zion as a seer, prophet and revelator unto all Israel, to succeed his noble predecessor. As the wheels of Time roll round and round, so the little stone is rolling and increasing in its progress and advancement. Over 1,200 souls have been added to the true fold of the Good Shepherd Jesus in the south, and the good work is advancing. The year c loses, and the noble warriors of the Lord's army are standing in line, shoulder to shoulder, united and determined to conquer error wheresoever it may be found.

THE GREAT ARMY OF "SILVER GREYS."

Juvenile Instructor, Aug. 1, 1900.

Every visitor to Utah is impressed with the large proportion of aged people in the community. We who reside here would notice the same thing, if it were not that we have become so accustomed to it that it seems to us quite regular. We meet and know so many who in other places would be called old that we cease to regard either the surprising number of them or their great weight of years. It seems so natural with us for men and women to live to a great age that almost anybody with less than seventy or eighty years is regarded as only of middle age, and if such a person dies, he or she is mourned as one who, if not cut down in the prime of life, had at least several years of usefulness ahead. Men's heads become silvered with the snows of many winters; women lose their freshness of countenance and bend a little through many years of work and care; and yet their general health continues good and their faculties are bright and keen as ever. They grow old as a sound and vigorous tree grows old; not shriveling and withering but giving forth even more of wisdom's fruit and beneficent shade, retaining their usefulness and beauty of character to the last.

No one who has attended what we call an "Old Folks' Excursion" needs further proof of the correctness of the remarks above made. This annual excursion or entertainment of the veterans is a peculiarly Utah institution, or rather it is peculiar to the Latter-day Saints, whether in Utah or elsewhere—though its benefits are not confined to members of this Church by any means. It is a beautiful custom. It gives the aged, of whatsoever name or faith or color, to understand that on this particular occasion everybody is prepared to do them honor. The town or the resort they visit is completely theirs, for the time being. The steam and street railways, the wagons and carriages, are also theirs—and woe to any employe or driver who would act gruffly or impatiently to even the humblest of them. Reaching their destination the best that the land affords is spread lavishly before them. Their slightest want is ministered to by the youth and beauty of the vicinity. Then their games or contests, the various competitions for which appropriate prizes are offered, their delightful reminiscences, their gladness and gratitude—what a splendid occasion it is, and how charming and memorable to all those who take part in or even witness it!

But why should not people live to be old, under the shadow of these mighty mountains and under the teachings of the true Gospel? There is an inspiration to longevity in the sight and contemplation of the "everlasting hills." In the observance of the laws of God there is not only life eternal, but also health and life temporal. All the conditions favor the attaining of greater age than people in the world are accustomed to look for. The air and influences which surround us are of the best—at least the other kind can easily be escaped. Grinding toil, as the world understands the term, is unknown to us. Of course there is hard work, and plenty of it; but with it there is freedom and peace and the happy assurance that what we strive for we shall either enjoy ourselves, or our children will after us. Then how perfect is the Gospel in its instructions as to man's welfare, both here and hereafter! Its strict requirement as to the observance of the Sabbath —one day's rest in seven! Its plain advice and word on temperance in all things and on abstaining from the things which "are not good for man!" Its glorious promises to those who abide these commandments, as to health, endurance, vigor and length of life! People cannot help but live to be old under such surroundings.

As to the aged among the Latter-day Saints, it may further be said that they represent the stoutest and best types of the people from whom they were gathered. It has always required some courage to become a "Mormon." That faith has been unpopular. Its believers have had to endure the scorn of those with whom they had previously been associated. To join the Church meant frequently, loss of employment, of friends, of family affection even, sometimes. The willingness to incur these penalties (for such they would be called by most people) for the sake of obedience to conscience and conviction, indicated in the outset a strength of character beyond the ordinary, a degree of sturdiness that comparatively few possess. It is true that these are mental attributes rather than physical; but will any one deny that mental strength has a great deal to do with physical health and energy?

The remarks last made necessarily apply to those who accepted the Gospel in their native lands. The Church has only been established seventy years, so those who may be called veterans in years could not have been born in it. But there is no reason why their descendants should not inherit longevity along with the other virtues displayed by their parents. On the contrary, there is every reason why they should do so, and in an increased degree. They ought not only to possess the health and vigor of their sires, but their improved surroundings ought to add to it. Freed from the traditions of their ancestors, they ought to be able to live more completely the laws of God. These, as already stated, carry their own sure reward with them. Then the honor they do the old folks is in itself a promise that we shall always have lots of veterans; for by the great Creator Himself is it not said of those who honor their father and mother that "their days shall be long in the land?"

DON'T BE IN A HURRY TO GET INTO PRINT.

Charles Dudley Warner, in Success.

A little trumpeting at the start has ruined many a promising writer. It usually happens in this way: A young man or woman writes something that sounds well. It is praised by the young person's friends. The composition goes to an editor. Perhaps it is printed. Again the friends shower their praises. The youthful author feels that his reputation is made, and that very little hard work is before him.

"Never was a greater mistake made. Few people realize that literature is a trade and an art. The trade must first be mastered. There are mechanical rules to be learned and utilized, just as much as in any manual work. To go through the period of apprenticeship in the trade, then develop into an artisan, and finally become a real artist, requires a long, steady, and oftentimes discouraging struggle. Nearly every person who can write a good letter thinks himself perfectly competent to write a story for a magazine, and, indeed, much above penning a communication to a first-class newspaper. Little does that person appreciate that the gulf between him and the real writer is almost immeasurable.

"But it is, and this fact must be burned into the brain of everyone who wants to do great writing. Work, work, work, is the only rule. Write, and keep on writing, and never think what you have written amounts to much unless you have worked at it for a long time. Even then you should be your most severe critic.

"I do not think much of the new writers, as a class. So much is being written that most of it must necessarily be poor. Literature is being commercialized so rapidly that little first-class work can be expected. Genius cannot be created by offerings of so much a word. A few year's work on a daily newspaper forms the best training for a writer. There the young man or woman gets very close to the world. It becomes possible to know what people of all classes are thinking of, and how they look at things. A newspaper reporter should make his every story the very best he is capable of writing, so that each will be at least a little better than the one that went before it. He should write with the same care he would exercise if he were writing something to which he was to sign his name. Meantime outside reading must not be omitted by him. In fact, it is very important. The newspaper is liable to work very harmful results unless there is a flow of light from the best writers constantly illuminating the mind of the young people. If a reporter is working in a large city, where schools and colleges are available, he should seek to take some work in one of these. Then he will have practiced hand to guide his reading. As to rules for writing, the best one I have ever known is this: Never write anything, if possible to avoid it, in the same way it has been done before. Shun hackneyed phrases. If a writer sticks to this, he is very soon likely to have a style of his own. But above all things else, don't rush into print."

In these days of Bible "higher-criticism" and discredit in the Old Testament it is good to notice what wholesome approval and confirmation the old Scriptures received from our Lord in that He studiously fulfilled the prophecies in their minuteness. In this act—the riding on the foal of an ass, the Master fulfilled faithfully the prophecy of His servant, Zechariah, made 500 years before. In this beautiful performance we see the nature of the Lord's mission portrayed. "They lifted him upon the colt, and the triumphal procession set forth. It was no seditious movement to stir up political enthusiasm, no insulting vanity to commemorate ambitious triumph. Nay, it was the mere outburst of provincial joy, the simple exultation of poor Galileans and despised Disciples. He rides not upon a war horse, but on an animal which was the symbol of peace. The haughty Gentiles, had they witnessed the humble procession, would have utterly derided it, but the Apostles recalled in after days that it fulfilled the prophecy of Zechariah: 'Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; s hout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee; He is meek, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.' Yes, it was a procession of very lowly pomp, and yet beside it how do the grandest triumphs of aggressive war and unjust conquest sink into utter insignificance and disgrace."—Farrar.

LINES

Respectfully Inscribed to the Departing Missionaries.

Shrink not from the task assigned you,
Though sore trials you may meet,
While the souls who lived before ye,
Trod this path with bleeding feet.
Hungered, thirsty, faint and shoeless,
Traveling o'er the dreary plains;
Scoffed, reviled, and oft maltreated—
Starved in dungeons, bound in chains.

When beset by opposition,
And the tempter's subtle wiles,
Give no heed to his begullings—
This will gain you angels' smiles.
Yea, Jehovah will support you,
And your enemies confound,
And the hand that's raised against ye
Weak and powerless shall be found.

Take no thought for food or clothing—
God has said He would provide;
If you valiant do your duty,
Strictly in his word confide.
He will bid His watchful angels
Guard your footsteps front and rear;
Heaven will aid ye, God will bless ye,
You've no cause for doubt or fear.

Should you labor all your lifetime,
Saving only one poor soul;
Oh, how pleased will be the meeting,
When ye greet in heavenly goal.
Yes, while laboring in the vineyard,
When the vintage it be o'er;
Garnered sheaves will sure reward ye,
A thousand times, yea, more and more.

Heed not scoffing unbelievers,
When they vent their furious wrath;
And would fain do violence to ye,
And like fiends beset your path.
Know that He who's work you're doing
Has you in His watchful care;
Nothing 'scaping His keen vigils,
E'en the falling of a hair.

Shrink not, shirk not, fill the mission
God requires it at your hands;
Count it but a pleasing duty,
Filling one of God's commands.
Fret not 'bout the absent loved ones,
They are seen by watchful eye;
He who notes the sparrow's falling,
Feeds the ravens when they cry.

Ever meekly, lowly walking,
Place implicit faith in God;
Realizing 'tis an honor,
You to wield the "Iron Rod."
Not forgetting Saints are praying
For your welfare day and night;
And before the throne are pleading,
In circles sacred, rob'd in white.

We, the Saints, now here assembled,
Very kindly say farewell;
Devoid are we of tears and sobbing,
Realizing that all is well.
Go in peace, return in safety,
Ever kept by His right hand,
Is the fervent supplication
Of the Saints in Dixie land.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder J. G. Bolton.

When Elder B. F. Price was honorably released to return to the home of his loved ones, the responsibility of taking charge of Kentucky Conference affairs was intrusted to him whose portrait is here given, Elder J. G. Bolton.

Brother Bolton was born June 19th, 1876, at Mill Creek, Salt Lake county, Utah. He is a thoroughbred Utahn,

ELDER J. G. BOLTON.
President of Kentucky Conference.

for his parents—Charles G. and Priscilla O.—also first saw the light of day in the land of the setting sun, 'neath the shade of the towering Rockies.

Home being the sweetest place on earth for Brother Bolton, we naturally enough find him spending most of his time 'round the hearth, or on the farm, with the exception of the time when attending the Central Seminary and University.

It was on the 13th of April, 1899, that Brother Bolton bade the good folks adieu and left for his mission to the Southern States. He was appointed to labor in the Kentucky Conference, and for the first year his time was spent as a canvassing Elder, afterwards as a Counsellor, and finally as President. In a recent letter he says: "It has been my desire to serve God and do my duty to my fellow-brothers." This is his motto, and a better one cannot be conceived. We look for the work to grow and spread under his supervision, as it has done under the wise direction of his predecessors.

History of the Southern States Mission.

January, 1899—The record of 1898 is now written in the Volume of the Past, and old Father Time has sealed the book, and clasped its lids. The acts of men are indelibly engraved thereon, and those who have maliciously reviled and persecuted the Saints of God, or the Elders of Israel during the year just passed, will some day meet their reward, and be called upon to give an account of their evil deeds before the flaming bar of God's eternal justice. Though the record is sealed, the history written, their actions chronicled, still there is yet an opportunity for an erasure to be made, a blessed privilege granting unto them repentance and forgiveness. The records on earth are only a facsimile of the sacred rolls written by the recording angel of God and kept in the archives of Heaven's lofty vaults. When "the books" are opened, and we stand up for judgment before our Savior, Jesus, if we have not made good use of this preparatory probation, and have not repented of our sins and transgressions and have failed to render obedience to the Gospel plan, and give glory unto God, the penalty will be uttered, and our sentence we may read, "Depart from me ye that work iniquity into outward darkness. I never knew you."

The new year dawned with the prospects fair for a noble work to be performed by the Elders. In order to facilitate the work of the Elders and that the results may loom up in good round numbers, President Rich decided to visit all the Elders, become acquainted with them as a brother, and associated with them in their modus operandi. The Conference Presidents were informed of this intention, and told to prepare to have their Elders assemble together within the next three months.

Sister Nina Rich arrived at the office on the 14th inst. to act as housekeeper and matron.

As history bears record of all things, both sweet and bitter, joyous and sorrowful, so it becomes our duty to inscribe the death of Brother Sampson O. Hale, a local traveling Elder in the South Alabama Conference. Elder Hale was called into active missionary work in the summer of 1898. At the time of his demise he was laboring in company with Elder W. C. Carver in Monroe county, Alabama. Elder Hale was born in what is now known as Provo, Monroe county, Alabama, April 18th, 1862. Coming of humble parentage, his youthful days were spent in arduous toil upon the farm. He had a valiant spirit, was bold, fearless, faithful and true. It was in January, 1896, that he was baptized into the Church, and since that time until his spirit left its mortal home, he was energetic in assisting to disseminate the truths of the Gospel among his fellowmen.

The remains of Brother Hale were taken by wagon and rail a distance of fifty miles to his grief-stricken relatives, whom he had left. His family—a wife and two children—bore their sorrow with marked humility, long suffering and patient fortitude. He was put to rest in the land of his nativity. Appropriate services were conducted by the Elders present, consoling remarks being made to cheer the bereaved and gladden the mourners. His life was one of noble acts; his character made up of noble Christ-like attributes. To those who knew him, he was a true brother and a faithful friend. The good he did will never die, and never be forgotten.

On the 12th inst. Elder George W. Williams arrived from Salt Lake City, and was assigned to labor in the Florida Conference. On the 23d a company of twenty-four arrived in Chattanooga. Among this noble band were two of Elder Berry's valiant sons—he who was cruelly martyred in Lewis county with Elder Gibbs, August, 1884. (See page 225, Vol. 1.) The Elders were as follows: Ben L. Rich, Thomas N. East, George O. Curtis, Jacob A. Hancock, Edward T. Lofgreen, John McIntosh, John M. Haws, F. H. Whittle, James J. Thompson, John E. Myler, James J. Buttars, Charles E. Atkinson, Bert Hoopes, F. W. Karren, George A. Brower, Jesse Arthur Berry, John William Berry, John Alma Stapley, Emery Barrus, Preston A. Bushman, Aaron Jacobsen, Jr., Clarence O. Cherry, G. M. Porter, and James S. Castleton.

On the 28th inst. William Irvin arrived, and was assigned to labor in Florida. The Elders all left for their fields feeling well, and determined to be useful in the work of the Lord.

The month closed with the health of the Elders generally well, and the work progressing.

Business men who are accustomed to write standing before a high desk will appreciate the following story:

Prof. Simon J. Brown, the astronomical director of the naval observatory at Washington, was standing, as usual, before his desk, when a colleague came into his office.

"Is it possible," said he, "that you work in that way? I can't stand standing."

"That's odd," replied the professor: "it's different with me. I can't stand sitting."—Exchange.

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

The Holy Ghost—How Conferred.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

We have concluded that the gift of the Holy Ghost is the spiritual life of man, giving unto him an inspired intelligence, pertaining to things heavenly and eternal, and a knowledge of the things of God pertaining to the gospel and gifts of salvation. As we have heretofore seen its purpose is to reveal the glory of God the Father, bear testimony of Christ the Son, and lead the sons of men from error into all truth, from darkness into light divine.

We read in Deuteronomy that "Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him." (Deut. 34:9.) The "spirit of wisdom" here spoken of by Moses can mean no other spirit than the Gift of the Holy Ghost, for we have already noted this fact: that one of the many gifts of the spirit is the gift of wisdom. "Moses had laid his hands upon him." The result of the action of Moses was the imparting of the "spirit of wisdom." In this instance, then, the laying on of hands was the means applied to produce the end—the imparting of the "spirit of wisdom." We have not forgotten that Paul makes mention of the "laying on of hands" as one of the doctrines of Christ. (Heb. 6:2.)

Coming down the stream of time, we find Peter, standing at the head of the Church on earth, as the chief Apostle, promising unto the people the gift of the Holy Ghost, and, with the Apostle John, practicing the laying on of hands to bestow the same upon baptized believers. Let us investigate the incident referred to: Philip had been commissioned by authority to go and preach the word of the living God unto the people of Samaria. He did so, and was very successful in ministering the Gospel, insomuch that "they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," and "were baptized, both men and women." "Now when the Apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; (FOR AS YET HE WAS FALLEN UPON NONE OF THEM; ONLY THEY WERE BAPTIZED IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." (Acts 8:10-17.)

It is self-evident, and beyond the cavil of disputers, that on this occasion the Holy Ghost was given through the laying on of hands, and we must not overlook this remarkable fact: that the participants in the bestowal were none other than the two leading Apostles, who were the highest Church officials on earth. Would it be reasonable, probable, or feasible, to suppose for one moment that they made a mistake, and adopted a practice not in accordance with the teachings of the Master? No, verily no! Simon the sorcerer, who had beforetime bewitched those people of Samaria, when he "saw that through the laying on of the Apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money." (18-20 verses.)

In the next chapter of Acts we have one Ananias, a servant of the Lord, sent by the voice of Jesus to minister the ordinances of salvation unto the repentant Saul of Tarsus: "And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." (Acts 9:17.) The same ordinance as practiced by Moses and Peter: and, as some contend that it was only Apostles in the days of Jesus who held that power, it would be well to note right here that Ananias was not an Apostle, but "a disciple," holding the authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (10th verse.) We have, then, thus far, the example of Moses, Peter and John and Ananias. The Lord Jesus also led His disciples out as far as Bethany, "and He lifted up His hands and blessed them." (Luke 24:50.) This was His last act before His ascension, and afterwards they were filled with the Holy Ghost according to divine promise. (Acts 2:4.)

"Paul, having passed through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on Him who should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied" (Acts 19:1-6.) Here is another remarkable incident given in the sacred word, to show unto us that the Holy Ghost came through the method of laying on of hands. The baptism of John was valid, it is true, but those people had not been baptized unto the baptism of John, as they supposed. By saying "unto John's baptism" they evidently meant, by immersion, but the authority from God was lacking, the administrator of the ordinance was an imposter, hence Paul baptized them over again, and then laid his hands upon them that they might receive the Holy Ghost. John's baptism is efficacious and effective—it means to be immersed by one having authority from God to administer in the ordinances of the Gospel.

This same apostle wrote to Timothy and said, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery" [Elders] (I Tim. 4:14.)

Again, in his second epistle to Timothy he exhorts him thus: "Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee by the putting on of my hands." (II. Tim. 1:6.) Let us see now, when Simon bargained with the Apostles to purchase the gift of the Holy Ghost with money, Peter rebuked him, saying, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money." (Acts 8:20.) Paul tells Timothy to "stir up the gift of God," and Peter informs Simon that this "gift of God" (the Holy Ghost) is not to be bought with money. Then Paul evidently referred to the gift of the Holy Ghost which Timothy possessed, for we have seen that these two—"gift of God," and "gift of the Holy Ghost," are used as synonymous terms.

From these plain scriptural declarations we can readily see that this ordinance of "laying on of hands" for the reception of the Holy Spirit was taught anciently by Moses and the Prophets; that it was practiced in the "meridian of time" by Jesus and His Apostles, and that Paul enumerated it as one of the doctrines of Christ. Could we crave further scriptural evidence, with the abundance of proof cited? Can we be consistent, and beg the question by saying, "It is not plain enough—I can't understand, and the Lord will not condemn me for my ignorance?" Such would be altogether unreasonable and unjust! We can understand and know the purposes and will of God, as regards our actions, and what we should obey! We need not grope around in spiritual darkness and blinded ignorance, for the Lord has promised to give wisdom unto all who ask in faith, and fill with the Holy Spirit such as obey His commandments.

The ordinance of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, is philosophic, scientific, scriptural and consistent. Of course we know that the administrator must in and of himself possess this power, or he can never impart it unto others. This authority to administer in the ordinances of the Gospel, is given unto all who are called of God, either by direct revelation, or as Aaron was called. Paul says: "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." (Heb. 5:4.) The administrator must possess the power, and the applicant be thoroughly prepared for its reception by faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins.

We have seen, then, that the gift of the Holy Ghost is given after the same order as was the gift of healing in the instances related in previous number; namely, by touch or contact, or better, rather, as Paul says, "by the laying on of hands." Some admit that the Jews should receive the Holy Ghost by the imposition of hands, but claim that the Gentiles would receive Him without the imposition of hands. We have shown heretofore that God made "no difference" between Gentile and Jew (Acts 15:9). and again, we would draw your attention to the fact that Timothy's mother was a Jewess, while his father was a Greek, yet Paul laid his hands upon him for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

The ecclesiastical historians of the early centuries have made special mention of this ordinance, and we will take the liberty of quoting from their writings a few brief extracts:

Turtullian says (in the second century) "After baptism succeeded the laying on of hands, with prayer, calling for the Holy Ghost." Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage, says (in third century), "They obtain by our prayer and imposition of hands the Holy Ghost." Mosheim, speaking of the third century: "The Bishop, by prayer and the imposition of hands, conferred the Holy Ghost." Augustine said (in the fourth century), "We still do what the Apostles did when they laid their hands on the Samaritans and called down the Holy Ghost upon them." Eusebius says (p. 113), speaking of Novation, after admitting that sprinkling was not baptism: "Nor was he sealed by the Bishop's imposition of hands; which, if never received, how did he receive the Holy Ghost?"

These historical notes give added evidence to the scriptural declarations already quoted. The sacred historians bear record of this ordinance, and the profane writers chronicle the same facts on the pages of history. They join hand in hand in proclaiming to the earnest investigator for truth the order of affairs practiced and pursued under the direction and supervision of "Living Oracles," and as we, kind reader, are seeking to put ourselves in harmony with God and His laws, that we might through obedience obtain His greatest gift unto fallen man, it behooves us to weigh this all-important subject in the scale of divine truth, and in humble prayer seek wisdom at the throne of our Father in Heaven.

We may not be able to define this blessed gift, this heavenly power, the gift of the Holy Ghost. It is a testimony to the senses, and all who receive the same are able to bear record of its benign and peaceful presence. We cannot tell others just how it operates and comes, or goes. Jesus, in His conversation with Nicodemus, said: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." (John 3:8.) We cannot see the wind, but we feel it, and breathe it. It is within us, and round about us. We also perceive its effects on other objects. The gentle swaying of the trees, the motions of the quivering leaves, the rapid moving of the passing clouds, are all evidences of the existence of wind. So everyone who is born of the Spirit, who have received the gift of the Holy Ghost, has an internal evidence which gives them a testimony of things eternal, and their words and acts testify to others that the Spirit enlightens their souls, and prompts them to perform deeds of righteousness.

The effect of the Holy Ghost on the individual is beautifully described by an inspired servant of the Most High God, who wrote thus: "An intelligent being, in the image of God, possesses every organ, attribute, sense, sympathy, affection of will, wisdom, love, power and gift, which is possessed by God Himself. But these are possessed by man in his rudimental state in a subordinate sense of the word. Or, in other words, these attributes are in embryo, and are to be gradually developed. They resemble a bud, a germ, which gradually developes into bloom, and then, by progress, produces the mature fruits after its own kind. The gift of the Holy Spirit adapts itself to all these organs or attributes. It quickens all the intellectual faculties, increases, enlarges, expands and purifies all the natural passions and affections, and adapts them by the gift of wisdom, to their lawful use. It inspires, developes, cultivates and matures all the fine-toned sympathies, joys, tastes, kindred feelings and affections of our nature. It inspires virtue, kindness, goodness, tenderness, gentleness and charity. It developes beauty of person, form and features. It tends to health, vigor, animation and social feeling. It developes and invigorates all the faculties of the physical and intellectual man. It strengthens, invigorates and gives tone to the nerves. In short, it is, as it were, marrow to the bone, joy to the heart, light to the eyes, music to the ears, and life to the whole being." (Parley P. Pratt.)

Obedience to this ordinance of laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost is requisite to the salvation of the sons of men, as obedience in all other requirements is essential to our exaltation and well-being. Obedience means to perform the act required, not to do something else, and suppose all is well. Saul, the mighty king of ancient Israel, was sent by the voice of the Lord down to the city of the Amalekites for the purpose of utterly destroying those wicked people who had caused the children of God such trouble when they came up out of Egypt. He went, commanded to "slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass," but he did not strictly obey, for we read that he spared Agag the king, together with the "best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs." For this he was rejected, his kingdom given to another, and sternly rebuked by the Prophet Samuel in these impressive words: "To obey is better than sacrifice (for his excuse for sparing the cattle was that he might make sacrifice unto the Lord), and to hearken than the fat of rams." (I Samuel 15.)

We may profess to serve God and follow Christ, but if we do not keep His words, and obey every ordinance He has ordained, we show to the world that we have not the mind of Christ, for the mind of Christ was to do His Father's will. Let us profit by the example of the weak and foolish Saul, and render unto the Lord an obedience which is precisely as He has directed, without any deviation in reference to the thing to be done, or to the order in which we are required to perform it. God will not accept any substitute in the place of that which He has commanded. The very thing He commands us must be done, else where were the obedience?

The words of the Lord through His servant Paul are fitting in conclusion of this subject: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1:8, 9.)

(To be concluded.)

Abstracts from Correspondence.

Elder Jas. S. Blake, who was recently released from a successful mission in North Carolina, writes us from Hinckley, Utah, his mountain home, a very nice, encouraging letter. Here is what our brother says: "Though delighted to be once more in the sweet society of dear ones at home, I have not forgotten my many friends in the Southern States Mission. I rejoice in that the Lord permitted me to bear His message of salvation, and point out the way of righteousness to those who sit in spiritual darkness. My happiest moments were those that I spent, in humility, endeavoring to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ unto the people. I know that the glorious light of truth has burst forth in these last days, and that God's righteous purposes are being established upon the earth. My soul's sincere desire is that the glorious work may spread and increase, that the many honest souls in the world may understand the beauty and power thereof, and become sons and daughters of God, our Eternal Father.

"I have seen great and glorious manifestations of the Spirit, for the Lord did confirm His word with signs following as promised by Jesus. I know whereof I speak, having been made the recipient of these precious heavenly gifts. I can testify in the name of Jesus, that the gift of speaking in tongues, of interpretation of tongues, of prophecy, revelation, visions, healings, etc., is enjoyed by the faithful Latter-day Saint."

Elder W. J. Sloan writes us from Salt Lake City, under date of Aug. 12, 1900:

Dear Brethren—Permit me to thank you for having furnished me many hours of pure joy in reading the paper which tells the news of the mission field in which I spent two happy years. Each week I look for the Star as a sweet letter from dear friends.

Knowing that you have among the people of the south many readers who are not members of the Church, I enclose a question to them, should you deem it wisdom to publish the same.

Wishing you God-speed in your noble work of converting the honest in heart,

I remain,

Your brother.

Here is Elder Sloan's question, and a good question it is. All should study the same, with deliberation and earnestness, striving to please God, and glorify His name.—Ed.

Oftentimes in this life (and I fear that, with many, it will be more so in the next) we find out when too late that our belief and faith has been in vain. No matter how much we may believe that we are right, our faith does not make us so.

One night a boat steamed up to a landing on the Mississippi river. A man, who wished to go ashore, stepped out upon what he supposed to be the gang-plank, leading from the steamer to the shore. What he supposed to be the plank was only a shadow cast upon the water from the smoke-stack. He fell into the river, and it was some moments before he was rescued from what might have been a watery grave.

He was honest, he was sincere; yet no amount of faith would ever construct the mere shadow into a gang-plank, by which he could reach the shore in safety. And thus it is in real life, no amount of faith, no matter how honest it may be, can make right that which is erroneous and false.

We are walking from the steamer berth of this life to the shores of eternity. The man in the river was saved, but when we reach the great white throne it will be too late to throw out the life-line. Is our footing solid, or are we walking on a shadow?

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

ATTENTION, SUBSCRIBERS!

The "subscription letters" recently sent out from this office, seem to be misunderstood by some of our patrons. The amounts specified in your letters when paid will entitle you to the Star until the expiration of Vol. 2, which closes on Nov. 24th of the present year. We trust you will understand, and thank you all for past favors shown.

"Let your light shine forth in righteousness; your thoughts be pure with holy love; your words seasoned with the good spirit, and your deeds manly with fervent zeal."—W. T. Davis.

Doing things as well as they can be done is not only the quickest way to advancement, but it has a very great influence upon one's character and self-respect. If for no other motive than to maintain our self-respect, we should never allow ourselves to get into a habit of half-doing things.—August Success.

IS THIS CHRISTIANITY?

In another column of this issue will be found an article headed, "Forced to Leave a Christian (?) Burg," which gives a brief account of the harsh and altogether un-Christian behavior of some of the good citizens of our sister State—South Carolina. We desire to call the attention of our many readers to this wonderful fact, relative to South Carolina, that according to the last census she is said to have a larger proportion of professed Christians than any other State in the Union. In order to make the subject of this census clear and reliable, we quote from the Christian Observer of very recent date the following:

"South Carolina, according to the last census, has the honor of having a larger proportion of her people professed Christians than any other State in the Union. Her percentage is 43, while that of Texas is 29, and of the Dakotas is 18. In New York City proper, only 7 per cent. of the population are members of the Protestant churches. Allowing about half as many for the Roman Catholics, the percentage would be about 11. It is said that there are 1,300,000 people in New York beyond the pale of the churches altogether. These figures are a loud and alarming call to earnest evangelistic work, especially among those foreign multitudes who are coming constantly to our shores. We must evangelize them, or they will paganize us."

Is it not a remarkable fact that this very state of boasted supremacy in Christian evangelism should permit its citizens to expel from their midst two unarmed, defenseless Mormon Elders? What is their crime, fellow-Christians? What have they done? Why resort to such lawless and cowardly practices, when you have statutes and laws for the government of your commonwealth, and the punishment of criminal offenders? Have they broken any law, violated any statute, or stepped beyond the precincts of your municipal leniency? Are you prepared to conscientiously and truthfully answer these questions before the flaming bar of God's eternal justice? Know you their message, their mission, and their plea? Have you deliberately considered the import of their claims, and the magnitude of the Gospel they bring unto you? Or have you spurned from you the means whereby you might see, and know, and comprehend; only to welcome the religious blatherskite, with his falsehood and misrepresentation, who would blind you with error, and persuade you to madly rush, blindfolded and hoodwinked, to the consummation of wicked schemes, diabolical plots, devilish measures, and Satanic enormities? Is this what you call Christianity? Whence came such a sudden metamorphosis, and transformation? Christ, whom you profess to worship as your glorified head, never instituted such a state of affairs. It has a later inception than His day. Christianity in His day was persecuted, its followers driven, hounded and scourged; but today so-called Christianity is persecuting, driving, dogging and scourging. Lowell says, "New occasions teach new duties," and being as our fellow-Christians have seen fit to change the ordinances, transgress the laws, and break the everlasting covenants, perhaps it were good and strictly proper that they should also adopt new tactics of operation, so that, by their fruits we may know them, and avoid them. "If they persecute you in one city flee to the next."

Think of it! South Carolina, who towers above all other States in the Union in Christian profession, being guilty of allowing two humble servants of the Master, Jesus, to be driven and ordered about as criminals, slaves, or dumb brutes. Is this Christianity? Did Jesus do thus and so? If you were following in His steps would you be found doing so? Then why persist in such inhuman conduct, and even if you don't engage your efforts in the outrage, why stand by with dumb souls, mute lips, and helpless hands when the same is being perpetrated? Are there not enough men in the Sunny South State to arise in the dignity and manliness of American patriotism, and say, "We will grant unto all the privileges and blessings accorded by our nation's constitution?" Has the freeman's blood of '76 and 1812 become frozen in your veins that ye have no heart or life for liberty and freedom?

South Carolina—the palm leaf State—why permit your citizens to brandish weapons of oppression, and wield implements of violence at the very zenith of your advanced and enlightened Christian civilization? Have you forgotten the words of the Master to the resolute Peter, "Put up the sword; they that take the sword shall perish by the sword?" Justice demands that all shall have a fair trial, and impartial hearing, and an unbiased jury! With these privileges granted, love may abound, and good will prevail; but set them aside, and manifest religious distinction, malice, hate, and oppression, then the gory hand of violence will reign supreme, and the fair soil of our glorious Republic be stained with human blood.

Oh, Christendom, where are thy charms,
Which preachers and poets have seen?
Better dwell in the midst of alarms
Than live where thou reignest supreme!

While the American battleship is on her way to the Orient, that Baptist and other missionaries may be protected from the onslaughts of the Chinese Boxer, the Religious Boxer of South Carolina is attacking and mobbing Mormon Elders right here in our home land. Is it a good and holy law that will permit the executive of the nation to send warships into foreign waters, and land soldiers on foreign soil to defend a Baptist preacher in his legal rights as an American citizen, and at the same time prohibit him from vindicating and protecting the rights and privileges of a Mormon Elder in South Carolina, who also is an American citizen?

WHO WOULD RECEIVE HIM?

Every age has had its special developments in some line or branch of knowledge. They have had their virtues, as well as their vices; their good qualifications, as well as their evil failings. The past centuries were often crimsoned with bloody military conquests, and civil rebellious strifes; still they acquired great learning in the arts and sciences, and maintained a lofty standard in literary accumulation and composition. This age is marked by what is known as religious toleration, by which people have a right to worship and believe as their consciences may dictate, providing such a course does not trample upon the privilges of others, or break the governmental laws.

Were it true that such a glorious state of religious liberty existed in our land today, what a blessing, what a joy, what a comfort it would be! But the topics of the times indicate to the contrary. Instead of religious freedom, we are compelled to confess that in many instances religious oppression holds sway, and the hand of brute force and violence is used to suppress differences of belief. This age has become a mighty power in scientific discovery. The inventions of the present day are beyond the conception of the masses, and are only understood by the few great minds whose genius and skill have brought them into effect.

But have the religious faiths kept abreast with the swelling tide of science in its mighty surge? We will have to say, Nay! Had the spiritual kept pace with the intellectual, we would not be confronted with scenes of burning, mobbing, and inflicting punishment because of religious differences, and contrary beliefs. No man has a legal, moral, or any other kind of right to apply might as a means of supporting what he supposes to be right. There is a cause for every effect; then what are the causes conducive of this spiritual dwarfism or decline? Why has so-called Christianity fallen to the rear of advanced science, and been compelled to admit, contrary to her own confessions and creed, the truths explored, and the facts demonstrated? Her place is in the lead, and not in the rear of the van.

The reason is this: She has made her formal creeds, her jailor, who has shut her up in the dungeon of narrow-mindedness, completely excluding the gems of divine revelation, and forever refusing to accept the bright rays of truth which illumine and inspire the scientific world. How can she advance in such a prison cell? The turnkey will only let her out, as the prescribed creed permits, and this would keep her imprisoned until "Doom's Day;" for the rules of her faith and practice prohibit new revelation, and they have spiritualized and mangled the old until it suited their belief, so that it becomes next to an impossibility for progression to be made under such man-constructed, uninspired articles of confession as at present rule the sects.

She can never grow unto the perfect measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, save she discharge her jailor, look unto the Father; receive divine revelation, and join the Kingdom of the Lord. Will she ever come to the unity of the faith? Will she ever give up her useless forms, rituals, and solemnities? Is she ready to accept the Lord? Would she receive Him? Has she undergone the preparation, kept the faith once delivered to the Saints, and believed that, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secrets unto His servants, the Prophets?"

To all these inquiries we can give but one answer, and that is, No! The Prophet hath said; "The Lord whom we seek, shall suddenly come to His temple." Has modern Christianity erected a temple dedicated unto the Lord? No! Then she is not yet prepared to receive Him, and what is more, she never will be so long as she continues to fight, and persecute the Saints, and reject the angelic message given in these last days.

Search all Biblical history, and you will find that when the current of divine revelation or communication has ceased to be enjoyed by man, they have drifted far from the truth, become dwarfs religiously, and fairly die spiritually. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Prov. 29:18.) There was never a time, when man grew spiritually, without the divine influence of inspiration or revelation. While the pure in heart are communing with God, and seeking to be led by His Holy Spirit, the wicked and ungodly are striving to overthrow the good work they construct, and the weapons they use are after the same order as the "gibbet," the "rack," and the "inquisition."

The people who would receive the Lord are they who believe in divine revelation, "all that He has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and that He will yet reveal, many great and important things pertaining to His Kingdom." This is scriptural, reasonable, consistent, and logical. God has declared that the things of His Kingdom can only be understood by the spirit of revelation. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in Him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." (1 Cor. 2:11.)

This is an all-important subject. Who would receive Him? To be in readiness when He cometh, obey the Gospel, receive His Holy Spirit—the Comforter, add to your faith virtue and knowledge, wisdom and love, hope and charity, gentleness and temperance, then the mercy of God will abound. His righteousness reign supreme, and His glory cover the earth as the waters now cover the mighty deep. The Lord speedily cometh, blessed are they whom He finds watching; He will receive them, and they shall be redeemed and sanctified. Who will receive Him?

The Love of Excellence.

If I could give but one word of advice to those who are trying to get on in the world, I should say, "Constantly cultivate a love of excellence." It is surprising how the mind and character expand and grow upward by the application of this stimulus.

Nothing has more to do with forming a strong character and ability of a high order than constant cultivation of a love of excellence, a determination to do to a finish whatever we undertake. It is not enough to do a thing pretty well; it should be done as well as it can be done. "Oh, that is good enough!" has been the unsafe stone in the foundation of many a life which has caused the building to topple.

A habit of incompleteness formed when young is the secret of innumerable failures. Cultivating an upward tendency in all that we do, and holding steadily a high ideal in the mind, is a perpetual stimulus to do things better and better, a daily incentive to a love of excellence.

A habit of half doing things, or of doing them in a slipshod manner, will soon leave its demoralizing mark on the character. The mind soon becomes accustomed to low ideals, and little by little the fine edge of conscience is blunted.

The world wants your best, and you should resolve early in life never to give anything but the best of which you are capable. Put your best thought, your best work, your best energy, into everything you do. Make up your mind that you will never do anything by halves, no matter what others may do. Your life is worth too much to be thrown away in half doing things, or in botching anything you undertake.

There is a great satisfaction in doing things just right. It is a perpetual tonic to feel each night that you have not been slurring things during the day, that you have done everything you attempted just as well as it could be done. This sense of completeness, of things well done, has a most salutary influence in strengthening the character, and bringing all the faculties into harmony, in qualifying us for better and higher work.

I should advise a youth starting out in life to adopt the motto, "Perfection to the Finish." This should be the motto of the young, for its adoption early in life may mean all the difference between success and failure.

People laughed at Stradivarius for spending months and months in making a violin. They thought he was throwing his time away. But today a Stradivarius, wherever found, is worth from $5 to $10,000, or several times its weight in gold. Everything that has immortality stamped upon it has been done in the most painstaking and careful manner.

If the characters of criminals, of tramps, of the great army of unemployed and side-tracked people, were to be analyzed, it would be found that most of them have been accustomed to half-do things. It is very seldom that a person who does whatever he undertakes to do as well as it can be done, who does not slur over his work, is out of a situation, unless he possesses some other serious character defect. It is a fact that, although there are hundreds of thousands out of employment, almost every great concern in the country is constantly on the lookout for better employes, better clerks, more careful bookkeepers, better stenographers, better everything.

It is more difficult than one would imagine to find employes who are thoroughly conscientious in their work, who do everything they atempt to the very best of their ability, and who are resolute in their determination not to slight anything.

When an employer wishes to promote any of his clerks, he always looks for the one who does his work in the most complete and satisfactory manner. This is usually the great test of fitness. Every employer dislikes slipshod and slovenly methods. He wants orderly, systematic, painstaking employes.

Doing things as well as they can be done is not only the quickest way to advancement, but it has a very great influence upon one's character and self-respect. If for no other motive than to maintain our self-respect, we should never allow ourselves to get into the habit of half-doing things.

If we were to ask employers all over this country what, in their opinion, is the greatest impediment to the advancement of young people, I believe the majority of them would say, "the habit of half-doing things."

This is a slipshod age. Poorly done, half done, done in a careless manner, is written all over modern life. Buildings fall down almost before they are completed, clothing comes to pieces before it is half worn out, because not half made, and all through mercantile and professional life the same slipshodness is visible.

The man who is never quite sure of anything—who thinks, guesses or imagines, about the amount or the distance—who comes somewhere near, but never is quite certain of anything—rarely gets very far in this world. It is the accurate man, the painstaking man who is exact, who attains to the highest success.

The boy who half learns his lessons, who skims through his examinations, who is slovenly in his habits, lacks system and order, who does things in a half-hearted way, is almost sure to be a failure in life. The habits formed in boyhood characterize the man. He is continually looking for something, and nexer knows exactly where anything is. He never knows where he stands. His books are inaccurate, and he cannot tell whether he is solvent or not. He is a little late at the bank; his paper goes to protest, and he loses his credit; and so he goes on, blundering all through life. Such a man is not only a failure, but he demoralizes everything and everyone about him. His employes fall into slovenly ways, and never think it worth while to do anything just right, because their employer does not do so himself. They become careless, inaccurate, and habitually negligent. These defects and weaknesses permeate the whole establishment, until, finally, the man's business goes to ruin. Then he is unable to trace the blame to its true source, but bemoans himself as a victim of ill luck.—Selected.

A Bright Soldier.

A captain, possessed of the importance of patriotic precept, thought he noticed a lack of enthusiasm in a young recruit.

"What should you think," said he, "if you saw the Stars and Stripes waving over the field of battle?"

"I should think that the wind was blowing," was the logical reply.—Youth's Companion.

Gen. Lees Punctuality.

Robert E. Lee, a son of Gen. Lee, writes of his father in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly:

"My father was the most punctual man I ever knew. He was always ready for family prayers, and at all meal times, and met every engagement, business or social, on the moment. He expected all of us to be the same, and impressed upon us the use and necessity of forming such habits for the convenience of all concerned. I never knew him late for Sunday service at the post chapel. He appeared in uniform some minutes before anyone else, and would jokingly rally my mother and sisters for being late, or forgetting something at the last moment. When he could wait no longer, he would say, 'Well, I'm off,' and march away to church by himself, or with any one of us who was ready. Then he took his seat, well up in the middle aisle; and, as I remember, he got always very drowsy during the sermon, and sometimes caught a little nap. At that time this drowsiness of my father's seemed something awful to me. I knew that it was very hard for me to keep awake, and frequently I did not: but why he, who I believed could do everything that was right without any effort, should sometimes be overcome, I could not understand, and did not try to do so."

Forced to Leave a Christian (?) Burg.

Elder E. G. Anderson writes the following account of evil treatment received in the civilized State of South Carolina:

At the close of our conference held July 21st and 22d, at Society Hill, Elder Joseph H. Lewis and I were assigned to labor in Chester county, for which place we started after having a spiritual feast, determined not to leave any stones unturned that would advance the cause of truth.

Before leaving, our President advised us to enter Chester City and work it before doing any canvassing in the country. Upon our arrival in the city we found three families of Saints, who were pleased to meet us.

We first visited the Mayor and asked his permission to work the city by tracting, selling books, holding street meetings, etc.

After listening to our request he decided he could not give us any answer until he met the City Council and learned their feelings relative to our work.

To make a lengthy story short, he met with the Council and they gave us permission to proceed with our work, with the exception of street meetings. He also guaranteed us protection while we were under his jurisdiction.

Accordingly we proceeded with light hearts to do the will of Him who sent us, met many who opposed our teachings and told us we had ought to be drummed out of the town. We paid little or no attention to the insults hurled at us by those who knew little or nothing about us.

On Sunday, Aug. 12th inst., we attended a meeting held by Rev. H. C. Buckholz, subject discussed, "Mormonism as It Is" (?). After very grossly misrepresenting our faith for an hour and a quarter, we asked permission to speak, which he would not permit us to do in his meeting, as he knew, or we suppose he did, that we could prove to him and his audience that he had not fairly represented our faith, but we cannot expect anything better from the adversary of truth.

At the close of the meeting we could hear some say: I'll help get up a mob and drive them out, and the following Monday, when at the home of a friend, we received a note, ordering us to leave the town within twenty hours. Tuesday morning we again called on the Mayor and showed him the note. He said he was sorry anything like that had occurred, and that he would grant us our rights.

We, feeling safe with this assurance, proceeded with our work again unmolested, until about 9 o'clock at night seventy-five or one hundred armed men came up to the house where we were staying and demanded the "Mormon Elders."

We went out to see what they wanted, and they informed us that we were to get out of the county and stay out, if we didn't want to get hurt. They then permitted us to stay in the city until morning, upon condition that we would leave before 10 o'clock. We could not learn who the leader was, but was told this, that the Mayor's son and one of the police were among the number of good Christians (?).

The next morning I called at the home of the Baptist preacher and found out that he left his home about 8 o'clock the night of the raid. I do not know whether he was with the mob or not, but there is no doubt but what his sermon Sunday was the cause of it.

We promised to leave when we saw that there was no reason whatever in the crowd.

They said, If we can't put you out by reason we can by force.

Thus we have brought to our minds very forcibly this fact, that with all the skill the devil has he cannot overthrow the truth by reason. This can only be done by brute force. We felt to say, Father, forgive them, for they know not that they were rejecting a message from the Lord, and closing the door of the Kingdom of Heaven to those who would be willing to accept the Gospel in its purity.

The Star is a regular visitor, and the gems that adorn its pages are of lifelong benefit to the earnest seeker after truth.

PARALLEL EVENTS.

BY ELDER JOSEPH H. LINES.

Almost two thousand years have come and gone since Adam and Eve were driven forth from the Garden of Eden to subdue the thorns and briers and earn their daily bread in the sweat of their faces. Their sons and daughters have multiplied until they have become a mighty multitude. As they grew in numbers, wickedness increased among them, until, we are told in the Bible narrative, that the thought of their hearts was only evil continually. So terribly corrupt had they become that God in His sore displeasure resolved to destroy them by a mighty flood. But God is just and merciful, and He will not destroy His children without giving them a chance to repent. So He sent them the Prophet Noah, who, for one hundred and twenty years, lifts up his voice in solemn warning to that wicked people; calling upon them to repent of their sins, and warning them of the great destruction that will surely overtake them if they do not do so.

They reject the message; they scorn and ridicule the Prophet and count him an imposter. As a result of their unbelief and wickedness, God opens the windows of heaven; the fountains of the great deep are broken up; the rain pours down in torrents; the angry waters rise higher and higher, until the highest mountains are covered and everything upon the earth is destroyed. Borne upon the surface of the mighty flood rides a solitary ark; in it is the Prophet of God and seven other souls—all who would listen to the heaven-sent message. They, alone, of all the earth are saved.

How sad it is to think that so many of the sons and daughters of God would thus reject the counsel and advice of a kind and merciful Father, spurn the message so full of love and mercy sent to them by His authorized servant, and rush blindly to their own destruction. But were it possible to stop here and record that succeeding generations had profited by the knowledge of the awful destruction which overtook the antediluvians, the sad thought would be robbed of a portion of its sadness, but alas! such is not the case, as a further examination of the world's history will amply demonstrate.

Two thousand years have been added to the roll of time since the mighty flood devastated the earth. The world is again peopled by millions of human beings; in the land of Palestine dwell a portion of the descendants of Abraham—the chosen people of God. Moses, the great law-giver, and the many mighty prophets who succeeded him have long since laid their bodes in the silent tomb. If we examine the religious belief of this chosen people of God, we find that they are divided into numerous sects and parties, all sharply contending among themselves over doctrinal points. They are a nation of hypocrites. For pretense they stand upon the street corners and in the synagogues and pray long and loud to be seen and heard of men. In fact, their religion consists of an outward show of sanctity, while within it is full of rottenness and corruption. They garnish the tombs of the dead prophets and stand ready to kill and persecute the living. They say: "Had we lived in the days of the Prophets we would not have persecuted them as did our fathers; had we lived in the days of Noah we would have accepted his message and been found among the saved." Ah, ye hypocrites! God is about to send you a message by the Greatest Prophet the world has ever seen, and what will you do with it?

In the midst of the confusion and contention existing among the Jews a babe is born in Bethlehem of Judea. Angels wend their way to earth and in the presence of the humble shepherds give voice to that heavenly song, "Peace on earth, good will to men." And well might the angels sing, for that little infant wrapped in swadling clothes and lying in its manger cradle, is the Son of God—the only Begotten of the Father, who has been sent to this wicked and sin-stained world with a message of Divine love; a message that breathes of life and salvation to all who will receive and obey it.

The Son of God grows to manhood; He goes forth among His brethren and sisters and in meekness and humility points out to them the narrow way that leads to eternal life. He heals the sick, casts out the devils, makes the blind to see, the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak. He binds up the broken-hearted, and brings consolation and comfort to the oppressed and sorrowful. He makes the honest in heart to rejoice in the glorious truths of the everlasting Gospel.

He rebukes the fawning hypocrite and preaches repentance to the straying sinner. Gazing upon the proud city of Jerusalem and the beautiful temple, He foretells their utter destruction because of the wickedness of the people, and gives His followers a sign that when they shall see it come to pass they may take warning and flee to a place of safety. Surely the Jews will accept this divinely sent message, and listen to the warning voice of this mighty Prophet of the living God and lay hold upon eternal life.

Let us see. 'Tis the year 33 A. D. Mighty crowds are surging back and forth in the streets of Jerusalem—a man is on trial for his life before Pilate, the Roman Governor; in mockery they have clad him in a gorgeous robe and placed upon his brow a crown of thorns; he is insulted, mocked, spit upon; but he bears it all without a murmur. He is accused of sedition; of perverting the nation; of being a blasphemer, in that he being a man, proclaims himself the Son of God. The evidence has been produced; is he guilty? Let Pilate speak: "Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people; and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him. * * * I will therefore chastise him and release him." But the people, led on by the chief Priests, who are loudest in the outcry against him, will not have it so, and with one voice they cry, Crucify him! Crucify him! The dread sentence is passed; they take him to Calvary's hill, and there between two thieves they crucify him. The cruel nails are driven through his hands and feet; the spear of the Roman soldier pierces his side; and there, upon the cross he yields his soul to God. Who is this man? Why is he hated by his fellow man, and why, though innocent of any crime, has he been condemned to die? Ah, reader, this is he, who thirty-three years ago first saw the light of day in the stable manger at Bethlehem; this is Christ, the Son of God, the only Begotten of the Father; He who was sent to the earth with a message of divine love, and to point the way to eternal life. And this is the way He has been received: hated; ridiculed; persecuted; driven from city to city, from synagogue to synagogue; a hiss and a byword among His fellow men. His teachings scorned; His counsel and advice disregarded; His warning unheeded. History has repeated itself; and as was the case with the antediluvians, the rejection of the heaven-sent message is followed by dire calamity.

In fulfillment of the prophecy of Jesus the Roman army enters Palestine and lays siege to Jerusalem, and the horrors of that siege are beyond the possibility of mortal tongue to describe. To such extremities are the inhabitants of the city reduced that mothers are forced to eat the flesh of their own children. At last the defenders of the city are overcome, and Jerusalem is in the hands of the Roman legions. They raze the walls of the city level with the ground, and so effectually destroy the temple that not one stone is left upon another. Over a million Jews have perished. Ninety-seven thousand are taken captive; thousands of these are sold into slavery; thousands more lose their lives in the arenas of Rome fighting as gladiators, or are torn to pieces by wild beasts to furnish sport for the heathen inhabitants of the Roman cities. And all this sorrow has been brought upon the Jewish people because of their rejection of the Savior and the message He brought them, while the few who did accept Christ were gathered to a place of safety and thus escaped the dreadful horrors attending the siege and capture of Jerusalem.

Thus has God again brought death and destruction upon those who rejected His servants; and as in the case of the antediluvians, we were unable to record that succeeding generations had profited by their dread example, so are we now unable to record that the generations following Christ have profited by the knowledge of the awful calamities which befell the Jews as a consequence of their rejection of the Savior.

The wheels of time slowly revolve; generation succeeds generation, until almost another two thousand years have passed. It is the time of the restitution of all things spoken of by Peter; the time when the kingdom of God is to be set up, as foreseen by Daniel. The world is slowly emerging from the long night of spiritual darkness that followed the overflow of the early Christian Church, and while religious liberty is enjoyed throughout a large part of the civilized world, false doctrines prevail in all lands. The numerous religious sects, offshoots of the great Roman Catholic Church, are clashing and contending over doctrinal points; "confusion worse confounded" reigns supreme. In the midst of this confusion a man child is born in the village of Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, who is destined to be an instrument in the hands of God to usher in the dispensation of the fullness of times. His parents are poor, but honest and God-fearing country folk; as he grows up he has to toil early and late to help keep the wolf from the door. On account of the poverty of his parents his education is very limited. At the age of fourteen he becomes very much concerned for the welfare of his soul; and being unable to gain any degree of satisfaction from the conflicting religious creeds of the day, he determined to take the wise counsel of the Apostle James: "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." So, on a beautiful spring morning he seeks the seclusion of the woods and pours out the desire of his soul to God in earnest prayer. In answer to his humble petition a glorious vision bursts upon his view; he beholds two heavenly beings standing above him in the air, and is told in answer to his question, "Which of all the denominations are right?" that they are all wrong and that he must join none of them; but that if he will wait and remain faithful he shall be an instrument in the hands of God to restore to earth the fullness of the everlasting Gospel. He is subsequently visited by an angel, who tells him of the existence of an ancient record, which lies hidden in a hill near his home; and which contains the history of a people who had once dwelt upon this continent, and of the dealings of God with them; also the fullness of the Gospel as taught them by the Savior Himself.

The record is finally delivered to the keeping of this boy Prophet, and through the gift and power of God he is enabled to translate it into the English language, and the work of sending it, with its glorious message, into all the world is at once begun. In the meantime the heavens have again been opened; John the Baptist, now a resurrected being, comes to earth and confers upon the Prophet and his assistant, Oliver Cowdery, the Aaronic Priesthood, giving them the right to preach the preparatory Gospel and baptize for the remission of sins. Afterward came Peter, James and John, who confer upon them the Melchesidec Priesthood. They also ordain them Apostles of the Lord Jesus and confer upon them the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Under and by virtue of this authority the Prophet organizes the Church of Christ upon earth according to the ancient pattern, with Apostles and Prophets at its head.

Through the Prophet the Lord gives numerous revelations for the guidance of His people, and directs the sending forth of numerous Elders to cry repentance to a sin-stained and unbelieving world, and to promise to repentant baptized believers thaa the same gifts and blessings that followed the disciples of Christ in the early dawn of the Gospel light will follow them now. The Elders go forth and the promise is verified; the sick are healed; the eyes of the blind are opened, and the ears of the deaf unstopped. Thousands are gathered out from among the ungodly and are made to rejoice in the glorious truths of the restored Gospel. The Prophet gazes upon the land of his birth and sees thousands of human beings toiling in slavery. More than this; he sees religious liberty trampled in the dust. The gift of prophecy rests upon him in mighty power; he foresees that trouble is coming to the nation if it persists in such a course; he sees the war clouds gathering and points out to the people of this mighty republic how such a calamity may be avoided. Surely such a great and glorious work as described above will meet with the approval of all men who love to serve God and keep His commandments. Surely the people will rejoice that the gift of prophecy is once more upon the earth. And as this wonderful work is being inaugurated in a day when religious liberty is being almost universally enjoyed, and in a country the supreme law of which guarantees to every man the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, we should be able to record that the followers of this modern Prophet are permitted to enjoy, to the fullest extent, the blessings of civil and religious liberty; that they are permitted to worship God in peace and to preach the "glad tidings of good things" unharmed and unmolested. But, alas! such is not the case; for the people living in the dawn of the nineteenth century, though boasting a high degree of civilization, and of being followers of the lowly Nazarene, with the love of God and their fellow man burning in their bosoms, have proven themselves possessed of the very spirit of anti-Christ.

No sooner does this boy Prophet announce that he has seen a vision than he is made the object of ridicule and persecution; he is hated and despised; an outcast among his fellow men, who delight to point at him the finger of scorn. As the years go by and followers gather round him, the hatred and persecution increases; numerous attempts are made upon his life. At midnight he is dragged from his bed by an inhuman mob, tarred and feathered and beaten almost to death. False charges are made against him that they may deprive him of his liberty; forty-eight times he is dragged before the courts on trumped up charges, and forty-eight times he is acquitted; but with the dogged persistence of the Jews, who hounded the Savior to His death, his enemies still seek his destruction.

"The law will not reach him," they say, "but powder and ball shall." And just as it was in the days of Christ, the spiritual leaders of the people, the professed ministers of the Gospel, are his bitterest foes and are first to cry, kill him! kill him! At last they get him in their power; and while confined in Carthage jail, with the honor of one of the great commonwealths of this mighty republic, pledged, through its chief executive, to his protection, the jail is suddenly surrounded by a masked and painted band of human devils, and the Prophet of the nineteenth century is murdered in cold blood. Now, while his murderers are flying panic-stricken from the scene of their awful crime, let us pause to ask: Who is this man—why is he so hated of his fellow man, and why, though innocent of any crime, has he been put to death by a cruel mob? Ah, reader, this is Joseph Smith, the founder of the sect called in derision "Mormons." He is persecuted because he has been chosen of God to accomplish a mighty work. He is hated because he is not of the world, but being chosen out of the world, 'therefore the world hateth him." He has been put to death because the hosts of Satan vainly hoped thereby to stop the progress of the work of God. And what of his people? Let us follow them as they are driven from place to place; shot down by scores, their homes burned, their lands confiscated by lawless mobs. Let us follow them where they leave their blood-stained tracks in the frozen snow as they seek a place in this boasted land of liberty where they can worship God in peace according to the dictates of their own conscience. Let us follow them as they are driven beyond the confines of civilization to seek a home among the savage red men in the midst of the Rocky mountains, and there let us leave them while we pause to ask, if the people of this great nation who have perpetrated this monstrous outrage upon an innocent and unoffending people are going to be permitted to go unwhipped of justice; unchastened by the hand of God? No; for already the coming of retribution has cast its dark shadow over the land. The war clouds gather thicker and blacker until at last the gathering storm bursts upon the country and civil war in all its savage fury desolates the land. Oh! the horrors of those four years of internal strife! Great armies of maddened men surging back and forth, leaving death and desolation in their path; the roar of cannon, the rattle of musketry; the tramp of the charging hosts; the heap of mangled slain; mothers mourning the loss of gallant sons; wives weeping for husbands who will never return; the thousands of orphans bewailing the loss of fathers; all, all, bear testimony that God has again poured out the vials of His wrath upon those who have rejected His servants and set at naught His counsels.

But let us turn from a picture so full of woe to gaze upon the valleys of far off Utah, where dwell the followers of Joseph Smith. And as we gaze upon its peaceful vales and notice that they are unscarred by red-handed war, let us remember that the Mormon people escaped the dreadful horrors of this most terrible of civil wars simply because of their belief in the divinity of the mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. They heard and heeded the Prophet's message; and God led them to a place of safety.

History has again repeated itself. The lessons of the past were unheeded. God spoke to a disobedient and sin-stained nation; He sent a Prophet to warn it of the danger of its course and point out the path that led to safety. The Prophet was rejected by the many, and they reaped sorrow and suffering. He was accepted by the few and as a result they were saved from the fury of the storm that desolated the land. What greater, what more convincing proof could possibly be produced to establish the fact that Joseph Smith was sent of God?

GLEANINGS.

The following letter, written by Pres. John Reeve of the Middle Tennessee conference to Brother Austin and family, of Monroe, Tenn., under date of Aug. 11, 1900, conveys words of condolence, counsel and instruction to those bereaved. Miss Mary Austin succumbed to the summons of death July 30.—Ed.

"Elders Decker and Davies have just written me of the death of your daughter and sister, Mary. Accept my heartfelt sympathy in your behalf, in the temporary loss of your loved one.

"The ways of the Almighty are not always understood by us, His children; but this we do know, that His ways are just and true. 'The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away.' The reason why He calls the faithful home, may be to labor among those who have gone on before, and have departed this life without ever hearing the sound of the Gospel. Hundreds and thousands have died when there was no Gospel upon the earth. Nearly eighteen centuries have elapsed since the gospel was taken from the children of men because of their wickedness, during which time millions lived and died without the privilege of hearing the Gospel.

"Not until the year 1830, when the Lord saw fit to reveal Himself to His children again, and could find individuals who would do His will, was the Gospel once more given to mankind upon the earth.

"Joseph Smith was the man whom the Almighty honored and entrusted with that glorious charge. Joseph was so honored because the Almighty knew Him even before the foundation of this earth was laid; knew of his faithfulness and integrity; knew that he would remain firm and undaunted, knew that he would stand as fixed and unshaken as the everlasting hills, even under the most disastrous storms of persecution that would be heaped upon his head by wicked men; knew that before he would deny his God, and turn traitor to the message from heaven, he would seal his testimony with his blood. He did seal his testimony with his blood. The teacher is now dead and the testimony is in force. And the Almighty through that man has restored to earth the plan of life and salvation by which all mankind may be saved through obedience to the same. Your deceased loved one was made partaker of that divine message, and has gone to the spirit world to inform her ancestors of the glorious truths that have been revealed to earth through that mighty Prophet, Joseph Smith.

"While this chosen vessel of the Almighty was incarcerated in Liberty jail, Clay county, Missouri, for declaring, Paul-like, that he had been visited by heavenly messenger, the word of the Lord came to him thus: "The ends of the earth shall enquire after thy name, and fools shall have thee in derision, and hell shall rage against thee.' 'While the pure in heart, and the wise, and the noble, and the virtuous, shall seek counsel and authority, and blessings constantly from under thy hand.' No Prophet's words have been so literally fulfilled as have these. Go where you may, among the civilized world, and you will find people enquiring after His name, and fools having His name in derision, and hell raging against Him. On the other hand, we find the pure in heart, and the wise, and the noble, and the virtuous, seeking, and have sought counsel, and authority, and blessings constantly from under the hands of that mighty Prophet. Yea, in nearly every land and clime we have found the pure in heart praising the name of the Prophet, leaving home and friends and worldly honors, traveling thousands of miles across burning deserts and drifting sands, enduring persecution, hunger and even death, to receive blessings from the Almighty under the hands of that inspired Prophet. All the spiritual blessings that I, my parents and loved ones have, or ever will receive, have and will come from under the hands of that man. Those blessings which you and your departed loved one have received, in that you have been baptized by the authority of heaven, have come from under the hands of that God-sent Prophet, Joseph Smith, Jr. I know that if we remain faithful to this message we shall all rise in the morning of the first resurrection, and meet the Prophet Joseph, with the Savior and all the Holy Saints, and there receive crowns of eternal life in the kingdom of God."

DARK CLOUDS.

BY WILLIAM B. CRAIG.

'Tis not all sunshine. Storms we must have
To appreciate the calm;
Dark clouds must hover o'er life's frail barque,
And then a healing balm
Will soothe the ills and cares we may endure
While life doth last,
And help us look with confidence secure
O'er all the past.

'Tis well to have a hope
Which reaches far within the vail,
And live the lives of righteousness
Which ne'er will fail
To bring a blessing from above,
From Him who dwells
Amid the realms of light and love;
Whose bosom swells

With tender care for all who will Obey His word,
And on His Spirit's power depend,
Which will afford
A consolation in the hour
Of trial near.
Oh, happy is the soul who doth
His name revere.

And while I struggle on 'gainst adverse powers,
My soul from sin to free,
To Thy Almighty care I leave the rest,
Father, Supreme, to Thee.

FRIENDSHIP, LOVE AND TRUTH.

When friendship, love, and truth abound
Among a band of brothers,
The cup of joy goes gaily round,
Each shares the bliss of others.
Sweet roses grace the thorny way
Along this vale of sorrow;
And flowers that shed their leaves today
Shall bloom again tomorrow.
How grand in age, how fair in youth,
Are holy friendship, love, and truth!

On halcyon wings our moments pass,
Life's cruel cares beguiling,
Old time lays down his scythe and glass,
In gay good-humor smiling;
With ermine beard and forelock gray,
His reverend front adorning,
He looks like winter turn'd to May,
Night soften'd into morning.
How grand in age, how fair in youth,
Are holy friendship, love, and truth!

From these delightful fountains flow
Ambrosial rills of pleasure;
Can man desire, can heaven bestow,
A more resplendent treasure?
Adorn'd with gems so richly bright,
We'll form a constellation,
Where every star, with modest light,
Shall gild his proper station.
How grand in age, how fair in youth,
Are holy friendship, love, and truth!

DEATH OF ELDER ROBERT A. PAXTON.

Elder Robert A. Paxton, of Kanosh, Utah, fell asleep in the arms of death while engaged in the service of the Lord. His demise occurred at Blacksburg, S. C., on the morning of the 27th ult., as a result of a very severe attack of pneumonia. At this time it is not possible to obtain a cut of his portrait, but we hope to produce the same with a full account of his death, in our next issue. As soon as word was received of his death, Sister Rich sent the following epistle of condolence to the beloved mother of our departed brother. Our sister's letter but speaks the express feelings of our tender and sympathetic emotions, therefore we publish the same as it was written:

"Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 27, 1900.

"My Dear Sister Paxton—In all probability, before this missive reaches you, you will have been informed of the sad news relative to the demise of our beloved brother, and your dear son, Elder R. A. Paxton. I hasten, dear sister, to pen you a few lines of condolence, that perchance I might console you in the hour of your bereavement.

"Like you, I also am a mother in Israel, and I, too, have had to bid my boys farewell, when they have left my side to labor in the service of the Lord. Even now, dear sister, I have a son in the state of Virginia, engaged in missionary labors, and so, I feel from experimental knowledge, a loving mother's sympathy and tender affection for her boy. Thus, I realize, to some extent, the sadness of your spirit, the depression of your soul and the sorrow of your wounded heart in this hour of sad affliction.

"Though my feeble pen may fail to inscribe the intense feelings of my heart, and words prove inadequate to communicate the profound love and sympathy I would extend to you, still, dear sister, within the depths of my soul there throbs and beats for you a gentle compassionate tenderness which only those who know the love of God can comprehend.

"I have just received a telegram from my husband, and he will accompany your son's body from Blacksburg to Chattanooga, where all necessary arrangements will be made for shipment and transportation. When the news reached us in Chattanooga it seemed to cast a solemn gloom over all the Elders here, and tonight when the knee was bent and the body bowed in supplication before the throne of God, from the heart there came an earnest prayer to our Father in Heaven, asking Him to bless and console you, and comfort all those who are connected by the endearing ties of kindred affection, with our departed brother, and deceased co-laborer, whom we all honor and revere.

"Remember, dear sister, that 'Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.' God will not leave you or forget you in your affliction. He never forsakes His children, but He, who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, will also bless, and comfort, and protect you. Hope, the precious gleam of spiritual life, will shed a ray of living light through the thickest gloom.

"How consoling are these beautiful words, spoken by David the Psalmist: 'Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.' Ah! these are sweet, impressive words, and the joy and peace they convey to the troubled heart passeth all earthly understanding. Again, we hear the same sweet singer of ancient Israel declare, 'The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want.' Think of these beautiful expressions, in which is plainly seen the abundant love of our Father God. Yes, dear sister, there is much joy and consolation to be obtained in reading God's Holy Word.

"Paul, the great and good Apostle of the Lord, said: 'Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.' Not only can you find consolation and encouragement from the Word of the living God, but the Holy Ghost—that benign and heavenly comforter—will soothe your cares and sorrows, dry up the falling tear, heal your broken heart, and gladden with the sweet Balm of Gilead your saddened soul.

"Take joy in this divine knowledge and blessed assurance. We shall meet again, yes, we shall meet again! In that holy congregation of the righteous, on the celestial Mount of Zion, your son shall rise in honor, robed in righteousness, and crowned with glory. He fell while struggling for the right, yea, in the harness, clad with the armor of truth and the shield of love. He shall come forth again when the dead in Christ shall rise and the great last trump of God shall sound, both loud and long. Be of good cheer, and the Lord will strengthen thine heart, so that, when time shall be no more, you can sing and exclaim, 'All is well.'

"May God bless you, and may the Holy Spirit guide you ever, and the peace and joys of Heaven attend you. The Elders all join in a fervent, 'God bless you.' Your loving sister,

"Nina F. Rich."

GOD'S GREATEST GIFT.

BY ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

(Concluded from page 307.)

IN CONCLUSION.—We have now discovered that which we sought, namely: the greatest gift of God to a fallen, sinful race, and the means appointed of the Lord whereby we may obtain it! Let us not forget this fact, so oft declared in Holy Writ, that all blessings and gifts are predicated and based upon the principle of obedience. Obedience to temporal laws, the laws of health, brings happiness and physical strength; and obedience to the commands of God, the law of the Gospel, brings joy, peace, honor, glory, immortality and life eternal. When the will of God is made known unto us through His holy Word, or by the mouth of His servants, let us hasten to obey, and not procrastinate the day of our repentance. We have briefly touched upon the principles and ordinances of the Gospel conducive and essential to the saving of the soul, and the exaltation of all the sons of men. These principles and ordinances have been proven from the "law and the testimony" to be in strict accordance with the Scriptures of Holy Writ, and the question is this: Will we treat them as useless and altogether unworthy our implicit acceptance, or shall we give diligent heed thereunto, submit ourselves to their requirements, and hold them as sacred and divine, the appointed means through obedience to which, salvation is obtained? As we have found these principles to be the will of God, it were well that we remember the words of Peter, how that he said, in the face of his bitter enemies and wicked opponents: "WE OUGHT TO OBEY GOD RATHER THAN MEN." (Acts 5:29.)

Through our individual acts of wickedness, our transgression of God's law, we have alienated ourselves from the kingdom of heaven, and become strangers and foreigners. This is self-evident from the carnality of our fallen natures, and our disposition to sin, to retrograde, and sink deeper and deeper into vice, and a thousand evil ways. Without the atonement of Jesus Christ, and the gift of a Gospel plan of righteousness, which is the power of God unto salvation, we could never gain the glories of salvation, or overcome the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil. But through the abundant mercy and loving grace of God, we have seen that the way is opened, the offering made, and the course mapped out.

Now, kind reader, if we were foreigners from some distant land, and had wended our way to the soil of liberty on this American continent, in these United States, and desired to become citizens of this glorious republic, what must be done before we can enjoy the privileges we crave, or be members of these free-born institutions? Must we not first declare our intentions of loyalty and fealty, then suffer the oath of allegiance to be administered unto us while we bow in acquiescence, and then receive our papers of citizenship with the proper seal affixed, which final act grants us the rights and privileges of a full-fledged citizen? Yes; this is the order of procedure. As to our citizenship in the kingdom of God, then! We are all foreigners until we have embraced the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and rendered ourselves obedient to His will: so the first act on our part is to declare our intentions of obedience by exercising faith in the Godhead, and repenting of our past sins with a Godly sorrow and a firm desire to sin no more. Following, we submit ourselves to the oath of allegiance—baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and then are made the recipients of the heavenly blessings by receiving the seal of our adoption, the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. As it is in the laws of the land, so has it been declared in the council of God, viz.: that no one shall officiate in administering these ordinances, save he possess authority from God, either by direct revelation, or through the medium of His servants, the prophets. No man has any right to take honor or authority unto himself. It must be conferred or bestowed, by those possessing the same, acting under the directions of God, through the prompting of the Comforter, or the revelations of His will. We cannot expect to enjoy the powers and blessings of heaven, save we become members of Christ's church, and fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God.

Man's ways are not God's ways. "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts higher than your thoughts." (Isaiah 55:8, 9.) We must do as God bids us do, and not what we feel is right to do. If we ever enter into the glories of the kingdom of God, and receive the joy of our Lord, we must come in according to the ways of the Lord. The Savior taught His disciples to pray unto "Our Father" in heaven, "Thy kingdom come," and furthermore they were commanded, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6:33.) How necessary, then, that we "seek" and "pray" for the kingdom of God. Daniel in prophetic vision saw the time when, in the last days, the God of heaven would set up a kingdom which should never be destroyed or given to another people. He compared it to a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which increased until it became a mountain, and filled the whole earth. (Dan. 2.)

The principles and ordinances as defined in previous issues, appeal to one's reason, as being philosophical, logical, and consistent, besides being Scriptural, holy and divine. Should not these plain facts prove all-sufficient to convince the honest inquirer for truth of the absolute necessity of implicitly complying thereto? But remember, that it is not enough to merely render obedience unto these fundamental rules prescribed. No, we must go on unto perfection, and remain faithful even unto death. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved," said the Lord to His disciples (Matt. 10:22), and Peter gives us some timely counsel and instruction which it were well to consider and adopt. "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." (II Peter 1:5-8.) Jesus commanded His Apostles to "teach all things" whatsoever He had commanded them to teach. (Matt. 28:20.) We shall find that in our journey for the goal perfection and exaltation, we can never stand still, or rest upon the oars. There are no relay stations, no hitching posts to which we may safely tie for a season, no stopping points where we can take a rest, but onward and upward must be our motto, until we gain the heavenly boon—life eternal, and obtain God's greatest gift. Acts of righteousness for the glory of God, deeds of fervent love for the alleviation of a brother or sister, and pure thoughts, upright conduct and holy desires, are all essential to the advancement and development of the human soul. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Example is better than precept. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John 14:15.) If we love Him we will keep His commandments, and seek to honor His high and holy name. It is life eternal to know God (John 17:3), and "Hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep His commandments. He that saith, I know Him, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." (I John 2:3, 4.) The Savior volunteered to come upon the footstool of His Father God, and offer Himself a ransom for all. He gave His life freely that the inexorable demands of justice might be satisfied, that the Adamic debt might be paid, and mankind redeemed and loosened from the bands of the captive death. Not only did the immaculate Son of God grant unto all through His atonement and free will offering, an unconditional gift in the resurrection of the body from the grave: but He also instituted certain rules, prescribed in the Gospel, by which the way was provided that man might receive a remission of individual sins, and be lifted up at the last day to eternal life—God's greatest gift.

Thus we see that His was a dual mission with a two-fold purpose in view. The decree of justice having been met, the debt paid, and death swallowed up in victory, we are no longer under the dominion or thralldom of the Adamic or original sin, but are held accountable before God for the commission of individual transgression, or the omission of laws God requires us to obey.

We have seen what God's greatest gift is, namely, eternal life,—salvation from the grasp of the wicked one, and exaltation with the Savior of all mankind. Of course, the mere statement, eternal life, does not convey the beauty, grandeur, power or priceless worth of this blessed gift. "Eye hath not seen, not ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." We have shown from the Bible, by the aid of the Spirit of God, that the means whereby and through which this greatest gift is obtained, is the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The principles and ordinances of the Gospel we have seen, are, first: Faith in the Godhead and the power of the Gospel; second, repentance of all past sins after a godly manner; third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins at hands of one duly authorized of God and commissioned in the name of Jesus Christ to administer in the ordintances of the Gospel; and, fourth, the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost. These obeyed, we become members of the Church of Jesus Christ, and are now on the straight and narrow path leading unto life eternal. We have only now entered into the way; have just gotten upon the path, and it becomes necessary for us to follow Him who trod the weary road alone and led the righteous on to glory. We must follow Him through evil as well as good report, over the stony places, and through the piercing thorns and prickly briars.

The question now arises, kind reader, where shall we find these simple, beautiful principles of salvation taught in their purity and power by God's chosen and appointed servants who have been given authority to preach His Gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof? Yes! Whither shall we go, and how are we to know, when the true servant lifts his warning voice, and the pure and unadulterated teachings of Jesus are taught? We want to make our calling and election sure, our salvation certain, and our reward positive. To these inquiries, as to all other questions pertaining to eternal life, we have only the one answer, and that is: Let the Holy Spirit guide, and the word of the Living God direct you. Assertions without evidence, bald and sterile, or worse than useless, because they confuse, and do not convict, puzzle and do not convert. Then we want the evidence, and when we have the Scriptures declaring the necessity of such and so, we should be on the lookout for the same, and be willing to accept it when it shall come in the prescribed manner, bringing the needed evidence and supported by the word of truth.

As concerns the principles and ordinances set forth in our brief investigation thus far, you can find them in the written confession of faith, and manifest in the lives and labors of the true servants of Jesus Christ. These fundamental principles are unchangeable, eternal and everlasting. They have always been taught when the Gospel of Jesus Christ has been upon the earth, and will always be advocated as long as there are souls unsaved and unredeemed. Having been plainly set forth, we need not be at sea concerning the same, neither need we be deceived and led astray after strange and divers doctrines. "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism" is the Apostle Paul's declaration to the Saints at Ephesus.

A word now in regard to the authority to administer in the ordinances of the Gospel. In whom is that authority vested, and whence received they the delegated power to act in the name of the Lord? We know that John the Baptist possessed the authority to officiate in the ordinance of baptism and call the sons of men to repentance. We need not doubt the legality and validity of his administrations when we read that Jesus our Lord suffered Himself to be baptized at his hands. Then the Lord conferred the Apostolic power upon His chosen twelve, placing Peter at their head as the chief Apostle, together with James and John as co-laborers and aids. The Lord had said unto Peter, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." (Matt. 16:19.)

In the early part of the present century there was heard in the state of New York a proclamation strange and new to the people of this age, yet familiar and ancient when compared with the incidents of primitive Christianity. A young man of humble, industrious, yet poor parentage, had announced that the heavens had been opened, and in answer to his prayer for light and knowledge relative to the various sects, the Father and His Son Jesus had appeared and communed with him. This startles the hireling clergy, and raises a bitter storm of vile abuse upon his youthful head. But true to the instructions received from the lips of the Master, he joins himself to none of the creeds, and in the own appointed time of the Lord, he is honored by an angelic visit. This heavenly messenger came, the youthful prophet declared, in fulfillment of the words of John the Revelator (Rev. 14:6), and revealed an ancient record of the aborigines of the so-called American Indian, containing the fulness of the everlasting Gospel.

Subsequently John, called the Baptist, acting under the direction of Peter, James and John, came and conferred the authority he held, which authority gave the young man power to preach and expound the word of God, cry repentance unto the children of men, and baptize for the remission of sins. This same youth earnestly and soberly declared that Peter, James and John also appeared unto him, and bestowed the keys and powers they held upon his head.

Perhaps you will say, kind reader, as many before you have often said: Well, what need was there for John the Baptist to come and restore the authority which he had? Why did Peter, James and John come to the earth to ordain men to the authority which they held? And what need was there for that book or record to be introduced to the people, seeing that they have the Bible? Why should there be any new revelation? Have we not sufficient for our salvation in the Old and New Testaments? These inquiries often arise, and they can be briefly answered thus: All these incidents are in fulfillment of Scriptural prophecy. John says, An angel should fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth. Malachi says, "Behold, I will send my messenger [John the Baptist] and he shall prepare the way before me." Isaiah speaks of a record or book which should come forth (Chap. 29) and Ezekiel says that this record should become one with the stick of Judah [Bible] (Chap. 37). Well, you say, who was this young man, and what, and where, is the record he received from the hands of the angel? The young man was Joseph Smith, Jr., born in the state of Vermont, Dec. 23, 1805; the record is known to the world as the Book of Mormon, and can be obtained from any of these so-called Mormon Elders who travel through your land, two by two, preaching the Gospel free, and receiving no salary or remuneration whatever for their missionary services rendered in defense of righteousness and truth.

This young man claims to have received his authority from those who possessed it anciently and who alone had the power to restore the same. This is in strict keeping with the Scriptures, and an evidence of no mean worth. He furthermore solemnly testifies that a dispensation of the Gospel was committed to him by an angel. (Rev. 14:6.) From the very hour he announced that he had received a heavenly vision until the time of his cruel martyrdom in 1844, he was subject to persecution, to the hate and scorn, malice and envy, of an evil, designing, wicked influence which sought to stay the progress of the mighty work he was instrumental in establishing upon the earth.

During the short ministry of the Prophet Joseph Smith, from the year 1830, when the Church was organized with only six initial members, until 1844, when, as before stated, he met a martyr's fate, great numbers were added to the seemingly new faith, and became partakers of the joys and blessings of heaven. The work of God is a progressive and an eternal work. Its incipiency was truly like a grain of mustard seed, but it grew with every additional convert, until it had gathered within its embrace tens of thousands. It was carried to European nations, and extended its onward march into the uppermost parts of Canada, and although its Prophet, seer and revelator was cruelly slain, still the good work he inaugurated under the direction of God and heavenly beings continued to grow, and marvelously increase.

Religious bigots whose hearts are hardened with tradition and error, may pelt the Prophet's name with all sorts of unsavory and vile epithets, but, thank God, evidences are not to be set aside with a sneer, or overcome with a disdainful frown or contemptible scorn. These are the weapons of zealots and fanatics, but fair-minded men and women should look for more solid argument, and more sound reasoning, than mere common report, vile abuse, calumny and misrepresentation. The Savior gave us an infallible rule by which we may know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether it be of man. Here are His words: "If any man will do His will (speaking of His Father) he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:17.) As heretofore declared: Receive the Gospel, and repent of all your sins. Yea, be baptized by those that have authority to administer it for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. This is the will and word of God, concerning the salvation of your souls, and after you have done these things, the light of God will illuminate your minds, and you will receive a witness for yourselves that the work is true. Before this divine knowledge doubt flees, misunderstanding is scattered abroad, falsehood is detected and the evil spirit of men discerned! Yes, we realize that the Comforter guides into all truth, shows things to come, and comforts our souls in the knowledge of God, and the testimony of Jesus.

Amid temptations, trials and persecutions the humble Mormon Elder goes forth from place to place preaching the Gospel of the kingdom of God. "The Lord working with them, and confirming the words with signs following." The kingdom is growing, and today the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has communicants numbering in the near vicinity of 400,000, and according to the word of God it will continue to grow, until it extends from pole to pole and fills the whole earth. Daniel says, "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." (Dan. 7:14.) "And the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." (Dan. 2:44.) "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the Saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." (Dan. 7:27.) Then there will be heard great "voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. 11:15.)

Kind reader, would you become a citizen of the heavenly kingdom, then seek to do the will of God, and render obedience to the principles and ordinances of the everlasting Gospel. The way is made plain in Holy Writ, the path of life has been trod by the Lord Jesus. He has left His footprints for us to follow; erected the signal boards, and raised the finger posts, which point the way to life eternal. "Be not deceived" —there is only one sure and safe way marked out for all to follow. "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism."

Remember, kind reader, that "today is the day of salvation, and now is the accepted time."

"Tomorrow is with God alone,
And man hath but today."

Ruskins First Lesson.

Mr. Ruskin, who wrote so many famous books, said that the first lesson he learned was to be obedient.

"One evening," he says, "when I was yet in my nurse's arms, I wanted to touch the tea-urn, which was boiling merrily. It was an early taste for bronzes, I suppose; but I was resolute about it. My mother bade me keep my fingers back; I insisted on putting them forward. My nurse would have taken me away from the urn, but my mother said, 'Let him touch it, nurse.'

"So I touched it, and that was my first lesson in the meaning of the word liberty. It was the first piece of liberty I got, and the last which for some time I asked."—Youth's Companion.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

You say that "this world to you seems drain'd of all its sweets!" At first I had hoped you only meant to insinuate the high price of sugar, but I am afraid you meant more. O, Robert! I don't know what you call sweets. Honey and the honeycomb, roses and violets are yet in the earth. The sun and moon yet reign in heaven, and the lesser lights keep up their pretty twinklings. Meats and drinks, sweet sights and sweet smells, a country walk, spring and autumn, follies and repentance, quarrels and reconcilements, have all a sweetness by turns. * * * You may extract honey from everything: do not go a-gathering after gall. I assure you I find this world a very pretty place.—Charles Lamb.

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

METHODISM IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Our good Methodist brethren of Utah recently held a three days' conference in Salt Lake City. As usual, the most palatable cud for these divine prelates was the question of Mormonism and how to accomplish its overthrow and utter destruction. Wild denunciations, fierce and bitter invectives, and vicious attacks of the Mormon people were the emissions of these gentle, loving, long-haired men of the pulpit. Mormonism seems to furnish them with material which is hard to swallow, impossible to digest, and so they reproduce it upon their venemous tongues of slander and envy, and blat it out to the people in "red hot style." They evidently recognize in Mormonism something more powerful, compact, and solid, than they have ever turned their "pop guns" upon before. They begin to realize that their ammunition is too palpably weak, and so they must stir up the pot of strife, and make the people back east think they are not dead, but awake and alive to a sense of their duty—to evangelize and Christianize the Mormon people.

The fierceness with which they arraigned the Mormon people as "Godless," and altogether beyond the pale of Christianity—without Christ, or the pure religion of Methodism, puts us in mind of the good old Quaker and his wife. The wife said to the pious old man, "I do believe that all people are off except me and thee, and I have seen thee acting a little queer." This sanctimonious old lady is not alone in the world, but, from the reports of the Methodist conference, we discover that there are other saintly hypocrites of the "Holier than thou" stripe. One of the "reverend gentlemen" showed his love for the people who have treated him so kindly in the following beautiful, charitable terms:

"We've got to stir up this ant's nest, kick the top off and capture some of the ants before they get housed again."

This expression betrays the intense bitterness of his narrow-minded soul. These "ants," as he calls our people, have built their homes by thrift, industry, and perseverance, and now he would make might right by kicking "the top off," and capturing "some of the ants before they get housed again." Ah! brother, it would have been better for your poor soul, and the cause you represent, had you left those words unsaid. The Mormon Elder often hears this hue and cry, "You Mormons come to break up our churches, proselyte our people, and make converts to your faith." Is not your fellow-brother out in Utah guilty of the same offense, if it be a crime? And does not the words of his mouth assert that he would use oppressive and violent means to bring to pass his evil designs, if it lay in his power to do so? Yes, it does, and none can deny it. Suppose, for one moment, that a Mormon Elder should go in a Southern community where the Baptist faith is the prevailing creed and utter such abusive and vicious threats against the Baptists, as the words of the Methodist Bishop against the Mormons where that people are dominant, what would be the result? We fancy, "The place that knew him once would know him no more." It is only a momentary supposition, and it would, in all probability, be but a momentary stay our brother would enjoy in that neighborhood.

It is a good and righteous thing that the Mormon people have learned to possess a little of that sweet Christian charity, which, with our evangelistic brethren, is such a manifest rarity. The fruit of the spirit is "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." We believe in religious liberty, religious toleration, and religious freedom, but we do not believe that these give any one a religious license to abuse, threaten, malign, and misrepresent an innocent, unoffending people, who may perhaps differ with them religiously. Remember, brother, that these "ants" builded their homes without your aid; that they dwelt in perfect peace and happiness before your portentious arrival; that they craved not your potent presence, neither did they ask your benign assistance. They have been taught the higher way of living, and scorn to stoop to low, ignoble practices. "Mind your own business," has been their motto. Now, brother Methodist, go to these "ants," and learn thou a lesson of thrift, industry, frugality, love, and pure religion.

Another good fellow, not wishing to be outdone by his worthy Bishop, rose up in that solemn assembly and told his hearers this sad tale of woe:

"We live in a community of Godless homes, where people talk religion but do not live it. Where there is a larger per cent. of homes that have no Bible than can be found anywhere out of heathendom. The reason for this lies in the fact that the teachings of the dominant Church have dethroned Christ, stultified and destroyed His word, etc."

Does any one doubt the rendevous where this gentleman was wont to spend his time? Judging from his own confession, he must have suffered much from the evil contaminating influences of such "Godless homes," whither he was used to wend his way. After all, it may be possible that the good brother has been in the company of fellow-religionists who spiritualize the word of God, and with their "Higher Criticism" seek to destroy many of its glorious truths; so that when, perchance, he saw the King James translation of the sacred word—the authorized version—he failed to recognize it as the Holy Bible. Time's a friend to innocence, and a cure for falsehood and hypocrisy. Time will cure, and lies are doomed to perish. We would invite the good brother to seek better society, where the word of God is believed, preached and practiced. Go to any of the Mormon worshipping assemblies, and you will get enough Bible, and Bible straight, to convict you of the error of your ways, and lead you in the path of truth. Every Mormon Elder carries a Bible, and cherishes it dearly as the word of God. We do not hate our brother Methodist, but we can't love his malice, hate, envy, falsehood, and slander. "From the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "Let us oft speak kind words to each other." These will convert. Listen to the words of Benjamin Franklin, "A spoonful of honey will catch more flies than a gallon of vinegar." It may be that you can apply the same to "ants" with great profit and rich success. We feel to say, "God bless our brethren who have so maliciously and wilfully reviled and slandered us, because we know they stand in sad need thereof."

"Christians have burnt each other, quite persuaded
That all the Apostles would have done as they did."

The true foundations of a state are not liberty, but obedience, not mutual antagonism, but mutual help.

FIGHT FOR THE GOOD.

Of late we have received from our good friends in the South some anti-Mormon tracts, with a request that we refute the errors contained therein through the columns of our paper, and thus overthrow the false assertions of our enemies. We thank our friends for exhibiting such an interest in this work of "Latter Days," as to desire a complete refutation of these evil designing tracts, but we cannot afford to devote the valuable space of our paper to silence some contemptible religious demagogue, who has more learning than brains, and whose only aim is to tear down that which he ignorantly supposes to be false, instead of building up that which is righteous and good. We firmly believe with the poet, Tennyson, that "It is better to fight for the good, than rail at the ill."

The question is: After we have proven the assertions of these tracts to be false and altogether erroneous, what have we gained? It is true we have occupied much space, but have we benefited ourselves or others by so doing? No, we think not; at least not near the amount of good we could have done had we continued in vigorously declaring for the right, and let the evil perish with its wicked worshippers. If we were to stop to silence the snarl of every little dog which snaps at our heels, it would keep us busy muzzling them, and thus deprive us of preaching the good word of salvation unto others who remain bound in chains of error, superstition, and tradition, waiting for the Gospel of Christ to break their fetters, and set them free. Our motto is, and ever shall be, "Do what is right, let the consequence follow."

We would gently remind the authors of these base fabrications circulated throughout this land, that there is a place in hell for all who love and make a lie. Why delight in speaking evil of things you understand not? Why not be broad-minded enough to investigate with a soul's sincere desire to know the truth pertaining to this much despised and everywhere spoken against people, and not merely to find flaws or discover defects? You sing of your good old-time religion, and say, "Makes me love everybody," and at the same time your whole miserable anatomy is seething with hatred and malice for a people professing to worship the same God you claim to believe in. Oh, how utterly inconsistent! How manifestly hypocritical! How un-Christian, unholy and dispicable!

We love the sons of men, we love the Lord our God, we love the good Bible, and prize the Gospel of Jesus Christ as the power of God unto salvation. Do you hate us for these things? Of course you say, "Nay!" Then what do you hate us for? You know not, to be consistent and true to your confessions and loud professions. And you can never be just and fair in speaking evil of things you understand not. Milton says, "Good, the more communicated, more abundant grows." Remember the words of the poet. We repeat them again, for your special benefit. "It is better to fight for the good, than rail at the ill."

We shall continue to "contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints," and let our adversaries howl and bark to their hearts' content. Onward, upward, is the watchword, with a cordial invitation to all to come and join the army of the Lord. The right will prevail, righteousness triumph, and truth outlive her wicked opponents. So we fear not the outcome, but gladly await the coming of our Lord, for then we know that salvation awaits us if we are true to the teachings of that which the world has nicknamed "Mormonism."

History of the Southern States Mission.

FEBRUARY, 1899.—On the 7th inst. Elder Geo. A. Lyman arrived at the office, having been released from presiding over the East Kentucky conference to assist Pres. Rich as a counsellor. All the Elders of the Louisiana conference, with the exception of Elder Louis A. Warren, were met in conference assembled at Red Rock, Natchitoches parish, Louisiana, on the 14th inst. Much good instruction was given, and a time of rejoicing and gladness was had.

On the 21st a company of Elders arrived from the vales of the far west. Their names were as follows: Albert Arrowsmith, Wm. J. Hunnicutt, Joseph F. Tingy, Ernest Knowles, A. B. Scovil, Miel C. Pierce, Joseph M. Holt, Jonathan D. Wood, Albert I. Grover, Conrad Maag, Jr., Ernest S. Fisher, John Jensen, Job Adams, David J. Paice and William A. Brown. Elder Frank H. Snow arrived on the 13th inst. and was assigned to labor in the Virginia conference.

It was also on the 21st, the day of the company's arrival, that a telegram was received from Elder R. A. Robinson of the Louisiana conference which read as follows: "Elder Louis A. Warren died last night of pneumonia. Arrange by wire for transportation of corpse and Elder." A full account of Elder Warren's death, of his fidelity, integrity, and faithfulness, is given on page 101 of Vol. 1.

During this month the Chattanooga conference was organized with Pres. L. R. Anderson at its head. It embraced some twenty counties, located as follows: Sequachee, Marion, Franklin, Grundy, Hamilton, Polk, James and Bradley in Tennessee; Jackson, De Kalb and Cherokee in Alabama; and Dade, Catoosa, Walker, Chattooga, Whitfield, Murray, Floyd, Bartow and Gordon in Georgia.

On the 24th, a portion of the Middle Tennessee Elders were met at Tullahoma, Tenn., and on the 28th the remainder were met at Rural Hill, Wilson county, Tennessee. At both meetings a splendid time was enjoyed.

Thus the month closed.

MARCH, 1899.—In general the month of March was one of joy for the Elders. Not much sickness was reported, and in only one or two instances did mobs disturb the Elders in their labors.

On the 7th inst. Pres. Rich met in conference with a part of the Elders of the East Tennessee conference at Milligan, Tenn., where the Elders enjoyed much of the Spirit of God in their assembly. At Clinton, Tenn., on the 9th inst. the remainder of the Elders of the East Tennessee conference were visited, and a good spirit prevailed.

At Hewlett, Va., on the 12th inst. a part of the Elders of the Virginia conference were gathered together, and the remainder at Bridges on the 14th inst. The Elders were much encouraged to go onward in their work with a determination to win the prize of eternal life.

On the 19th, the Elders of the Mississippi conference assembled at Hattiesburg, Miss., to hold their special conference. Although the Elders had sought halls in which to meet, they were unable to obtain one, because of the extreme prejudice of the residents of the city. It was with difficulty that a hotel could be persuaded to furnish lodgings for the Elders. At last one was procured, and in one of the large rooms, council meeting was held. The Elders were warned to leave the city by noon of the next day and reluctantly they did so, seeing that nothing could be done with the half-crazed, frenzied bigots of that place (see page 175, Vol. 1).

On the 20th inst., twelve Elders arrived from Salt Lake City. They were as follows: Lewis M. Nebeker, Jos. D. Burnett, Geo. A. Adams, Wm. J. Turner, Chas. L. Bean, John Gooch, Jr., Wm. Fifield, W. W. Butler, Almy C. Clayton, Jos. H. Corbridge, Geo. F. Summerhays and Niels C. Jensen.

The Georgia conference convened in Atlanta on the 23d and 24th. A hall was procured in which services were held and a feeling of fairness and love seemed to characterize the whole proceedings. The Elders reported feeling well, and encouraged in the work of the Lord.

The next conference was held at Orlando, Fla., on the 26th and 27th. The work was progressing, and the Elders enjoying the blessings of the Lord.

On the 30th and 31st, the South Alabama conference met at Montgomery. The people were free from the prejudice so prevalent in the south, so they granted the brethren the use of the opera house on Sunday, free of charge.

Thus the month closed, with all the Elders feeling well, and working harmoniously for the spread of the everlasting Gospel.

A FAIR-MINDED REPORT.

[The Republican News, of Hamilton, O., under date of Aug. 23, gives a fair report of the work of our Elders in that city. We congratulate the good people of Hamilton for having such a bright, lively, honest journal as the News, and we admire the straightforwardness and apparent broad-mindedness of our contemporary. Here is what the News has to say:—Ed.]

"For the past few weeks the attention of pedestrians on High street has been attracted to men garbed all in black, with long coats and black ties, who were familiarly called Mormon preachers, but, more appropriately, Elders of Christ's Church.

"These Elders have been influential in converting four Hamiltonians to their faith, and the service of baptism was to have taken place in a few days, but on account of the illness of one the same has to be postponed until some later date.

"There is living on the northeast corner of Park avenue and D streets, a family which is composed of Cassius Smith, Mrs. Lillian Briggs Smith and Gertrude and Robin Smith, that have accepted the faith of the Christ church and will be baptized at some future date.

"The acceptance of this faith, however, is not a rash step, as Mr. and Mrs. Smith have known and thought seriously of belonging to this Church since their residence in Kokomo, Ill., where there is a very large Mormon Church.

"Mrs. Smith stated this afternoon that for the past six days she had such a severe case of quinsy that she could neither eat nor sleep and has suffered much from the effects of the same. Yesterday afternoon the Messrs. Jacobson and Smith, the Elders working in the city, called and poured olive oil, similar to that which Christ used, upon her head; and after doing this they earnestly prayed for her recovery. The result was that Mrs. Smith was much improved today and was able to partake of some food.

"Mrs. Smith stated that her mother was a Methodist and that she herself was reared in that denomination, but in reading and studying this subject she has been led to the conclusion of accepting the Mormon faith, and she and her family will be baptized as soon as she recovers from her illness.

"Mrs. Smith said: 'These people are devoted Christians. They are friends to the poor. They show kindness to all. They have the Holy Ghost from Christ and from thence comes their power. The Elders are noble young men. They are intelligent, and therefore speak accordingly.'

"Mr. Smith is an employe at the Champion Coated Paper mills and Mrs. Smith is a pianist of no mean ability. They have resided in Hamilton for the past year."

DID OUR SPIRITS EXIST PRIOR TO MORTAL BIRTH?

TAKEN FROM A SERMON DELIVERED BY ELDER BEN. L RICH, IN COLUMBUS, O., SUNDAY, APRIL 1, 1900.

It is generally conceded throughout Christendom that men's souls or their spirits had no existence prior to their birth into mortality. While this concession agrees with the philosophy of Plato, it is at variance with the written word of God. It is as inconsistent with Scripture to disbelieve in the pre-existence of spirits, as it is to believe that revealed truth teaches the existence of Deity, devoid of mind, body and attributes; notwithstanding such an idea of God had its inception in Plato's ethics, as did the doctrine inimical to an ante-mortal life. To believe that the ego or spiritual self of man lived before mortal birth is to accept reasonable truths of the Gospel.

Surely it will not be denied that Christ enjoyed a pre-existence? Because of this fact: The Bible is replete with allusions to Him as the "Lamb slain before the foundations of the earth, "the Mighty Prince," foreordained "to be a propitiation for the sins of fallen man," etc. Having voluntarily accepted the conditions of the atonement before man upon this earth began to be, He made known the great sacrifice to His Holy Prophets, who understood, and who wrote, and who offered sacrifices in commemoration of the magnanimous act of love and mercy to be enacted in the meridian of time.

The Apostle to the Gentiles wrote in his letter to the Hebrews, "God, Who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the Prophets, hath in these days spoken unto us by His Son, Whom He hath ordained to be heir over all things, and by Whom also the worlds were made." Now, then, let it be frankly asked: "How could Christ, as Paul affirms, assist in the creation of the earth, unless He existed before that world was created?"

John, the beloved, calls Him the Word, "The Father, Word and Holy Ghost," and says in his Gospel: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, and was made flesh and dwelt among men." From this we see definitely that Christ in the beginning was a God with His Father and in the course of time became clothed upon with mortality.

Indeed, we have the Messiah's own testimony of His former life. One day, when His disciples were confused by a remark of the Savior, as John records, He inquired: "What, and doth this offend you? What and if you shall see the Son of Man ascend up where He was before?" In the garden before the betrayal by a kiss, the Man God lifted up His voice in humble prayer and said: "Oh, Father! I have glorified Thee on earth, I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do, and now, O Father, glorify Thou Me even with Thine own self, with the glory I had with Thee before the world was." Surely no balanced mind will question Christ's primeval existence?

Now, then, the Nazarene was like other men in a hundred ways. He was born of woman, He was raised as other men, fed by the same food, wearied by the same toil, warmed by the same fire, chilled by the same cold, and subject to everything of which flesh is heir. His temperament was sensitive and He was of all characters the "man of sorrow." His countrymen said: "Whence has this man this power? Is not He the carpenter's son, is His mother not called Mary, are His brothers not called Simon, Judas, James, and are not His sisters, too, among us? Whence has He this power and authority?" They rejected Him because they considered Him an imposter, and because they branded Him as an imposter they crucified Him and thought He was only a man. Now, then, if the birth of Christ was a union of a spirit, which has existed in the courts of God before the world began, and a mortal tabernacle, is it at all unreasonable to believe that our birth is a union of a mortal tabernacle and a spirit which, too, existed before the world was, though not in such princely power as did Christ's?

However, there are stronger evidences than mere logical inferences. Man is a dual being, physical and spiritual, with modifications of morality and intellectuality. The spirit of man, that which leaves men when they die, is the offspring of God. Truly "man is a spark struck from the blaze of Deity." God is the Father of the spirits of men, and because of this relationship the Son of God taught us to pray: "Our Father Who art in heaven." These words are not without signification. In times of trouble, affliction or pain, bereft of friends, faced by starvation or in the midst of a raging storm, when the elements go wild and seem to defy the laws of their Creator, the inward self, the spirit, naturally and instinctively, like a true child, leans upon the arm of its Father for comfort, for assistance and protection. The word of God sustains and recognizes this relationship. In the sense that God is the Father of our spirits, we are all the children of God. We are the literal progeny of Adam, and Luke, in giving the genealogy of Joseph, says, "who was the son of Enos, who was the son of Seth, who was the son of Adam, who was the son of God." And Paul writes: "We have fathers of the flesh which corrected us and we gave them reverence, shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of Spirits and live?" But John in his epistle makes it plain. "Beloved," says he, "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but now we know that we are the sons of God, and when we shall appear we shall be like Him," etc. There, as aforesaid, we are the sons of God, because God is the author of our spirits, because of which we call Him, "Our Heavenly Father." Now listen: "And God said unto Job, gird up thy loins like a man and answer thou Me, for I will demand of thee. Where wast Thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Declare, if thou hast understanding, who laid the corner stone thereof when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy? Where wast thou, declare?" Job must have been somewhere at the time of the creation of the earth, or why the question? And since we are all the sons of God, and at the laying of the earth's corner stones, as it were, all the sons of God shouted for joy, we of necessity existed in a condition anterior to our mortal probation. Is not the conclusion logical?

Christ and His followers understood the doctrine. One day in His travels, accompanied by His Apostles, Jesus met a man blind from birth. His disciples asked Him, saying: "Master, who hath sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" Now the Savior invariably rebuked any of His disciples whenever they made light or idle remarks, but not so here. He understood the worth of the question and approved it by answering that "neither" had sinned, but that he was born blind so that the power of God might be asserted. The all-wise Omnipotence is a God of justice. He does not inflict punishment before the commission of sin. And if this blind man could have sinned (and it was possible because of Christ's sanction of the query) and as a result of that sin was born blind, he must necessarily have sinned before he was born and consequently existed before mortal time.

The ancients in the Mosaic period also understood the subject: "God said unto Jeremiah, "Before thou wert conceived of woman I knew thee, and before thou wert formed into mortality I sanctified thee and ordained thee a Prophet unto the nations." It is the reason of a sound mind to admit that Jeremiah must have existed before his birth, in order for him to have been recognized, sanctified and ordained before he was clothed upon with flesh.

Job records that every man possesses a spirit and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding. Ecclesiastes says, in speaking of his death: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was and the spirit shall return to God Who gave it." If a tourist has been to Salt Lake City, to Denver, to Chicago, or Atlanta, that tourist can return to Salt Lake, Denver, Chicago or Atlanta, by reason of his first having visited those places; but if he has never been to New York or London or Paris, he cannot return to New York, London or Paris till he first visits those cities. And if the spirit returns to God Who gave it, as the Scriptures affirm, it argues beyond contradiction that the spirit once existed with God before it returns.

It is reasonable that there was a life before this sphere of action. The achievement of such refinement as man's intellect required a period longer in its growth and existence than two or three decades of worldly years. It is no more impossible that we did exist than that we will exist hereafter, or that we do now exist. The greatest mystery is the present life of man, yet it is the most actual and real. Who first wound up the life's clock of man and set his heart beating? Why does the heart still beat independent of any exertion? Why is it that by simple volition the right hand can be raised or the brain think? Would it not be folly to argue that because we cannot know or understand why anything is, that therefore it is not or has not been? And it is no more impossible for life to be after the grave than for it to have been before the grave. But until it can be proven that the souls of men are not immortal, it cannot be proven that the souls of men did not exist before this sphere of action. And if it cannot be shown that the souls of men will not exist hereafter because they do exist now, and the living revelations of a just God have shown that there is life beyond death and also that there was life before birth. And who can disprove the teachings of the Great One, when every word is truth?

Understanding the pre-existence of spirits, we can understand the true fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man; we can appreciate the justice of God, in permitting one child to be born white and another one black, we can understand why one intellect is superior to and more brilliant than another. Wherever a son of God exists, whether here, before or hereafter, that son had or will have or has his agency, his liberty to act without coercion. He possesses freedom and individuality. And it has been revealed in this age that we exist in mortality because of actions in our former life. Those spirits who disobeyed the injunctions of the Father were cast out and became tempters of men. We will all exist after the grave, but if we "place ourselves in subjection to the Father of spirits" and prove ourselves worthy of His trust by complying with His wishes concerning us, we will exist in power; we will progress to perfection in love, mercy, justice, truth and happiness, enthroned in the courts of eternal intelligence, the glory of salvation. Is not this end worthy the means of its accomplishment, when the simple execution of the Gospel laws tend to mortal felicity? We did exist before our mortal birth; and we will exist after our mortal death, but in what condition depends upon self and only self. "Choose this day whom ye will serve."

You will find it less easy to uproot faults than to choke them by gaining virtues. Do not think of your faults, still less of others' faults; in every person who comes near you look for what is good and strong; honor that; rejoice in it, and, as you can, try to imitate it; and your faults will drop off, like dead leaves, when their time comes.—John Ruskin.

CONTINUOUS REVELATION.

The Church Built on the Foundation of Continuous Revelation—Each Member Entitled to an Individual Testimony of the Truth.

DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY APOSTLE M. F. COWLEY, IN THE TABERNACLE AT SALT LAKE CITY, APRIL 7TH, 1900.

My brethren and sisters. I am pleased to have the privilege of meeting with you at this Conference. I desire in the performance of my duty the kind assistance of your prayers of faith. I have been edified through the instructions of my brethren. They have encouraged me, and also corrected me, for I find in them instructions which will enable me to improve wherein I lack, and encourage me in the enjoyment of the blessings resulting from the duties which perhaps I have performed more faithfully than others. In contemplating the character of these instructions, it is a solemn testimony to me of the truth of which my brethren have spoken, that the Church is guided by the spirit of revelation. But we are not guided by the spirit of revelation as much as we ought to be. I think sometimes that we have not fully divested ourselves of the elements of sectarianism which some of us may have brought from the world and which others may have imbibed because of their weaknesses. Our Elders, in preaching the Gospel in the various nations of the earth, call attention to the fact that it has always been a characteristic of humanity to profess a belief in the revelations and the remarkable manifestations of the power of God which have been exhibited before their day. But when confronted with the opportunity or necessity of exercising the same faith, and enjoying immediate revelation, they have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The Church of Christ never did exist on the earth, only as it existed by the spirit of revelation from God. The Jews, when the Gospel was presented to them by John the Baptist, and also by the Savior, had just the same opportunities that the Christian world of today have, that is, of reading from the Scripture, which had been made by the Prophets preceding them, and receiving instructions from the doctors of the law and those whose pretended business it was to expound the Scriptures. But when one came to them and said that the kingdom of God was nigh at hand, they were not prepared to receive it. The Gospel then, as now, was a test to all institutions. John the Baptist said, "The ax is laid unto the root of the tree, therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." Jesus was desiring to bring to the attention of His Disciples the necessity of being built upon a solid foundation, aud propounded a question unto them as recorded in Matthew, 16th chapter. He said: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" And His Disciples said, "Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremiah or one of the Prophets." Thus we see that it was all guess work with them, so far as the general public were concerned. He turned to the Apostles and said: "But whom say ye that I am?" In response there came an emphatic testimony, not from a doctor of the law, not from an educated man, who had built his faith upon a mere reading of the ancient Scripture, but from a poor, unlettered man, who had been called by the voice of the Son of God from the fisherman's net, when the Messiah had said to him and his brother Andrew, "Come and follow me and I will make you fishers of men." From Peter the testimony came in no uncertain tones, saying, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And Jesus said to Peter: "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

I wish to bear my testimony that flesh and blood never did, because it never could, reveal unto man the identity of the Son of God, or make plain to the understanding of the children of men the things of God in any respect; and if it required a revelation for the Apostle Peter to bear witness that Jesus was the Christ, it will require revelation for every man and woman in every dispensation of the Gospel, to bear the same testimony. Indeed, the Son of God enunciated this fact as an eternal doctrine, when He sent the Seventies out to declare the Gospel. He had commanded them to go without purse or scrip, just as the servants of God have been commanded in this dispensation, that the world may be tested, and that the Disciples of the Son of God may act upon the principle of faith and trust in God to provide for them the necessities and comforts of life. When the Seventy returned to the Savior with the report of their mission, they said that they lacked nothing:

"In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight.

"All things are delivered to me of my Father; and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him."

This is a plain and simple doctrine, and whatever may be the attainments of mankind, based upon the opportunities of the age in which we live, augmented by the experience and the learning of the preceding generations, they cannot understand the things of God, without the spirit of revelation.

I wish to bear my testimony that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was founded upon the principle of revelation, and that it has been guided and controlled by the spirit of revelation from its inception to the present time. God designed to guide this Church by the voice of revelation. When I see any lack of confidence on the part of our people in the wisdom of the Prophet of God and his associates, I am impressed with the fact that we are lacking in that faith which belongs to the work of God. When the Prophet Joseph Smith was instrumental in establishing this work, he made certain promises, such as have been alluded to by my brethren today. These promises have been fulfilled to the very letter. They not only extended to the remarkable manifestatiton of the gifts and powers of the Holy Ghost, but they extended to a promise that every man and every woman in the Church should have a substantial testimony concerning the propriety of every movement made by the Prophet of God, in advancing the interests of the work of God upon the earth. And it can be pointed out on the pages of history that neither the Prophet Joseph Smith nor any of his successors ever gave counsel unto the Saints of God that was not attended with blessings and prosperity to those who heeded and acted upon it. Moreover, it cannot be found upon the pages of history where any man has risen up in opposition to that counsel and has stretched forth his hand to steady the ark of God, but what that man has come to disappointment and his folly has been made manifest in the midst of the people of God. I can bear my testimony that these evidences, which have been recorded as a result of the experience of this Church, will continue down to the latest period of time. God has established this work; He has maintained it; He has prospered it in the earth, and He will continue to do so from this time henceforth and forever. God bless you, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

GLEANINGS.

Sister Aderholt, a young lady of 19 summers, living near Evergreen, Miss., writes a firm and strong testimony of the truthfulness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. She has been connected with the Saints of God for something like four years, and rejoices in the knowledge of the truth.

Bro. T. T. Bookman and wife, of Sharp, S. C., write a very nice letter, in which they say: "We are members of the Church of Jesus Christ and gladly bear our testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel the Elders are teaching in these latter days. We know and realize that this is the same Gospel as taught anciently by Christ and His Apostles. The Elders have always been welcomed to our home, and we never feel better than when they are with us. We would be pleased if all people could see and understand as do the Latter-day Saints."

Bro. Mayo sends some encouraging news from Westville, Holmes county, Fla. Here is what our brother says:

"As many readers of the Star are acquainted at this place, I thought a few lines might be interesting to them. Health is better than usual for the season, though there is some fever among us.

"Our Sabbath school is moving along and I hope will improve in the near future, as the people are becoming more acquainted with the Gospel. There is nothing I enjoy more than Sabbath school work, and there is no institution more cultivating or developing to the moral character of the youth than the Sabbath school among the Latter-day Saints and if the Saints and friends could only realize this fact it would be a great aid in publishing the Gospel.

"Elders Jas. J. Thompson and Daniel Bagley, who are traveling in the interest of the Sabbath schools in this, the South Alabama conference, are in this locality now. They arrived here Saturday, the 11th, held meeting Saturday night, met with us in Sabbath school Sunday at 10 o'clock. We were addressed by Elder Daniel Bagley, followed by Elder Thompson. They also held meeting Sunday night."

Sensible Advice.

C. P. Huntingdon, who after a phenomenal career in business became a Pacific Railway President, through the columns of Success says these sensible words to boys and young men who are ambitious for honorable achievement: Advice is thrown away on a boy or young man who considers it beneath him to work at anything which hardens the hands or soils the garments, but who prefers a clerkship in a store or office at starvation wages. Good clothes should not be worn at the expense of a career. To the man who is not afraid of dowuright hard work, I would sugest frugality, investing surplus earnings, if only a dime a day, in a savings bank, and reading useful books during leisure hours.

FOUND WANTING.

While staying at Brother James Gresham's, in Colbert county, Alabama, there was a Baptist minister by the name of W. S. Jones came in the neighborhood and told the people that he came to stamp out Mormonism and to drive the Mormon Elders from the county. He made his brags that he was going "to do the Mormons up," and the people seemed to think he was just the man they had been looking for, so they made a great to do over him. The Rev. W. S. Jones sent me word that he was coming to see me and challenge me for a debate. On the morning of Aug. 14th Mr. Jones came to the house where I was stopping, and in company with him was the Deacon of the Baptist church, Mr. M. A. Thompson. They stated that they had called to see me. I told them I was at their service. Mr. Jones then said he was a minister, representing the Missionary Baptists. I replied, I am also a minister, representing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He then read the following to me: "The Church to which I, W. S. Jones, stand identified has the Bible characteristics, which entitle it to be called the Church of Christ, it being in harmony with the teachings of Jesus Christ and the Apostles in respect of doctrine and practice." He then asked me if I agreed with him. I replied, "No." He then challenged me to debate with him. I told him we were not out here hunting debates or stirring up strife, but if he wanted to have a friendly discussion upon the principles of the Gospel I would accept the challenge. I then drew up an agreement that there was to be no slandering nor abusive language used by either party, and we were to take King James' translation of the Bible for our standard. We both signed the agreement with witnesses. The discussion was to commence Aug. 17th at 10 a.m. and continue four days. The people went to work and built a bowery to hold the discussion under. On the 16th Mr. Jones left, telling the people he would be back on the train on the morning of the 17th, and that he had some business to attend to in an adjoining town. During this time I wrote to President A. C. Strong at Memphis and Elder William Larsen came on the train on the morning of the 17th inst. The people commenced to gather at the bowery on the morning of the 17th, and we had a nice congregation, but no Rev. Jones put in an appearance. We waited until 11 o'clock, and still he did not come. We then called the people to order and opened the meeting by singing and prayer, and Elder Wiliam Larsen preached to them for some time upon the first principles of the Gospel, and many who would never go to hear a Mormon Elder preach got to hear one, and on account of threatening rain we adjourned the meeting until Saturday morning, Aug. 18th, at 10 o'clock, in order to give Rev. Mr. Jones time to get back. Saturday morning came, but no Jones, and we found out that the Rev. W. S. Jones, who was going to stamp out Mormonism and drive the Mormons out of the country, was in jail at Moulton, Lawrence county, Alabama, for practicing medicine without a license. The Lord God of Israel is able to take care of those who fight against His servants and His work. Saturday morning Elder East spoke to the people upon Divine Authority, and Elder Larsen made a few closing remarks. The Deacon, Mr. M. A. Thompson, telephoned to Cherokee and Tuscumbia, and wrote letters to adjoining towns for a minister to come and take Mr. Jones' place, but they would not come.

The Lord works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform. "He plants His footsteps in the sea, and rides upon the storm."

Abstracts from Correspondence.

Elder P. N. Nelson gives us the following account of a pleasant time in the Florida conference:

"In these days of advancement, when truth and reason are beginning to batter down the fortifications of man-made systems and sectarian dogmas, it is ludicrous to note the weapons that the defenders of error will use, as a means of last resort. One of recent invention is that the Mormon Elders receive a large salary for their services, but pretend otherwise.

"On the 19th of August, President Bankhead met fourteen of the Elders at Spring Hill and after a two days' meet with Saints and friends, we met in priesthood meeting.

"That the spirit of God was with us could be seen by the most unbelieving. Men who could leave families and loved ones and face the jeers of a cold and unbelieving world were melted to tears, words being too weak to give expression to their feeling of love as inspired by the Spirit of God. To hear men, whom God had seen fit to bear special witness of Him, stand up and by the power of the Holy Ghost testify that they know Jesus is the Christ, that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all that obey and that Joseph Smith was the chosen instrument in the hands of God in restoring the Gospel and to usher in the dispensation of the fulness of times, causes a feeling of wonder and curiosity to occupy the minds of the most skeptical.

"We all agreed that we had been amply paid for our services and were willing to devote our time and talents to the same Good Master.

"P. N. Nelson."

THE DEAD.

Bro. H. F. W. Lee passed peacefully away from this mortal life on Aug. 14th, 1900. He was born June 14th, 1850, and was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Oct. 21st, 1894. Rev. Lee was ever faithful in the performance of all du- Oct. 21st, 1894. Brother Lee was ever ready to lend a helping hand to a distressed brother or sister, who stood n need of his assistance. Although our departed brother lived in a community where the Mormons were laughed to scorn, and frowned upon, still he was valiant in defense of the Gospel, and with an unerring zeal kept the faith. "Love and good will to all' was his motto, and the manifestation of his conduct proved that he practiced both. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss. To the sorrowing wife we would say, have courage, be of good cheer, your husband you again shall meet, and to the children, be true to the Gospel, and like your dear father cling fast to the faith, even unto death.

Sister Mary Jane Foot departed this life July 29th, 1900. Sister Foot was born in Georgia, Aug. 3d, 1835, and lived there until 1896, when she saw the light of the Gospel as taught by the Latter-day Saints and had the courage to accept it.

Some time after, she with the rest of the family, moved to Gadsden, Ala., where she connected herself with the branch of the Church at that place. Sister Foot bore a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel, and to the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission. Through all her suffering previous to her death she was patient and willing that the Lord's will be done in her case. She leaves a husband and several children to mourn the loss of a devoted wife and loving mother.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE DAVID W. PATTEN.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

The great man of whom we write was born in the State of New York in the year 1800. His parents were farmers and earned their livelihood from the products of the soil. David was industrious and energetic, possessed of a strong, healthy body and a bright, active mind. Early in life he manifested a great interest in the subject of religion, and was endowed with such faith in God that he was the recipient of dreams and visions from the Lord. When 21 years old he testified that the spirit of God commanded him to repent of his sins. He did so, and during the years following several future events were revealed to him in dreams and visions. He looked for the restoration of the Gospel in its ancient purity, completeness and power, and felt that he would live to see it. In 1830 he first saw the Book of Mormon. Being impressed with its truth, he cried unto God for more faith. His brother, John Patten, received the Gospel previous to May, 1832, and in that month wrote to his brother, David, of the rise of the Church in the last days, the restoration of spiritual gifts, etc. David was convinced that God had revealed Himself, and on June 15th, 1832, was baptized by his brother, John, in Green county, Indiana. On the 17th of the same month he was ordained an Elder by Elisha Groves, and sent on a mission with a Brother Wood to Michigan. He was mighty in faith. Many remarkable cases of healing occurred during this mission. In many instances when the sick said they had faith to be healed and promised to obey the Gospel he would command them to arise and walk, and they did so, being instantly healed by the power of God. On this brief mission of about three months they baptized sixteen persons.

In October he went to Kirtland, where he spent a few weeks, and then started on his second mission, this time going into Pennsylvania. Himself and companions baptized several on the way. To the sick he taught faith in the ordinances of the Gospel, and where their hearts responded, he commanded them in the name of the Lord to be healed, and it was done. Many people came long distances, having faith to be healed, and their prayers were answered. One woman who had been afflicted for nearly twenty years was instantly healed. He returned to Kirtland Feb. 25th, 1833. The next month he was sent with other Elders on a mission to preach the Gospel and advise the Saints to gather at Kirtland. He traveled with R. Cahoon. At Father Bosley's, in Avon, they preached to the people. Their meeting was disturbed by a boisterous man, who defied any man to eject him from the meeting. Brother Patten, being aroused with righteous indignation, told him to be quiet or he would put him out. The fellow said, "You can't do it." Brother Patten promptly answered, "In the name of the Lord I will do it." He seized the disturber, carried him to the door and pitched him onto a wood pile. The saying went out that Patten had cast out one devil, soul and body.

They met with much opposition and persecution in Orleans, Jefferson county, New York. Notwithstanding they raised up a branch of eighteen members. In Henderson he baptized eight persons. When the Elders confirmed them the Holy Ghost came upon them, and they spoke with tongues and prophesied. He organized several branches during the summer, numbering eighty members in all. Of the power of God manifest through Elder Patten's labors, he himself writes: "The Lord did work with me wonderfully, in signs and wonders following them that believed in the fullness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; insomuch that the deaf were made to hear, the blind to see, and the lame were made whole. Fevers, palsies, crooked and withered limbs, and in fact all manner of diseases common to the country, were healed by the power of God that was manifest through His servants." He returned to Kirtland in the fall of 1833, worked one month on the temple, and then went to his former place of residence in Michigan. From there he moved to Florence, O. He was sick for some time, but being full of desire to labor for the salvation of his fellow-beings, he consecrated himself to the Lord and began a preaching tour. One day the Spirit of the Lord said to him, "Depart from your field of labor and go unto Kirtland, for behold I will send thee up to the land of Zion, and thou shalt serve thy brethren there."

He obeyed, and was immediately sent South with William D. Pratt to convey messages to the Saints in Missouri. They arrived in Clay county March 4th, 1834, after a trying journey from cold and fatigue. He remained in Missouri until the arrival of Zion's Camp. During these troubles a bitter enemy approached Brother Patten, and said, with a drawn bowie knife in his hand, "You d— Mormon, I will cut your d— throat." Elder Patten looked him square in the face, and putting his hand in his left breast pocket, said, "My friend, do nothing rashly." Brother Patten was unarmed, but the mobocrat was seized with fear and turned away, saying, "For God's sake, don't shoot."

Sept. 12th, 1834, Elders Patten and Warren Parish started on a mission to Tennessee. In Henry county they labored about three months, baptizing twenty persons. The sick were healed in a remarkable way. One instance of importance was the case of Johnston F. Lane's wife, who had been sick for eight years. Learning of the Elders and the faith they taught, they sent for them. Brother Patten preached to Mr. Lane and his family that the power to be healed was given to those who had faith to receive it. Mrs. Lane believed, and Brother Patten laid his hands upon her, saying, "In the name of Jesus Christ I rebuke the disorder and command it to depart." He also commanded her in the name of the Lord to arise, go forth and be baptized, which she did the same hour. After baptism and confirmation he told her she should gain in strength, and in less than a year become the mother of a son. She had been married twelve years, and had had no children. Nevertheless this prophecy was literally fulfilled, for within the year she bore a son, whom the parents named David Patten.

Brother Patten returned to Kirtland in the winter of 1834-5. On Feb. 15th, 1835, he was ordained one of the Twelve Apostles. On the first mission of the Twelve he traveled through New York, Canada, Vermont, Maine and other States, setting the branches in order, attending Conferences, etc. He returned to Kirtland in September, 1835. Soon after receiving his endowments in the Kirtland temple he went on another mission to Tennessee. Here he found Brother Wilford Woodruff on a mission from Missouri. May 17th, 1835, Margaret Little was instantly healed, being at the point of death. She had covenanted to be baptized, but after being restored she refused. Elder Patten told her the affliction would come back if she did not repent. On their return they again found her very low. She begged them to administer to her, promising that she would obey the Gospel. She was again instantly healed, and this time received the Gospel. They continued their labors against much persecution. On one occasion an armed mob fled before him, being seized with fear, though Brother Patten had nothing but a walking stick with him. A little later Warren Parrish arrived from Kirtland, and the three journeyed together from town to town in Kentucky, preaching the Gospel wherever opportunity afforded. The Spirit of the Lord wrought mightily with them, especially in healing the sick. The devil opposed them bitterly, and on one occasion a mob of about forty men, headed by the Sheriff and a Methodist priest, took them into custody on a complaint of Matthew Williams, who swore to the complaint that these brethren had prophesied "that Christ would come the second time before this generation passed away, and that four individuals should receive the Holy Ghost within twenty-four hours." Upon examination, Elders Patten and Parrish were placed under $2,000 bonds to appear for trial June 22d. Early on that date they appeared in court. The officers took from Brother Patten his walking stick and penknife. The court denied the prisoners the right to produce any witnesses on their side. The trial was a mockery. They were prohibited from saying anything in their own defense. Elder Patten bore the indignities until forbearance ceased to be a virtue, when he arose, filled with the Holy Ghost. The court and spectators were spellbound while he addressed them, rebuking the court sharply for their unjust proceedings, the judge having declared them guilty of the charge, and yet there was nothing in the charge conflicting with any law of God or man.

Brother Parrish remarked afterwards that while Elder Patten was speaking, "My hair stood up straight on my head, for I expected to be killed." The Judge was astonished, and said, "You must be armed with concealed weapons or you would not treat an armed court as you have this." The Apostle replied, "I am armed with weapons you know not of, and my weapons are the Holy Priesthood and the power of God. God is my friend, and He permits you to exercise all the power you have, and He bestows on me all the power I have." The court and mob were defeated in their purposes and the prisoners released. The Sheriff advised the brethren to leave at once, as their lives were in imminent danger from the mob. The Elders went to Brother Seth Utley's, but soon after the mob quarreled, many of them being exasperated because the brethren were allowed to go. The mob were again in speedy pursuit. The Elders, learning of this, mounted their mules, and by a circuitous route through the woods reached the house of Albert Petty, where they put up their mules and laid down to rest. They had only been sleeping a short time when a heavenly messenger appeared to Elder Patten and told him that the mob would soon be at the house where they were sleeping. He awoke Brother Parrish, informed him of the danger, and they soon left. Shortly afterwards the mob reached Albert Petty's, surrounded the house and demanded the Elders. Being informed they were not there, the house was searched. The mob remained until daylight, when they tracked the brethren's animals to the county line, and turned back disappointed.

Concluding his mission in the South, Elder Patten, accompanied by his wife, repaired to Far West, Missouri. He remained there until the spring of 1837, when he traveled and preached through the States until he came to Kirtland. It was a season of great apostacy. His brother-in-law, Warren Parrish, had apostatized, and Elder Patten, though faithful and true himself, experienced great sorrow because of the apostacy of many of his brethren. He returned to Missouri, and Feb. 10th, 1838, with Thomas B. Marsh, was appointed to preside over the Church in Far West during the absence of the Prophet Joseph Smith. While in this position he wrote an epistle and delivered his last testimony to the Church and the world so far as this mortal life is concerned. Oct. 24th, 1838, Samuel Bogart, a Methodist preacher, leading a mob of seventy-five men, were committing outrages on Log Creek. They were destroying property and taking prisoners. Apostle Patten and about seventy-five others went out to meet the mob, and early the next morning encountered them in battle. During the engagement Elder Patten was mortally wounded, though the mobbers were defeated. Upon returning to Far West with the dead and wounded, Brother Pattens' pain and suffering became so intense that he asked his brethren to leave him. He, with Brother Seeley, another of the wounded, were placed upon a litter and carried gently by kind and loving hands. They were met by Presidents Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Elder H. C. Kimball and others. Brother Patten became so distressed that they could convey him no further, and he was taken to the home of Brother Stephen Winchester, about three miles from Far West, where he expired in peace with a clear mind and a happy spirit, at 10 p.m. Oct. 25th, 1838. Of his last moments President Heber C. Kimball wrote: "When the shades of time were lowering, and eternity with all its realities were opening to his view, he bore a strong testimony to the truth of the work of the Lord and the religion he had espoused. The principles of the Gospel, which were so precious to him before, were honorably maintained in natures' final hour, and afforded him that support and consolation at the time of his departure which deprived death of its sting and horror. Speaking of those who apostasized, he exclaimed, "Oh, that they were in my situation; for I feel I have kept the faith: I have finished my course; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give to me." Speaking to his beloved wife, who was present, and who attended him in his dying moments, he said, "Whatever you do else, do not deny the faith!" A few moments before he died he prayed thus: "Father, I ask Thee in the name of Jesus Christ that Thou wouldst release my spirit and receive it unto Thyself." The brethren committed him to the Lord, and he quietly breathed his last without a struggle or a groan. At the funeral, Oct. 27th, 1838, the Prophet Joseph Smith, pointing to his lifeless body, said: "There lies a man who has done just as he said he would; he has laid down his life for his friends." David W. Patten was truly one of God's noblemen. He was faithful and true, and gave all that man could give, including his life, for the testimony of Jesus and the word of God. He belongs to that honored number that the angel said to John upon the Isle of Patmos should be slain for the testimony of Jesus, before God would avenge the blood of those whom the Apostle saw under the altar. David W.

Patten was the first Apostolic martyr of the dispensation of the fullness of times, and will be among the first fruits of the Resurrection of the Just. Joseph, the Prophet, wrote of him: "Brother David W. Patten was a worthy man, beloved by all good men who knew him. He died as he had lived, a man of God, and strong in the faith of a glorious resurrection, in a world where mobs will have no power or place."

AMERICA;

Or, The Land of Joseph.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

This land of liberty and freedom, America, the home of the oppressed and downtrodden—the most glorious and blest land in all the world will be the subject of my hasty sketch.

The name, America, is taken from Amerigo Vespucci, a Portuguese explorer, who followed in the wake of Columbus and who took many of the laurels and honors which rightfully belonged to Columbus. He explored the coast of South America and made charts, in the year 1499, of the coast line, from the Orinoco to the Amazon rivers. His expeditions were published by a noted Florentine and Amerigo was given credit for finding the mainland of the western continent.

This land is called the new world, on account of its comparative recent discovery by the Caucasian race. It, however, contains the most ancient habitable spots on earth.

In the beginning God created the world. He divided the waters from the land. The seas were gathered together in one place and the dry land was likewise united. There were no continents and divisions, such as we find today. This division did not occur until 100 years after the flood, when we read in Gen. 10:25 that in the days of Peleg the earth was divided.

Prior to this great division, the earth had enjoyed a paradisical state: Eden's trees had bloomed and the tree of life and of knowledge of good and evil had blossomed and borne fruit. Adam and Eve in their walks in this beautiful spot had enjoyed this felicious state of unalloyed bliss and happiness, in connection with all the immortal animals and creatures of God. They thus worshipped and praised their Maker, in purity and harmony, walking and talking with Him in the garden.

God had made His work perfect and He pronounced it good. We must not forget that the first chapter of Genesis deals strictly in a spiritual creation and that all the creations of God, which have life, from the smallest animalculae to the largest mastadon in the animal kingdom; from the weakest blade of grass to the giant tree, in the vegetable kingdom; including the lowest forms of life to the highest development, man, all have their spiritual entities, and are dual beings, being in their spheres, as spiritual and temporal entities, living souls.

These immortal living souls came upon the earth in the beginning and were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth. The environment of the earth did not appear propitious for the propagation of temporal tabernacles, and the earth must necessarily fall. Man's agency must not be tampered with and a law was given with a penalty affixed for an infraction of that law.

The tree of knowledge of good and evil was forbidden our first parents, and the command sent forth that in the day the fruit was eaten death would enter in the world. This particular tree appears to have had great prominence in the beautiful garden, and was desirable to look upon, so that the fall was brought about easily and perfectly natural, being intended from the beginning, and part of the plan of salvation.

The cupidity of Eve was aroused and the fruit, appearing beautiful and luscious, she partook, and fell. In order that man might be and that the purposes of God might not be frustrated, Adam also fell.

Adam and Eve were the first flesh on the earth. When they fell, all creation fell. Immortality ceased and death reigned. The earth was cursed and subject to the devil, its environment was changed and gradually from a state of peace and blessedness, turmoil, disorder, strife and bloodshed was felt. Thorns, thistles, briars, obnoxious weeds and parasites which would burden, afflict and torment man came forth. Animals became wild and vicious and man became wicked and an abomination in the sight of the Creator.

Eden was vacated, the sons of Adam scattered and the earth became densely populated.

God gave His children the laws of His everlasting gospel and taught them how they again could regain His presence. He instructed them in the laws of sacrifice, that they might look forward to the time when His Son would fully atone for the fall, through His expiation on the cross, on Calvary.

Man was driven forth from the garden, to eat his bread by the sweat of his face and grapple with the stern realities of life in all its phases.

Eden has been pictured on the banks of the River Euphrates, near its headwaters, in Persia.

Sectarianism, among its many follies, believes that the antedeluvians and all things scriptural originated in what they are pleased to call the "old world," and that all the works of God were confined to the neighborhood of Palestine. The people of the world, generally, does not consider the division of the earth which occurred after the flood. This division of the earth did not take place for over 2,000 years after the fall of man.

The Prophet Joseph Smith, in the face of the profound learning of this enlightened age, boldly states that Eden was located in the western part of the state of Missouri.

That Adam built his altar and offered sacrifice there. That Enoch and his city, with Noah and the righteous antedeluvians, were located in the land of Zion, America.

Instead of this country, then, being the "new world," it is the "old world," and the most ancient inhabited spot that we have any record of. We finally read of the antedeluvians becoming very wicked and corrupt, and the Creator chose to destroy them from off the earth. The earth with all its inhabitants were baptized, or buried beneath the waters of the deluge, save Noah and his family, with the various animals, in the ark, all were lost.

The ark was driven over to the eastern hemisphere and rested on Mount Ararat.

From henceforth the record of scripture, as contained in "the Bible," deals wholly with the eastern hemisphere and almost entirely in the neighborhood of Palestine.

The division as spoken of in that one little verse in Genesis, must have been a tremendous upheaval of nature. The vast gulf which forms the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, changing the face of the whole earth, forming the valleys and the mountains. It must have been a wonderful transformation.

This vast continent, America, had been submerged in the flood, and all land animals been drowned. It laid in solitude and lonely security until the confusion of tongues, at Babel, when it was peopled by the Jaredites.

In the confusion of tongues, which occurred at the building of the tower, at Babel or Babylon, there was a God-fearing and righteous man, named Moriancumhr. This man had a brother named Jared, who also was faithful and true to God. On account of their faith, their language was retained and preserved and God promised them an inheritance, far from the strife and confusion of Babylon. He told them of a land of promise, reserved for the righteous, ordained to liberty, truth and justice; where demagogues, despots and kingly tyranny would not thrive.

About 125 years after the flood, a small colony of Jaredites settled in what is now called North America. These people multiplied and grew, until they covered the whole land.

The Jaredites occupied this continent upwards of sixteen hundred years, and during this time millions upon millions of souls had peopled the land, which had been covered with inhabitants from ocean to ocean. Great civil wars and factional disturbances dessimated this race and God decreed that the descendants of Jared and his brother should be wiped from the earth. They had lost the faith of their fathers and had become very wicked and were exterminated about the year 600 B. C.

A decade before the invasion of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, God warned the inhabitants of Judea of their overthrow and their destruction, if they did not repent. The prophets, Jeremiah and Lehi, proclaimed their downfall and captivity and for their trouble were scourged and driven from the city.

Lehi was warned through vision and dream to flee from the land of Judea, and he with his family journeyed in the wilderness some twelve years, along the shores of the Red sea, in Arabia. This small colony was finally instructed in the art of shipbuilding, and constructed seaworthy vessels. They embarked from the shores of Arabia, and going eastward finally landed on the western coast of Chili, in South America.

Still another colony, led by Mulek, a son of King Zedekiah, came to this land. In after years these colonies mingled together.

Among the sons of Lehi, we find two leaders. The elder, named Laman and the younger named Nephi. Laman was a rebellious and wicked man, who would not heed the counsels of God. He, with his faction, called the Lamanites, were in constant warfare against the principles of righteousness, and in consequence God cursed them with dark skins.

Nephi, on the other hand, was favored of the Lord, was obedient to His instructions, and was a mighty prophet in the land. His followers were called the Nephites.

The history of these people is graphically portrayed in the "Book of Mormon."

Like the Jaredites, who fell, the Nephites became proud, haughty, filled with bigotry and intolerance, and were also exterminated about the year 400 A. D. The remnants left in the land were the descendants of the Lamanites—the Indians—who continued their tribal wars until recent years.

Without Shuffling or Evasion.

From Fennimore Cooper and other authorities we have gained the impression that the Indian is a stolid, severe individual, with no sense of the white man's humor, but one red brother showed himself quite a civilized joker the other day in the United States court. He was on the stand in a hotly contested case, and Attorney D. R. Bailey, of Sioux Falls, was after him in the most approved fashion of cross-examination. Finally, after apparently frightening the Indian with the awful consequences which would follow the slightest deviation from the truth, Mr. Bailey took his most portentious tone and solemn manner and demanded:

"Now, sir, I want you to tell me the exact truth, without any shuffling or evasion. I want you to look me square in the eye and tell me how you get your living, sir."

The Indian looked straight at Mr. Bailey and, with that imperturbable air familiar to all acquainted with the red men, simply said, "Eat."

The court room roared, even Judge Carland smiled and Mr. Bailey let the witness go.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Enemies are to man what projecting rocks of the sea are to ships. With a ship, the rock hides itself by the covering of the waves, but once too close, the vessel meets with destruction. So it is with an enemy: He is always dangerous to man, the projecting rock of the water is like his anger, and his sea of deceitfulness hides his intentions. When an opportunity permits the man to encounter his wrath, the life of the enemy is in danger.

Prof. N. L. Nelson, of the Brigham Young Academy, Provo, Utah, writes a very nice letter to The Star. Of course we know that it would appear egotistical on our part if we were to quote that portion of his letter which reads as follows: "I shall read the copy (Star) coming to the Academy. It is an unusually vigorous and creditable paper. Success to you," therefore we will desist from publishing any further commendable clauses he may have inserted.

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

The fruit of the Gospel is the spiritual life, which enables man to commune with his God, and enjoy the blessings of heaven. Rob the individual of this divine gift, and you take from him the means appointed whereby he may become perfect even as our Father in Heaven is perfect, which is the ultimatum of man's righteous ambition.

The spiritual life of man is that which blends with the heavenly and eternal, and tends to make of man an exalted being in the glory of his Lord. Devoid of spiritual life we are destitute of hope beyond the grave, and of faith in the promises of God. Blessed with this divine nature, we are ofttimes lifted out of this present evil world with its vice and sin and made to behold with enraptured vision the beauties of the eternal kingdom, and to feel the sweet joy of the spirit's pervading inspiring presence.

Man is a dual being—physical and spiritual. His physical body is derived from his parents on earth; his spiritual entity came down from Him who reigns on high, the offspring of God, whom we are permitted to address as our Father. It is man's privilege to become perfect even as his Father in heaven is perfect. He may so order his life as to make this his glorious destiny, or he may pursue evil and sink into sin until he is shut out from the presence of God to languish in chains of darkness, woe and misery.

The Gospel is the means through which mankind may be saved from the woes of damnation. It is so ordained and decreed of God as to be comprehensive and essential for the betterment of both the physical and spiritual entity of man.

Now the spiritual life of man is given an additional grace to aid in the work of exaltation and advancement toward the goal of perfection. This additional benefactor is the holy Comforter of promise—the Spirit of Truth. This Comforter dwells in the love of God, and reaches out for all that is good and holy. It gives animation and stimulus to the spiritual life, and unites, harmonizes and beautifies the souls of men; it is not staked by narrow limits, neither is it circumscribed by the will of man; it is bound by no sect or uninspired opinion, but it reaches out, and its effects are everlasting and eternal, for it deals with Deity, and things divine.

Some one has very truthfully expressed the presence of the genuine spiritual life in these words: "There is a spirit which I feel, that delights to do no evil, nor to revenge any wrong, but to endure all things, hoping to enjoy its own in the end. Its hope is to outlive all wrath and contention. As it bears no evil, so it conceives none in thought to any other. Its ground and spring are the mercies of God, its crown is meekness, its life is everlasting love unfeigned." It is the spiritual life which causes man to love his fellow-brother, and even his enemies. Yes, it gives to man a sweet, peaceable influence, by the aid of which he is enabled to suffer injustice and wrong without resentment or vindictiveness. This makes the true Christian, the worthy follower of the Lamb, the obedient child of God.

The exhibition of these divine attributes and Christ-like traits are seen as striking characteristics of the true Christian. One may know the true son or daughter of God, by the manifestation of the blessed fruits of spiritual life. It is not necessary for the Christian man or woman to wear a badge conspicuous to the natural eye, but the act of doing good, shunning evil, and obeying God are sure evidences of the spiritual life.

OAK HILL BRANCH.

As many of our Elders have been partakers of the generous hospitality of the good citizens of Oak Hill, Rhea county, Tenn., a word from that point will no doubt be of some interest to the readers of the sunny "Twinkler." The Branch of the Church in that locality is steadily growing and its numbers gradually increasing, notwithstanding the assaults of the enemy in his vile attacks to impede the progress of God's work.

We do not believe that God ever planted a vineyard to die and perish. No, through the faithfulness of its members, it is destined to grow and become mighty, being productive of rich fruits and heavenly gifts. With Brothers Madaris and N. L. Brown at the head, we see for this branch a glorious future and a triumphant end. The Sunday school is growing, and the Elders who have journeyed through Rhea county years ago, would feel to rejoice and praise God if they could only step into the Grassy Branch Church some Sunday morning about 10 o'clock and hear the sweet voices of little children and grown people singing, "In Our Lovely Deseret," "Beautiful Zion," and "Hail to the Prophets," etc.

With love and good will for all they make a "Lovely Deseret" in this sunny southern land. Life is what we make it; the good folks of Oak Hill and Grassy Branch make life pleasant, sweet and wholesome for all who come their way.

Brother N. L. Brown has charge of the Sunday school work, and is assisted by a corps of able teachers, with Sister Nannie Bowyer as secretary. Miss Delia Travis, the former secretary, has been quite ill with fever, but we are pleased to announce that she is now on the improve. May God bless the good folks of Oak Hill and Grassy Branch, and may His Holy Spirit abide with those who are sick and afflicted to comfort, cheer and raise them up. D. H. E.

ELDER JOS. A. WILLIAMS.

Elder Joseph Williams, of Salt Lake City, passed through Chattanooga en route to the bedside of his brother, Gilbert M. Williams, who lies dangerously ill with fever at Hampstead, Pender county, N. C. Elder Williams will be remembered by many honest souls in the old North State, who owe their knowledge of God's revealed truths, in a great measure, to his indefatigable and energetic labors for the Master's cause. Elder Williams did not have much time to spend here, as he was extremely anxious to reach his brother, and be in his presence, but during his brief visit his company and congeniality was certainly enjoyed and appreciated. We trust that he will find his brother and our beloved co-laborer convalescent, and that the Lord will bless him on his journey, and return the twain to the home of a loving father, who anxiously and longingly awaits their arrival. Elder Joseph A. Williams spent some thirty months in North Carolina and was the pioneer Elder in Pender county, where his brother now languishes. The fruits of his labors there are the conversion of many honest souls, the establishment of one of the largest branches in the South, and the organization of a thriving, growing Sunday school.

The people of Hampstead and vicinity have been very kind and exceedingly good to the Elders, and we know that for so doing the Lord will abundantly bless and amply reward them.

Elder Gilbert Williams, who is afflicted with illness, has our faith and daily prayers in his behalf, and for his speedy restoration. May the blessings and healing power of God abide with him, and the peace and joys of heaven attend all who strive to do the Master's will, and minister to the wants of His faithful servants.

CHRISTIAN METHODS.

Upon another page of this week's Star will be found a very sad story of the death and burial of a little boy. All deaths are sad, more or less, but the incident of this special case here referred to, becomes all the more sad and distressing when we understand the conditions under which the innocent one was buried. Its parents live in Yazoo county, Miss., from which county in '98 the Elders of the Mississippi Conference were forced to leave, being ordered to "get out," by an armed mob of two hundred men (?). They sought refuge in the state capital—Jackson—where they might convene in conference capacity, without molestation or wicked assaults from American Boxers, whose deadly weapons of cowardly opposition were shotguns, clubs, rifles and revolvers.

A Christian minister of that community, an individual who posed before the gullible as a professed "Truth Reflector," was for two whole days and the major portion of two nights in the saddle, engaged in the very Christ-like business of hunting up men whose morbid, ignorant minds were diseased, like his own, with bigotry, to form a mob to drive out the Mormon Elders. This self-same, would-be tyrant, when questioned as to his conduct, very politely stated in one of the public prints that he considered any and every weapon justifiable when wielded in opposition to Mormonism. The man's calibre, his make-up, his love for his fellow-brethren, for American principles of freedom, or constitutional rights of liberty, can be readily perceived from his despotic actions, and evil designs.

Since the day of the Elders' expulsion, in 1898, until the present time, they have been forbidden by lawless mobocrats to preach or even visit the good people of that community, upon peril of personal violence, danger of bodily injury, or slaughter of human life. The sadness and depression of the bereaved parents can be understood, from that portion of the father's letter which says, "it is hard to live in a Christian land and be deprived of the blessed privilege of having one of your Elders present, that he might console our hearts with the good word of Eternal Life, and pray over the grave of our departed little one, as a last respect to his remains. We won't even have a prayer at his grave. God help these people to see where they stand."

Such a sad scene as the above might well cause the people of Mississippi to blush with shame, and look with contempt upon the lawlessness and cruel oppression of those who would deprive the honest in heart from hearing the truth, and the bereaved mourner from being comforted by the consoling word of the Lord. Think on this, ye who would enlist your efforts to impede the progress of God's eternal work, or banish the Mormon Elder from your midst; yea, and hide your crimsoned cheeks in disgrace because of such outlandish savagery! Here was a sweet, dear little innocent boy, the loving son of goodly parents, laid to rest in the cold grave, without a prayer, a hymn or a benediction. No funeral note of consolation for the bereaved; no word of comfort for the mourner. A chilly silence; a troubled stillness reigns supreme; the parents grieve and mourn alone. Why such a solemn occasion, without a word of condolence, or a strain of encouragement and hopeful relief? The answer is readily given: The Elders had been compelled to leave, and though the parents requested their consoling company, brute force debarred their entrance, and they were forbidden to return. So far as the little one is concerned, we know he is secure in the arms of God's loving mercy; redeemed and wholly sanctified through Christ's atoning sacrifice, for, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

At the time of this mobbing some of the state officials of Mississippi were appealed to for redress and protection, but they were "too busy" with campaign affairs, and too anxious for another feast at the public crib, for election day drew near, to heed the cry of the innocent or give ear to the just complaints of the oppressed. When Mississippi's stalwart, giant-like Governor sent his message to the legislature, he betrayed the Herculean strength of his Christian weakness, in petitioning that honorable body to enact laws and legislate against the Mormon people. Why did he do this? To gain political power and the support of the public, we reply. He was at that time a candidate for senator; the office he sought was his theme and glory, the Mormon people the subject of his spleen and hatred. He stands today in the upper house, and we would like to know if a man who is not loyal to the nation's constitution when in the state as Governor, will be apt to be true to that God-inspired document in congress as a senator? Is such a one fit to be a law maker unto the most enlightened people upon the face of the earth, or to keep sacred and inviolate the holy laws already established? How very honorable indeed; how exceedingly just; how superabundantly loving must be that noble defender of the constitution! Not satisfied with the lawless oppression of the Latter-day Saints, he would make their persecution legal, and their evil oppressors law-abiding citizens. Does the junior senator from Mississippi remember one named Thomas Jefferson, a patriot of '76, who wrote a document called the Declaration of Independence? Does he have just a faint recollection of the father of his party and founder of democracy? then listen to his words: "I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of men." Read, mark, learn, inwardly digest and straightway adopt and practice this good old maxim.

What would our Protestant brethren of Utah think if they were banished from a community in that state by the Mormons, even as our Elders were expelled by professed Christians from Yazoo county, Miss.?

Suppose some of their members in Utah should desire their presence at a funeral of a loved one and they be prohibited and forbidden to attend the same, what would be the result? A howl, a wail, a cry of pain would be reverberated from one end of the continent to the other, and governors, senators, representatives and magistrates would throw up their hands in holy horror, exclaiming, "Awful, horrible, un-Christian, barbaric!" Popular opinion, public favor, and national sympathy would be at once extended to the exiles; but oh! how very different when that which the world calls "Mormonism" is being abused and its missionaries exiled! The drama is changed, the curtains of public sympathy are drawn aside, and the whole programme entirely reversed.

Consider the end of such injustice and rank oppression. Justice will some day claim His own, and every man rewarded according to his works.

If it be lawful and just to send an army to foreign shores that American citizens might be protected from those who would injure them, is it not just as legal to defend the rights of American citizens in our own home-land, from religious bigots and hireling fanatics? Some of our Elders who now labor in the Southern States Mission were numbered among the Rough Riders. There were "Mormon Elders" in Cuba and the Philippines. Returning from missions, when the call for volunteers was sounded, our Elders threw aside the ministerial garb, and missionary grip, to put on the blue uniform and soldier's knapsack and fight for Uncle Sam! They stand ready to defend the rights of the American citizen from the onslaught of the heathen Chinee; yea, willing to face the shot and shell that Christian ministers may be protected from the savage Boxer; and yet, eighty per cent. of the mobs congregated to do our Elders injury and violence have been led and instigated by those who claim to follow Jesus, to preach His word, ministers of the Gospel, so-called. These are startling figures, yet they are true and reliable nevertheless!

What would the leaders of our country think should they read the above? Yea, what would Bryan and McKinley think about these things? Would they feel justified in spending millions to protect a Methodist in China and still wink at the lack of liberty at home? Would they feel proud of the boasted state of Mississippi? Would they hate the heathen Chinee, while they break bread and partake of the sacrament of the Lord's supper with the American Boxer? We think they would hear the still, small voice of a departed true blue American repeating:

"Oh, say, does the Star Spangled Banner yet wave O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

THE DEAD.

Little Fred Martin, the sweet, loving son of Brother J. J. Martin, of Mechanicsburg, Yazoo county, Miss., passed peacefully away from this life of mortal probation on the afternoon of August 28, 1900, after an illness of but twelve hours' duration. It was a sad day for the beloved parents, all the more so because it was not possible for the Elders to be present, that they might console and buoy up their sorrowing hearts. Cruel oppression was the reason of their absence; they are forbidden to enter the county, or visit the people. We feel to extend our tender sympathy and loving affection for the bereaved parents. They desired the presence of the Elders, but it was not possible for them to attend. May the Father of all mercies bless, guide, comfort and console them.

Since making up the subject matter for this week's Star we have received the sad news of the death of another of Brother Martin's little children, who was born Oct. 10, 1893, and died Aug. 30, 1900. May the sweet influence of God's Holy Spirit abide in the hearts and homes of the sorrowing parents.

Twilight is like death; the dark portal of night comes upon us, to open again in the glorious morning of immortality.—James Ellis.

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY APOSTLE A. O. WOODRUFF

IN THE TABERNACLE AT SALT LAKE CITY, APRIL 7, 1900.

My brothers and sisters, I trust that I may have your support and the blessings of God to guide me in my utterances here this afternoon. I have no other desire in standing before you than to give you that which the Lord may reveal unto me, and I desire to so live that whenever I am called upon to occupy a position of this kind, the Lord may be pleased to favor me with His Holy Spirit, that I may not be left to depend upon the wisdom of man.

I have a desire this afternoon to say some words that may be stimulating and encouraging to those who hold the Priesthood, especially to those who are acting in the Lesser Priesthood. President Snow has gone among the people and discharged the duties which our Heavenly Father has given him to perform, and after doing so, he unloads a great degree of this responsibility upon the shoulders of the Priesthood in all its organizations. I know there is not that activity among many quorums of the Priesthood that there ought to be; and while it is true the Latter-day Saints during the past year have done exceedingly well in the payment of their tithes, they have not done as well as they would have done had the Teachers, and Priests and the Elders in Israel performed their duties as faithfully as President Snow has discharged his. True, most men who hold these positions are younger men than President Snow, but I regret to have to acknowledge that they have not been as diligent throughout the different Stakes and wards of Zion in regard to this message, which the Prophet of the Lord has given to the people, as they should have been. While visiting a Stake a short time ago, I learned by questioning the High Council, that some of them had not been visited by their Teachers for years; and while that Stake had increased about 50 per cent. in the payment of their tithes during the past year. I thought to myself, what a showing they might have made, if the Priesthood in all its departments had been active and faithful.

In order that I might bring before you what I desire, I will read a portion of the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians:

"For by one spirit we are all baptized unto one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have all been made to drink into one spirit;

"For the body is not one member but many.

"If the foot shall say, because I am not the hand, I am not the body; is it therefore not of the body.

"And if the ear shall say, because I am not the eye I am not of the body; is it not therefore not of the body?

"If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

"But now hath the Lord set the members every one of them in the body, as it has pleased him.

"And if they were all one member, where were the body?

"And now are they many members, yet but one body.

"And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

"Nay, much more, those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary:

"And those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comliness.

"For our comely parts have no need; but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked.

"That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

"And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it.

"Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

"And God hath set some in the Church; first, Apostles; secondarily, Prophets; thirdly, Teachers; after that miracles; then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

"Are all Apostles? are all Prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles?

"Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

"But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way."

The Church of Christ was referred to here yesterday and compared to a man 70 years of age. The Apostle Paul also in his beautiful figure compared the Church of Christ to the body of a man. I wish to say a few words regarding this figure which has been used. I have asked myself, what is the greatest cause for the difference between the Church of Christ and the churches that have been established by man, for there are many forms of religion, some patterning closely after the one founded by our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. And I have thought, is it not because these different bodies have not the Spirit? I compared this spirit to the Priesthood of the Son of God, and concluded in my own mind that this was the greatest cause of the difference which exists between the Church which Christ has established and the churches which have been established by man. When the Prophet Joseph inquired of the Lord regarding the divinity of the different denominations that then existed upon the earth, and many of which exist today, he was told that they had a form of godliness, but denied the power thereof; that they drew near unto the Lord with their lips, but their hearts were far from Him. I thought to myself what a comparison there was between the true Church of God, with the Priesthood and Spirit to enliven it, and the dead forms of religion, as they have been instituted by men. We might carry this comparison a little farther, and take the skeleton of this body, the organization of the Church of Christ, animated by the Spirit and Priesthood of God, and in connection with this skeleton we have the sinews, the helps in government, the muscles, the nerve system and the circulation of the blood from the heart into all parts of the body. And just as it is impossible for a human body to exist without the spirit, so is it impossible for the Church of Christ to exist without the Priesthood of the Son of God. Just as it is impossible for a body to be complete without the brain, the heart and the other organs of the system, so would it be impossible for the Church of Christ to exist in perfection without the Presidency, the Apostles, the Seventies, the High Priests, the Elders, the Priests, Teachers and Deacons. All of them have their special work to perform, just as the organs of the human system have their particular part to do. I compared the circulation of the blood in the body to the active Priesthood, which goes about the whole body of the Church, imparting life and vigor and setting in order all of the parts that may be out of place. Whenever a member becomes injured, the blood assists in building it up. So with the workings of the Presthood of the Son of God, in the great body which Christ has established.

I believe that every organization of the Priesthood is just as important and vital to the Church of Christ as every organ is to the human system; and in Stakes or wards where the Deacons, the Teachers, the Priests and the Elders have nothing to do, there will be a stagnation of blood. Our people have suffered the malady in neglecting to pay their tithes, but now this Priesthood is getting to work, this blood is ciruclating more freely, and directing its attention especially in the direction of curing the body of this particular malady. The Priesthood has labored energetically, but not as much so as we should have done. Think of what a beautiful body this would be if every quorum was active; if the blood circulated through every part of the system, and if every part was renovated and cleansed, so that it might be in a perfect state of health. God help us that we may be able to get this body, the Church of Christ, into this desirable condition; that the list containing thousands of names of persons who ought to be tithe-payers and are not, may be wiped out. I believe that one of the most practical ways of bringing about this condition is for the Presidents of Stakes, Bishops of wards and the Presidents of quorums to see to it that they discharge their part of this responsibility. It is not expected that President Snow will be able to reach all parts of the body, and be able personally to regulate and renovate the body of Christ, but there are members of the body that have been chosen to do this work, and if they do not do it, that condition which we desire will not exist.

I hope, my brethren and sisters, that President Snow shall live to see the desires of his heart granted unto him. I pray for this and labor for it among the brethren in the Stakes where I go, so that confidence in the Church of Christ in regard to financial affairs may be maintained. The Church is now upon a good financial basis; but we ought not to cease our labors as soon as we hear good news. We ought not to run well for awhile, and then tire out just when our assistance is most needed. It has taken considerable labor on the part of the Priesthood to stir the people up to a realization of their condition and their negligence in regard to the payment of tithing, and it will take a continual labor on our part to keep the people awakened to these things. Strange that we always have to be labored with in order to get us to do right; nevertheless we have to be labored with and we have to labor with each other that we may keep alive in the Church of Christ. If we are not brought in contact with this Priesthood and its workings we soon die out, just like a member of the human body would die out if the blood did not circulate to that part. Thus it is very necessary that the brethren who hold the Priesthood and the sisters who are engaged in the different organizations of the Church should carry their responsibility and feel that there is an individual responsibility connected with this work which rests upon them, and that God will not justify them if they do not discharge their duties in their separate callings.

I wish to read, for the benefit of those who hold the Priesthood, from the third chapter of Ezekiel, beginning at the seventeenth verse:

"Son of Man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel, therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.

"When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

"Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul.

"Again, when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die; because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand.."

This, my brethren and sisters, my be applied to those of us who have received the Priesthood of the Son of God. We have not received it through man. The leaders of this dispensation received it from Peter, James and John and John the Baptist, the men who held the keys of the Priesthood and who received it from the Son of God Himself. Therefore the responsibility that we are under has not been placed upon us by man; it has come to us from God; and when the head shall say to us, Do this, or that, we are under obligations to do it. We are under obligations to see that there is no stagnation in our part of the body; that there is no negligence in the payment of tithes or in the keeping of any of the commandments in our Stake or ward or association. It is my duty at the head of any association, ward or Stake to see that the people are doing their duty. If they are entirely negligent to the teachings of God that come to us through His mouthpiece, I want to tell you, my brethren and sisters, that those who stand at the head of these organizations will come under condemnation. The Presidency, the Twelve, or the Seventy cannot be in all the wards; but there are men placed there with equal responsibility in their callings, and they have to discharge these duties or the Lord will not hold them guiltless. He will not excuse them if they do not labor diligently and delve into the dark corners and see that there are no cobwebs in their Stake or ward, but that everything is working as it should do; that there is no clog in the machinery of this great body of Christ, but that each is doing his part. If we will do this we will gain salvation and we will enter into the presence of God and hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." If we do not, we cannot expect, because the Priesthood has been conferred upon us, that we will inherit the celestial kingdom of our God. The Lord will not reward the drone nor the slothful. He will not reward the unjust steward, the one who has not taken advantage of the opportunities God has placed within his grasp. If our talents are great, we have that much more need to use them than those who are not so greatly blessed.

Before taking my seat there is another matter that occurs to me which I wish to speak upon. I have noticed that there is a spirit creeping in among a certain class of the Latter-day Saints which is not of God, but of the world. It has been popular, ever since Mormonism was established, to have large families; for we understand that there are hundreds of thousands of spirits in the other world anxious to be tabernacled by good fathers and mothers, that they may pass through the state of probation. But there is a certain class of Latter-day Saints that has come to think as the Gentile world does—that it is not stylish, not nice to have large families; and therefore we find, much to our sorrow, that in some instances steps are taken to prevent these spirits being tabernacled by them. I want to say that every Latter-day Saint ought to feel that they are not justified before God their Father in pursuing a course of this kind. We want, so far as God will favor us, the privilege and blessing of posterity. And those who employ means to prevent this will find in the spirit world that they have lost the stars in their crown and have shut out a means of exaltation; that they have done a grievous wrong which they may not be able to repair for many ages, if at all. Those who fought the system of plural marriage in years gone by were people who were, as a rule, opposed to the large families of the Latter-day Saints, and took steps themselves to prevent spirits coming to them to be tabernacled, in some cases going so far as to be guilty of murdering the unborn innocents. Upon such the curse of God will rest. I greatly desire that the practice shall not creep in among the Latter-day Saints. I have prayed that the Spirit of this subject might be given to some of the older members of this quorum, or to the Presidency, that they might dwell upon it, because I know, from what I have heard from reliable sources, that this spirit which I have spoken of is in a slight degree at any rate creeping in among the Latter-day Saints. Thank God for posterity. Thank God for the large families of the Latter-day Saints. I wish that we had millions more of them today, and that the world were full of this class of people, who fear God and who desire to serve Him and keep His commandments, and whose sons and daughters are reared in the principles of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

I thank my Heavenly Father for the testimony which He has given me that this is His work, that President Snow is a Prophet of the true and living God, that God is with him, that He has inspired him, and that the changes which are being brought about in our financial conditions are due to the revelations of God through His Prophet. May God help us to be faithful, to be loyal. May He give us His Spirit, that we may not get into the dark, that we may not lose the Spirit of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus. Let us stand up to the rack and do our part. Let us see to it that the responsibility which is placed upon us is discharged, that we may enter into the presence of God our Father, and share the reward of the laborer and those who have been valiant for the testimony of Jesus, and receive eternal life. I ask it through Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

BRIEF AUTHORITY.

A brook once, puffed up by a sudden shower,
Imagined that he had a river's power,
And roughly dealt with neighbor vines and trees—
His oldest friends, that he had loved to please;
To them he used to sing his songs of praise,
Passing their doors upon his woodland ways;
But after falling to his former size
He looked too mean for them to recognize.
And so it is with some, when lifted high
To brief authority that passes by.

History of the Southern States Mission.

April, 1899.—The holding of conferences was continued in this month—the first to meet being that of South Carolina, at Charleston, on the 5th and 6th. This Conference was a success, the people of the city treating the Elders with kindness, and the newspapers acting very kindly towards the cause of truth.

As is usual when the North Carolina Conference convenes, large numbers of people attended the meetings. Much good counsel was given to the Elders at that Conference, which met at Radford's Cross Roads, Wayne county, North Carolina, on the 8th and 9th insts. The gift of speaking in tongues and the interpretation of tongues was enjoyed in counsel meeting, and a time long to be remembered and never to be forgotten was the happy result of the association.

At Junction Branch, Metcalf county, Kentucky, the Kentucky Conference assembled on the 14th and 15th. The Elders were all in the enjoyment of health and the good Spirit of the Lord, and as a consequence they rejoiced in the glorious work of "Latter Days." The meetings were a success, and all passed off smoothly, free from molestation or disturbance.

A company of thirty-six Elders arrived on the 17th, and reported for missionary appointments. They were counseled in all things pertaining to ministerial work and conduct. The names of this large company are as follows: George William Perkins, Edward Leavitt, Joseph H. Lewis, David and Thomas Chamberlain, Charles G. Larson, Arthur S. Wood, David B. Wilson, Edward G. Samuelson, Henry H. Gibby, Walter G. Coleman, Eli M. Lee, Hugh Roberts, Ezra Baird, Walter G. Waldron, R. W. Smith, Parley M. Griggs, Jr., Allen Taylor, Jr., S. W. Nelson, John F. Lazenby, Jr., Robert A. Paxton, Richard S. Stevenson, John F. Hamilton, John J. Shumway, Frank N. Bleak, R. R. and Charles R. Humpherys, John A. Lindberg, John G. Bolton, John W. Hamilton, W. E. Stratton, James M. Godfrey, David Hopkins, John T. Horne, Alfred G. Keetch, Jr., and Sydney D. Dibble.

The East Kentucky Conference was held on the 17th and 18th, at London, Ky. The Spirit of God shed a ray of light and gladness over the whole proceedings, and the Elders received a rich spiritual feast, departing for their various fields of labor with renewed energy and increased determination.

A second company of Elders arrived on the 24th, to assist in publishing the Gospel of peace and glad tidings to the people of the South. The company consisted of twenty-three Elders, as follows: Lucius N. Marsden, Orson P. Washburn, J. Spencer Worsley, Clarence E. Crowley, Francis Neilson, Heber W. Bowdon, Wm. P. Jacobs, Adam Fletcher, John D. Morrill, Henry Taggart, Joseph S. Anderson, Silas J. Ward, Thomas H. Bell, George Q. Taylor, Henry P. Bronson, Peter E. Van Orden, Hyrum E. Davies, Alfred E. H. Cardwell, Joseph H. Moss, Parley Nelson, John Kingdom, Richard A. Talbot and Walter F. Ostler.

The last Conference to be held was at Aberdeen, Miss., on the 29th and 30th, with the Elders of the North Alabama Conference. A most liberal spirit prevailed among the people of that city, and, as a consequence, an ideal meeting was held.

The month closed with some of the Elders quite sick in the Gulf States.

King Humbert, who Pardoned His Foes.

DAVID S. ST. CLAIR.

When Humbert, of Italy, perished at the hands of an anarchist, there passed a king, one of whose chief traits was a disposition to pardon all of his enemies. Time and again he was assailed with pistol and dagger, yet his assailant in each case got off with some trifling sentence, or secured a royal pardon.

When Humbert succeeded his father, Victor Emmanuel II., in 1878, he was a most unpopular and unpromising prince. His first act was to pardon the thousands of political criminals in the prisons. His next was to pay his late father's debts, some $7,000,000, out of his own private purse. To do this, he was obliged to part with two or three of his largest palaces and game preserves, and to sell many of the finest horses in the royal stables. All Italy smiled with satisfaction, for a wild and wayward prince had suddenly developed into a high-minded, noble-hearted king.

But the opportunity of his life to make himself forever beloved of Italian hearts came in 1881, when beautiful Naples lay helpless with the pest of cholera. At that time the municipality of Genoa invited Humbert to a banquet. "Men are feasting in Genoa; men are dying in Naples; I go to Naples," said the king, and to Naples he went, into the very slums. When he left that city the cholera had subsided. He drove the pest out of his kingdom by visiting city after city and inaugurating new methods of sanitation. He crowned himself with the complete love of his people, and doubtless thus saved his kingdom from revolution.

Soon after he was crowned he and his beautiful queen were driving through the streets of Naples. Along the line of procession were several trade delegations bearing banners. While the royal carriage was passing one of these organizations, the banner bearer, a lunatic named Passananti lunged at the king with his banner pole, on the end of which was fixed a long dagger. The prime minister, in foiling the attack on his majesty, was severely wounded in the leg. The man was sent to prison, but soon pardoned; and Humbert, on learning that his mother was destitute, made her comfortable from his own purse.

On another occasion, an anarchist drove his stiletto into the carriage cushions beside the king, who drove the assailant back with his sword, and then calmly said: "My wretched man, what can I do to help you?"

Humbert went in disguise among his poorest subjects, to investigate their condition, and sometimes he went openly. He would stop, shake hands, and converse with a peasant on the road as readily as he would with a noble. It is said of him that, while in the Italian Alps, he would visit the charcoal kilns, where some of the poorest people in the world are to be found. He would distribute all the coin he had in his pocket among the men. He went everywhere, and was often seen on foot on the highways.

His queen, Margherita, was the most beautiful princess of Europe, who did much to increase the popularity of his reign. The queen is still beautiful and well preserved, though she has passed well into middle life. Recently she asked the gallant king if he thought she was too old to wear white. He replied that he would think about it. A few days afterwards a Paris house shipped to the queen a large box of white dresses.

It is a mystery why this king was so often attacked, and finally assassinated. Five other great chiefs of state, three of them heads of republics, have been murdered within the last twenty years. They were all—even Humbert—the victims of notoriety-seeking madmen with anarchistic affiliations.—September Success.

DEATH OF ELDER R. A. PAXTON.

It is with intense sorrow and regret indeed that we are compelled to announce the death of one of our beloved brethren, a noble man of God, Elder Paxton, who died at Blacksburg, S. C., Aug. 27th, 1900.

In April, 1899, Elder Paxton responded to a call from the servants of God to go to the Southern States as a vindicator of truth, thus leaving his home and those that make life so sweet. He arrived in Chattanooga April 17th, 1899, and was assigned to labor in the South Carolina Conference, where he made rapid progress as a canvassing Elder, exhibiting that spirit of humility that characterizes all true servants of the Master.

Elder Paxton was taken sick with chills and fever at Greenwood Aug. 9th, while working in that city. The attack, however, he did not regard as of a serious nature. Aug. 18th, by our request, he came to Blacksburg, where he could be among the Saints and receive our care and attention until he regained his strength.

Aug. 19th a physician was summoned and found him suffering from nervous prostration. His speedy recovery after this seemed positive, as his improvement and increase of strength was very perceptible. It was not until the afternoon of Aug. 25th that an opposite change was evident. Nothing was left undone that would promote his comfort and recovery, but all to no avail. He steadily grew weaker until 4 o'clock in the evening of Aug. 27th, when we were brought to realize that the great Master who gave his spirit had summoned it to life's other side to engage in a greater labor, where the evils of this mortal existence do not abound, and where he will inherit the blessings of eternal life and wear a crown of righteousness. The thoughts of death caused him no fear. He possessed the freedom of conscience which the Apostle Paul felt, at having done his whole duty to God, just previous to his death, and the same expressive words were uttered by Elder Paxton upon his deathbed, "I have fought a good fight." Elder Walker and I were at his bedside when he passed away with a ray of peace and a beam of sunshine upon his countenance.

He died at the home of Brother and Sister J. L. Etters, after being confined to his bed thirteen days. Their acts of kindness, as well as those of other Saints and friends, will ever be appreciated and remembered, and will be as brilliant jewels that adorn their crown of righteousness in the judgment day.

Throughout Elder Paxton's labors in the missionary field, by the spirit of love and humility which he possessed, he succeeded in softening the hearts of his enemies and eradicating from their beings the dark clouds of prejudice. As a servant of God he was energetic, fearless, and always felt to say, "Thy will, oh, Father, and not mine, be done." What more can be said than to say he gave his life for the Gospel of Jesus Christ?

"Drunkenness very slightly encourages murder, and universally encourages idleness. * * * Drunkenness is not the cause of crime in any case. It is itself crime in every case. A gentleman will not knock out his wife's brains while he is drunk; but it is nevertheless his duty to remain sober.

"Much more, it is his duty to teach his peasantry to remain sober and to furnish them with sojourn more pleasant than the pot-house, and means of amusement less circumscribed than the pot. And the encouragement of drunkenness, for the sake of the profit on sale of drink, is certainly one of the most criminal methods of assassination for money hitherto adopted by the bravos of any age or country."—Ruskin.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT HEBER C. KIMBALL.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

President Heber C. Kimball was born in Sheldon, Franklin county, Vermont, June 14th, 1801. His father was a blacksmith and farmer, and taught by example and precept that "to earn the bread by the sweat of the brow" was honorable to the fullest extent, as long as the labor performed had nothing to do with intemperance or immorality in any particular. The Kimball family moved to West Bloomfield, Ontario county, New York, in 1811. He went to school when 5 years of age, and continued most of the time until 14, when he commenced to learn blacksmithing. During the war of 1812 his father lost his property and was reduced to very stringent circumstances. At the age of 19 Heber found himself dependent upon his own resources. In this condition he accepted an offer from his elder brother, Charles, to learn the potter's trade. He learned this trade, and many times in later life while preaching the Gospel he used the familiar phrase that we should become in the hands of the Lord "As clay in the hands of the potter." In the meantime he had moved to Mendon, Monroe county, New York. In November, 1822, he took to wife Vilate Murray, a most estimable young lady, born in Florida, New York, June 1st, 1806. He followed the potter's trade for more than ten years. He became a Free Mason, and in 1823 he received the three first degrees of Masonry. In 1824, with five others, he petitioned the Chapter to receive all the degrees of Masonry up to that of Royal Arch Mason. The petition was granted, but before the degrees were conferred the anti-Mason's burned the Chapter buildings.

PRESIDENT HEBER C KIMBALL.

Brother Kimball early in life evinced strong religious tendencies, and had many pressing invitations to identify himself with one or other of the religious sects. Feeling anxious to find the truth, he joined the Baptists, believing it to be the best he could do at the time. Still he felt that something was lacking. Three weeks later Elders representing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints came into the neighborhood and were received at the home of Phineas H. Young. Brother Kimball, learning of their arrival, became very desirous to meet them. He went to hear them preach and at once was deeply impressed with their teachings and testimonies. He desired to know more, and with Brothers Bingham and Phineas H. Young went to Pennsylvania, where he spent six days with the Church, attending the meetings with great interest. In April, 1832, Elder Alpheus Gifford came to Brother Kimball's pottery, and after a few moments conversation the latter requested baptism, which Elder Gifford cheerfully administered to him in a small stream near by. Two weeks later his wife, Vilate, was baptized by Elder Joseph Young, and with Elder Brigham Young commenced preaching the Gospel in Geneseo, Avon, and Lyonstown, where they baptized a number and organized several branches.. In September, 1832, he, with Elders Brigham and Joseph Young, visited the Prophet Joseph Smith in Kirtland O. One year later he sold his possessions, and with Brigham Young removed to Kirtland, the home of the Saints. In May, 1834, he started with Zion's Camp, becoming the Captain of the third company. At the camp on Salt river, Missouri, he was chosen as one of the Prophet's life guards. He suffered from an attack of cholera, but was healed by the power of God. During all the trials of their march to Missouri and back, Brother Kimball bore his responsibilities with patience and was never known to murmur at his lot or against the Prophet of the Lord. He returned to Kirtland July 26th, 1834, where he established a pottery and worked at his trade until winter. During the winter he attended the theological schools in Kirtland. February 14th, 1835, he was ordained to the Apostleship, becoming one of the first Quorum of Twelve in this dispensation. On the third of May he, with his fellow-Apostles, went on a mission to the branches of the Church in the East. He visited Sheldon, Vt., his native town, and preached to his friends and relatives. He visited New York, met with the Twelve in conference at St. Johnsbury, Vt., and returned to Kirtland Sept. 25th, 1835.

Brother Kimball was present at the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, March 27th, 1836. He received his blessings therein and participated in the great spiritual work bestowed in that Holy Temple. After the dedication he filled a mission in the northern part of the United States. He returned to Kirtland in October. Apostle Kimball was called through the Prophet Joseph to carry the Gospel to England; to open the door of salvation to the inhabitants of that land. Eighteen thirty-seven was a year of troublous scenes in the Church. Many apostatized, several of the Twelve being among that number. Elder Kimball was very sorrowful over the conditions existing, but was among the valiant number who were true to God and His Prophet, though assailed by apostates on every hand. June 13th, 1837, accompanied by Orson Hyde, Willard Richards and Joseph Fielding, he started on his mission to England. At New York they were joined by several others, and set sail across the mighty deep, the first to bear the glad tidings of the new dispensation to the shores of Europe. They reached Liverpool on the ship Garrick July 20th, 1837. The history of Apostle Kimball's first mission in England would make an interesting little volume of itself, as thrilling and accompanied by the power of God as thoroughly as was the travels of the Apostle Paul in Southern Europe more than 1,800 years before. Elder Kimball returned to Kirtland May 22d, 1838, being absent eleven months, and with his associates was instrumental in baptizing nearly 1,500 persons, and organizing large branches in various parts of England, thus opening and establishing the European mission from which has come to the Church of Christ in the last days more than 100,000 people.

President Smith and other leading men having removed to Missouri, Elder Kimball removed with his family to Far West. They journeyed chiefly by water, on the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri rivers, reaching Far West July 25th, 1838, and enjoyed a happy meeting with the Prophet Joseph Smith and other leading men.

He immediately set to work building a small house for the occupancy of himself and family. During its erection they lived in a small shanty about eleven feet square, so low that President Kimball could scarcely stand upright in it.

During the summer he went with the Prophet Joseph and others to Daviess county to afford the Saints protection against mob violence. At the invasion of Far West by the mob militia, Elder Kimball was present to offer his life or undergo any ordeal that might come upon the Saints. He visited, in company with President Young, the Prophet in prison and did all he could to secure his release, and was also active in providing for the comfort of the wounded and helpless who had suffered from the outrages of their enemies. He attended the secret conference on the Temple grounds April 26th, 1839, at which Wilford Woodruff and George A. Smith were ordained to the Apostleship. He went with the Twelve to Quincy, Ill., where his family awaited him, and from thence moved to Nauvoo, where he built him a residence. The old home still remains, sixty-one years of age, and the letters H. C. K. are still seen on the front of the building. Nauvoo, the former home of the exiled Saints, though reduced from a population of 15,000 to 1,200, is still marked with the old residences of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and many others of the leading men, who were robbed of their homes and property by the action of mobs in 1845 and 1846.

In September, 1839, with President Brigham Young, he went to England on his second mission. He was hailed with delight by his former acquaintances throughout the mission. He labored with great diligence for over one year. They reached Liverpool April 6th, 1840, and returned to Nauvoo July 1st, 1841. He was elected Oct. 23d, 1841, a member of the Nauvoo City Council, and labored in various capacities to promote the growth and development of the city and the Church. From Sept. 10th to Nov. 4th, 1842, he, with Brigham Young, George A. Smith and Amasa M. Lyman, labored diligently in Illinois to allay excitement, remove prejudice and correct false doctrines. In July, 1843, he went on a preaching mission to the Eastern States, returning to Nauvoo Oct. 22d of the same year.

May 21st, 1844, he started to Washington, D. C., to petition the authorities of the nation to redress the grievances heaped upon the Saints by their enemies in Missouri and Illinois. On his return trip he heard the sad news of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Apostle Kimball was active in sustaining the Saints in the great affliction by his encouraging councils, and united with his brethren to finish the Nauvoo Temple, and in every way nobly met under trying circumstances the responsibilities of his high calling as an Apostle of the Lord. What the people suffered he suffered, the labors which they performed so did he. After the trying experiences of the exodus from Nauvoo, and the journey to Winter Quarters, he became one of the historic 143 who constituted the Pioneer company who entered Salt Lake Valley July 24th, 1847. Elder Kimball was one of the foremost men in all the important labors incidental to founding a great commonwealth in a desert land. In December, 1847, when President Young was sustained as President of the Church, Apostle Kimball was chosen as his first counselor, and sustained this position with credit and ability until his death in 1868. He was also Lieutenant-Governor in the Provisional State of Deseret until his decease. For a number of years he was a member of the Legislative Council, the last three years being President of that body. He was ever constant in his devotion to the Church, the State and the nation. He was a typical American, and so were his ancestors for many generations. He officiated in the House of the Lord. He visited every settlement in Utah, most of them many times, preached the Gospel, uttered many prophecies which have received literal fulfillment, and gave counsel, spiritual and temporal, to advance the work of God upon the earth. In May, 1868, he received a severe fall in Provo, which brought on sickness and resulted in his death June 2d, 1868, at his home in Salt Lake City. He died as he had lived, true, full of faith and the hope of a glorious resurrection.

President Kimball was a man of dignified bearing, standing about six feet in height and well proportioned; complexion dark. His hair was thin. His piercing dark eyes seemed to penetrate one's very soul and read the very thoughts of the human heart. Many times he told men what they had done, and what would befall them, not by any human knowledge, but by the spirit of discernment and revelation. He had many odd sayings, which, said by him, left a lasting impression upon his hearers in public and private. With all his frank and fearless manner of telling to men what many would shrink from telling, he was a loving, peaceful man, and was designated as the "Herald of Peace." During the hard times in Salt Lake City, President Kimball was so blessed with temporal subsistence, breadstuff chiefly, that he was able to feed his own numerous family and loan to men considered much better financiers than himself. His special gift of the Spirit was that of prophecy. His predictions and their fulfillment would make a long chapter of themselves, and full of thrilling interest. When the Saints were about to settle in Commerce, Ill., and though received with open arms by the good people of Illinois, President Kimball looked upon the beautiful site and said sorowfully, "This is a beautiful place, but not a long resting place for the Saints." Sidney Rigdon was vexed at the prediction, but its fulfillment is too well known to need repeating here. When hard times pressed the Saints in Salt Lake City, and a thousand miles separated them from commercial points, President Kimball stood up in the Tabernacle and prophesied that in less than six months clothing and other goods would be sold in the streets of Salt Lake City cheaper than they could be bought in New York. This astonished the people. One of his fellow Apostles said to him after meeting that he did not believe it. "Neither did I," said Brother Kimball, "but I said it. It will have to go." No one saw the possibility of its verification. Six months, however, had not passed away when a large company of emigrants, burning with the gold fever from the east, came into the city, and becoming eager to reach the glitering gold fields of California, they sold their merchandise on the streets for a less price than the New York prices. They sold their large animals for pack houses, and thus more than literally fulfilled the remarkable prophecy of President Heber C. Kimball. These are but examples of many like predictions uttered by this great Apostle of the Lord.

He was broad and magnanimous in his ways, kind to the widow and the fatherless. He was beloved by his associates in the Apostleship and by all the Saints. He fullfilled the characteristics of an honest man. "The noblest work of God."

Dead Millionaire's Secret of Success.

"The great secret of success is laying by a nest egg and adding to your little store—never spending more than you make."

"A young man should command what he is worth, always keeping his eyes open to better himself."

"Many young men make a mistake in going to college and losing the most important part of their lives in filling themselves with knowledge of other men's deeds, of no practical use to the commercial world."

"I do not think the life of one who has accumulated a hundred millions, more or less, although interesting, is inspiring."

"No one can follow in the footsteps of another. He must work out his own destiny."

"If you observe the rules of honesty, integrity and economy and fear God, you have just as good a chance as any man that may be cited."

"Never allow any social obligation to interfere with a business engagement."

"I have never cared a cent what any human being said or thought about my actions so long as I was satisfied."

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

To illustrate His parables, the Lord always took something that the people were familiar with; such as the "fig tree," the "vineyard," the "wheat" and the "tares"—something that would appeal to their hearts. And as things told in story form are more interesting to us, so it was to the people in the days of Christ. And He found it necessary to speak to them in this form, that they might be taught true things, and find a better world. The parables of Christ are so simple, and so beautiful, yet contain important lessons; and if carried out will bring us salvation.

Jesus had been throughout every village and city, preaching and showing forth the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. His Apostles were with Him. Many came to Him to be healed of their infirmities; devils were cast out, and the sick were healed, etc. And when many people were gathered together, He spoke to them in this parable:

"A sower went out to sow his seed; and as he sowed some fell by the wayside: and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

"And some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

"And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it.

"And other fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundred fold." And when He had said these things, He cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

And His Disciples asked Him, saying, What might this parable be?

And He said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God; but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand."

The Lord explains this parable. The Sower was Himself, and it may also mean every minister of His Gospel; the seed which He sows is the best of seed—God's word; the ground upon which He sows is the heart.

When He sows, sometimes the wicked one comes and takes away the seed, and when we do not pay attention, we let the devil get into our minds, and like the little birds with the seed, he carries away from us all the good we might get.

At other times we hear the word with great pleasure, but if any wicked person finds fault with us—that we are too religious, then we are in danger of minding what they say, and of thinking too lightly of the joy we felt when we heard the gracious truths of the Gospel; and so we are like the stony ground hearers, for the seed withers in our hearts, instead of taking root.

At other times we let bad, foolish and vain thoughts enter our minds while we are hearing, and these become so numerous that there is not room for anything else to enter Then it is that the word in our hearts resembles the seed sown among thorns.

But, if we hear the word, if we understand it, and if we bring forth fruit, and are holy in our thoughts and lives, then the good seed takes root and we show that we have not received it in vain.

As the young tree is easily bent, and the brook, at its head, easily turned aside, godliness may be more easily learned in youth than age. Youth is the time to sow the seed, if we want it to thrive and grow. It is necessary to sow well, that we may reap well. What a man soweth, so shall he reap, as in the case of Daniel—he feared God, and though he suffered trial and persecution from his captors, being carried captive into Babylon, and seeing Jerusalem besieged and sacked, and suffering the utmost humiliation, yet this did not seem to mar the godliness or faith of the captive boy. The seeds of truth and fear of the Lord had been sown in his heart, and he did not swerve from this knowledge. He drew nearer to the Lord; the truth in his soul bore fruit unto holiness; God was glorified, and that boy was blest. 'Twas thus then that Daniel sowed; and how did he reap? Friend after friend was raised up; heart after heart was open before him; in the wondrous providence of God, whom Daniel feared, Nebuchadnezzer himself became his fast friend; in short, Daniel had honored God, and was not put to shame. He might sow in tears, but he reaped in joy.

The good and noble attributes of our natures require constant care and watchfulness, to get them to grow and bear fruit. Anyone can be a weed, but it takes a great deal of effort, and study, and self-denial to be a useful plant. We should, each of us, be determined that in the vineyard of the Lord, we will be useful plants, bearing good fruit, and not worthless weeds. "BEN BOLT."

History of the Southern States Mission.

MAY, 1899.—After leaving Aberdeen, Miss., President Rich went to St. Louis, where he met Apostles John Henry Smith and Mathias F. Cowley.

In visiting the various conferences there was seen a need for a more systematic mode of work than that in vogue, and in order to obtain more of a uniformity the idea of having a conference of conference presidents was conceived—a fitting climax indeed to the work just completed. All necessary preparations were made for the event to take place in Chattanooga on the 6th, 7th and 8th of the month. Each conference president was to rehearse the method of labor in his conference, and to suggest anything that might be assisting to the work.

It was, moreover, designed to have some of the leading authorities present, that they might witness the proceedings, understand the manner of work, and give counsel and instruction as to how the work should be continued in the future. Through the kindness of President Snow, Apostles John Henry Smith and Mathias F. Cowley were appointed to attend. President Rich accompanied them from Kansas City to Chattanooga, arriving on the 4th, and met the Elders in conference on the 6th. Meetings were held in the auditorium, and a general good spiritual feast was enjoyed by all. (For a full account of conference proceedings see pages 188 and 196, Vol. 1.)

On the 8th inst. seventeen Elders arrived from Zion, their names being as follows: Edwin D. Olpin, Geo. L. Mortensen, James C. Barrington, David Hughes, John Illum, Heber Olsen, Samuel Williams, Geo. E. Cook, Jos. W. Thorne, W. E. Bench, Jos. P. Bishoff, Frank W. Barnes, Isaac B. Evans, Andrew Nyman, Jr., Fountain S. Johnson, Jas. S. Sterling and Geo. W. Hilton, Jr. Counsel meeting was held with the Presidents and new Elders, which concluded the first conference of Conference Presidents.

On the 11th inst. the Apostles and their wives left for their homes, together with Sister Rich and the children. They were accompanied by President Rich as far as Kansas City, Mo.

Another company of Elders numbering thirty-one arrived on the 22d inst. They were: C. W. West, Heber S. Olsen, Geo. H. Walker, Cyril C. Tingey, Willis Call, Chas. W. Walker, James M. Connell, Joel H. Orton, J. W. Bateman, Lorenzo E. Hoskins, William Smith, Henry M. Godrey, John E. Godfrey, Wilford Georgeson, Stephen H. Fotheringham, Ezra Brown, Thos. Neilson, Jas. E. King, Hans P. Hansen, Fred Christiansen, John H. Bankhead, Albert M. Olsen, Thos. J. John, J. K. Lemon, Jr., Chas. H. White, Wm. N. Eldridge, Frank N. Tyler, Alma Page, Oliver Jacobsen, Walter A. Adams and C. A. Burnham.

The month closed with quite a number of Elders sick, especially those in the gulf states.

JUNE, 1899.—The needs of an office down town had long been felt, so, accordingly, one was procured in the rear of the Third National Bank. The commissary and all other business was moved down on the 8th and 9th inst. A change on the Star was made on the 15th, when Editor D. P. Felt was released to return home, and Elder Ray Ashworth appointed to succeed him, with Elder A. F. Cardon as his assistant.

On the 19th, a company of thirty-four Elders arrived in Chattanooga and reported for duty. The names of this large company are: John Reeve, Z. N. Decker, Samuel S. Cluff, Jr., Clarence A. Hoagland, Jos. F. Nibley, Frederick P. Jones, Daniel Perkins, James McArthur, Wm. H. Lowder, L. E. Jordan, Geo. O. Holt, Andrew J. Reese, John Bailey, Willard Burgess, John W. Freestone, James Platt, Joel Nibley, Otto Lundburg, Don C. Benson, E. B. Snow, Jr., Charles McNeil, Alma Olson, Fred K. Jacobs, Bryan W. Peck, Hans P. Rasmussen, Joseph Sorenson, James A. Thornton, E. D. Curtis, Carl A. Miller, Gilbert M. Williams, W. W. Allen, W. G. Miles, Hymen W. Jones and Francis P. Hammand. Elder L. Eugene Jordan came to labor as book-keeper in the office.

On the 25th, Elders Anderson and Lyman left for Chicago. Together with President Rich, they met, at Chicago, Apostle F. M. Lyman, and with him they held a consultation upon matters pertaining to the work of God and the labors of the Elders in the Southern States Mission.

New Books and Tracts.

The articles which have been published in the Star entitled "The Dark Ages" have been compiled into book form and can be had for the nominal sum of 10 cents. The writer has spent many years in the study of ancient history and is well versed in the same. From the most authentic writers he has condensed his work. It is perfectly reliable and every Elder should have one with him to study for his own benefit, and carry them for sale.

The mission has also published a picture book of forty pages, containing portraits of all the authorities of the church from its organization down to the present time. It also contains cuts of the temples, the public free school of Salt Lake City, which should be conclusive evidence that we are not opposed to education. It contains pictures of the different denominational churches of Salt Lake which show to the people that we believe in religious toleration. There are inspiring pictures of mountain scenery, etc., all of which make the book of great worth to the Elders in making friends. The price is 25 cents, and no book will allay prejudice and right wrong ideas concerning our people more than this book of views.

Inasmuch as we have had many applications for the letters answering Dr. Brougher's tirade on Mormonism, which were published in the Star of some months ago, also Ellis' lecture on Mormonism, we have published them in tract form to supply the demand. They will sell for the same price as our other tracts.

We have on hand Missionary Hymn Books, copies of "Voice of Warning," and "Mr. Durant," of Salt Lake, in leather binding, which sell for 35 cents per copy. These books are of inestimable value to present to dear friends as tokens of loving remembrance.

9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Conference presidents will greatly oblige us if they will send in monthly history, at the close of each month. Those who have not sent them in for the months of July and August will greatly favor us if they will do so, at their earliest convenience.

AFFLICTIONS.

The object of penning these lines is to comfort and strengthen those tried by affliction. Afflictions do not come by accident or chance—they seem to be the common heritage and universal lot of man. Some endure more sorrows than do others; they wade through the deep waters of trial from early morn till late, until they begin to realize with the faithful Job, that: "Affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground; yet man is born into trouble, as the sparks fly upward." (Job 5:6-7.)

When we think our lot in life hard and miserable beyond the hardships of all others, if we will only just visit our neighbors, and take a peep into their homes, we shall very soon become convinced that others are wading in as deep waters as we, with as little, or perhaps less help and encouragement than bestowed on us, struggling against adverse powers, and striving to keep their heads above water. Then let us not despair and imagine our lot the saddest of all. Do you know of anyone who has no sorrows, cares, or trials to encounter and endure? Simply because you may not discern sorrow depicted on the features, manifest in their acts, or spoken in their words, do not by any means suppose they have no burdens in this life. Perhaps such a one may have many trying ordeals, but he is playing the noble, manly part, expressed in the good old hymn, "Go bury thy sorrow, the world hath its share." You may be brought low upon the bed of sickness, your body racked with excruciating pain, your whole being scorched with a burning fever, your strength gone, the vital forces weakened, leaving you helpless and miserable indeed, but remember that tens of thousands are suffering like afflictions. There hath no trial befallen you, but that which is common unto man, and which the mortal body becomes heir to.

The Psalmist David rejoiced in his sorrows and cried with joy, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." Oftentimes those very things we consider our worst calamities turn out to be our greatest benefactors, and affliction teaches us many a good lesson we would not otherwise have learned. The storms of winter strip the trees of their leaves, and bare their massive branches of the green foliage, covering them instead with the cold, chilly icicles, and divesting them of luscious fruit and fragrant flowers; but it is while they are thus stripped that they send their roots deeper into the soil, and prepare for a more abundant harvest. So it is with the humble followers of the Lamb; having borne good fruit in the summer of life, when all went well and pain and sorrow were foreigners to their peaceful abodes, when the winter of affliction comes with its stinging blasts and fearful storms, their faith in God drives them to the throne of grace, for consolation, comfort and protection.

In the hour of grief and sadness, our God will never us forsake. He will lend a helping hand, bestow a heavenly comforter, and assist us to rise above our sorrows, that we might take a glimpse of heavenly joys, which mortal tongues can never express, or feeble pen communicate. We learn in affliction who are our real friends, upon whom we can rely for earthly aid and temporal assistance. Sometimes our friends in the trying hour of need are total strangers to us; yes, people lend us a helping hand, and speak cheering words of comfort, whom we have scarcely formed an acquaintance with. Our Elders, wandering as strangers among strange people, are sometimes afflicted with diseases common to the country where they labor, and the generous, whole-souled people of the land take them in, minister to their wants, nurse them in their afflictions, and care for them until they regain health and strength again. Such acts of human kindness are Christ-like, heavenly, and savor of divinity. This is true Christianity, genuine godliness, and a fair exemplification of love unfeigned.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." If we are sickly, weak, and almost helpless, let us take joy and encouragement from the promises of the Lord—"In Me ye shall have peace." Do not allow the dark, lowering clouds of sorrow to bedim your eyes from beholding the silver lining of God's love, and the joys which await you hereafter. Your redemption and deliverance draweth nigh; therefore lift up your heads and rejoice; for this life is but a single drop compared with the vast and endless ocean of eternity. "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved."

'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities."

A TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH.

Elder Almy Clayton recently received a letter from some good friends in Virginia, in reply to a Gospel letter sent by him. We take the liberty of publishing the same, or portions of it, that the readers of the Star might enjoy the testimony of one who has not as yet identified herself with the Saints of Latter Days. We will withhold names, dates, and place, for obvious reasons.

"My Dear Brother:

"I received your highly appreciative letter, which was read with care and pleasure. I shall join the Church of Latter-day Saints, and be baptized by one having authority the very first opportunity I have. Indeed, Brother C——, I feel that I would never be happy if I did not join myself with the Saints. I am convinced they are the true Church and the only true Church on earth. I am perfectly satisfied and do truly believe Joseph Smith was exactly what he claimed to be. I shall always look back with pleasure on the time when you and companion called on us, for if you had never came I should have been groping in darkness still, trying to find the true religion of Jesus Christ, for I could not see it in any of the churches.

"I enjoy reading the Star, for I feel that you are all my dear brothers and sisters, and I love all the true Saints. You know the Bible says, "We have passed from death unto life, if we love the brethren." There is so much brotherly love among our people; I am proud to say our people, for I feel that I am truly one with you.

"I am always pleased to hear from those who have obeyed the truth as it is in Christ Jesus."

The above letter speaks a good word for the Saints of God, and breathes a loving spirit in every word and line. It is possible for all to know, even as the author of this letter, that the Church of Jesus Christ is on the earth, with all its beauty, grace, divinity and holy organization.

Good order is the foundation of all good things.

DISTRESSING FLOOD IN TEXAS.

On the 9th inst., the city of Galveston, Texas, was visited by a disastrous flood. It is reported that about 2,000 lives are lost, while the estimate of property destroyed is incalculable at the present time. This is the most appalling tornado that the Lone Star State has been subjected to. The waters of the Gulf of Mexico were heaved beyond their usual bounds, and the Island City was submerged, almost entirely. Galveston has a population of some 68,000 souls, is built on an island, extending east and west for twenty-seven miles, and is seven miles in its greatest width, north and south.

In these days of "perilous times" tornadoes sweep the deep, fierce hurricanes cause the mighty surge to leap and roar in terrific fury, men's hearts fail them for fear, and the signs of the times denote the coming of the Son of God, and a reign of righteousness and holy love. Let us watch and pray, serve and obey, that we may be prepared to hail our Lord, and welcome our King, the Messiah, the Prince of Peace.

TEMPTING THE LORD.

The Chattanooga Press of the 7th inst. contains the following startling news, as an item of mammoth importance. Inasmuch as it assumes such vital consequence as to find its way into the columns of a contemporary up-to-date newspaper, it may prove amusing to our Elders, and amazing to the public who fail to read the Press. For the benefit of all, and being as it is brief, we quote the same in full: "A Mormon Elder near Pulaski said that if a man was right with his Savior nothing could injure him. He refused to drink carbolic acid offered by a minister, however."

After reading the above, does it not look a little strange that such a remarkable Christ-like individual as a professed minister should offer a fellow-brother "carbolic acid?" His actions were wholly foreign to those of the true and faithful servant of the Master, but still they were akin to the conduct of the majority of his cloth. Did that good old minister, whomsoever he may be, think he was doing Christ service when he requested a Mormon Elder to take deadly poison? Was it a noble, righteous deed; or was it not base, ignoble and wickedly malicious? What if the Mormon Elder did say (which we do not necessarily admit) "that if a man was right with his Savior nothing could injure him?" Did a professed follower of Jesus find fault with this saying, which makes the Lord all powerful? Surely the minister, if he be of the chosen number, had ought to grasp him by the hand, and bid him God speed, instead of presenting him with "carbolic acid," and asking him to partake of the same, as a proof and test of the truthfulness of his assertion.

Perhaps it would be well for that dear, good, Christian minister, if he would adopt, and liberally practice the example of the homeopathic quack doctor, who never gave his suffering patient a course of medicine without first partaking of the lotion himself; then, if he survived the dose, he felt safe to administer it unto the sick. At least it would teach him a good lesson, which all good people like he should learn: "Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you."

Remember the words of Jesus, how He said, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Beware, lest the wrath of an indignant God smite you in His sore displeasure, for your evil words and wicked designs. Those self-righteous Pharisees of old tempted Jesus in like manner as modern hypocrites are now tempting the servants of the Lord. Even when the Son of Man was crucified, they reviled Him, and said, "He saved others; Himself He cannot save. If He be the Christ let Him come down from the cross, and we will believe Him." His wonderful power was never exercised to satisfy the morbid curiosity of sign-seekers, whom He designated as "wicked and adulterous," and He taught His Apostles to be "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Why did the self-righteous preacher at Pulaski betray such a low, unbelieving, sign-seeking spirit, as to require the Elder to drink carbolic acid before he would believe the words of Jesus, or the divinity of His mission? How would he receive Christ, as the Son of God? Would he offer the Lord carbolic acid? Undoubtedly he would, for our Savior would tell him the same things as those spoken by the Elder, and he cannot refute them. We know of no better advice to give to this professed minister, and to all others of his kith and kin, than those spoken by Jesus to the evil one on the occasion of the temptation in the wilderness, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

"HIGH CHURCH."

The Boston Transcript tells of an Episcopal church that is being sued because it is not sufficiently "high church." It seems that a certain person left money to the church, with the provision that the services should come up to a certain standard of churchmanship. The minister has failed, it is claimed, to get as much ritualism into the service and the responses of his flock as the money calls for.

This puts us in mind of the "Parson's Prayer:"

"I have candles and all sorts of dresses to buy,
For I wish you to know that my church is called High—
I don't mean the structure of steeple or wall,
But so high that the Lord cannot reach it at all."

"Ritualism" is not Christianity, but merely a vain and foolish tradition. Candles, dresses, robes, and outward ceremonies, to the exclusion of faith, hope, love, and good will for all, are useless, meaningless, and altogether unbecoming for true Christians, being detrimental to the salvation of their souls—a stimulus for the "down-grade" run. Keep on going. Churches are plentiful, and up-to-date pastors are in demand. The time has come and now is when people are heaping to themselves teachers having itching ears, being destitute of the truth, lovers of fables and pleasure, more than lovers of God and godliness.

THE WISH AND THE EFFORT.

He that rises in the morning
Saying to himself: "Todayy
I will strive to do my duty
And to walk in wisdom's way,"
Seldom, when the night approaches,
Leaves a stainless page behind,
Or can sink to slumber fully Satisfied in heart and mind.

Yet he triumphs who thus rises,
Even though sometimes he may
Stumble where the roads are roughest,
Or be tempted through the day—
Though he fail to do his duty,
Still he triumphs after all,
For the wish—the hope—is mighty,
Though the effort may be small.

The Lord Will Protect His Servants.

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you, the servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will persecute you; if they have kept my sayings, they will keep yours also." John 15: 19-20. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. 3:12.

The same cause will always produce the same effect. The other night at the home of Bro. and Sister M. L. D. Hart's, Chester county, Tenn., while my companion, Elder Ezra Bunker and I, were enjoying the sweet slumbers of a good night's rest, on one of the well stuffed feather beds we find in the south, we were suddenly aroused from our slumbers, about 12 o'clock at night, by the sound of a rough "Halloo" on the outside. Bro. Hart answered the call by asking, "Who are you?" "It is me," was the answer; "Me; who is me?" Then there was a pause for a moment, when the droll voice outside broke the silence by: "Is there any Mormon preachers here?" "Yes, two of them," was the answer. "Then," continued our midnight visitor, "we have come to notify them to be away from here by sunrise tomorrow morning, if not they will find themselves swinging to a tree, and if you harbor them any more you will swing with them; do you hear that?" "Sweet land of liberty, of thee we sing." It makes me blush to think that American citizens will degrade themselves to a level with China. I am almost persuaded to say, we are guilty in this boasted land of freedom and liberty, of crimes we are condemning other countries for. When these cowardly, inhuman skeptics had delivered their message, and leaving, not being satisfied with what they had said, added another act to show their inhuman characters by showering a volley of rocks against and upon the house. Still to farther show their inhuman characters, they fired several shots It was not long when all was quiet and we were sound asleep again. Sunrise found us at Bro. Hart's. We have not forgotten the words of our Savior, "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But fear him who hath power to destroy both soul and body." Luke 12: 4-5. We have broke no law, nor done any thing that we are ashamed of. We believe we are living in a free country, under the glorious stars and stripes waving to every man freedom to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience. We were not uneasy, but felt assured that our friends, if we may call them such, would be ashamed to show their faces in daylight to carry out their threat.

They choose darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. We have many friends in this county who will be sorry to hear of this cowardly act. We left Bro. Hart's when we got ready, and will leave this county when we feel we have done our duty. We are enjoying good health and feel to thank God we have been counted worthy of coming forth as ambassadors of Truth, and take pleasure in bearing our testimony to the truthfulness of the restored Gospel, and the divine mission of Joseph Smith.

DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY PRESIDENT JOS. F. SMITH

In the Tabernacle at Salt Lake City, April 7, 1900—Preservation and Multiplication of Life—Dangers of Sign Seeking—Man Established in the Truth by Faithfulness and the Spirit of God.

It will give me great pleasure to receive the spirit to bear testimony to that which we have heard today and yesterday. I think the true spirit of counsel and instruction has rested upon the Apostles who have spoken to us during the conference so far, and I desire to say that I endorse with all my heart the excellent counsel and blessed instruction which they have given to this people. I sincerely hope we will remember these counsels, and remembering them, carry them out in our lives. It matters not how many good things we may hear, nor how much we may know, if we do not apply the instructions we receive and the knowledge we possess to the accomplishment of the work that we have in hand. The paramount duty is to labor for Zion, and work for our own salvation, that we may gain the victory over ourselves and over the powers of evil that are in the world. The Gospel has been preached to us, and we have essayed to obey it, that we might become the sons and daughters of God—heirs of God and joint-heirs with His Son. We can never attain to the blessings of the Gospel by merely becoming acquainted with it and then sitting down and doing nothing ourselves to stem the current of evil that is preying upon us and upon the world.

The remarks that have just been made by Brother Woodruff are worthy of attention and acceptance on the part of the young men and young women of Zion. Those who have taken upon themselves the responsibility of wedded life should see to it that they do not abuse the course of nature; that they do not destroy the principle of life within them, nor violate any of the commandments of God. The command which He gave in the beginning to multiply and replenish the earth is still in force upon the children of men. Possibly no greater sin could be committed by the people who have embraced this Gospel than to prevent or destroy life in the manner indicated. We are born into the world that we may have life, and we live that we may have a fullness of joy, and if we will obtain a fullness of joy, we must obey the law of our creation and the law by which we may obtain the consummation of our righteous hopes and desires—life eternal.

If the time will permit, I desire to endorse the sentiments that were expressed by Brother Grant. It is a wicked and adulterous generation that seeketh after a sign. Show me Latter-day Saints who have to feed upon miracles, signs and visions in order to keep them steadfast in the Church, and I will show you members of the Church who are not in good standing before God, and who are walking in slippery paths. It is not by marvelous manifestations unto us that we shall be established in the truth, but it is by humility and faithful obedience to the commandments and laws of God. When I as a boy first started out in the ministry I would frequently go out and ask the Lord to show me some marvelous thing, in order that I might receive a testimony. But the Lord withheld marvels from me, and showed me the truth, line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, until He made me to know the truth from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, and until doubt and fear had been absolutely purged from me. He did not have to send an angel from the heavens to do this, nor did he have to speak with the trump of an archangel. By the whisperings of the still small voice of the Spirit of the living God, He gave to me the testimony I possess. And by this principle and power He will give to all the children of men a knowledge of the truth that will stay with them, and it will make them to know the truth, as God knows it, and to do the will of the Father as Christ does it. And no amount of marvelous manifestations will ever accomplish this. It is obedience, humility and submission to the requirements of heaven and to the order established in the kingdom of God upon the earth that will establish men in the truth. Men may receive the visitation of angels; they may speak in tongues; they may interpret; they may prophesy; they may heal the sick by the laying on of hands; they may have visions and dreams; but except they are faithful and pure in heart, they become an easy prey to the adversary of their souls, and he will lead them into darkness and unbelief more easily than others. The devil himself can appear like an angel of light. False prophets and false teachers have arisen in the world. There is perhaps no gift of the Spirit of God more easily imitated by the devil than the gift of tongues. Where two men or women exercise the gift of tongues by the inspiration of the Spirit of God, there are a dozen perhaps that do it by the inspiration of the devil. Bless your souls, apostates speak in tongues, apostates prophesy; apostates claim to have marvelous manifestations. And what is that to us? The trouble is, we know so little of the truth ourselves and we live by it so poorly that almost any little jackanapes in the country may rise up and claim he has had a vision, or some marvelous dream, and however absurd or untrue it may be, he may find believers and followers among those who profess to be Latter-day Saints.

I believe in the gifts of the Holy Spirit unto men, but I do not want the gift of tongues, except when I need it. I needed the gift of tongues once and the Lord gave it to me. I was in a foreign land, sent to preach the Gospel to a people whose language I could not understand. Then I sought earnestly for the gift of tongues, and by this gift and by study, in a hundred days after landing upon those islands I could talk to the people in their language as I now talk to you in my native tongue. This was a gift that was worthy of the Gospel. There was a purpose in it. There was something in it to strengthen my faith, to encourage me and to help me in my ministry. If you have need of this gift of tongues, seek for it and God will help you in it. But I do not ask you to be very hungry for the gift of tongues, for if you are not careful the devil will deceive you in it. He can talk by the gift of tongues as well as the Lord can. Paul did not seem to care much about the gift of tongues, either. He said to the Corinthians:

"I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue."

So far as I am concerned, if the Lord will give me ability to teach the people in my native tongue, or in their own language to the understanding of those that hear me, that will be sufficient gift of tongues to me. Yet if the Lord gives you the gift of tongues, do not despise it, do not reject it. For if it comes from the Spirit of God, it will come to those who are worthy to receive it, and it is all right. But this idea of seeking it, desiring it, when you don't pay your tithing, when you don't pray in your families, when you don't pay your debts, when you desecrate the Sabbath day, and when you neglect other duties in the Church; I tell you the devil will take advantage of you bye and bye, if he does not at first.

The time will not permit me, or I would like to take the Scriptures and read from them in relation to this subject. I love the truth; I love my brethren, and I know that the visiting of an angel alone will not keep one in the Church. The opening of the heavens to you in marvelous manifestations will not establish you in the truth. We have abundant proof of that in the history of the Church. But the men and the women who are honest before God, who humbly plod along, doing their duty, paying their tithing and exercising that pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, which is to visit the fatherless and widows in their afflictions and to keep one's self unspotted from the world and who help look after the poor; and who honor the holy Priesthood, who do not run into excesses, who are prayerful in their families and who acknowledge the Lord in their hearts, they will build up a foundation that the gates of hell cannot prevail against; and if the floods come and the storms beat upon their house, it shall not fall, for it will be built upon the rock of eternal truth. I pray that this vast congregation will build upon this imperishable foundation, upon the principle expressed by the words of Joshua, "as for me and my house, we will serve God," and as also expressed by Job, "Though He slay me, yet will I put my trust in Him." If you have that spirit toward God and His work in these latter days, you will build, steadily and, slowly it may be, but surely, upon a foundation that will endure throughout the countless ages of eternity. And if you do not get any great manifestations, you need not worry about it. You will get the testimony of Jesus Christ in your hearts and you will know God and Jesus whom He has sent, whom to know is life eternal, just as well as those who receive visions. For those who do receive visions, the devil will try to make them believe that they were delusions, and if they commit sin, he will be sure to make them believe it. God bless you, is my prayer. Amen.

Even With Them.

An old man's wit is apt to be dry, and that of an old soldier is no exception.

A veteran who was boasting of his prowess during the civil war was asked: "How many of the enemy did you kill, anyway?"

"How many did I kill? How many did I kill?" repeated the veteran, slowly. "Well, I don't know exactly how many, but I killed as many of them as they did of me."—Youth's Companion.

AMERICA;

Or, The Land of Joseph.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

God, who is no respector of persons, built up and founded these vast dynasties, sent His Prophets, and His everlasting Gospel, in the different dispensations, and enlightened His children in the principles thereof.

His work was not confined wholly to the inhabitants of the eastern hemishpere, which history we have in the Bible; but He had vast interests in the west, which we read of in the Book of Mormon. The peoples of this hemisphere have been blessed with Prophets and Apostles and personal visitations of the Redeemer and God has vindicated His Word, which declares that He is no respecter of persons.

This land of America is the most favored part of the earth. When Jacob blessed his children we find that his choicest blessings fell upon Joseph and his sons, Ephraim and Manasseh. In consequence of Reuben's transgression the birthright and blessing of the firstborn fell upon the descendants of Joseph, Ephraim receiving the greater blessing. Joseph was to be "a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall," and Jacob further said: "The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills."

We here find that the branches from the vine, or the descendants of Joseph, should go over the wall, or beyond the ocean, to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills, or the Rocky mountains of America.

We can picture the patriarch Jacob, in the land of Goshen, in Egypt, looking beyond the vast ocean towards Zion, the great inheritance of his son Joseph. With what pride he would contemplate the ultimate redemption of Zion by the seed of Ephraim. He would also look with sorrow upon the wicked actions of the Lamanites in their savagery and red skins, descending through the tribe of Manasseh, the eldest son of Joseph.

We can also look with Ezekiel, who in vision saw Mulek and his seed branching out. He refers to the King Zedekiah, as a cedar, whose high branch, Mulek, his son, should be cropped off from the main tree, and planted upon the mountains in the heights of Israel, and there he should propogate his seed and bear much fruit. See Ezek. 17:22.

We have much evidence in the Bible to support the aforementioned colonization of this continent, also sustaining the history of these colonists, as recorded in the Book of Mormon.

When the eastern continent was struggling from beneath the iron heel of oppression and despotism, God was preparing the explorer, Columbus, to open this country as a home for the oppressed. The Reformation had done its work and the lovers of liberty found an asylum and an haven of rest in America.

It hath gone out in an unalterable decree from heaven, that oppression, despotism and bigotry will not be tolerated in this land, and all such oppressive measures will surely not thrive in this land, which has been consecrated to liberty.

Kings and potentates cannot prosper on this continent and demagogues and trusts which operate oppressively against the poor, will be cleansed from this land of freedom. The judgments of the Almighty will be poured out upon the wicked and this land will be purified, the abiding place of the pure in heart, Zion.

America is remarkable as being the birthplace of one of the greatest of Prophets, Joseph Smith who opens the great "last dispensation of the fullness of times" and establishes the foundation of the great kingdom of God, which will be set up in the earth.

America is the Zion spoken of by the Prophets, the great gathering place for Israel in the last days. See Isaiah 2:2, 5:26, 11:11, 35:10, 51:3; Jeremiah 3:14, 31:8, 50:4. The Scriptures are replete with references to God's great work in the last days.

I am aware that many commentators refer to Zion, strictly, as the little hill which stands near the city of Jerusalem. A careful perusal of the Holy Word will show us that Zion means the pure in heart, it is also referred to as a city built up by Enoch, also the hill adjoining Jerusalem; but the Zion, spoken of by all the Holy Prophets, as the great gathering place for Israel is the land of Joseph, America. This land as I said before, will be cleansed and purified and made an abiding place for the righteous. Holy temples will be constructed on this consecrated land from the Atlantic to the Pacific and work for the salvation of both living and dead will be extensively carried on in Zion during the 1000 years of peace and rest, the millennium.

The center stake of this great land of Zion will be located in Jackson county, Missouri, and a temple will be built there which will be the glory of the Lord. Christ will personally visit, and as Malachi say, "Suddenly come to His temple." "But who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap." Mal. 3: 1.

The law will go forth from Zion, and the nations that will not worship God and respect the mandates as issued from Zion, will be terribly scourged. The Lord will be King over all the earth. He will reign in Zion and in Jerusalem, these places will be His seats of government.

All European potentates desiring to retain their power will be obliged to conform to the laws of Christ and they will send their representatives over to Zion, America, to learn the ways of the Lord.

War and bloodshed must cease, and a period of peace and love enjoyed. Men and animals will become tame and vicious propensities done away. Animals will not be hunted for their flesh as men are to live to the age of a tree and live wholly on vegetation. In that day a man dying 100 years old will be considered an infant, so says the Prophet Isaiah.

Ezekiel in his forty-seventh chapter records some of the features in the millennium, when God's house is built. He speaks of a river of magnificence, whose sides were lined by beautiful fruit trees, which should bring forth new fruit according to his month. This fruit in its variety shall be for meat, and the leaves thereof, for medicine.

As wickedness is eliminated and the inhabitants of the earth become pure, righteousness will abound, immortal resurrected beings will visit and dwell on the earth. These immortals will bring the records of the Ancients, who have accepted the Gospel in Paradise, or the spirit-world, and the viceroy's ordinances will be performed by proxy for their redemption. During this reign of peace, the aforementioned temples which will cover this land of Zion, will be extensively operated, and through the vicarious atonement offered by the Captain of Salvation, Jesus, every knee will be brought to bow and every tongue confess. Thus Lucifer, the devil, will be defeated and bound; finally being expelled from the planet with all his adherents.

The great judgment will sit, the sheep and the goats divided, all being judged according to their works. Some will have one glory, some another and comparative few will be cast out with the devil and his angels and retrograde.

The variety and grades of resplendency in the glories, must be countless. Many steps must be ascended from the lowest position in a telestial glory to the pinnacle of a celestial glory. God is just, and every variety of spirit will find its reward or punishment and obtain that for which it labored.

During all this time, America, or Zion, will be the great leader in the variety of reforms and will instruct the world in the civilizing influence of God's everlasting Gospel. I before stated the center stake of this diversified intelligence will be located on the spot where the Garden of Eden, Paradise, was enjoyed by our parents, Adam and Eve: Jackson county, Missouri. Do not get startled, dear reader, by these statements, as all the Prophets speak of the earth becoming pure and receiving its pristine beauty and paradisical glory. It will again be united, or married, and Isaiah tells us "every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain." The earth will be redeemed from the fall. The deserts will be made to blossom and bloom as the rose. The regions of ice and the uninhabitable portions of the earth, will be made prolific and habitable. The seas will go to the north and the south, and the tribes of Israel receive their inheritance as per the original division foreordained before the fall. See Deut. 32:8. The lost tribes will return to Zion and lay their treasures at the feet of Ephraim and all the children of God will take their place and receive their reward upon the planet which gave them birth.

It has been estimated by that great thinker and mathematician, Apostle Orson Pratt, that if this world continues for 8,000 years, bringing spirits in the world at the ratio of the past, that there would still be one acre and a half for each inhabitant.

Taking into consideration that thorns, thistles, briars and noxious weeds will not abide in Paradise and that the tree of life will grow abundantly, we have no need to fear the lack of food, or room to dwell.

The last grand transformation, when this planet will be purified by fire, changing its environment and becoming celestial.

The New Jerusalem, the Zion of America, will be took up and connected with Enoch's city. The translated Zion, with its inhabitants, after the purification of the earth, will descend as a bride adorned for her husband. No more sighs, no more sorrow, no more tears, no more trials, no more pain, former things are passed away. The habitants of this celestial state are pure and holy, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

I pray that we may be worthy to partake of the tree of life on the banks of the pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb, and that we may gain an everlasting inheritance in this land of Zion, America.

CONTENTMENT.

Oh, birds that sing such thankful psalms,
Rebuking human fretting,
Teach us your secret of content,
Your science of forgetting,

For every life must have its ills,
You, too, have hours of sorrow;
Teach us, like you, to lay them by,
And sing again tomorrow.

For gems of darkest jet may lie
Within a golden setting,
And he is wise who understands
The science of forgetting.

Each night is followed by the day,
Each storm by fairer weather,
While all the works of nature sing
Their psalms of joy together.

Then learn, O heart, the song of hope;
Cease, soul, thy thankless sorrow;
For, though the clouds be dark today,
The sun will shine tomorrow;

Learn well from bird, and tree, and rill,
The sin of dark resentment,
And know the greatest gift of God
Is faith and sweet contentment.

An Interesting Letter.

In pursuing our labors as ambassadors of Christ, among the hills of East Kentucky, we find, as a rule, very kind and hospitable class of people and have been successful in gaining a host of friends, many of whom are sincerely investigating the message we bring them.

Of late we have had the pleasure of baptizing some few into the fold, which has caused Satan to rage, and combine his forces against us.

The Presbyterians, particularly, have been energetic in opposing the message we bear, having gone into neighborhoods where we have had the most success, endeavoring to poison the minds of the people against the truth, by distributing anti-Mormon literature and delivering anti-Mormon speeches.

On Friday, the 17th inst., we baptized three into the fold, who reside at Bull Creek, Floyd county, Kentucky. Upon hearing of this a Rev.(?) of the Presbyterian church announced a meeting at 2 p. m. the following Sunday, at which he would expose Mormonism.

We being informed of the purpose of said meeting, made it our business to be present.

At the appointed hour, from far and near, people had gathered in to hear, as they supposed, the errors of Mormonism pointed out.

The school house being much too small to accommodate the crowd, a grove near by was resorted to, where two or three hundred people seated themselves in silent expectation.

For more than two long hours they listened to the speaker, who, instead of following the admonition of Isaiah (Isaiah 8:20) "to the law and the testimony" to prove wherein we were teaching false doctrines, other means were resorted to, and a more disgraceful tirade of slander and abuse against a God-fearing people, was never heard.

The arguments set forth were of such a disgraceful nature that many left in disgust, ere the speaker concluded.

We here give a few, among the many, utterly false statements made:

"In Utah and Idaho," said he, "polygamy is raging at full height, and in consequence of this vice, more than one-half of the children to be seen on the streets are club-footed.

"President Lorenzo Snow's saloons are so numerous and doing such lively business that scores of both Mormon boys and girls from 10 years old and upwards are to be seen lying around public places in an intoxicated and helpless condition.

"Appeals have been made, time and time again, by ministers of the different Christian churches, to close his saloons, but their efforts were all in vain, and drunkenness reigns supreme.

"Ninety per cent. of the women of Salt Lake City are without virtue; in fact, the Mormons do not seem to know what morality is.

"To add to this frightful condition, Mormon leaders in Zion teach the doctrine of blood atonement, which means, that he who is found in transgression should have his blood spilled that his soul may be saved; this is to love our brother as yourself.

"The result of this soul-destroying doctrine having been instilled into the minds of their deluded followers, is what might be expected. Many innocent persons are being murdered in cold blood, their only crime that of not believing Mormon teachings.

"You might ask the question: How is it such crimes go unpunished? I will tell you. As the Mormons hold exclusive rule and sway in this modern Zion, you can readily see how impossible it would be to convict the offender with a Mormon judge and jury."

In his concluding remarks, he counseled those who had been misled, to immediately retrace their steps, for, said he, "it will be easier to do so now than later on."

Immediately after his dismissing, we called the attention of the audience, and briefly pointed out, to the satisfaction of those present, the falsity of the statements made, by reference to Mormon teachings, and the true condition existing in Utah and elsewhere among the Latter-day Saints, also extending to one and all an invitation to do as Isaiah says (Isaiah 1:18): "Come now and let us reason together."

At the close of our remarks, many, including ministers, took us by the hand and bade us God-speed in sowing the seeds of truth.

Cheers for the Mormons arose on all sides, while he who lifted his puny arm in opposition to the work of God was invited to return to the neighborhood no more, "as his so-called sermon was a disgrace to the human family."

Many more friends were added to the goodly number we already had. Thus the truthfulness of the saying of President Brigham Young is emphasized: "Every time you kick a Mormon, you kick him up-hill."

Your brethren in the cause of truth,
Clarence A. Hoagland.

Strange Reptiles.

A western writer thinks one of the severest tests ever put upon his risibles was endured at a London dinner-table.

He was seated next a lovely, rosy-cheeked, gray-eyed English girl, who displayed a most absorbing and flattering interest in his native land. She appeared to have imbibed some extraordinary ideas about the perils to be encountered in the newly settled regions of the United States, and tried not to look incredulous when she was assured that things were really not as bad as she imagined.

"I'm sure it's pleasant to be told there are not rattlesnakes in all the gardens," she said, with a pretty smile, "but my cousin wrote not long ago that he had seen over forty wigwams in one little village. Perhaps," she added, as her companion made no immediate reply, "the wigwams are not as venemous as rattlesnakes, are they?"—Exchange.

THE DEAD.

We are sorry to report the death of Grandfather Poole, which occurred at Ravenna, Cherokee county, South Carolina, Aug. 17, 1900.

The many Elders who have found shelter under his roof will feel keenly the worth and loss of this our brother. He has assisted in many ways to further the struggle for righteousness. He has been a faithful member of the church for fifteen years and died at the good old age of 84 years.

Sister Mary E. Wade, of Kirk's Grove, Alabama, passed away from this stage of action on Sept. 3rd, 1900, of heart failure. She was born at Rockingham, South Carolina, April 1st, 1853, and moved to this place with her husband in February, 1898. Sister Wade was not a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, but ever since hearing the first sermon preached by the humble Mormon Elders she has been investigating the doctrine as taught by them and was very favorably impressed with it. She was kind hearted, loved by all who knew her, and proved herself a mother to the Elders. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn her loss.

It is with sorrow that we are called upon to report the death of one of our beloved sisters.

Sister Elvah Emaline Vinson was born Dec. 1, 1870, in Giles county, Tennessee, was baptized May 27, 1898, and died Sept. 1, 1900, at Gipsy, Limestone county, Alabama.

Sister Vinson was known by all as a kind and charitable lady. She always kept an open door for the Elders and will long be remembered by them for her kindness and hospitality.

She bore a strong testimony to the Truth and died as she lived, a faithful Latter-day Saint.

SAND.

I observed a locomotive in the railroad yards one day,
It was waiting in the round-house where the locomotives stay;
It was panting for the journey, it was coaled and fully manned;
It had a box the fireman was filling full of sand.

It appears that locomotives cannot always get a grip
On their slender iron pavement, 'cause the wheels are apt to slip;
And when they reach a slippery spot, their tactics they command,
And to get a grip upon the rail, they sprinkle it with sand.

It's about this way with travel along life's slippery track,
If your load is rather heavy and you're always sliding back;
So, if a common locomotive you completely understand,
You'll provide yourself in starting with a good supply of sand.

If your track is steep and hilly and you have a heavy grade,
And if those who've gone before you have the rails quite slippery made;
If you ever reach the summit of the upper tableland,
You'll find you'll have to do it with a liberal use of sand.

If you strike some frigid weather and discover, to your cost,
That you're liable to slip on a heavy coat of frost,
Then, some prompt, decided action will be called into demand,
And you'll slip way to the bottom if you haven't any sand.

You can get to any station that is on life's schedule seen,
If there's fire beneath the boiler of ambition's strong machine;
And you'll reach a place called Flushtown at a rate of speed that's grand,
If over all the slippery places you've a good supply of sand.

ELDER JOHN S. SEARS.

Perhaps no Elder has left a better, or a more lasting impression upon the minds of the people among whom he has labored than has Elder John S. Sears, whose picture is herewith presented. There is scarcely a phase of missionary life common to an Elder in the Southern States, but what he has had some experience in, from that of canvassing Elder among the hills of Eastern Tennessee and Western North Carolina to the position of editor of one of the brightest Stars which ever shed a literary gleam of religious light, he has wended his way since being numbered with God's noble servants in the South.

It is a little over two years since Elder Sears reported for duty at Chattanooga, and was assigned to labor in the East Tennessee Conference.. During that time he has labored diligently and vigorously for the spread of truth, that he might assist the Father in the establishment of His righteous purposes on the earth. The early days of his missions were spent as canvassing Elder, after which he labored as a training Elder, and when Elder F. B. Hammond was appointed to succeed President W. E. Dawson, Elder Sears was chosen as a counsellor and aid in the responsibility of presiding. President Petersen also recognized his sterling qualities, and chose him as first counsellor, which position he held until called to labor in the Office in the month of January last.

When Elder L. R. Anderson was released in the latter part of March, the work of editing the Star devolved upon Elder Sears, and, as in all other labors, he proved himself adequate and equal to the task. He filled the office with signal ability, energy and integrity, being prompt, punctual and zealous in the good work. He succeeded in keeping up the good standard which the paper had reached under his most worthy, industrious predecessors.

When the telegram from Elder Meacham was received on Thursday, Sept. 13th, bringing the sad news of Elder J. D. Frankland's sudden demise, it became absolutely necessary for some good, reliable man to go down to Montgomery, Ala., for the purpose of accompanying the body of the corpse home. Elder Sears was asked to perform this labor of love; he cheerfully responded, leaving the work he was engaged in, and in about three hours from the time he was notified he was on his way to the State Capital of Alabama.

Elder Sears is of a rather reserved and quiet disposition, being calm and deliberate in all his undertakings, and faithful and true until the work in hand is finished. Nothing rash or rabid in his nature, but a careful, painstaking spirit signalizes all his work. A favorite motto practiced by him is, "What's worth doing at all is worth doing well," and by ever keeping this in mind, he works well, acts well, lives well, and does well. As a preacher of righteousness, he is very spiritual, forceful, plain, and explicit, being humble, submissive and lowly. He has made hosts of friends wherever he has gone, friends who love him for his goodness and childlike simplicity. Like most Elders who journey in the South, he has met with mobs who expelled him from their midst, being willing to entertain the devil, rather than the Mormon Elder.

Brother Sears is a cartoonist of no mean repute, having studied art in New York, prior to his ministerial career. We shall all miss him, but we rejoice to know that we have met him and have been privileged to enjoy his society. We wish him success, joy and peace, and pray the blessings of heaven upon him.

Elder Sears sends a fond "good-bye" to all his friends, together with a hearty "God bless you ever."

DEATH OF ELDER J. D. FRANKLAND.

Friday, Aug. 31st, Elders J. D. Frankland and A. L. Mecham arrived at the home of Samuel McQuegge, who lives about four miles east of Ansley, Pike county, Ala. It was their intention to meet Elder O. Jacobson, counselor to President Houtz, and held some meetings in that neighborhood. Monday morning, Sept. 3d, Elder Mecham mailed their weekly report, and at that time Brother Frankland seemed to be enjoying his usual health. The same evening he complained of having a bad headache, and at times he suffered greatly, until administered to by his companion, when the pain left, but was followed by a burning fever. It was not thought by Elder Mecham that Brother Frankland was serious, as he did not complain. Nevertheless every care was shown him, and all present thought he would be up and around in a few days. Tuesday, the 11th inst., Elder Frankland, not being able to write, desired his companion to pen a letter to his kind and loving wife, who resides at Salt Lake City. The missive was but brief, yet it carried an humble spirit and closed by saying he was sick, but expected to be at work again in a few days, and intended to visit the Saints at La Pine. Wednesday night at 8:40, without a struggle, the spirit of our true and faithful brother took its flight. He died as he had lived, one of God's noblemen, and a crown of righteousness shall be his reward. Too much praise cannot be given the kind family where Brother Frankland died, and may God bless them.

ELDER J. D. FRANKLAND.

Elder Frankland was born Jan. 4th, 1874, and had just passed his 26th year when he entered the mission field in April last. He was of a studious nature, bright, quick witted, and blessed with no small amount of intellectuality. He had been dead some twelve hours before word was received at Chattanooga of his demise. It was a sudden shock to all, for there had not been the least intimation given of his illness.

Elders John S. Sears and L. E. Jordan, together with an undertaker, left on the first train for Montgomery, Ala., after receiving the sad news of his sudden death. At this place he was embalmed and placed in a metallic casket, upon which was inscribed this befitting inscription: "To the cause he loved his life was given."

As heretofore noted, Elder Frankland was a married man, and leaves a sorrowing wife to mourn his loss. She will not mourn as those who have no hope, for the sweet spirit whispers peace to the troubled soul, and gives her an assurance of a glorious resurrection of the just, when her faithful husband shall rise triumphant, and victorious.

Elders Jacobsen and Meacham were zealous in administering to the wants of our departed brother, and much credit is due them for the able manner in which they conducted affairs generally. The railroad officials were very courteous and accommodating to the Elders all along the line, and the friendliness of the undertaker in Montgomery deserves a word of praise and appreciation. All earthly power available was rendered our brother, but the Lord called him hence, and our loss is his gain. The whole Mission and all who knew Elder Frankland will miss him, and let us unite in heart and soul and exercise our faith and sympathy in behalf of the bereaved wife.

A Letter of Condolence.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 18, 1900.

Mrs. J. D. Frankland, Salt Lake City, Utah:

My Dear Sister—You will pardon the intrusion of a seemingly unknown friend; yet one who loves you dearly, and who would, were it in my feeble power to do so, console you in the hour of your loss and sad bereavement. Before this brief note arrives you have undoubtedly been apprised of the demise of your loving husband, who was snatched from our midst so suddenly and taken to a far brighter world than this.

One cannot die in a better cause, or pass away serving a better Master than the Lord God, whom your husband listed to obey. No. It can be truly said of him that he gave his life willingly for his friends, and for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. His reward is certain; his crown of righteousness secured. No one can rob him of that prize he strove so faithfully to gain; even the precious boon of eternal life; and you, dear sister, in the realms of glory, will share with him the joys that await the faithful and true.

He looked unto the Lord and trusted in his God—the Holy One of Israel. Those who knew him in the Mission field speak of him in the highest commendable terms, as one who had no other desire than that of serving the Lord. His companions loved him, and during his brief sojourn in the Southern States he was successful in making many friends and in allaying much of the wicked prejudice that rankled in the hearts of his enemies. His energy paved his way, and by humility and lowliness he won a place in the hearts of the people, gaining their love, respect and esteem.

As you look around you on every hand, you cannot fail to realize the brevity and uncertainty of life. The moment we begin to live, that moment are we subject unto the pangs of death. It has been decreed by God that all must pass through this mysterious change, and narrow cavern, we call Death; but in or journey from the cradle to the grave, we can have hope, and feel assured with the Psalmist David that God is with us to shield, guide, comfort and protect us. Here is what the Psalmist says: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." This blessed divine assurance comes from God through the medium of His Holy Spirit, which is indeed a Comforter.

Can we not rationally believe that "Our Father" has a work of a glorious and exalted nature for your husband to perform beyond the grave? We must keep in mind this revealed knowledge, that the preaching of this Gospel is not limited to this narrow little sphere upon which we dwell, but that it reaches into the eternities, and saves all that can be saved, whether in the flesh or in the spirit; therefore is it not in strict keeping with consistency and reason for us to believe that the Lord called him hence to minister His word in the spiritual regions of Paradise? Meditate upon these things, and think of the goodness of God, who doeth all things well; and the comforting influence of God's Holy Spirit will anoint you with the oil of gladness, and open the eyes of your understanding that you may behold the wisdom and mercy of God in all things.

Let your hope, and faith, and trust be in God. He alone is mighty to save; your Friend and your Deliverer. Like a wise physician, He has a balm for every wound; a cordial for every care; and a mighty remedy to soothe and allay all trials and tribulations. Look unto Him, dear sister, for He has promised to be a strength to the needy, a rock in their defense, a shadow from the heat of fiery afflictions. Remember how the Savior said, "Let the weary ones come unto Me." "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest, yea, rest unto your souls."

May God help you to obtain the rest promised, and may you receive from Him comfort in the hour of your affliction, is the prayer and heart's desire of your loving sister, NINA F. RICH.

THE DEAD.

Brother Allen Kidd passed away from this mortal probation on the afternoon of Sept. 10th, 1900, after an illness of twenty months, at his home in Morgan county, Ala. The cause of his death was consumption. He leaves a wife and six children to face the cold world alone, and meet whatever fate the future has in store for them. Brother Kidd was baptized by Elder L. R. Farley and confirmed by Elder J. W. Imlay, Aug. 5th, 1900. The thought of death seemed to cause him no fear. He passed away with an abiding confidence that he would inherit eternal life.

Rhodie I. Imman departed this life Aug. 5th, 1900, leaving a husband and nine children to mourn her loss. Sister Imman had been a faithful member of the Church for about eighteen years, and she was beloved and respected by all who knew her. May the peace and blessings of heaven attend the bereaved.

She Deserved Them.

A poet once wrote of his gentle wife:

"She doeth little kindnesses
Which most leave undone or despise."

The same is illustrated in this story: A gentleman was once walking behind a well-dressed girl, and thought to himself, "I wonder if she takes half as much pains with her heart as she does with her clothes?" A poor old man was coming up the road with a loaded barrow, and just before he reached the girl he made two attempts to go into the yard of a small house; but the gate was heavy and would swing back before he could get through. "Wait," said the girl, springing lightly forward, "I will hold the gate open." She did so, and received his thanks with a pleasant smile. "She deserves to have beautiful clothes," thought the gentleman, "for she has a beautiful spirit."

SOWING AND REAPING.

BY ELDER J. S. STERLING.

The Apostle Paul, in writing to the Corinthian Saints, said: "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." (II ix:6.) This we know to be true, because we have seen it verified time and time again, with our own eyes. We behold a man who earns his bread by the sweat of his face, in the field, sowing the seeds; if he sows sparingly he will reap sparingly, if he sows bountifully he will reap bountifully.

We see a person who expects to sow his seed, in the ground, going forth getting his ground in shape, and carefully preparing it so it will yield a harvest, and he expects, if he gets his ground properly tilled and planted, and is ever watchful over his coming harvest, to reap bountifully. Another thing we watch him doing, is carefuly selecting his seed, because if he sows oats, he expects to reap oats, if he sows corn he expects to reap corn, etc. He fully realizes the truthfulness of Paul's letter to the Saints of Galatia, wherein he plainly says, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." (Gal. vi:7.) He is sowing the very same kind of seed that he expects to reap. Do we fully sense the quotation given above, together with the one following it, for we are told "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." We are given to understand that if we sow to our flesh, we shall of our flesh reap corruption, but if we sow to the Spirit we shall of the Spirit inherit or reap life everlasting.

We fully realize with Job, "They that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same," and we should ever be careful to sow good seeds, and be every mindful that our salvation depends on the seeds sown by us, while here in this mortal state. One may ask, "Does the Book tell us what the seeds of righteousness are?" We say yes, also of unrighteousness.

We find recorded in the Epistle to the Saints at Galatia, v. 19 to 21, "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanliness, laciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in times past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the Kingdom of God."

Now for the works of the Spirit. We find in the 22d and 23d verses of the same chapter, "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." We have now seen what the fruits of the Spirit and the works of the flesh are, and we can ask ourselves the question, which are the seeds the people of the world today are sowing most, and devoting most of their time to?

We find that many are indulging in, and daily and nightly sowing seeds to their flesh, which will be sure to bring condemnation to their own selves.

It seems as though they who are devoting their time to the workings of Satan, are perhaps serving their master better than we, for they serve him Sunday and every other day. While we find many who only serve God on Sunday, and spend the coming six days in pleasure, or laboring wholly for the big dollar.

We are told, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Let us pause a few moments. Do we find as many today devoting their time and talents, as much to the serving the Savior of the world, as they do to serving Mammon? No! we do not, for we would have a far different condition in the world than exists today, if we were only trying to overcome the works of the flesh, by the fruits of the Spirit, using more of the spirit of love, gentleness, goodness, and temperance to bring the world to a higher plane, so we, the inhabitants, could rejoice more in the "Holy One of Israel."

We have all been placed on this earth for a purpose, and that is "to work out our own salvation with fear and with trembling."

Do we find mankind worried so much about their future salvation as they are about making money? No! they are not. We find people troubling their minds because they cannot perhaps meet an engagement, to make a little money, but they are not troubled so much about meeting their "Maker;" they don't worry nor strive near as hard, as a general thing, to keep the commandments of God, as they do to enjoy themselves. Do we find people taking as much pains to serve their Maker on the Sabbath day, as they do to get ready to go on a pleasure trip? No! "We need some pleasure on Sunday, we need to rest our bodies; we'll go on a pleasure trip next Sunday." But it is seldom we hear them say, "Well, Sunday will soon be here, we'll have to make preparations to go to church."

We think it is terrible to walk a mile on Sunday to go to church, but we could take interest in walking three miles to see some old friend. Which way is our mind being trained? Are we among those who "push the ox in the mire on Saturday to pull him out on Sunday?" "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," and while we are at work we can be serving God, and be striving to obey His commandments. We were told not to live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." And let us be ever mindful of this, and try to feed our spiritual body, and labor as hard to maintain it as we do our earthly tabernacle.

There is a day coming when we will have to give an account of the deeds done in the body, and then when we see that we have spent so much time sowing to the flesh, and so little in sowing to the Spirit, we may regret it.

We may not realize the magnitude of the words of Paul now, with regards to sowing our seeds to our spirit, that we may reap life everlasting, but there is a time coming when we will, and then it will do us no good "to weep, and wail, and gnash our teeth."

There is a time to serve God, and that is on a week day, as well as on Sunday.

If we would wait till the horse was stolen, before we locked the barn door, some people would be liable to call us unwise, but what will we have to say to our dear selves if we do not devote more time to sowing seeds pertaining to eternal life?

"Be it good and let us do it, giving soul and our strength to the deed."

If we wish to enter life we must keep the commandments.

"A good man's fortune may by chance decay,
But his soul's riches none can take away."

We should be striving at all times to plant our seeds in good ground, that it may come forth and yield an hundred fold, and not be content with receiving thirty or sixty, but labor while the day is here, and we have the chance.

Let us have our seeds sown on well prepared ground, not on the stony ground, nor among the thorns, such as the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things, or allow affliction or persecution to choke our good seeds, but to endure to the end that we may be saved.

And as the poet has said:

"Ours the seed time. God alone
Behold the seeds of that is sown;
Beyond our vision weak and dim,
The harvest time is hid with Him."

The time is coming and we know not how soon it will be, when we will have to rest in our grave, and wait till the harvest time.

The words of the poet are indeed true, which says:

We are sowing, daily sowing,
Countless seeds of good or ill,
Scattered on the level lowland,
Cast upon the windy hill;
Seeds that sink in rich brown furrows,
Soft with heaven's gracious rain;
Seeds that rest upon the surface
Of the dry unyielding plain.

So let us ever sow seeds to our spirit that we may enter into life, and feel to say, when that time comes, as Paul said, "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; hence there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

Abstracts from Correspondence.

The spirit of mobocracy and intolerance is not dead, as will be seen from the following letter written by Elders A. O. Smoot and W. G. Atkins:

Connelly's Springs, N. C., Sept. 12.

President Ben E. Rich, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

Dear Bro.—We take this opportunity to inform you that we have just been run out of Statesville, N. C., by a Christian (?) mob of about twenty men. They were all business men of the place, and were led by a Christian (?) minister. They met us on the street while we were canvassing the business part of town, and showed us the road to the depot, giving us notice that our time was short. We made for our boarding house and had not time to get things packed up until they sent a man to inform us that our time was about up. We got ready as soon as possible, and then made our way to the station. The mob followed us and gave us to understand that it was their turn to preach, and not ours. When we would open our mouths to say anything we were told to keep still. They said we had better not show up in Statesville any more, or we would see what love they had for the Mormon Elders. They told us to inform our brethren to keep out if they did not want trouble.

The Mayor of the city was quite friendly, and was willing that we should canvass the place, when we called on him yesterday; but one of the policemen stood by and beheld the mob march us down the street, saying never a word to restore peace and order, or to disperse the rabble.

We asked them for the rights of American citizens, but they gave us a sharp reply that there would be a cheap funeral in town if we did not keep still, and get out, and stay out.

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

IF WE ONLY KNEW.

There are gems of wondrous brightness
Ofttime lying at our feet,
And we pass them walking thoughtless
Down the busy, crowded street.
If we knew; our pace would slacken,
We would step more oft with care,
Lest our careless feet be treading
To the earth some jewel rare.

If we knew what hearts are aching
For the comfort we might bring,
If we knew what souls are yearning
For the sunshine we might fling;
If we knew what feet are weary
Walking pathways roughly laid,
We would quickly hasten forward
Stretching forth our hands to aid.

If we knew what friend around us
Feels a want they never tell,
That some word that we have spoken
Pained or wounded where it fell,
We would speak in accents tender
To each friend we chanced to meet;
We would give to each one freely
Smiles of sympathy so sweet. —Sel.

After a man's jaw begins to swell, he realizes that silence is golden.

TWO SIDES TO THE MATTER.

You will always find that there are two sides to every question, one in favor of, and one against. Some of our good Christian friends do not seem willing or at all inclined to grant us an opportunity of speaking in our defense—they delight in fighting Mormonism to the exclusion of the Mormon Elder, and are perfectly satisfied to feed the gullible on "billingsgate" entirely, providing they can muzzle the Elder while the performance is going on. What we want is clear, calm, logical, Scriptural argument, from beginning to end. Don't forget that there are two sides to the matter, and that it is nothing but just and proper that you should hear them both before passing judgment. Would you say it was a just law that would condemn the prisoner at the bar upon the testimony of the prosecution alone? No, you would not. Then can it be a fair trial that would accuse and pass sentence upon the Mormon without an opportunity being given them to appear in their own defense? Let us be just and equitable to all, allowing all the same privileges we would crave ourselves.

FAITH.

A contemporary makes the following assertion: "Faith is the immediate condition of sanctification, and God always saves the moment true faith is exercised." Let us see if this is in accordance with the "law and testimony" of the Prophets. Paul tells the Hebrew Saints to "Go on unto perfection," and not lay again the "foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God." (Heb. 6:1.) Why the need of exhorting to "go on unto perfection," when they had already exercised "faith toward God," if "faith is the immediate condition of sanctification?" This would be altogether unnecessary, and to no purpose whatever. Again the same Apostle says: "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith," showing, by this, that the full assurance of faith "is the prompter or stimulus to action, causing one to draw near unto God." Peter says: "Add to your faith virtue," and the other godly attributes which go to make up the life of a true and worthy Christian. Why any addition if faith alone "is the immediate condition of sanctification?"

WHATEVER IS—IS BEST.

Could we but always feel in life, when surrounded with trials and afflictions, that, "whatever is—is best," we should experience a calm, sweet repose even in the midst of disaster and woe. We owe much to the inspired writers of poetry for the deep spirit of philosophical resignation inculcated in their poems. The poets whose verses find a repetition on almost every tongue, whose writings have become as household words, have been men and women upon whom rested a goodly portion of divine inspiration, and whom the Lord blessed with intelligence, wisdom, and understanding, that they might be the means of teaching to some extent at least, the higher way of living. To such we owe a great debt of gratitude for their soul-inspiring, elevating words.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in her beautiful poem, "Whatever Is—Is Best," draws from the depths of sentimentalism the rich suggestions of brotherly love, and holy patience. Her poems breath an air of pure affection, an atmosphere of love unfeigned, bubbling with optimism, as the pure stream the sparkling water, and call forth those rare and best sensibilities of mortal man. As human beings we seem to be always suspicious of others, fearful of the worst, instead of hopeful for the best. The hardest and most difficult obstacles can be surmounted by that indomitable energy, called Perseverance. More force, more power, more sand, and then we can climb life's rugged incline. If we chance to take a fall, let us not remain down, but let us get up, and try it again. "The fault is not in never falling, but in rising every time you fall." Having a bright hope for the best, and the glad assurance that the results will be our victory, we can plod onward and upward to the goal we would gain.

We often mistake and misjudge the motives of our fellow-brothers, whom we suppose are maliciously endeavoring to do us wrong. Let us not journey in a pathway of selfish friendship, but be liberal, kind, loving and forgiving. As Mrs. Wilcox says:

"I know that each sinful action,
As sure as the night brings shade,
Is somewhere, some time punished,
Tho' the hour be long delayed.
I know that the soul is aided
Sometimes by the heart's unrest,
And to grow means often to suffer—
But whatever is—is best."

There can be no doubt that each wrong action—each evil thought—brings to the soul of man the corroding consequence of sin. Nor is it less true that sorrow oftentimes expands this life into higher aims and more nobler purposes. With the growth of the soul there comes also a consciousness that God is good, and all His ways are righteous and holy. He leaves us not in darkness to linger and grope, but He grants unto all the light of His Holy Spirit, to lead and guide us aright. His plan is perfect, eternal, unchangeable. This realization led the poetess to express herself thus:

"I know there are no errors
In the great eternal plan,
And all things work together
For the final good of man.
And I know when my soul speeds onward
In its grand eternal quest,
I shall say, as I look back earthward,
Whatever is—is best."

Hope for the best, and rise above the clouds of sorrow on the wings of humble prayer until you can watch the sunshine play upon the silver lining. This requires effort and manly resignation, but such is the duty of all the sons and daughters of God. "Whatever is—is best."

A Word to Boys.

You are made to be kind, boys—generous, magnanimous. If there is a boy in school who has a club-foot, don't let him know you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy with ragged clothes, don't talk about rags in his hearing. If there is a lame boy, assign him some part in the game that doesn't require running. If there is a hungry one, give him part of your dinner. If there is a dull one, help him to get his lesson. If there is a bright boy, be not envious of him, for if one boy is proud of his talents and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs and no more talent than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him. All the school will show by their countenances how much better it is than to have a great fuss.—Horace Mann.

May I tell you why it seems to me a good thing for us to remember wrong that has been done us? That we may forgive it.—Dickens.

SALVATION FOR THE LIVING AND THE DEAD.

Liberality of the "Mormon" Faith—A Discourse by Charles W. Penrose, Delivered in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday Afternoon, August 19, 1900.

(This sermon is published in tract form, and can be purchased from the Deseret News Publishing Co., Salt Lake City, Utah.)

I am thankful for the opportunity of meeting with the Latter-day Saints in this Tabernacle, and I trust that our assembling together will not be in vain, but be profitable to all of us. I have been called upon to address the congregation. I desire to do so under the influence of that Spirit which guides into all truth, and which makes plain the things of God to the minds of men. I trust that this Spirit will not only rest upon me, to enlighten my mind and to give me words which will be of benefit to those who hear, but that it may also rest upon the congregation, that we may be able to see "eye to eye."

Characteristics of True Religion.

One mark of true religion is a regard for the welfare of other people. True religion does not make people selfish. It creates in their hearts a feeling of charity and a desire to bless; not to injure in any way, not to wish the downfall or hurt of a fellow creature, but rather to desire his uplifting, and benefit, and comfort, and joy. Our Heavenly Father created the earth upon which we live for the comfort and happiness of His creatures. The plan of salvation, which was prepared before the foundations of the world, was designed for the improvement, the benefit, and the ultimate salvation of all His sons and daughters. When we have a desire in our hearts to bless and benefit mankind, we have the right side. When we feel a spirit of revenge, of retaliation, and a desire to do harm, that is not of God, but is from beneath. Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, we are told, "came into the world, not to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved." That was the purpose of the coming of our Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh, and of the atonement that He wrought out for mankind by His death on the cross. The spirit of Christ is the spirit of salvation, the spirit of blessing, the spirit to do good, to improve the condition of the human race, and to prepare us all for the presence of our Eternal Father and to enjoy the glory of His Kingdom.

Universal Salvation.

One of the great differences between the faith of the Latter-Day Saints and that of most of the denominations called "Christian" is that the Latter-Day Saints teach that salvation is for all people, of all ages, of all races, of all colors, who can be saved. The doctrine that the Lord has revealed through His servant the Prophet Joseph Smith is that salvation is to come unto all, and that none will be lost who can possibly be redeemed; that the plan of salvation is as broad as the fall of man. Our first parents broke a divine law, and through their disobedience death came into the world. As by disobedience of one man sin, and death as the wages of sin, came into the world, so by the atonement and obedience of one, life and salvation will ultimately come to all the family of Adam. "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." This doctrine was enunciated by the Apostle Paul in his epistle to the Corinthians. The full meaning of that is not explained in the old scriptures, neither is it understood generally in the Christian world, but it was revealed in great plainness to the Prophet Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon. I will not read to you the vision which was given to them, explaining this doctrine of salvation, but will perhaps read a few verses of it, so that the full extent of the plan of salvation may be comprehended to some little degree by the congregation.

Let me say, first, that the book from which I am to read contains some of the revelations of God to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in this age of the world, and we regard these as Scripture. We believe in the Bible. We believe that "holy men of old wrote and spoke as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost." We also believe that the same Spirit in this age of the world will make plain the things of God exactly in the same way as they were revealed in former times. In other words, we believe that the Spirit is the same in all ages, and that God and Christ are "the same yesterday, today and forever." If God could reveal His word through Prophets in ancient times, certainly He can reveal His word, through Prophets in modern times. If not, why not? What reason is there that God should not make manifest His truth in the nineteenth century as well as in the first century, or in times before the beginning of the Christian era? Has the Eternal Father ceased to have power to make Himself manifest? Has He bound Himself with an oath and promise that He would not speak again, after He revealed Himself through the Prophets and Apostles in the first age of the Christian era and before that time. If so, where is His word and promise recorded? I know of nothing of the kind in the book that is supposed to contain the Holy Scriptures. The Bible contains some few things revealed by the Lord through His servants in former days, and by reading it carefully I find that it contains an abundance of promises that in the last times, in the times of "the restitution of all things spoken of by the holy Prophets since the world began," in the "dispensation of the fullness of times" in which God is to gather together in one all things that are in Christ, there is to be more light, more revelation, more manifestation of the power of God; greater miracles and greater outpouring of the Spirit and the knowledge of God, until the time shall come when a man shall not have to say to his neighbor, "Know ye the Lord, for all shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest," and "the knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the great deep," so the prophets of old predicted. This being so there is nothing unscriptural or unreasonable in the idea that God should reveal His word in this age of the world as He revealed it in former times, and as it was customary with Him when He had any special work to perform among the children of men, or any special truth to reveal, to raise up a prophet or prophets through whom His word was communicated, that in the last days He should act in the same way, seeing that He is an unchangeable Being.

We testify that in the nineteenth century our Heavenly Father has been pleased to open the heavens once more, and to send His Son Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, with a message of life and light, similar to that which He proclaimed when He tabernacled in mortality. We testify that angels have come down from the courts of glory, bringing light and truth for the enlightenment and salvation of all the human family, and a message to be carried to "every nation, kindred, tongue and people."

We recognize the fact that throughout Christendom there are various religious societies, composed in the main of good people, and having among them very talented men, some of whom minister in the name of the Lord without authority, while others explain the Gospel according to their understanding of it—which is very limited; and that there are people of all sects and denominations who desire to serve the Lord and walk in His ways, but who cling to the notions and ideas which have been handed down to them by tradition. We do not wish to interfere with any of them in their religious rights and privileges. We recognize the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and think that people ought not to be molested in that worship, and that they should be perfectly free to carry out their religious convictions, so long as they do not infringe upon the rights and liberties of others. That is the line we draw, and when men step beyond that, then the secular law ought to step in and protect people in the exercise of their rights, and from the designs and wicked acts of those who seek to infringe upon them.

But One God and One Faith.

But while we recognize this, we do not lose sight of this one great fact, which all people should consider; that as there is but one God for us to worship, there can be but one true religion. A variety of Gods might introduce a variety of creeds; but "there is one God even the Father, of whom are all things, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things." Therefore, the religion of God and Christ must be one. Truth is not divided against itself. Truth and error will clash, but truth and truth will always harmonize. Anything that God reveals must be true, for He is truth; and everything that comes by the way of Jesus Christ, His beloved Son, must be true, for He is the way, the truth and the life. No error will be introduced into the world under the direction of the Father, or of the Son. And the Holy Ghost is "the Spirit of truth." It guides into all truth. It takes of the things of the Father and of the Son and reveals them unto men. It will not substantiate or reveal any error; but it will manifest truth and make it plain. Therefore, all that is error in the world, whether it be among Christians or pagans, is not of God, and is not recognized of Him. It will not lead to God; it will not benefit mankind: but it will do injury. It is the truth that exalts, that ennobles, and that will save mankind. Falsehood and error will not. Anything that is contrary to truth cannot be of God, but may be of that Evil One, who was "a liar from the beginning."

Sincerity Not Conclusive Evidence of Truth.

That there is an abundance of error in the "Christian" world as well as some truth, must be patent to everybody who has investigated the conditions of mankind in the present day, because these multifarious sects and denominations are discordant. They do not unite—except on special occasions when they meet together to denounce the "Mormons;" they can unite on that question sometimes. The spirit of division, strife, and contention exists among people called Christians as well as among people called Pagans. That fact alone makes it evident that there is a great deal of error existing in what is called Christendom. That is because these various systems which have been established are the inventions of men. They may have been good men who started these different sects—I will not judge the matter; that is with the Eternal Judge—but these sects were the offspring of men. These men may have read the Scriptures, and have entertained certain ideas founded upon their reading; and they may have established these different systems in accordance with their sincere ideas of what was right. But sincerity of itself is not a conclusive evidence of truth. The heathen is just as sincere in his idol worship as the "Christian" is in his various modes of bowing down to Deity; and certainly the Latter-Day Saints have manifested their sincerity before the whole world as well as before the heavens. The Elders of this Church who go out into the world to proclaim the Gospel as they understand it, manifest their sincerity. Yet our "Christian" friends will not recognize them as Christians, nor believe that they are right. They go out without purse or scrip, without fee or reward. They are not paid for their work. They make sacrifice of home and its comforts, and leave their loved ones behind, and go to face a frowning world, to meet persecution and obloquy, and sometimes imprisonment, stripes, and death. What for? To proclaim that which they know in their hearts is true. They are sincere enough, but that does not prove that they are right. Our "Christian" friends will acknowledge that. On the other hand, the sincerity that may be exhibited in the various "Christian" sects by the people who compose the members, and by the preachers who teach them, is not of itself an evidence that they are right or that they have the truth. But the fact that they are divided and conflicting is proof enough that there is a great deal of error among them.

Now, that which comes from God is the truth. If Jesus Christ has a church on the earth under His direction and inspiration, containing men whom He has appointed, who hold His authority, who are sent by His word, and who have divine authority to administer in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, that church will have the truth. It will not have error intermingled with it, because it will be directed by Christ, being His Church. Men may build up a church and call it the Church of Christ, but that does not make it so; it is the church of the men who organized it. If John Wesley—a good man, as I believe with all my heart, a mighty man, who did a great and good work in the earth—organized a religious society and called it the Church of Christ, that does not make it so, and it is nothing more than the church of John Wesley. If other good men assemble together and agree on points of doctrine and organize a religious society that society is theirs. It is not God's unless He ordered it, revealed it, and accepted it.

Oneness of the Church of Christ.

I think that these simple ideas will be received by this congregation and by any reasonable person. If Jesus Christ had a church on the earth in the first century, it was the Church that He established. There is evidence that He did establish a church. By reading the New Testament it is plain that He organized it Himself; therefore it was His Church. He placed in it Apostles, Prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, (so we read in the epistle to the Ephesians, 4th chapter.) "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God." These men were sent out to preach the Gospel without purse or scrip. They were commanded to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." And the principles which they taught were the principles of Jesus Christ. The plan of salvation that they introduced was divine. It was not their own. When Paul preached to the Gentiles and Peter preached to the Jews, they preached the same Gospel, the same doctrine, by the same Spirit. The people who received their word and repented of their sins, believing in the Lord Jesus Christ, were all baptized by one spirit into one body. There was but one body, no matter how many members there were in it; there was but one church, no matter how many branches there might be to it. The Church was one, the Gospel was one, the God they worshipped was one, the Savior was one. There was "one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all;" and the path that they walked in was the one way marked out by the Lord Jesus Christ, who said: "Wide is the gate and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

These men whom the Lord placed in His Church had the word of the Lord. God revealed Himself unto them. Jesus Christ manifested Himself unto them. This is one of the characteristics of the Church. It was in communication with its Divine Author. The spirit that came down from heaven was in these men; not only in them, but in the body of the Church. The whole body was quickened by it, led by it, and inspired by it. Therefore the truth was in the Church. But there came a great change after the Apostles were slain. Darkness came in like a flood and overspread the earth, as the prophet of old foresaw when he said that "darkness would cover the earth and gross darkness the people." Because of that darkness which has overspread the earth has come the condition that exists in the Christian world today.

True Gospel Again Revealed From Heaven.

Now, in this age of the world, I repeat, our Heavenly Father has been pleased to reveal Himself again. Hear it! oh, ye people! As sure as the sun shines in the heavens, as sure as we are in this Tabernacle this afternoon, the Mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and is "calling the earth from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof." His word to all people is that the Gospel in its purity has been restored; His Church has been set up again on the earth, under His personal direction; Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors and Teachers once more are endowed with the Spirit that comes from on high, and all people who receive their testimony and are obedient to the Gospel are baptized by one spirit into one body, whether they be Jew or Gentile, bond or free, and they are all made to partake of one Spirit. This Gospel and the proclamation thereof is to all the world, to every creature. This is the commandment of God to His servants in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. And all people will hear the sound thereof, no matter how much it may be opposed. The Elders of this Church, going out as the servants of God did of old, are endowed with the same authority, the same power, and the same right to administer in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And the word of Christ is to them as it was to the early Apostles: "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me reciveth Him that sent me. And he that rejecteth you rejecteh Him that sent me." The word of the Lord to all people everywhere is to turn from their wickedness, from their corruptions, from their false creeds, from their bowing down to anything that is not God, from the notions and ideas of men that have been preached in the world for the doctrines of Christ, and come unto God their Eternal Father in humility, in contrition, repenting of their sins, confessing them, and forsaking them.

"BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM."

BY GEO. HILTON.

A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. (Matt. 7:18. "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." (20th verse). In my travels in the different parts of the world, I find hundreds of diverse denominations of religions, and all claiming to be the true followers of Jesus Christ, our file Leader. At the same time they all differ from that which Jesus taught as recorded in the Holy Bible. A short time ago I visited Winchester, the old capital of England. Here I attended divine service in the largest cathedral in England. Services commenced at 10 a. m. and lasted until 12. There were from ten to fifteen ministers officiating, appearing to be very zealous in the labors which they were engaged in. At the conclusion of the services I introduced myself to one of those gentlemen, and asked this most important question: "Is this the Church of Jesus Christ, and have you the same organization of officers as Jesus had in the church when He sojourned upon earth?" The answer was in the affirmative. I then said: "My dear sir, would you be so kind as to introduce me to one of your twelve Apostles?" I noticed at that moment he became a little uneasy. The necktie and collar needed a little adjusting. And then said: "We haven't got any Apostles or Prophets in the Church in these days. It's the Mormons or Latter-Day Saints that believe in Prophets and Apostles: "I then said: "My dear sir, how can you get along without these officers and be the true Church of Jesus Christ?" I then took my Testament from my pocket, and read from Mark 14:10. "And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the Chief Priest to betray Him unto them, and when they heard it, they were glad and promised to give him money: then Judas, which had betrayed Him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priest and elders, and he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple and departed, and went and hanged himself." At this moment we find the quorum of apostles imperfect, there being only eleven apostles. We find the church of Christ very different from the churches established by men. The apostles had returned to Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet. And when they were come in they went up into an upper room and continued in prayer and supplication, and they prayed and said: "Thou, Lord, which knoweth the hearts of all men, shew whither of these two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias, that he may take part in the ministry and apostleship, from which Judas, by transgression, fell, that he may go to his own place, and they gave forth their lots, and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was numbered with the eleven apostles." (Acts of Apostles 1:13-24.) Jesus addressing his apostles, said: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, He may give it you." (John 15:16) "He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing." Jesus appeared unto the Apostles as they sat at meat, and gave them their commissions how to preach and what to preach, and by their fruits ye shall know them. And He said unto them: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the Word with signs following on in other words "By their fruits ye shall know them.' (Mark 16). "Jesus appeared again unto his Apostles, and instructed them what to preach to the people for their salvation and exaltation in the Kingdom of God, saying: 'All power is given unto men in Heaven and in earth, go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." (Matthew 28:19) "And it shall come to pass in the last days," saith God, "I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams, and on my servants and on my handmaidens, I will pour out in those days of my Spirit and they shall prophesy." (Acts of the Apostles 2:16.) If the preaching of the Gospel and the obedience to its requirements do not produce these fruits, we then have cause for suspicion, whether it be the true Church of Christ or the work of men, and under these circumstances we must be looking for the fulfilment of John the Revelator's vision: "After this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in Heaven, and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me, which said: 'Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.' Rev. 4:1. And I saw another Angel fly in the midst of Heaven, having the everlasting Gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice: 'Fear God, and give glory to Him, for the hour of His judgment is come, and worship Him that make Heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water." Rev. 14:6. And I heard an other voice from Heaven, saying: 'Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, and in her—Babylon was found the blood of Prophets and of Saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.'" Man, know thyself, be not deceived. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

History of the Southern States Mission.

July, 1899.—President Rich returned from Chicago on the 1st, while Elders Anderson and Lyman did not return until the 3d. As heretofore stated, the brethren had met Apostle F. M. Lyman, and the proposition to include Ohio in the Southern States Mission was laid before him, and the presiding authorities of the Northern States Mission. It met with the approval of all after some concessions, and Apostle Lyman promised to bring the subject up before the Missionary Board at Salt Lake City. Only a few days after, word was received officially that the change was agreeable, and to so make all necesasry arrangements with the other missions. Accordingly, President Rich went to Chicago on the 23d to complete the transfer. The results were gratifying indeed. Nine of the Elders then laboring in that state remained and were given companions, while the others left the state for various fields in the Northern States Mission. John B. Erekson, who was at that time president of the Ohio Conference, was chosen to preside, and nine Elders were sent up to the Conference from the South. The transfer did not go into effect until Aug. 15.

Elder Lyman, who had held council meeting with the Elders of the East Tennessee Conference at Knoxville, reported the following: "Our council meeting is just over; the Elders all feel fine, and are doing a good work. Knoxville has opened up in good shape. The mayor and other officials of the town are very friendly disposed. The ministers treat us very fair. The newspapers are also friendly and seem to have a desire to see us have fair play.

"The Saints at Hart's Branch are good people."

On the 25th a company of six Elders arrived and on the following day were set apart for various fields in the South. The names of the arrivals are Quincy R. Gardner, Benjamin Y. Baird, Augus V. Whitmer, Geo. A. Matthews, Wm. T. Gale and Adam R. Brewer.

A church house situated in the village of Bushburg, Fleming county, Kentucky, was destroyed about the 20th by a mob of men. Instead of burning the house and thereby permitting the Saints to obtain insurance on it, they surrounded the house with guards, and with sledge-hammers, saws, axes and firearms, they tore down the building. They then withdrew and left the ruins to the Saints.

The following startling dispatch from Atlanta, Ga., appeared in the Chattanooga Times of the 28th inst.:

Atlanta, Ga., July 27.—The Constitution has received a special from its Covington, Ga., correspondent, which says that a mob of fifty masked men made way with three Mormon Elders who have been proselyting in Jasper county.

The story is to the effect that the three Elders visited the home of William Cunnard, near Newton factory, Jasper county, yesterday and endeavored to persuade Mrs. Cunnard to join the church.

While they were at the Cunnard home, fifty men, masked and on horseback came up and asked the Elders to accompany them.

They refused to do so and while they were parleying Mr. Cunnard procured a rifle and aided the mob in taking the Mormons.

Several shots were exchanged and in the excitement Mrs. Cunnard had her jaw shattered.

The mob finally secured the Elders and rode off with them. Nothing has been seen of them since.

The Elders were driven out of two towns in Jasper county early in the week.

This greatly concerned the Elders at the office because much of it might be true, for the Elders were in imminent danger. The only thing possible was to telegraph the postmaster of Flovilla, Ga., which is near the place of the mobbing, and where conference headquarters had been for some time. A reply was received later in the day, which read: "One Mormon Elder in office this morning. Told citizens he was one of the Elders in the hands of mob. Could not get particulars. He said the woman of the house was badly shot, but not by her husband, as reported in the papers. He went south, walking along the railroad track before I learned that he was one of the Elders that had been mobbed.

"W. F. Smith, P. M."

Other news was awaited with interest, but when it did come it showed that nothing serious had happened to the Elders. The woman, however, was quite seriously wounded. (For a full account of mob, see page 285, Vol. 1, Southern Star.) From afar echoes of the great uprising were heard. Facts were misconstrued to frightful proportions. The month closed in great excitement.

A HYPOCRITE.

A hypocrite is one who pretends to be what he is not. Forgetting Washington's maxim: "Speak no evil of the absent; it is unjust," he will act the part of Judas after winning one's confidence and love. Still, according to his pretentions, he is friendly, sincere and true.

Satan has many such clients among the "Worldites," and one does not have to step beyond the bounds of remembrance to find such a creature. Friendship, affection, love, countrymen, kings, and even empires have vanished away by the presence of concealed hypocrisy.

The subject walks upon two legs: those of deceit and treachery. Lies and falsehoods are his companions. His mission is to pollute and destroy those attributes which come from God and are for the upbuilding of virtue, love and goodness. Heaven would not be what it is unless it were devoid of such beings. "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace." Hypocrisy results in confusion, and hence its source is from an inferior channel. A hero, whose deeds never die in the memory of mankind, is one whose life and character is unblotted with the traits of a hypocrite. He does not remember that a friend who fears to make enemies is not a true friend. Being two-faced, he fails to see that it is more honorable to openly make an enemy, when just causes are present, than it is to make an enemy by telling his faults to others, and then denying his statements to the victim.

Impure substances emanate from diseased bodies. Likewise, impure, bigoted and false statements come from the mind of a diseased soul. The hypocrite who prevaricates, intentionally and conscientiously, is morally diseased. Indeed, we may classify him as a living ulcer, upon the back of humanity. Corruption and attacks upon innocent characters are constantly conceived in his thoughts, and his tongue is the weapon he disgraces by allowing it to execute his wicked heart's desire. This world possesses many people who could have their names added to the hypocrites' "Roll of Honor (?)."

"Should you feel inclined to censure,
Faults of others you may view,
Ask your own heart e're you venture,
If it has not failings too."

A Word from Magnolia, Tenn.

Magnolia, Tenn.

Please allow me a little space in the Star, that I may express my thoughts. I have been a member of the Church for some years, and I can say that it is the true Church of Christ. It is all that holds one up in this lonesome place on earth is to know that the time is not far distant when the goats will be separated from the sheep. Elders, hold up your heads and look the world in the face and preach the true and everlasting Gospel. I would to God that I could tell all the world that I belong to the Mormon Church. I think it is a great honor to be enrolled with the Saints of God, for I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation. Preach on, my brothers, the time is not far distant when God will send His Son Jesus. I am happy to think I live in this dispensation of the fullness of time, when God does speak to His people. May all the faithful be blessed, is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

DOES A COLLEGE EDUCATION HELP OR HINDER?

There seems to be a general impression that the college graduate is losing caste; that he is becoming a very ordinary being. This is due not to the fact that the college man is deteriorating, but that the masses are becoming better educated through the rapid increase of newspapers and periodicals, the establishment of free libraries, university extension, evening schools of all descriptions in the large centers, correspondence schools, Chautauqua reading circles, and summer schools. In this way, the sharp distinction which formerly existed between the college man and his untrained brother has become somewhat obliterated.

Some one has well said that the mental capacity of a college graduate is like the power of steam or electricity, which is not applicable to runnig one kind of engine merely, but to any mechanical appliance. "The untrained man makes one think of Niagara going to waste, or only half utilized; or of a team of horses laboring through mud and mire when they might haul tons on a smooth road."

Harvey E. Fiske, the banker, in an article in "The Outlook," on "The Value of a College Education to a Business Man," says:

"I am a great believer in laying deep, broad, substantial foundations for all undertakings in life. If a boy intends to become something more than an under-clerk or a small tradesman, he will need the best preliminary education that his parents can afford to give him.

"In the early stages of his career in business, a young man will not appreciate what he has missed by not going to to college. Assuming that he entered an office or a store at 17, and that his friend entered college at the same age, he will feel at 21 greatly the superior of his friend in business ability. But five or ten years later, the one who had the college training will probably be found to be working more easily, with greater confidence, and with exactly as much success as the friend who had four years the start—if not greater. A college education will strengthen all your faculties, and, rightly used, will be a blessing all through life."

"It is a popular fallacy," says Charles F. Wright, "that self-made men have taken the lead in this country." Of our presidents, Washington, Jackson, Van Buren, Harrison, Taylor, Fillmore, Lincoln, Johnson, and Cleveland never went to college. On the other hand, Grant was educated at West Point, the two Adamses at Harvard, Jefferson, Monroe, and Tyler at William and Mary, Madison at Princeton, Polk at the University of North Carolina, Pierce at Bowdoin, Buchanan at Dickinson, Hayes at Kenyon, Garfield at Williams, and Arthur at Columbia. The list of fifty-three famous Massachusetts men inscribed on the dome of the Boston state house contains 72 per cent. of college graduates. Among them is Morse, the inventor of the telegraph.

It is undoubtedly true that thousands of youth are positively injured by going to college. But this is not the fault of the college. Many of those young men receive an education which fits them for occupations and professions for which they have not the slightest inclination, and the smattering of book knowledge which they have acquired, though very superficial, has made them discontented with the common life which they are compelled to lead. An unsuccessful student with a smattering of everything is raised as much above his original condition as if he were successful. It is a significant fact that a large portion of Paris cabmen are unsuccessful students in theology and other professions, and unfrocked priests, and they are very bad cabmen.

I do not claim that a college education is intended for all. Unless a youth is dead in earnest and anxious to make the most possible out of himself, he should not go to college. A great many boys who go to the universities are utterly without purpose, without any aim in life, or any ambition to be anything or to do anything. They are simply drifting drones. They wist to have a good time, and many of them go to college to get rid of hard work at home. It is lamentably true that a great many college boys waste their time in dissipation, neglect their studies until near the close of the term, and then employ tutors and cram for examinations. I do not call this a college education. Thousands of youths have diplomas which really mean nothing.—Success.

GLEANINGS.

Rutledge, Ga., Sept. 6th, 1900.

I desire to express my feelings toward the Latter-day Saints. It has been more than a year since I first saw a Mormon Elder. Two came to our house and were invited in. They talked a little on their faith and left a tract, which we did not read much, although I believed them to be servants of God. I was laughed at when I spoke in their favor, and then I thought if I never find out better I will always think they are right. They then called at one of our neighbor's, and were well treated, and held many good meetings there. I then had the privilege of hearing them preach, and I saw it was all from the Bible. My father bought the Voice of Warning. I read it with a prayerful heart and asked of God to know whether it was of God or of men, and I have received a testimony that this is the Gospel that Christ taught when He was upon the earth. That it has been taken from the earth, and that it has been brought back by an angel, as spoken of in Revelations xiv:6, And I also bear testimony that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God; that the Book of Mormon is a divine record. I was baptized on the 29th of November last, and can truthfully say that the same gifts and blessings as promised by the Savior are enjoyed in this day and time by all that will obey the Gospel of Christ and keep the commandments of God.

I have met with some persecutions, but that only makes my faith grow stronger, for I know all that will follow Christ must suffer persecution. I am not ashamed to say I am a Mormon, and if I will be faithful in keeping the commandments of God I will be saved in the Kingdom of God.

Your sister in Christ,

MOLLIE McCLAIN.

As I see nothing written from Jackson county, I will pen a few words to the much prized little Star, that lights our home once a week. There is so much valuable truth contained in the Star that it does my soul good to read and reread its valuable pages. I love to show it to the different church members of other faiths. You brethren that may chance to see this that have been to my home, remember me in your prayers, and know, too, that I and my house will serve the Lord. On the morning of the 5th of July Elders O. M. Hess and J. D. Frankland left my house, and we have not had the pleasure of seeing an Elder since. I will say to all the Elders who it has been my good fortune to meet that I am well and am fixed in purpose. I know we have the Gospel again restored to earth, and I know if I am faithful I shall meet them in heaven. Many of the Elders seem as dear to me as my own sons. Our parting is very trying. But how joyous will be the reunion, when parting will be no more. There are sixteen of my family who have been baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I feel proud to know that we are enlisted in King Emmanuel's army.

We are surrounded by other denominations, but they do not molest us or make afraid. When we meet them with the truth they have to give back.

In conclusion, I ask the faith and prayers of all the Saints.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE GEORGE ALBERT SMITH.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

George Albert Smith, who in his lifetime was one of the Twelve Apostles and a First Counselor to President Brigham Young, was born June 26, 1817, in Potsdam, St. Lawrence county, New York. He was the son of John Smith and Clarissa Lyman. His father was a brother to Joseph Smith, Sr., the father of the Prophet; thus George Albert being a first cousin to the Prophet Joseph Smith. The Smith family was a noble race of sturdy, honest, industrious men and women, typical Americans, who loved their native soil and offered their lives at various times of emergency to establish and perpetuate the principles of human liberty in the United States.

When George Albert was born he weighed four pounds; when full grown about 250. He was noble and dignified in his bearing, yet affable and kind, without affectation, in all his deportment. He was so conscientious that if he offended a little child he would ask that child's forgiveness. In other words, he possessed what few men can claim—the moral courage to be humble and meek. Two traits among many other great qualities of Geo. A. Smith which characterized our Lord and Savior were the courage of a lion and the meekness of a lamb. He dared to do right, no matter what the consequences might be, and would rather suffer a great wrong than to do the least wrong himself. In boyhood he was trained in the tenets of the Congregational church until 15 years of age. While attending school in Pottsdam a peculiar circumstance occurred which exhibited his strong sense of honor and his sensitive nature. He grew very rapidly, in consequence of which he was very awkward. To this inconvenience was added the misfortune of being near-sighted. The boys of the school taunted and made fun of him. Being wrapped up in his studies and contented with the company of older and wiser persons, he made no effort to curry sympathy and favor with the boys of the school. They continued to make fun of and ridicule him until he felt thoroughly outraged and determined that longer forbearance would not be a virtue. He therefore resolved to resent this kind of treatment by whipping the perpetrators. He had been very sick, and was just recovering, when these resolutions were firmly established in his mind as the right thing to do. He therefore waited patiently until sufficient strength was regained, when he started in to threshing the boys, and did not refrain until he had soundly whipped every boy of his age and size in the school. It was a very practical lesson for his schoolmates, but it was effectual, for they never made fun of him after that.

In the winter of 1828, Geo. A. Smith's father received a letter from the latter's nephew, Joseph Smith, Jr., in which he predicted that the judgments of God were coming upon the earth because of wickedness and abominations which exist among the people.

This letter made a lasting impression upon George A.'s mind, and his father remarked that "Joseph writes like a Prophet."

In August, 1830, Joseph Smith, Sr., and his son Don Carlos, paid their relatives a visit in Potsdam. They brought with them the Book of Mormon and left it with father John Smith, while they proceeded to visit other family relations. Geo. A. and his mother immediately set about reading the strange book. Neighbors came in and heard portions of it read. They ridiculed and raised objections to it. These objections young Geo. Albert found himself trying to answer, and with remarkable success, although but 13 years old. The Spirit of Light rested upon him to the discomfiture and defeat of his opponents. They would leave the house with the remark to his mother, that her boy was a little too smart for them. George A. himself, felt or thought he saw objections to the book. Upon the return of his uncle and Don Carlos, he expressed these objections, when his uncle Joseph took them up one by one, quoting the Bible to show that such a work should come forth, and that it was perfectly reasonable that such should be the case. George Albert Smith was thoroughly convinced, and from this time on became a staunch advocate and defender of the Book of Mormon as a divine record. He was also convinced that some authorized system of religion was essential to salvation. Soon after this he attended a Congregational revival, and while nearly every non-believer in the audience was converted but himself, he sat day after day in the gallery awaiting the sensation of religion. Finally the minister gave Geo. A. up as a reprobate and sealed him up to eternal damnation, saying, "Thy blood be upon thine own hand." "Nine times he thus delivered this inoffensive but unsatisfied seeker for religion to the buffetings of Satan and the burning of an endless hell."

Two years later, Sept. 10, 1832, Geo. A. Smith embraced the Gospel of Christ being baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints by Elder Joseph H. Wakefield. May 1, 1833, he left with his parents for Kirtland, O. They reached their destination May 25 and were warmly received by the Prophet Joseph Smith. Geo. A. at once imbibed the spirit of the work, became deeply interested in the affairs of the Church, and was delighted with his cousin, Joseph the Prophet. This was their first meeting.

He was valiant for the cause to the fullest extent. On hand for any duty required. He spent many nights guarding the brethren whose lives were in jeopardy from the violence of mobs. In the summer he was occupied quarrying and hauling rock for the Temple and doing other manual labor about the building. Geo. A. Smith and Harvey Stanley hauled the first two loads of rock from Stanard's quarry to the Temple ground. He was one of that valiant band known as Zion's Camp, leaving Kirtland for Missouri in May, 1834. The Camp had to undergo many hardships, and, like many in the Camp of Ancient Israel, murmured against the Prophet Moses, so did some in Zion's Camp complain against the Prophet Joseph Smith. Geo. A. was not only free from the least disposition to murmur, but was extremely cheerful, possessed of a happy vein of becoming humor. On one occasion when sent to a house to obtain some buttermilk, the lady of the house gave him the milk in a bucket not very clean. Some of the brethren complained very severely, when Geo. A. laughingly remarked: "If you had seen the churn the buttermilk came from, you'd never mention the bucket." On his journey to and from Missouri he traveled on foot 2,000 miles.

March 1st, 1835, he was ordained a Seventy by Joseph Smith, Sr., Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, the latter being spokesman. Geo. A. was the junior member of the First Quorum of Seventies in this dispensation.

June 5, 1835, with his second cousin, Lyman Smith, he left on a mission to the east. They journeyed on foot, traveled without money, held about eighty meetings in Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York. Geo. A. returned to Kirtland Oct. 5, 1835. He received his endowment in the Kirtland Temple in the spring of 1836 and soon after performed a mission in Ohio, traveling nearly 1,200 miles on foot.

Early in 1837 he performed a mission in Ohio and Virginia occupying about one year, traveling 2,500 miles; half the distance on foot.

In 1838 he removed with his father's family from Ohio to Davies county, Missouri. June 28, 1838, he was ordained a High Counselor.

The fall of the same year found him a missionary in Kentucky and Tennessee. He traveled 800 miles on foot, 700 by water during his absence, and accomplished a good work. Subsequently he moved into Illinois with his father's family and early in 1839 returned to Far West.

On the 26th day of April, 1839, Geo. A. Smith was ordained one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church on the south-east corner stone of the Temple which through persecution had not yet been built.

On Sept. 21, 1839, he started on his mission to England, arriving in Liverpool the 6th of April, 1840. He was one of the best of missionaries, always affable and kind in his manner, and perfectly clear in his testimony and understanding of the Gospel. These good qualities were so thoroughly quickened by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit in Apostle Smith that he won the love and respect of the honest in heart wherever he traveled and was instrumental in bringing many to a knowledge of the truth. He returned to Nauvoo July 5, 1841. The 25th of the same month he received in marriage Bathsheba W. Bigler. From this time until the martyrdom of the Prophet and Patriarch of the Church, Elder Smith was busy at home and abroad, building up the city and the Temple and spreading the Gospel throughout the land. He preached in the principal cities of Illinois and performed another faithful mission in the middle and eastern states.

When he learned of the death of his cousins, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, he was engaged as a missionary in the state of Michigan. He returned at once to Nauvoo and actively participated in all the councils and deliberations essential to the well-being of the Saints in those sad days of trial and tribulation.

Sept. 17, 1844, he was made quartermaster of the Nauvoo Legion; was also a trustee of the Nauvoo House Association and active in forwarding this House and the Temple to completion and preparing for the exodus of the Saints from Nauvoo.

In February, 1846, he crossed the Mississippi river with his family, an exile from home, to find a place of rest and respite from the furious rage of religious bigots, who were mobocrats while hypocritically professing Christianity. The ensuing winter he lived at winter quarters, where the people suffered much sickness. At this place his wife and four children died. He visited all the camps of the Saints and urged the raising and use of potatoes as a remedy for scurvy. But little seed could be obtained, but from that little a marvelous yield was the result.

The next season in Pottawattamie county, Iowa, the potato crop was a failure, and the saying went out that it was because Geo. A. Smith, "the Potato Saint," had gone to the mountains.

In 1847 he was numbered with the 143 Pioneer Company to Salt Lake Valley, arriving in the valley July 24, 1847. He walked much of the distance and in finding the place and subsequent places for the location of the Saints, Brother Geo. A. was one of the foremost and best explorers in the Church. He planted the first potato from which a crop was produced by the Saints in Salt Lake Valley. He built a house for his father in the Old Fort, and returned to winter quarters in the fall, arriving there Oct. 31, the same year. He opened a farm near Kanesville, had charge of the congregating Saints, and with the last company of them, left with his family for the Valley July 4, 1849. Their teams were overloaded and progress slow. They met with hail and rain-storms. Their stock was stampeded and at South Pass a cold, heavy storm caused the death of seventy animals. They reached Salt Lake Valley Oct. 27, 1849.

Apostle Smith was a member of the Senate in the Provisional State of Deseret. He presented a bill for the organization of the judiciary. This was the first bill presented for the consideration of members. He also reported a bill relating to the construction of a railroad across the continent.

In December, 1850, he headed a company of volunteers to make explorations in Southern Utah. They determined the location of Parowan and built a road six miles into the canyon. They hoisted the American flag on a 90-foot pole on the town site and dedicated the ground by prayer and supplication to the Lord.

He had been elected Chief Justice of the Provisional State, and was empowered to complete the organization of Iron county. An election being called, two associate justices, county recorder, member of the House in the General Assembly and all other officers to make the organization of the county complete, were elected.

In the winter of 1850-51 the settlers erected a fort in the enclosure of which they built their homes, house of worship, the latter being used for meetings, schools and a watch tower. It was built of logs and shaped like a Greek cross. It was used for fifteen years and then replaced by a suitable stone structure. In the winter Brother Smith taught school with thirty-five pupils. Around the camp-fire at night he gave them lectures on English grammar. When the Territory of Utah held its first election, Geo. A. Smith was elected a member of the council. He held positions (one of postmaster at Centre Creek, Iron county) by appointment of Postmaster-General Hall, and military offices under appointment of Gov. Brigham Young.

In every place he honored his calling and filled the office with great ability. He was very efficient as a peace-maker among the Indians, protecting the Saints by wise council and proper precautions from much trouble. Like President Young, he felt it better to feed than to fight the Indian, and this has been the principle of the Latter-day Saints from the beginning.

In 1852, having been called by President Young to preside over the affairs of the Church in Utah county, he left Iron county. He traveled much, especially where he had immediate oversight, encouraging the Saints in all their labors to promote the growth of the Church and State.

At the general conference in 1854 he was chosen and sustained as Historian and General Church Recorder. President Willard Richards was his predecessor in the office of Historian, and had written on some blanks he had prepared to be filled out, as if with prophetic eye, "To be supplied by Geo. A. Smith." President Richards well said, for after his decease Geo. A. Smith was the man chosen to fill this important position. He was well qualified for this particular work, for he was himself a fund of history.

Feb. 2, 1855, he was admitted as a member of the bar in the Supreme Court of Utah Territory, receiving his certificates as an attorney, solicitor in chancery and counselor-at-law. He was one of a committee in convention which drafted a constitution, was elected by the convention with Apostle John Taylor to present the constitution to the President and Congress, asking admission into the Union on the same footing with the original states. Performing his duty with ability and devotion as a delegate, he also did valiant missionary work in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa and Missouri. He was absent about eleven months, and this was a pleasant respite from the close application of his labors in the Historian's office.

April 11, 1866, he was commissioned by Gov. Durkee brigadier-general and appointed aide-de-camp to the lieutenant-general of the Nauvoo Legion.

At the October conference in 1868 he was sustained as First Counselor to President Brigham Young, succeeding the late President Heber C. Kimball. This honored station he filled with wisdom, energy and great efficiency during the remainder of his natural life.

With his file leader, fellow-counselor and associate Apostles, he met in all the important councils of the Church, traveled throughout the Stakes of Zion, continued as Church Historian and filled places of responsibility and distinction in a civil capacity.

Oct. 15, 1872, he, with President Lorenzo Snow and others started on a mission to the Holy Land. En route they visited many notable places and distinguished persons in the nations of Europe. They knelt upon the Mount of Olives, where our Savior once stood, and where Apostle Hyde previously dedicated the land to the gathering of Israel. President Smith and companions also dedicated the land to the return and possession of the House of Jacob. While absent he was sustained as trustee in trust, which position he filled until his decease. Upon his return he spent much of his time in St. George, the chief city in Southern Utah, and honored with his name, giving much attention to the building of the Temple. He was an able advocate of the United Order. His discourses upon that subject being most impressive and characterizing him as an inspired political and domestic economist. Soon after his return he was attacked with intense cold, which settled upon his lungs and terminated in his death Sept. 1, 1875.

Geo. A. Smith was one of God's noblemen—few, if any, better types of pure, honest, Godlike manhood ever lived. More than half his entire life was spent as a minister of life and salvation to a fallen world. In matters of civil government, his political career covered the entire history of his life in Utah. He held various positions of a civil and military nature. He was a member of the Utah legislature in every session but one (and then he was absent from the territory), until 1870, in the last six being President of the Council. He was a wise counselor, a great preacher, a sound statesman, a pioneer and colonizer of the highest ability, an able lawyer and an efficient educator.

Several years before his decease he had traveled tens of thousands of miles by land and sea, and preached over 3,800 discourses in various portions of the globe. He was recognized as the father of the settlements in Southern Utah. St. George, the chief city in Utah's Dixie, bears his name. He was always ready in public and private. No one ever wearied of his preaching. He was brief, and interspersed his doctrinal and historical remarks with anecdotes most appropriate and timely in their application. Short prayers, short blessings, short sermons, full of spirit, was a happy distinction in the ministry of Geo. A. Smith. He was humble and meek, yet full of courage and unbounded energy in the cause of right. He always had time to notice young people and children and leave his eternal impress of love and kindness upon the tablet of their hearts.

I once gave President Geo. A. Smith a ride in my wagon from Draper to Lehi and the tone of his conversation, with the influence which he shed around him, drew me to him like a magnet draws the needle. I could never forget the impressions of love and respect which I then formed for him.

As a fitting conclusion we quote the words of President Brigham Young on the morning of President Smith's decease: "I have known Brother Geo. A. Smith for forty-two years, have traveled and labored in the ministry with him for many years, and have believed him to be as faithful a boy and man as ever lived; and, in my opinion, he had as good a record on this and the other side of the vail as any man. I never knew of his neglecting or overdoing a duty; he was a man of sterling integrity, a cabinet of history, and always true to his friends."

History of the Southern States Mission.

August, 1899—On the 5th, news was printed in a local paper of the arrest of Elder R. T. Mitchell on the charge of using obscene language while preaching on the streets of Knoxville, Tenn. He was wired as to its truthfulness, and an answer was received denying the charges, but substantiating his arrest.

Particulars followed by letter, which stated that his arrest was due to quoting the words of Joseph Smith when rebuking his insolent guards in the prison at Far West, and from Brigham Young to Gov. Cummings, when he said, "We have seen our women ravished before our eyes." Upon arriving at police headquarters he was dismissed on his promise to appear next morning. At his trial next morning a few questions were asked of two or three alleged witnesses, and Elder Mitchell was released.

At Sweetwater, Tenn., Elders George A. Adams and F. P. Hammond were egged from the town. An interesting account of the mobbing, written by President F. B. Hammond, can be found on Page 304 of Vol. 1, Southern Star.

On the 5th President Rich left for Jacksonville, Fla., and Atlanta, Ga. In Atlanta he interviewed Gov. Candler on the recent mobbing in that state. President Rich found the Governor to be a true man, and obtained the promise from him that if all facts to the convicting of the parties engaged in the dastardly affair at Jasper county were gotten together and placed before him in person, that he (the Governor) would see that these men would be brought to justice. A very fair interview appeared in the Constitution. This omitted the parties referred to for obvious reasons. This interview can be found on page 293, Vol. 1.

Full partitculars were received from the Kentucky, Louisiana and Mississippi mobbings.

The Kentucky trouble occurred on the 4th of the present month, in Spencer county. Elder D. Aflect was preaching in the Mt. Eden neighborhood, and having good success, when on the night of the above date a large mob ordered him to leave the county. The mob was led by a preacher, and most of the gang were church members. Although Elder Afleck did not go upon the order of the mob, he had to secrete himself in a neighborhood four miles away, where he was guarded by friends until the following Monday, when he went into Louisville.

On the 11th President Rich interviewed Gov. Bradley in Frankfort, Ky. Although he treated him nicely, he was not as much disposed to settle the question of persecution as was Gov. Candler, of Georgia.

On Sunday night, Aug. 29th, word was received of the death of Elder Thos. H. Bell, of the Georgia Conference. The death occurred at Berzelia, Ga., and President Rich, accompanied by an undertaker, went to that point and prepared the body for shipment west. Elder Bell was a married man, and his sudden demise was a fearful blow to his loving wife and near friends. He was faithful, and this inscription upon the metallic casket in which his remains were encased bespeaks the worth and fidelity of his soul: "Faithful and true; he died in the harness."

On the 21st a company of Elders arrived from Zion, nine in number, as follows: A. W. Larsen, H. J. Schlappy, Harvey J. Harper, Jr., James R. Hawkins, Frank L. Osborn, Jefferson G. Hunt, Alfred P. Harper, Erastus Christensen and Morgan J. Rich.

The following clippings, the first from the Times of Aug. 30th, and the other from Sept. 1, are self explanatory. They need no further explanation from man, seeing they convey the manifestation of eternal retribution:

Mormon Meeting Raided.

Dover, Tenn., Aug. 29.—(Special.)—While two Mormon Elders were holding services at Vinson's school house, fifteen miles below Dover, Sunday night, a raid was made upon the audience by unknown parties. Several rocks were thrown into the crowd. Pistols were fired, and one little girl was shot through the leg. The neighborhood is very much wrought up over the affair, and an effort to detect the guilty parties by aid of bloodhounds is being made.

The same paper of Sept. 1 says:

Suicide Through Remorse.

Dover, Tenn., Aug. 31.—(Special.)—Baston Winson, a farmer of this county, committed suicide Monday night by shooting himself with a pistol and then cutting his own throat. Bloodhounds which were put on the track of the parties that broke up the Mormon meeting and shot a little girl Sunday night tracked up to Vinson's premises Monday. No arrest was made, however, but Vinson was supposed to be one of the guilty parties. It seems from writing he left on a pillow case that he thought he had killed the little girl and then committed suicide to rid himself of remorse of conscience. The writing was to that effect, and stated that he shot at one of the Mormon Elders and did not intend to hurt anyone else.

Hand in hand with this dastardly affair, was the attempted assassination of Elder James Duffin. Returning to the house of a friend, after having held services, the Elders had to pass through a dense forest. The Elders had been threatened with mob violence, but no attention was paid to the threats. Elder Duffin thus explained the wicked assault:

"When we came to the darkest place two ruffians rushed upon me with large clubs; the first lick struck my right shoulder and was immediately followed by a hard blow upon my head, which stunned me; two more blows were struck, knocking me senseless for a few moments. Elder Smith hit one of the ruffians with a lantern, breaking the globe and putting out the light, and in this way my life was saved. As soon as the light was out the men ran into the woods. We armed ourselves with clubs and proceeded on to Brother Toler's, where we will remain long enough to get well enough to go into Richmond."

TO MARY.

(A poem written by Sister L. L. Greene Richards in the Temple at Salt Lake City, Sept. 13, 1900, being the day on which Sister Frankland (Mary) was apprised of the death of her husband, Elder John Frankland.)

Dear Mary! Look up in this time of bereavement,
This sad, solemn hour which has come unto you;
Be assured 'tis some glorious, mighty achievement,
Your true, noble lord has been chosen to do.

How bitter the cup! Yet the powers that distill it
Are Judgment and Mercy and Kindness and Love;
An exalted position was waiting—to fill it,
Your John was ordained in the councils above.

He came to this earth to fulfill his probation;
To be father to your precious child—baby John,
Which preceded him back to their glorified station,
Where with sweet recognition their works will go on.

Oh! grieve not their spirits with sad lamentation;
Be calm in your sorrow, cling close to the One
Who alone can console in your deep desolation,
And will lead you to them when your earth's work is done.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul. "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

IMMORTALITY.

It is almost universally accepted in what is known as the scientific and religious world, that the spirit or soul of man is immortal—not born to die. While this acceptance and belief is common in a general sense, still there are some few who contend otherwise; arguing that the spirit only lives while the physical organism—the body—is active, that is, between mortal birth and bodily death, then ceasing to be active until the resurrection of the dead; at which time, be they wicked and sinful, they are utterly destroyed, completely annihilated, stamped with the terrible "Forever" as an infliction of judgment.

In the investigation of this subject—immortality—we should not deign to spurn or deride the belief of others who may differ with us, but be candid and fair towards all, looking at the evidences adduced from reason and revelation with an untrammeled and unbiased mind, that we may ascertain whether our views are well founded and securely established upon a true basis. Upon all subjects and inquiries the mind requires the absolute truth, and more especially with regard to spiritual and eternal things; so is it the case with the question now under discussion, the truth of the matter is what we want, it is the desirable and essential matter requisite to a proper understanding. Error is of no value or worth to anyone, and upon matters of interest and importance it is the truth we should earnestly strive to obtain. All truth is an achievement. If one would have truth at its full value, let them win it by study, research, prayer and faith. The words of the Lord Jesus are, "Seek and ye shall find." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God," etc. This verb "Seek" means for us to look for, go in search of, dig, delve, explore, study, etc., and by this injunction, "seek," we are given to know that we are not merely here to see and hear truth, but individualities in a real world, to seek and achieve it.

The first inquiry we make is: Do the Scriptures, confirmed by reason, teach that the spirit of man is immortal? Does his primeval conscious existence begin with the present life, and end with it, to be revived no more forever, as taught by the Sadducees and by Atheists? Is the spirit conscious and alive only while man is a physically organized being, between his birth and death, then ceasing to live until the resurrection of the dead, as the Adventists declare? Does the spiritual life begin at mortal birth, never to end, not even at death, as is the common belief at the present day, among the sects called Christians? Or is it an intelligent entity, the offspring of Deity, which existed with God in the eternities before the worlds were framed, and is destined to live on even when the mortal body becomes inanimate, by reason of the spirit having taken its heavenward flight?

According to the Scriptures we are led to accept the latter theory, that is, that the spirit is an intelligent entity, the offspring of Deity, etc. That our spirits are the offspring of God, is plainly enunciated by the Apostle Paul, who addressed the Athenians thus: "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device." (Acts 17:29.) Could we desire a more explicit and clearly defined statement than these words spoken by Paul? We think not, and inas much as they are true let us examine by the aid of the Scriptures into the nature of that Great and Holy One, of whom we all are offspring. Inasmuch as like begets like, may we not consistently believe that our spirits will possess the same qualities and characteristics as are found in the nature and attributes of God? That the Apostle referred to our spirits as the "offspring of God," and not our mortal bodies, is evident from his words to the Hebrews: "Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence; shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?" (Heb. 12:9.) From this, then, we are given to understanding and believe that we are the offspring of God, and He is the Father of our spirits.

Now let us see what the "law and the testimony" has to say relative to His nature and the duration of His power and attributes. We will quote but a very few of the many passages found in Holy Writ: "But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear Him." (Psalms 103:17.) "Before the mountains were brought forth, or even thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting Thou art God." (Psalms 90:2.) "And Thou, Lord, in the beginning, hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands; they shall perish, but Thou remainest; and they shall all wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt Thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but Thou art the same, and Thy years shall not fail." (Heb. 1:10-12.) "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1:17.) "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." (Mal. 3:6.)

The passages above quoted are all sufficient (to the ardent believer in the Bible, at least,) to prove that our Father, God, is eternal, everlasting, unchangeable; that He was God before the worlds were made, and that He remained the same Almighty Ruler after the formation of the earth. This being true, and inasmuch as we are the offspring of God, is it at all unreasonable or irrational for us to believe that our spirits are immortal? (We are not dealing with evidence to prove the pre-existent state; this will follow in another issue.) We think not, and we certainly have an abundant array of evidence in the word of God to support and sustain us in our faith. Jesus taught His Apostles to pray after this manner: "Our Father who art in heaven," etc. Again we are given to understand that the relationship existing between God and man is identical with that of an earthly father to his son, only that our heavenly Father is perfect in all His holy ways, and our spirits, not our bodies, come from Him.

The wise man, Ecclesiastes, has said, speaking of the temporal death, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." (Ecclesiastes 12:7.) The meaning here conveyed is in strict keeping with what has already been written—"Unto God who gave it," and the same writer says, "I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever." "There is no man that hath power over the spirit, to retain the spirit." We are also given to understand that Jesus is our Elder Brother, and that we are to be "joint heirs" with Him in the kingdom of our Father, if we are faithful and true, which certainly makes us sons and daughters of God. Moreover, the sacred historian, Luke, in tracing the genealogy of Joseph, the carpenter, takes us back to David, Abraham, Noah, and finally to our first earthly parent, Adam, whom he calls "the son of God." (Luke 3:38.) Are not we all descendants of this self-same common parent—Adam? Are not we all the progeny of those two whom God created in His likeness and image, and placed in the Garden of Eden? We most assuredly are, and who can deny or refute the same from a Bible basis? We, too, then, are the sons of God, and He is the "Father of spirits."

There seems to be some little confusion in the Scriptures concerning the spirit and the soul of man. These two—spirit and soul—are oftentimes used as synonymous expressions—to mean one and the same thing, when in reality they are very diverse, and separate. When man became a "living soul," according to the writings of Moses, he possessed a fleshy tabernacle and an immortal spirit—the two combined constituting the soul. The soul, then, is not the spirit, but consists of body and spirit consolidated, and when we speak of the souls of men here upon the earth, technically and properly speaking we mean the living mortal being. While the two may be combined and work harmoniously together, still they are separate and distinct from each other, performing their prescribed functions.

That the spirit is a separate, independent, real, intelligent entity from that of the body, can be readily seen by using an apt illustration or example which all may comprehend. Let us imagine ourselves in the presence of a corpse—the lifeless clay—the inanimate tabernacle of flesh and bones, which once moved, was active, operative, and buoyant; but now lies motionless, silent, still—released from the actions of mortal life. As we gaze upon the dead body our natural eyes behold every part and organ which we observed in life—the limbs, the eye, the ear, the mouth and the tongue; furthermore, were we to dissect the anatomy and view the internal regions, we would find the lobes and cells of the brain exact in their correct locations, the heart in its proper cavity, the lungs and all the vital organs in their adapted places, and still life is extinct, and death reigns supreme. It matters not how perfect a picture may be formed upon the retina of the eye, it is sightless—nothing is seen; no matter how complete a vibration may be produced upon the drum of the ear, nothing is heard. There is neither light for the eyes, music for the ears, words for the tongue, or thoughts for the mind. What is the matter? Why such a radical change, and yet all parts of the physical organism visible as they were when the blood coursed through the veins and the heart beat in life? We say that the spirit has taken its flight; yea, it has returned to God who gave it, hence the lifeless clay. the inanimate body.

It follows, then, that this spiritual organism was that part of the living soul, which sees and hears and feels, which suffers and enjoys, which thinks and wills and executes; which is, in short, the life, light, and intelligence of the whole being. It came from an immortal Father, took upon itself a mortal body of flesh and bones, and when the time appointed for the body to die, to decay, and pass to the dust from whence it came, arrives, the spirit takes its heavenward flight and returns to God who gave it. Is not this reasonable, philosophical, and above all Scriptural?

The Scriptures having furnished such valuable evidence and testimony relative to the immortality of the spirit, we need not turn to science for aid and endorsement, although philosophy and metaphysics join hands with the great truths of the Bible in declaring the spirit of man immortal. One very learned writer says, "The soul is a simple, spiritual essence, immaterial, uncompounded, and indivisible," and H. W. Beecher remarked, "It is formless, shadowless; no eye beholds it, no hand handles it, no pencil may trace its lineaments." A more complete definition of Nothing could not be given than the above. What they term the soul is in reality the spirit, as heretofore stated. To define the spirit as an immaterial essence is a contradiction in terms, since all spirit is matter. The spirit of mortal man is pure and fine beyond the perceptibility of mortal eyes, or the comprehension of the human mind; but nevertheless we need not suppose that it is "formless, shadowless," etc. When our bodies are purified, and the eyes of our understanding opened, then shall we see that it is all matter with dimensions, form and shape, being fashioned and moulded by an Eternal Parent. So much for the immortality of the spirit.

The Apostle Paul, in writing to the Saints at Corinth, says: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." (I Cor. 15:53.) Our mortal tabernacles, then, will also some day put on immortality, and this corruptible body become incorruptible. We are told that "the life of the flesh is in the blood," that is, of this mortal flesh. Now the blood is the corruptible mortal part of man's flesh, and so long as blood flows through the veins we are subject unto death; therefore the mortal part is overcome in the death of the body, and the immortal fluid substituted in the resurrection of the dead. When we shall rise in the likeness of Christ's resurrection, the mortal blood will be stricken from our veins, and the eternal fluid of God's Holy Spirit will course in lieu thereof.

The spirit of man is immortal, an intelligent entity, not devoid of shape, nor destitute of form, and is destined to inhabit an immortal body, when the dead in Christ shall rise. All attempts to prove otherwise are futile, unphilosophical, unreasonable, and consequently opposed to facts, common sense, and the Bible. Canon Mozley, in his great sermon on Eternal Life, says, substantially, "It does not matter how we came to be what we are; we are what we are," and Novalis remarks, "Philosophy can bake no bread; but she can procure for us God, Freedom, Immortality." It is the spirit which receives or rejects truth as it may be revealed to the human mind; hence the absolute necessity of a re-uniting of the spirit with the body in order to await the judgment, when we are all judged according to men in the flesh. The spirit transcends the physical. It is not visible to the natural eye, but is felt by man, for it furnishes him with intelligence, life—force, power and ability to act, move, and have a being.

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul."

JONATHAN OWNSBY.

On the 24th inst. we enjoyed a visit from Jonathan Ownsby, whose name will be remembered by the many readers of the Star, as being identified with the martyrdom of Elder Joseph Standing, not as the name of a culprit, but as one who stood firmly and boldly, and testified in the witness' stand against the ruthless murderers of a true servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. Jonathan Ownsby is now in his 77th year, and has faced many trials and difficulties during the almost four score years he has been upon the earth. His form is bent with age and toil, but his eye is quick, sharp and keen, and his memory has not failed him one degree. He talks with ease and apparent correctness upon the incidents of twenty and twenty-two years ago.

He related the occurrence when he met the two Elders upon the "Big Road," in the custody of armed mobbers, and one could not, from the earnestness and positiveness of his statements, doubt the veracity of the incident. Mr. Jonathan Ownsby had entertained Elder John Morgan and Joseph Standing at his home near Catoosa Springs, where he conducted, on a small scale, a dairy business. He says: "I left my home on Monday (Sunday is incorrect) to go over to Joseph Conester to buy a cow. When I got there I met the two Elders, and Elder Standing introduced me to Brother Clawson. The Elders left Conester before I did, and I was returning home when I met them in the hands of the mob. Someone asked me if there was anything the matter with my horse, and I told them 'No,' for, said they, 'We will have it healed by laying on of hands." When asked as to how the Elders appeared, he said they looked calm, resolute and determined.

He further stated that he heard that one of the mobbers was hung in Texas. After the trial some of the mobbers became angry at Mr. Ownsby, or, as he himself remarked, "Some of them acted the fool, and got mad at me because I told the truth." There was a great deal of prejudice shown at the trial, but Mr. Ownsby was not swayed by threat or bribe; he told the truth, told it fearlessly, spoke it boldly, and his very bitterest enemies could find no fault or discrepancies in his unerring statements. He said that the Judge fined him $5 for being fifteen minutes late for the trial on one occasion. It was certainly interesting to hear him relate the incident, and as we shook his hand "good-bye" we felt to say, "God bless you."

SALVATION FOR THE LIVING AND THE DEAD.

Liberality of the "Mormon" Faith—A Discourse by Charles W. Penrose, Delivered in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday Afternoon, August 19, 1900.

Gospel Will be Preached to Every Soul.

This is a corrupt age. The world is full of evil. That perhaps may be considered an extravagant term, for there is without doubt a great deal of good in the world as well as evil; but I mean to say that evil abounds everywhere. Take your "Christian" cities—those that have the most churches and chapels dedicated to "Christian" service—and sin, corruption, vice, and evils that are unmentionable, abound in them. The word of God to all people is to repent, and turn from iniquity, and come unto the Lord, that they may be saved. This Gospel will be preached to every nation, tongue and people. The barriers that are now in the way of the progress of the servants of God will be broken down. War, plague, pestilence, famine, earthquake, the devouring fire, the cyclone and the whirlwind will be agencies in the hands of an offended Deity to open up the way for the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Nations that today sit in darkness will hear it, and the "Christian" nations will hear it; for the word of the Lord is to the priest as well as to the people, to the king as well as to the peasant, to those in high places as well as to those who grovel in filth and dirt on the earth or beneath its surface. To all people everywhere this Gospel is to go. Those nations where it is now impossible to proclaim the Gospel freely will be so overturned in the providences of our Father in this fast age, that all nations will be opened and the Elders of this Church will carry the message to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Now in regard to people who will not receive the Gospel when it is presented to them. When they reject it, they reject the Lord. But are they to be everlastingly lost and destroyed? If so, only a few people among the great family of the Eternal Father would obtain the blessings of salvation. What I will read to you from this book relates to the final condition of the human race. As I said, I will not attempt to read the whole of it; it would take too long. I will read only a few verses. But I recommend all people to read it fully. I consider it the most glorious manifestation of light and truth concerning the future of mankind that has ever been put in print. There is nothing in the Bible equal to this manifestation from God, of His plans and purposes regarding His children who dwell on earth. The first part of this revelation contains the statement that Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, being in the Spirit on the 16th of February, 1832, were surrounded by His power and light, and they beheld the Father seated upon His throne, and Jesus Christ, His Son, at His right hand, and the angels that surround the throne and worship before their face. The Lord manifested in this vision the conditions of the human family in the world to come, who will be partakers of the various degrees of glory—the celestial glory, the terrestial glory, and the telestial glory. The part I wish to read is this:

"And this is the Gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us:

"That He came into the world, even Jesus, to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness.

"That through Him all might be saved whom the Father had put into His power and made by Him.

"Who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of His hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed Him.

"Wherefore He saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment.

"And the evil thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment no man knows." (Doctrine and Covenants, section 76, vs. 40:45.)

But Few Will Be Lost.

My friends, the great truth is declared in this revelation that Jesus Christ will ultimately save ALL mankind, except a few who are called the sons of perdition, "who deny the Son after the Father has revealed Him." This is a very different idea of the plan of salvation to that which is entertained by most, if not all, our "Christian" friends, who say that we are very illiberal. They have an idea that the Latter-day Saints are very exclusive and illiberal in their religion. I wish to say here that there is no creed in Christendom which is so liberal as that which is believed in by the Latter-day Saints. We do not hold that all who differ with us in regard to the principles of salvation will be irretrievably lost. We do not consign our "Christian" friends, as they do us, to an everlasting hell, to frizzle and fry in brimstone and fire while eternity comes and goes; not at all. We do not believe that our Eternal Father will condemn any person who acts according to his sincere belief and who endeavors, as far as he can, to understand and practice what is true. The understanding and the practice of truth is that which exalts; and the time will come —according to our faith—when everybody who dwells on the earth, and those who have dwelt here and have gone away, will hear the sound of this one Gospel; for, as I said, there can be but one Gospel, one way of salvation, and all those who do not get into that one way are in the broad way.

There are millions and millions of heathens who never heard the name of Jesus Christ. What is to become of them all? There are millions of Jews who reject Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world. Are they all to be lost eternally? They will be, according to the doctrines of some of our liberal "Christian" friends. According to their doctrines, no one will be saved who does not believe in Jesus Christ. And they have warrant for that in the Scripture; for "there is none other name given under heaven whereby men can be saved than the name of Christ Jesus." That being true, all who do not hear the name of Jesus Christ and believe in Him will be condemned. If, therefore, only while men dwell in the flesh they may hear the name of Christ and have the privilege of obeying His Gospel, then the vast majority of the human race, the sons and daughters of the Eternal God, will be doomed to everlasting punishment, according to the modern creeds. But according to what the Lord has shown to this Church by revelation, this Gospel will be preached to every creature. If people do not hear it while they dwell in the flesh, they will hear it after they leave the body. That is contrary to the doctrine of modern Christendom, I am aware. It comes right in contact with one of the tenets of faith of all "Christian" sects. They do not believe in the doctrine of preaching to men after they are dead. They do not believe that there is salvation for mankind after they leave this body. To use expressions common with them, "As the tree falls, so it lies;" "as death meets us, so judgment finds us;". "There's no repentance in the grave, nor pardon offered to the dead." That is modern "Christianity."

Salvation for the Dead.

But that is not the Christianity of Christ. I would direct the attention of my friends to the book of the Prophet Isaiah. I will not take time to turn to it this afternoon. Read the 61st chapter, 1st verse, and you will find there this prophecy concerning the coming of the Redeemer: (See also 42nd chapter, 7th verse.)

"The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

Jesus Christ accepted that as a prediction concerning Himself, as you will read in the Gospel according to St. Luke, (iv., 18), by getting up in the synagogue on the Sabbath day and reading that Scripture to the Jews, testifying that it referred to Himself. Jesus, while He dwelt in the flesh, preached good tidings to the meek. He healed the sick; He comforted those that mourned; He bound up the broken-hearted. But how about proclaiming liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that were bound? The Apostle Paul says that when Jesus was raised up on high "He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men." How did He lead captivity captive? Why, Peter explained it, but the eyes of the "Christian" world have been closed to it for hundreds of years. In the third chapter of the first Epistle of Peter, 18-20 vs., we read:

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also He went."

Now, mark it. He was put to death in the flesh; He was quickened by the Spirit; and He went—where? Our "Christian" friends say He went up to heaven. This is a mistake, because Jesus, after His resurrection, when He appeared to Mary in the garden, said, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father." (John xx, 17.) Where did He go, Peter? Let us hear what he says:

"By which also He went and preached unto the spirits in prison."

Yes; Isaiah said He should "preach deliverance to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that were bound." He went and preached unto the spirits in prison. Whe were they, Peter? He tells us:

"Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing."

Now, if we will take that just as it stands, and leave out the interpretations given by uninspired men and the nonsense preachers weave around it to mystify, we can understand it right enough. Jesus Christ was put to death in the flesh; He was quickened by the Spirit; His body lay in the sepulchre, while He went and preached to the spirits in prison, who had been there since the days of the flood. What did He preach to them? We can find that out by reading the sixth verse of the next chapter of this epistle:

"For, for this cause was the Gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."

Here is an account of what was preached to them and the object of the preaching. He preached the Gospel to them, the same Gospel that He preached in the flesh. He preached it to them that they might be judged as men in the flesh are; because they had the same Gospel preached to them. They could not be judged like men in the flesh unless they had the same Gospel preached to them as men in the flesh had. The heathen who never heard the Gospel cannot be judged like those who have heard it; but if they hear it in the spirit, then they can be judged in the same way as other men are judged in the flesh; and they may live according to God in the spirit, because they can repent and receive that Gospel.

This is clear and plain to those who desire to understand it. But when men do not want the truth; when men live by publishing falsehoods; when men preach for hire and divine for money, and their craft is in danger, they do not want to see it, nor do they want their congregations to perceive it. We can thus understand what I read to you just now from this modern revelation. Jesus Christ died for the sins of the world, and He will eventually save all, except a few who are called the sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father has revealed Him, who sin against the Holy Ghost, and against light and truth, and who are irredeemable. But all things that can be saved will be; for our God is a great economist. Everything in His universe is put to a good use, and nothing is lost. Not a particle of matter is annihilated. You may burn a substance and destroy its present form, but the particles thereof remain, the original elements abide; they are indestructible, and God has a use for them somewhere in His universe. Our Heavenly Father will save everything that can be saved, and He will put it somewhere where it can be of use. All His sons and daughters, at some time or other in the eternity to come, will hear the Gospel, and will bow the knee; for as we are told in the New Testament, "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to Me, and every tongue shall confess to God." And also: "Every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." (Philip, ii, 2.) And then when they do bow the knee and receive Christ as their Redeemer, He will redeem and save them; He will take them out of the prison house, and He will lead captivity captive, again and again, until every son and daughter of Adam's race who can be saved will be brought out of hell and death, darkness and despair, suffering and punishment, and placed somewhere where they can enjoy existence and glorify their God and be of benefit to one another.

Funeral of Elder J. D. Frankland.

BY WILL SEARS.

The funeral services of Elder Frankland were held at the Twelfth Ward meeting house, Salt Lake City, Utah, Sept. 19th, commencing at 2:30 p. m. Many Saints assembled to pay their last respects to he who had given his life for the cause of truth. The casket was literally covered with flowers plucked by sorrowing hands and tied together as tokens of respect by bonds of love. The music furnished by the Temple choir was most beautiful.

The services began by the choir singing "Nearer My God to Thee." Prayer by Elder James Sharp. Singing, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

Bishop H. B. Clawson then introduced Elder J. S. Sears as the first speaker, stating that he had returned home with the remains of Elder Frankland. Elder Sears said in part: "My brothers and sisters, to stand before you at this time and bear to you the sad tidings of the death of our brother is indeed one of the hardest trials of my life. While I speak unto you I trust that I may enjoy the influence of the Holy Spirit, that I may say such things as will comfort the heart of the sorrowing wife and those who mourn. I first met Elder Frankland when he passed through Chattanooga for his mission field last April. He impressed me as being a noble character; one who was humble and obedient to the call made upon him. Always ready and willing to do that which he was called to do by those in authority, he gave his life for the cause he loved. Our Lord and Master said, 'Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.' Elder Frankland laid down his life for his friends; he died in the harness. He kept the covenants which he made with God, and so ambitious to do his duty was he that he would not give up his work of sacrifice and love until sickness made him unable to go any farther. Even while he lay near unto death he did not despair, but requested his noble companion, Elder Mecham, to write his dear wife at home that he would be preaching again ere many days had passed. He was faithful and his reward is sure. We may sorrow for him, but we must realize as Latter-day Saints that all is well with our brother.

"Everything possible was done to bring the body back in safety, that the sorrowing loved ones might once more gaze upon the face of he who had died truly one of God's noblemen. The poet has said, 'How long we live not years but actions tell, that men live twice who live the first life well.' Elder Frankland was but a young man, yet he lived this life well. May God bless and comfort the wife and may all who do mourn take comfort and be consoled by the words of our Savior: 'Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted.' The Holy Spirit will comfort and guide in such times of sorrow if we will but ask of God for aid. I feel to ask our heavenly Father to bear up our sister in this her hour of affliction and trial, and I do so in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen."

Elder W. H. Boyle was the next speaker. He said: "I was President of the South Alabama Conference at the time Elder Frankland first came into the mission field. I had known him before that time, however, having met him some five or six years ago when we both attended school together at Provo. I first heard of his sad death from reading of it in the 'News,' which greatly shocked me. I well remember when he first came to Alabama I met him and we talked over old times and old friends. I heard his first sermon. He was filled with the Holy Spirit and we had a time of rejoicing together. He remarked after the meeting of the good spirit which prevailed. He was an energetic Elder, and I often talked with him of the loved ones at home, and promised him that I would call on his wife when I returned. He was one of the most humble Elders in the Alabama Conference and was always found willing to do anything asked of him. He gave up his life for the Gospel and his reward is sure. He fought the good fight, he kept the faith and his reward awaits him on the other side. I hope we may all live as good a life as he did, that we may receive the reward which awaits Elder Frankland. I ask these favors in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen."

Elder Seymour B. Young then said, in part: "We have before us all that is mortal of Elder Frankland. I well remember when he was called to fill a mission, he stood ready to respond. He held his life sacred and he died the death of a soldier of God, battling for the truth. He was cut down in the bloom of his young manhood. The destroyer has taken his body, but his spirit has gone to God. My heart goes out to his wife and relatives and we should realize that God has an all-wise purpose in view. His wife, with the rest of us, must acknowledge that God does everything for the best. I know that our heavenly Father will comfort those who weep, and they will know that all is well with Elder Frankland."

Apostle Mathias F. Cowley then spoke as follows: I desire in saying a few words to be filled with the Holy Spirit. I know that such occasions are sorrowful, especially to those bereft. In listening to the excellent character of Elder Frankland as given by Elders Sears and Boyle, we know that he was a faithful Elder. I was not personally acquainted with him, but I know that his condition is one of glory. He has fought the good fight, he has kept the faith, and a crown is laid up for him. While we mourn his loss, if we could but penetrate with our eyes to the other side of the vale, we would see that his lot is a very happy one. He has laid down his life for the Gospel's sake. We cannot understand just why he or anyone else is taken to the other side. These things are beyond our understanding. When a man has lived his life and carried the Gospel to mankind, all is well with him. If we could understand all things as God understands, we would rejoice to behold the glorious position which our departed brother will occupy. He has only laid down his body for a short rest, and he has won the victory over death and hell. We have very little occasion to mourn for him, but we should weep for the living. We have not finished the fight yet; there is a possibility of us losing the faith and falling. When he had his companion write to his wife and tell her he would be preaching again in a few days he told the truth. The Gospel must be preached in the spirit world, and Elder Frankland has been called for that mission. My brothers and sisters, I rejoice in the record of such men, and can say this Elder will come forth in the first resurrection. He is one of those who have received God, and his blessings are great.

When the first trump is sounded he will be found standing with the faithful on the right hand of God. There will be no question about Elder Frankland's lot.

All is well with him. We should feel to honor such men. He has done a good work and been called to the other side. President Woodruff once said, "I do not feel to mourn for those who die in the faith. All is well with them. We should have joy in thinking of them." It is better that we die in the faith than that we have worldly wealth and honor, if by doing so we must lose one grain of the good. God expects us to do our duty at all times.

Elder Frankland was a wealthy man. I care not what worldly means he may have possessed. If he did not even have a house of his own or a foot of ground or a cent on earth, he was a wealthy man. His riches were not in worldly things, but treasures laid up in heaven. He died in the faith, and we are expected to do our duty at all times, that our reward may also be the crown of righteousness.

Sister Patten then sang "Beautiful City."

Apostle Brigham Young, in arising to speak, said he did not propose to occupy much time. We have heard the words of comfort which have already been spoken, and it should make us feel consoled. I knew Elder Frankland as a faithful, upright man in the community in which he dwelled. He has a glorious future opened before him, and has been called to do a great work. He has won a great fight. We should all feel it one of the happiest things to lay down our lives as he has done. He has died, as you might say, a martyr for the Gospel he loved so dear. Brother Frankland was a good neighbor. He was a good citizen, and he was a faithful man. While sitting here I was led to think that Elder Frankland was wanted on the other side to do a great work. He went into the mission field to better prepare himself for it. He has gone to labor with those who have died. We should look to ourselves. Are we prepared to face our God and account for the deeds done here on earth? These are important questions. We should prepare ourselves now. We know not when we may be called as was our brother. In closing, I wish to extend my sympathy to the bereaved. They should feel comforted in knowing that he fought a good fight and is now with the sanctified. With these few remarks I will close, praying the blessings of the Lord to rest down on us all. Amen.

Singing by the choir, after which prayer was offered by Elder John Nicholson. The following brethren acted as pall-bearers: W. H. Boyle, Joseph Christenson, T. A. Williams, N. G. Stringham, J. S. Sears, J. G. Midgley, G. B. Freeze, and F. M. Atkins. At the City Cemetery the grave was dedicated to the Lord by Apostle Mathias F. Cowley.

President Rich, not being able to attend the funeral services on account of deficiency in the operator's room, wired the following:

Rexburg, Ida., Sept. 19, 1900.
Elder J. S. Sears, Twelfth Ward Chapel, Salt Lake, Utah.

Message received just now announcing funeral today. Message sent yesterday and not received here until today. Please explain my sorrow in not being there. Will arrive Salt Lake in morning. Meet me. Ben E. Rich.

GLEANINGS.

Bowman, S. C.

As the letters of others have been a great help to me, I wish to say a few words in regard to the Latter-day Saints, that those who are earnestly seeking the truth may know that they are the true servants of God. The first Mormon Elders that I ever met were Elders Ray Mecham and N. C. Jensen. In April, 1899, they called at our house and informed us that they would preach at our school house that night. I went, not expecting to hear anything worth hearing, but to my surprise I heard the Gospel of Jesus Christ preached in its purity for the first time in my life. It went straight to my heart, and although opposed on every side, I was determined to investigate their doctrine. By reading the Bible and humble prayer I found that the Elders taught the same doctrine that was taught by Jesus and His Apostles while here on earth. I had been a member of the Baptist church for a number of years, had tried to live a Christian life, but felt that something was lacking. I was satisfied now that I had found the Church of Christ; still for a time I was very unhappy. I felt that I could not bear the persecution and the name of Mormon. But finally made up my mind to do what was right, let the consequence follow.

On the 23d of May, 1900, I was baptized by Elder Ray Mecham, and rejoice in saying the message delivered by these humble servants of God has carried me from darkness into the light. I am scorned by those that once loved me, but feel assured that strength will be given me to bear up under all circumstances, and know if I endure to the end I will be saved. Your sister in Christ,

Julia Bair.

Holmesville, Ga., Sept. 12, 1900.

Please allow me space in your paper to give my testimony concerning the truthfulness of the Gospel. I was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church three years. I was not contented. I would read the Bible and try to convince myself, but found it impossible. I could not see why they did not have a Church like the Church Christ established while He was here on earth with the people. I did not know there was such a Church as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints until two years ago last February. My sister met with two Elders at a neighbor's house, and when she came home she said she saw two Mormon Elders and she believed they were God's humble servants, traveling "without purse or scrip." In June, 1898, they held meetings in the school house. I did not go myself, but some of the family did, two of my nieces and my sister-in-law. My brother told her to bring the Elders home with her to preach for him. On June 12th they came to brother's and preached the precious Gospel of Jesus Christ, and I was able to realize they did. I felt like my heart was relieved of its burden, and I then began to read the literature. I read their tracts, Voice of Warning, Mr. Durant, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, which I believe is the revelations of a true Prophet of God. I also read Orson Pratt's work. It is a fine instructor. They are books which everybody should read and go by. After sister was baptized, then the persecutions commenced against the Mormons. I would tell them I loved the true and everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ that was taught by the Mormons. I would tell them to read their Bibles, and if they lack wisdom, ask it of God that giveth to all men and upbraideth not. It requires some courage to become a Latter-day Saint; they have to endure scorn from those whom they thought their best friends and associates; you are sure to lose some dear friend and loved one that is willing to lock arms with you and walk down that broad road that leads to destruction, but when you turn to go the narrow road that leads to life eternal, they will laugh at you. I have been a member of the Church of Latter-day Saints nearly twenty-one months. I was baptized by Elder Tobe Felkers, confirmed by Elder T. J. Chipman. I thank God for sending the Elders with the everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ. I can truly say that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God. I am not ashamed of the truth. I close, hoping this will not visit the waste basket, as it may do someone some good. Your sister in Christ. Dollie Kyle.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE WILLARD RICHARDS.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

Familiarly known as Dr. Richards, was one of the Twelve Apostles from April 14, 1840, to 1847, when he was chosen and sustained as Second Counselor to President Brigham Young, which position he occupied until his death in 1854. He was born at Hopkinston, Middlesex county, Massachusetts, June 24, 1804, and was the son of Joseph and Rhoda Richards—his progenitors being among the early settlers of New England. His parents were religious and early impressed their children with religious sentiments. At the age of 17 he offered himself for membership in the Congregational church, he having passed the ordeal of conversion. For some cause his application was disregarded, and this led him to scrutinize more thoroughly the tenets of their faith, and in fact those of modern "Christianity" as a whole. The result of his researches was a most profound and emphatic conviction that no sectarian church possessed more than mere fragments of Gospel truth, and were destitute of all authority to administer the ordinances of the Gospel.

APOSTLE WILLARD RICHARDS.

With this conviction came also the strong prophetic impression that the Lord would in the near future restore the Gospel and establish His church upon the earth by revelation. With such convictions from this time on Willard Richards held himself aloof from all sectarian churches. If anyone asked why, he freely told them his impressions and belief, regardless of the popular sentiment against such views.

He learned the Thompsonian system of medicine and was practicing his profession near the city of Boston when, in 1835, he providentially found at the home of his cousin, Lucy Parker, a copy of the Book of Mormon left there by his cousin, Elder Brigham Young. Before this he had never seen a publication nor an Elder of the Church. All he knew of the Mormons was from scurrilous newspaper reports which simply amounted to the statement: "That some boy named Smith out west had found a golden Bible." When Dr. Richards opened the Book of Mormon regardless of page or paragraph and knowing nothing of its claims, he had read but half a page when he exclaimed: "God or the devil has had a hand in that book, for man never wrote it." In about two weeks he read the book through twice, and arose from its perusal a witness of the promise that whosoever will read the Book of Mormon with a prayerful, honest heart shall receive a conviction of its truth. Thoroughly satisfied that the record was Divine, he at once commenced selling his stock of medicine and settling his business that he might repair to Kirtland, O., for a more complete investigation of the Church and its doctrines. When he determined to investigate the truth, he was stricken with palsy and suffered from this malady during the remainder of his life. On account of this sickness his journey to Kirtland was deferred until October, 1836. His brother, Dr. Levi Richards, went with him and attended him as physician. Upon their arrival in Kirtland they were most cordially received and cared for by their cousin, Brigham Young, and on Dec. 31, 1836, Elder Young baptized his cousin, Dr. Willard Richards. He at once cast his lot and all his interests with the Saints of God.

March 6, 1837, he was ordained an Elder by Alva Beeman, and in a few days was off on a mission to the New England states, from which he returned June 11. He was not to be idle nor to be occupied with worldly matters. God ordained Willard Richards to a higher purpose. The next day following his return from his first mission, he was blessed and set apart by the Prophet of the Lord, to go with Heber C. Kimball and assist in the introduction of the Gospel to the nations of Europe. Landing in Great Britain, they soon established the Church in Preston, when Elder Richards was assigned to Bedford and vicinity, where he labored with much success.

He returned to Preston, and was there ordained in conference, April 1, 1838, a High Priest. Upon the return of Apostles Kimball and Hyde to America, Bro. Richards was appointed First Counselor to Joseph Fielding in the Presidency of the British mission. While in England President Kimball baptized a lady named Jennietta Richards. The day of her baptism Elder Kimball prophesied to Bro. Richards, saying: "Willard, I baptized your wfe today." Wthout any effort to fulfill the prophecy, Elder Richards became attached to this noble lady and she was married to him Sept. 24, 1838. In 1839 he labored successfully in Manchester, Bolton, Preston and several other places. July 8, 1838, he was called by revelation to be one of the Twelve Apostles. To this holy office and caning he was ordained in England April 14, 1840, the first and only Apostle of this dispensation as yet ordained in a foreign land.

When the Millennial Star was established he labored as assistant editor to Parley P. Pratt, and performed other general duties incidental to the Presidency of the mission. From Preston he moved his family to Manchester in February, 1841, and April, the same year, returned with others of the Twelve to the body of the Church to Nauvoo, Ill., where they arrived Aug. 16, 1841.

Bro. Richards, agreeable to counsel, located for the time in Warsaw, a few miles from Nauvoo. This was a bitter anti-Mormon city, in which was conducted a scurrilous sheet known as the Warsaw Signal.

Oct. 30, Apostle Richards was elected a member of the Nauvoo city council and removed to Nauvoo in December, 1841. Dec. 13 he was appointed Recorder for the Temple, private secretary to Joseph the Prophet and general Church clerk. Each position he filled with marked ability and credit to the cause.

From this time forth until the martyrdom of the Prophet he was with Joseph, keeping his private journal and recording all important events in Church history. Just before the awful tragedy at Carthage he entered an important item in the Prophet's journal. When the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith occurred, Willard Richards, with Apostle John Taylor, were in prison with the Prophet and Patriarch as their bosom friends. When the assault was made upon the jail by the infuriated mobocrats, Elders Taylor and Richards stood at the door parrying off the intruding guns with their walking sticks. When Joseph fell from the window, and was being slain by his enemies, Apostle Richards rushed to the window in the face of the muskets on the outside and secured a glimpse of his dying friend and inspired leader. There he stood, with intent look, gazing upon the Holy Prophet of God until he felt assured that the noble spirit had taken its flight. He then carried the wounded body of his fellow-Apostle, John Taylor, into a room of the jail, and there remained until the mob had fled, panic-stricken, from the scene. Elder Richards escaped without so much as a "hole in his robe." President Taylor was seriously wounded with four balls. All the Twelve but these two were in the east.

Elder Taylor being wounded, this left the burden of responsibility to counsel and direct, for the time being, the Saints in their terrible troubles, upon Willard Richards. But God qualified him for the task, and his wise letters of advice and personal counsel to the Saints proved him to be a man of strength and inspired capacity. His letters of advice were timely and indicated under all these trials that he was possessed of great self-command and deliberate judgment. He passed through the trials of the exodus from Nauvoo, was with the Saints in that trying period, and when the pioneer company was made up in the spring of 1847, Willard Richards was among that honored number. During all these vicissitudes he was the Church historian and kept an accurate history of the passing events. He returned to winter quarters to assist in caring for and preparing the Saints for emigration. While at Winter Quarters he was chosen and sustained as Second Counselor to President Brigham Young in the Presidency of the Church. On his return to Salt Lake Valley he had charge of a large company of Saints who reached the valley in the fall of 1848. He was active in all matters respecting the growth and development of the Saints. In a civil capacity, he was secretary of the provisional state of Deseret. Subsequently he did most of the work of secretary of the territory of Utah and presided over the legislative council of Utah for a number of years. For several years he was postmaster of Salt Lake City, where he possessed the full confidence of the postmaster general in matters pertaining to postal affairs throughout the inter-moun tain territories. Relating to the gathering of the Saints, President Richards was a faithful worker in the P. E. Fund company, whose mission succeeded in the emigration of many thousands.

He was also the editor of the Deseret News, General Historian and Church Recorder. He was eminently fitted for these various responsibilities, for he was a gifted man, though modest and unassuming. His rare soundness of judgment and tenacious memory were very marked. The confidence of the Church in him was well expressed in the numerous offices and positions of responsibility which he held at the time of his decease. Whether in ecclesiastical or civil office, he honored his calling and served with credit to himself and all concerned. In the First Presidency he shed rays of light and consolation by wise counsel and kind encouragement administered to the Saints. His love for the Truth grew and increased by obedience to the laws of God as the years rolled by. He was a competent man, in several branches of education, and indeed was better qualified for the God-given responsibilities which he carried than he himself knew.

On great occasions his choice attainments, quickened by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, made him master of the situation. Tens of thousands loved Apostle Richards and from his inspired teachings and counsels drew comfort and consolation. He was reserved in his manner, calm and even-tempered, and a man of original and independent thought. From the time he commenced his investigation of the Book of Mormon until his decease, he suffered more or less from palsy. He died at his home in Salt Lake City March 11, 1854, leaving a large family, a numerous host of friends and the thousands of Latter-day Saints to feel the loss of his departure. He was beloved and esteemed by all who knew him and passed to the great beyond a witness for God with the full assurance of a glorious resurrection.

His Fire Was a Converter.

Brother James A. Smith, a local Elder, residing at Seneca, S. C., writes of an interesting incident which took place in Oconee county, South Carolina, some few months ago. There was a certain man living at Fort Madison who purchased some books from the Elders, and began to dilligently study the subject of Mormonism. He could find no fault with the books, but began to see that something was wrong with the different denominations, and that authority from God was not to be found in any of the Christian sects, so-called. Fearful lest the reading of the books would convert him, he decided to burn them, and dismiss the subject of Mormonism from his mind; so in accordance with a preconceived plan he prepared a large fire for the purpose of destroying the books. The fire was ablaze when he gathered the literature and cast it therein, saying, "Farewell to the Mormon doctrine." It was only a few moments before all that was left of the good books was a little pile of ashes.

Thinking all was over, the good brother went about his work, but there was a something attendant with him that seemed to say "You have done wrong," and he began to seriously reflect upon the foolishness of his act in burning the books, and to ask himself, Suppose they do contain the fullness of the everlasting Gospel, how can I appear before the throne of God in the great judgement day? What will the Lord require of me for burning those books? It seemed as though all the answer he could get to these inward interrogations was an impression that he should repent and be baptized, so he decided to follow the promptings of the good spirit, and immediately sent to Chattanooga for Elders to come and attend to this initiatory ordinance. Word was sent to President George A. Day, of the South Carolina Conference, of the man's request, and he assigned Elders R. E. Cleveland and James A. Smith (local Elders) to go and comply with the converted man's desire. These brethren went to Fort Madison and baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; thus we see that his fire was the means of accomplishing the necessary work of causing his conversion.

Mormon Murdered in Cold Blood.

Deseret Evening News, Sept. 24.

The News this morning received the following letter from Elder Joseph Hubbard, written from Charleston, W. Va., under date of the 17th inst.:

"A member of the Church has been shot down and murdered in cold blood. The victim is John Dempsey, of Eugene, W. Va. His slayer was Thomas Clark, a Campbellite preacher, who was his nearest neighbor.

"Dempsey was known as a peaceable citizen, and was widely respected. He was in every way trying to live the life of a true follower of Christ, and was in the strict discharge of duty when he met his fate. The school house had been ordered closed by the school board, and Dempsey was the man chosen to close it. The decision did not meet with the approval of Clark and, being filled with intense hatred toward the "Mormons" and toward Dempsey, in particular, he watched his chance from a hiding place by the roadside, and as Dempsey passed he poured the contents of a double-barreled shotgun into his body.

"Having accomplished the murderous deed, for which he had made premeditated preparations, Clark ran to his home, knelt down and prayed and then fled to the woods, where he has been in hiding ever since. The Dempsey family has the sympathy of the community, and efforts are being made to bring the murderer to justice.

"Clark's dislike for everything 'Mormon' has been most intense, and recently he was known to remark that if 'Mormon' Elders were treated as they should be, they would be ridden on rails out of the country. But it seems that he had in heart a still worse feeling—one that caused him to dip his hands in human blood. He is one of the ministers who has been persecuting the 'Mormon' Elders, and saying all manner of evil against them falsely. It is to be hoped that this alleged minister of the Gospel of Christ will be run down and caught, and that law and order will be permitted to take their proper course.

"Mr. Dempsey leaves a grief-stricken wife and five children, one of them being a babe but a week old at the time the murder was committed. He was on the way to get the doctor for his wife at the time he was shot, and only stopped at the school house for a moment to close the door."

RICH WITHOUT MONEY.

I ought not to allow any man, because he has broad lands, to feel that he is rich in my presence. I ought to make him feel that I can do without his riches, that I cannot be bought—neither by comfort, neither by pride—and, although I be utterly penniless, and receiving bread from him, that he is the poor man beside me.—Emerson.

The habit of measuring everything by the yardstick of wealth or fame has become so fixed with Americans as to be considered a national trait, and it is difficult for the majority of us to think of a man as successful who ignores wealth or feels that there is something worth struggling for of infinitely greater value than money.

We all admit that there should be something in a man's life greater than his occupation or achievement. But with most of us this is but a pleasant theory, for in the struggle for position, power or wealth, we fail to actualize it in daily life. And yet, no matter how we may lull our consciences, the great truth, that the supreme object of life, whatever his vocation, should be to raise the man to his highest power, to develop him along the line of his noblest nature, remains undisputed.

It is one thing to succeed in business according to the ordinary acceptation; it is another and a totally different thing to succeed in life. Many a man has failed in business and yet lived a truly successful life, because he has lived up to his highest ideal. The man who does the very best he can under all circumstances, who makes the most of his ability and opportunities, who helps his fellow-man whenever it is in his power to do so, who gives the best of himself to every occasion, who is loyal and true in his friendships, kindly, charitable, and magnanimous toward all, is a successful man, though he may not leave enough money to pay his funeral expenses.

A noble character cannot be developed under the shadow of a low, sordid aim. The ideal must be high; the purpose, strong, worthy and true; or the life will be a failure. The man who is constantly scheming and planning to get the better of his neighbor, to drive a bargain in which the advantage will all be on his side, can never attain the dignity and grandeur of true manhood.

He is really the richest, the most successful, who enriches his country the most, who gives himself with his money, who opens wider the door of opportunity to those about him, whose beneficence and kindness enrich his neighbors. Such a man makes every acre of ground in his community more valuable, and increases the wealth of every man who lives near him. On the other hand, many a millionaire impoverishes his whole neighborhood and lessens the value of every foot of land in his vicinity.

He who regards manhood and character as the supreme objects of life may not be rich in money, but he is rich in a truer and better sense; for manhood is above all riches and overtops all title, and character is greater than any career.

Refreshing as an oasis or a gushing fountain in a dreary desert, is the sight of a man in this money-mad age for whom the glitter of gold has no attraction. Such a one is John Burroughs, that great soul who lives near the heart of nature, who draws sweetness and strength from communion with her, whose daily life is rich beyond the wildest dream of the millionaire.

Mr. Burroughs believes that a man is a failure, even though he have millions, whose mind has been trained in mere shrewdness, in alertness to take advantage of his competitor's weakness, to get ahead of others, to be sharp, eagle-eyed for the weak place in a rival's armor. He sees no success in using as stepping-stones to elevation those unfortunates who have fallen behind in the race. He thinks that the only success worth striving for is that which comes from the consciousness of growing higher and broader and deeper in mental and moral power every day, from the daily expanding and unfolding of the faculties which permit the leaven of truth to permeate the whole being.

The great naturalist feels that many a man dwarfs his manhood, cramps his intellect, crushes his aspiration and blurs his finer sensibilities in some narrow occupation, because, perchance, there may be a fortune in it. He thinks that a hod-carrier may be infinitely superior to the millionaire under whose bricks he staggers; that it is a contemptible estimate of a vocation to look on it as a mere means of getting rich; that, if it does not develop the higher manhood and lead to a larger, nobler life, it is unworthy of the man.

This nature lover believes that the beauty and the sweetness of life are lost to the great majority of people who are infatuated with the glamour of money. He has so trained his eye by close observation of the processes of nature that it is a perpetual magnifying glass, revealing beauties invisible to the uncultivated eye. His simple life of high thinking, plain living and careful study, opens to him a thousand new avenues of enjoyment, undreamed of by those who are engaged in the pursuit of wealth.

Here is a man who sees beauty and true riches everywhere; who is not blinded by the glitter of gold; who "worships the splendor of God which he sees bursting through every chink and cranny."

Like Thoreau, Phillips Brooks, Agassiz and Beecher, he sees beauty in the flower, glory in the grass, "books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything."

In the quiet forest, beyond the reach of the city's din or any artificial noises except the distant screech of the locomotive, this high priest of nature holds daily heart-to-heart talks with the great goddess at whose shrine he reverently worships.—Success.

Greatness does not consist of much talking; doing counts.

"Do little things now; so shall big things come to thee, by and by, asking to be done."

"Don't let your heart grow cold, and you shall carry youth with you into the teens of your second century."

Live in the Kingdom of Hope.

Life is a struggle, a school, a test of fitness; no struggle, no school; no school, no fitness; no fitness, no future, either in this world or in any that may follow. If a man keeps steadily in view, no matter what discouragements, what hindrances may bar his way, the end he had in view in his creation, sooner or later his time will come To be prepared, to be honest, to be true,—this is to merit success; and, when really and truly merited, it is given.

Let no man despair because of the prejudiced frown of his neighbor. If he has within the witness of his own spirit, let him believe in himself and live. For, if he accepts the judgment of those who enter into competition with him, he is condemned already. They will damn him with faint praise, or, perchance, if more honest, give him the coup de grace at once and forever. No man of mark has ever yet accepted as final the judgment of other men regarding himself. Of some completed work of his he may, and often will, do well to heed the opinion of the world; but in himself he will keep his faith to the end, sure that somehow, somewhere, the brightest visions of his youth will yet come true. He must live in the Kingdom of Hope. The very air of that land is inspiring. All truly great men have breathed it. But if one attempts to follow their example, let him be sure of himself—this, first of all. Let him not accept the honeyed words of friends and relatives, who may possibly regard him as very near perfection already. No loyal wife or doting mother can be trusted here. We must know ourselves, as we are.—John R. Rogers, Governor of Washington, in Success.

Scatter seeds of sunshine; the world is better for a smile.

The Habit of Skimming.

A teacher in the highest grade of the grammar schools in New York tells us that 50 per cent. of the pupils who come to him from the lower grades do not end their sentences with periods, or begin them with capitals.

The papers of students taking the entrance examinations to even the best colleges of this country show incredible blunders in spelling, grammar and other elementary branches. The name Cyrus, for instance, was spelled in more than twenty different ways by students competing for entrance to Harvard college in one year.

"The manager of an immense business," says a writer in the Youth's Companion, "declares that it costs his house $25,000 a year to correct errors in invoices and other papers—mistakes due to poor writing and poor English."

If it costs so much to correct the avoidable blunders of one house, think what the aggregate cost of the blundering and bungling of the business establishments of the whole country must amount to!

The habit of skimming, of doing things in a careless, superficial manner, is one of the greatest stumbling-blocks to success, and it is a habit to which young Americans are especially prone. In the hurry to rush ahead and achieve in one year or two what it has taken others, perhaps with more ability and more power, years and years of patient toil and waiting to accomplish, they commit blunders and fall into errors which retard, and, perhaps, indefinitely postpone their advancement.—Success.

"All that you do, do with your might;
Things done by halves are never done right."

"Character must stand behind and back up everything—the sermon, the poem, the picture, the play. None of them is worth a straw without it."

THE DEAD.

Miss Mary E. Hill, of Springvale, Hamblin county, Tenn., departed this life July 8th, 1900. She was born on Feb. 19th, 1858, and was baptized Oct. 23d, 1895, by Elders J. R. Halliday and R. R. Judd, and lived a faithful Latter-day Saint. She leaves an aged father and mother to mourn her loss.

An Interesting Letter.

Water Valley, Miss., June 25, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich.

Dear Brother—Allow me a small space in your valuable paper in which to bear my testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as taught by the Elders of the Latter-day Saints.

I had been thirsting after righteousness for some time. I was not satisfied with the doctrine taught by the so-called ministers of Christianity of this land. My wants were never satisfied until I heard Elders Bigelow and Kempton. I know the Gospel they taught emanated from God, and was the path marked out by our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I realized they were ordained of Jesus Christ to officiate in the ordinance of the Gospel. Therefore I freely accepted their message, and on Dec. 18th. 1898, I, like the people on the day of Pentecost, entered the water of baptism that my sins might be washed away; that I might walk in the newness of life.

Since that day I have had a contented mind. I have seen the power of God manifested many times. I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and hope my testimony may be strengthened, that I may grow in grace and remain faithful to the end. Your brother in the Gospel. A. J. Wrenn.

PRE-EXISTENCE.

Sir Henry Drummond, speaking on Biogenesis, says: "For two hundred years the scientific world has been rent with discussions upon the origin of life. Two great schools have defended exactly opposite views—one that matter can spontaneously generate life, the other that life can only come from pre-existing life." The advocates of the former doctrine, that life can be generated spontaneously, have been forced to abandon their views, for it has been proven by demonstration and test that life is not capable of springing into being of itself: it must have an antecedent.

While science has awakened the world to a realization of these facts, revelation has not been silent, but her voice is also heard declaring in corroborative language the selfsame assertions as those discovered by scientific research; indeed we may go farther, and show that while philosophic giants were wrestling with this subject of the origin of life, the word of God—the Holy Bible—laid bare the facts in the case, and to these Biblical statements, science has been forced to bow in acquiescence.

The beauty and worth of truth is that it never changes, and that sooner or later it will win the day. Now here was a grand truth, plainly declared by God to His ancient servants, the Prophets, and within the reach and study of all for hundreds of years. It was not accepted by the world for a long season; on the contrary it was vigorously opposed on every hand, and the limited few who dared to even intimate of its possibility were accounted fanatics, and branded as fools, knaves, and impostors. Bye and bye the field of scientific knowledge began to deepen, widen, and broaden. Liberty and freedom to express opinions were granted, and the intellectual mind of man began to solve some very startling problems. Among the many solutions of what seemed heretofore insolvable, came the proof and demonstration of the doctrine called in science—Biogenesis; that is, that life can only come from the touch of life.

Experiments have proven the doctrine of Biogenesis to be a scientific fact, on this wise; glass vessels were three parts filled with infusions of hay or any organic matter. They were then boiled to kill all germs of life, and hermetically sealed to exclude the outer air, with a precaution to insure absolute sterility, suggested by the most recent science discovered by Professor Tyndall. The experiment was manipulated in an atmosphere which under the high test of optical purity—the most delicate known test—was absolutely germless. Here not a vestige of life appeared—the matter in the germless air never yielding life. Now if this be true in the lower and simpler forms of life, is it not also self-evident that such will be verily true in the higher and more complex forms? Yes, it is true of all life; whether it be generated in the one-celled Amoeba, or in the multiplicity of cells which constitute the human organism.

These experiments have virtually solved the problem, and practically closed the question, so far as the surface is concerned; that which can be traced by the aid of the microscope, or dissected by the application of the scalpel, has brought about this one acceptable, logical conclusion, that life can only come from the touch of life. Professor Tyndall rather reluctantly, but truthfully asserts: "I affirm thtat no shred of trustworthy experimental testimony exists to prove that life in our day has ever appeared independently of antecedent life," and the learned Thomas Huxley states in very positive terms that the doctrine of Biogenesis, or life only from life, is "victorious along the whole line of the present day." Now while science deals with the grosser matter, revelation gives us a testimony of the finer: that which is beyond the ken of mortal man, the spirit.

We have said, heretofore, that the Holy Bible, that wonderful "Book of Books," gave evidence upon its sacred pages, of the great truths which science has recently discovered. Let us proceed to the facts. Ecclesiastes, the wise man, sayeth, "There is no new thing under the sun," and science affirms that all things have had a pre-existence in some state or other. Newton did not make the law of gravitation, he simply discovered its existence and power; as also Benjamin Franklin with his kite exploits discovered that electricity was but a discharge of lightning. Science does not create or make anything, she simply explores the realms, unites the varied discoveries made, and brings to pass the wonderful results which puzzle the mind of man to comprehend. Now it is a self-evident fact that that which is constructed by man can also be controlled by man. That which the mortal has power to bring into existence, and to cause to live, he can also destroy and cause to die.

When our Father placed our first parents, Adam and Eve, in the Garden of Eden, they were immortal souls, not subject unto the pangs of death. The law of God unto them was, "Of every tree in the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." From this it is plain that they were immortal, or why the penalty of death to follow as an infliction for the violation of the law, if they were not immortal? They fell, and became mortal, subject unto death with all its woes and misery, and their offspring as a natural consequence became mortal also. Cain, the first murderer, rose up and slew his brother, when the Lord said, "What hast thou done? The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." The bodies of those two sons—Cain and Abel—came into existence by virtue of the conjugal relationship of their parents—Adam and Eve—therefore man had power to destroy these bodies, seeing they were the workmanship of mortal man. But there was a something connected with that body that Cain did not kill, for God said, 'The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me," etc. Then this "voice" came from a higher source, inasmuch as it was beyond the power of man to destroy it. Man may slay his fellow-man, or destroy his own body by self-murder, but he cannot kill the spirit; herein we perceive the truthfulness of that Scripture which sayeth, "There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain the spirit," (Eccles. 8:8) and why, because the spirit is the "offspring of God," and is many years older than the mortal tabernacle. He who gave that spirit has power to destroy it, and He alone. Jesus said, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both body and soul in hell." (Matt. 10:28.)

That which science cannot handle it cannot prove by demonstration: that which is beyond the bounds of its compass, the scientist designates as mysterious, undefinable, incomprehensible. The spirit of man cannot be bared to the scalpel, or mounted for the lens, hence it is beyond the conception of the scientist, and science must therefore remain silent, while revelation speaks and makes known the facts as regards its present and pre-existent state. To the Prophet Jeremiah the Lord said, "Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee; and I ordained thee a Prophet unto the nations." (Jer. 1:5.) Let science learn her lesson concerning the spirit at the shrine of revelation. The Lord knew Jeremiah before his immortal spirit was incased in a mortal body. Knew his faithfulness, his fidelity, his valor, and worth, and ordained him a "Prophet unto the nations." Jeremiah then had an existence before his mortal probation, for God said, "I knew thee." The patient Job was also made the recipient of divine communication, for unto him the Lord said, "Gird up now thy lions like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou me. Where was thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare if thou hast understanding. * * * * When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" (Job 38:3, 7.) Job evidently had an existence, or why would the Lord say, "Where wast thou?" What need was there for this interrogation if his primal existence, both body and spirit, commenced with his inception into mortality? None whatever! It would be a foolish and absurd question, and God has told us to "avoid foolish questions," (II Tim. 2:23), and surely He would not condemn them, and at the same time indulge therein Himself. No, we cannot believe this, but we do believe that Job was there with his Father when the "foundations of the earth were laid," for we read that "all the sons of God shouted for joy." Not a few, but all, says the good word.

John the Revelator, and called also "the beloved Apostle of the Lamb," in vision upon the Lord's day, tells us that "There was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon: and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven." (Rev. 12:7, 8.) Here we have an account of a war which took place in heaven; that the dragon and his angels were overcome and cast out from the presence of God. The Apostle Jude speaks of the same occasion and says, "The angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, He hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto judgment of the great day." (Jude 6), and Peter had reference to that war in heaven when he wrote, "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell." (II Peter, 2:4.) Then the angels who kept not their first estate were cast out. This is evident, but the question now is: What happened to those who did keep their first estate, who fought for righteousness under the banner of Michael, when the proud, haughty, Lucifer and his rebellious hosts were overthrown? John informs us that this dragon drew with him a "third part of the stars of heaven," (Rev. 12:4), and we would inquire as to the residue, what became of them? From the very matter of fact that a first estate is mentioned, the rational mind is led to believe that a second estate would be granted unto the faithful ones, as a reward and a blessing for their honor of God, and Michael and his archangel, insomuch as they stood firm and true when the struggle for supremacy took place. To keep the first estate meant to be given an opportunity of living in a second estate, where if the laws of God are obeyed, the faithful son or daughter was to have glory added upon them and raised to life everlasting at the last day.

We have seen that there were "sons of God," who "shouted for joy" when the earth was formed, and these were they who had kept their first estate. They shouted for joy, because they were given to understand that this earth was made as a mortal home for them, and that they were to come down from the home of their first estate—heaven—and take upon them a body of flesh and bones. Is it a great sin for us to believe that we were there and that we kept our first estate—not only those whom the world calls Mormons, but all people that have ever dwelt, or ever will dwell, as mortal creatures upon this earth? No, it is not a sin to thus believe, but an acceptance of a truth made known in Holy Writ. Our spirits existed, as intelligent and independent entities, before the birth or conception of this mortal framework—the body. We could "shout for joy," could see, and know the plan of salvation, and understand the will of God; with the privilege (not right) of being in the front ranks of the righteous ones, or swelling the band of slothful, neglectful children.

We see two little children, perhaps the offspring of a common parent. Both possess healthy bodies, well formed, and perfect in their anatomy. They play together, eat at the same table, and occupy the same little cot at night; yet one of these little tots is bright, keen-eyed, quick-witted and intelligent; while the other is dull and does not seem to observe the beauty of nature, rather stupid, you would say, and lacking the mental activity and comprehension of its little mate! What is the cause of this apparent difference, the effects of which are plainly manifest in everyday life? It is this, that the spirit which animates the body of that bright little child, attained to an advanced degree of intellectual progression in its first estate; while the spirit of its mate was not so energetic, dutiful, or valiant. Thus, as they were there, so are they, in a measure, here, and as they are here, so will they be, as justice determines, when they leave this stage of mortal probation. The intellectual giants of the land come not about by chance, their mental energy is born in them, and by proper application and cultivation, it increases, develops and matures.

Again we observe that there are people born with black skins, others with yellow, red, and coppered colors, while some have beautiful white complexions. Now God says, through His servant, Paul, that "He hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." (Acts 17:26.) From this we learn that even the places of birth and the time of incipiency hath been determined, and before appointed; this to being governed by our lives heretofore, the ruling being in strict accordance with the holy laws of justice. Thus we see that the degree of intelligence, type of feature, color of skin, time of birth, and even the land of our nativity, had been pre-determined before the earth was made, yea, even in our pre-existent life, while in our first estate. The question propounded to Jesus by His apostles, "Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" (John 9:2) is a fitting conclusion to this subject. From this it is plainly seen that it was possible for that blind man to have sinned even before his mortal birth, which most assuredly gives him a pre-existent state, in which he acted with a free agency, was intelligent, independent and real. So are we all; our spirits came from God who is our Father; with Him they lived in a primeval state, our first estate, as Jude says, and to His presence they will return when freed from this mortal tabernacle.

"What's sprung from earth dissolves to earth again,
And heaven-born things fly to their native seat."

ELDER WM. T. DAVIS.

In the "Release" column of last week's Star will be found the name of Elder W. T. Davis, who for some nine months past has labored in the Office here. Elder Davis spent over twenty-seven months in the Mission field, and during that time has passed through a varied experience, laboring for the most part amid the pleasant hills of East Kentucky. He was ever ready to perform with diligence and promptness any and every labor required at his hands. No matter how busy he may have been, and how pressed on every hand with work to do, he wore a pleasant smile, and worked with a cheerful heart. He was a joy to all who really knew him, a comfort to those who required help, and a friend to those who stood in need.

Previous to coming into the Office he acted as first counsellor to President D. A. Broadbent, and for some time the affairs of the East Kentucky Conference devolved upon him, and he proved himself equal to the task. While here in the Office he acted as typewriter for the Mission, and was never "found wanting" in this capacity. He leaves a host of friends in the South, and we would cite our many readers, and his acquaintances, to the letter he wrote just before his departure, as will be found in this issue. He left on Wednesday, Sept. 26th, in company with Elder F. N. Bleak, of the Florida Conference.

A Brave Little Eight-Year-Old.

New York Evening Journal.

Maria Santello, 8 years old, with the utmost bravery and coolness, prevented a frightful disaster to the Chicago express on the Lehigh Valley railroad last Saturday.

The heroic, frail child saved the passengers on the express by throwing a tie from its track. Her cool courage saved her own life, too, for she stopped between the ties over a narrow, shallow brook. But she grasped the rail, not the ties, and the locomotive wheels cut off her hands. She was quickly taken from the brook by two men.

As she lay fainting, wounded, dripping, Engineer Thurston, of the express, told the passengers how much they owed to her. They could not pay that, but Wm. S. Stewart, of Cleveland, took off his hat, dropped a ten-dollar bill in it, and passed around the hat. Miss Stella J. Sutton, of Oswego, gave a five-dollar gold piece; the grateful passengers contributed $65, while the women kissed Maria and the men patted her head and told her what a fine girl she was.

A surgeon amputated her right hand and all the fingers on her left hand. She will recover, a cripple.

SALVATION FOR THE LIVING AND THE DEAD.

Liberality of the "Mormon" Faith—A Discourse by Charles W. Penrose, Delivered in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday Afternoon, August 19, 1900.

That is the Gospel of Jesus Christ as revealed to the Latter-day Saints. That is the Gospel in which we delight. Salvation! Oh, the joyful sound! We do not wish to condemn; we do not wish to injure; we do not wish to curse; we do not wish to revile our enemies. We are glad in the thought that even those who revile us, and persecute us, and say all manner of evil against us falsely for Christ's sake, will some day or other understand the truth as it is; and we hope, as instruments in the hands of God, that we will peradventure be chosen to help them out of darkness, out of despair and punishment, when they have paid their dues, because the authority that God has revealed continues and abides. It seals on earth and it is sealed in heaven. It does not depart the body. The men whom God has called in this generation to labor in His cause, when they die and lay their bodies down, like their Great Master will go into the spirit world, where there are myriads of people who need enlightenment—"Christians," pagans heathens, all races, all tribes, all tongues. The work of the servants of God is to them in the spirit as well as to men in the flesh. They are to preach the Gospel to every creature, and the sound thereof will go to the uttermost bounds of the spiritual world as well as to the natural world; and every immortal spirit, son or daughter of the great Eternal Father, will have an opportunity to bow the knee and accept the truth.

Different Degrees of Glory.

But they will not all be saved in the same degree of glory. That would be unjust. God is just as well as merciful. His mercy balances with His justice, and His justice with His mercy. One will not rob the other. There are eternal principles from which even He cannot swerve and still be God. God must govern Himself by the eternal principles of right. This He teaches to His children, and so far as we conform to that, so far will be our power, our glory, our joy and our exaltation in worlds to come. The Gospel is preached to men and women in the flesh; and if they repent, and are baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, by one having divine authority, and receive the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands as a gift of God to enlighten their minds and guide them into all truth, and they abide in it and are really baptized into Christ, then when Christ appears in His glory they will be with Him, and be numbered as His jewels. They will be "Christ's at His coming." They will have part in the first resurrection. They will be clothed with glory, immortality and eternal life. They will dwell in the presence of the Father and of the Son forever. They will be crowned with the power of His might. Those who belong to them, if also faithful, will share this glory with them—the husband with the wife, the parents with the children. The beginning of their glory will be the foundation of their family government, under their Eternal Father, for ever and ever; and their increase in numbers, in power, in might, in dominion, in intelligence, in everlasting progress, in all that is good and beautiful and happifying, will have no end. This is in the celestial glory—the glory that is typified by the sun. Then there are others who receive not the Gospel of Christ in the flesh, but afterwards receive it in the spirit; they will receive a terrestrial glory, typified by the moon. There will be millions of heathen nations, who knew not God on the earth, but who will receive the truth in the other world, and they will inherit a glory of the kind that I have briefly alluded to. Then there is a vast number, which cannot be counted by mortal man, who will be thrust down to punishment. Justice will claim its own. Some will be beaten by a few stripes, and some by many stripes. Some will be forgiven in the next world for sins that they did not repent of in this world, and others may have to pay "the uttermost farthing." Eternal justice will deal out to every soul that which should be his; for all shall be judged according to their works. But through the power of the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ, when they are willing to accept it and conform to the principles of eternal life, they will be brought out of their punishment and sorrow, and they will be placed in a degree of glory suited to their capacity and condition. That glory is called the glory of the stars; and as one star differs from another star in glory, so also will be their several conditions.

Eternal justice and eternal mercy will each operate in every individual case, and a just and righteous judge will deal out that which belongs to all. He will not judge as men do, by the sight of the eye and the hearing of the ear; but He will judge according to justice and righteousness and according to the motives and intents of the hearts of the children of men. Men strive to do right sometimes and fail. God will judge them accordingly. There are people born with certain tendencies and proclivities; there are others who have environments around them which almost impel them to do that which is evil. God will comprehend all this, and judge accordingly. He will deal out to every man as his works shall be, and according to the desires of his heart and his efforts to do good or to do evil. He who wilfully does evil will reap evil. There is an eternal law of compensation which God cannot turn aside and be God. Every tree will bring forth of its own fruit. Every seed will bear of its kind. "He that sows to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that sows to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life eternal."

Liberality of the Gospel.

This, I think, is a very liberal Gospel. But we do not claim credit for it, my friends. This was not invented by the Boy Prophet, Joseph Smith, who was proclaimed an ignoramous, a fool, an idiot, a knave. No, he did not invent this beautiful doctrine that I have been briefly proclaiming this afternoon. It was revealed from on high. It came by the voice of God from the eternal heavens. It is too good for a man to originate. It is Godlike; it is Christlike; it is broad, beautiful and grand. It reaches the whole of the human race, from Adam, our father, down to the last person born on this globe. The heathen the "Christian," the Jew, the pagen, the Mohamedan, the infidel, the skeptic, the agnostic, all people, all races, all tongues, all tribes—all shall hear the Gospel. Every ear shall tingle with the sound thereof. Some may say, how can an ear tingle in the spirit? My friends, perhaps you do not know much about these things that are called spiritual. The spirit of man is an entity, a personality, a substance. It is not a mere myth, a breath. True, it is a more refined substance than that which composes our body, so much so that we cannot comprehend it in our present condition. But when the spirit goes out of the body it is an individual, in the shape and form of the body, because the body is conformed to the spirit. Sometimes the spirit is temporarily conformed to the body in deformed persons; but these are exceptional cases. The spirit of man is a son of God, made in His image and likeness. Jesus was the express likeness of the Father, and we are His brothers and sisters. He is the oldest, "the beginning of the creation of God," "the first born of every creature," in the spirit, and "the only begotten" in the flesh. When the spirit leaves the body, there is an individual, capable of progress, capable of hearing, capable of receiving or rejecting, an individual with agency, with power to do good and power to do evil. And these spirits will be gathered together in classes. Each spirit when it leaves the body, will gravitate to its proper place, just as naturally as things gravitate on this globe toward the center thereof. It will be so in the spiritual world; for earthly things are after the pattern of heavenly things. Thus each individual will have an opportunity at some time of hearing and receiving the truth. And, thank God, we have the assurance that the time will come when the great mass of the human family will cheerfully bow the knee to the Great Eternal Father and accept Jesus Christ, the Elder Brother, as their Redeemer. They will receive the Gospel in the spirit, if they did not in the flesh; and then they will be judged according to their works. The Father will find a place for them all, somewhere in His great universe, where they can be happy, where they can fill the measure of their creation, where they can progress forever, learn more and more, become better, brighter and more glorious, and unite with Him in His great and glorious purposes concerning His children.

This is the Gospel of Christ as we understand it. Now contrast that, my dear friends, for a moment, with the religion that is commonly taught in the Christian world by people who say we are illiberal. What do they tell us? "If you do not believe in Jesus Christ while you dwell in the flesh, when you die you will go to hell." What is hell? "It is a place of burning torment, where you will welter in misery so great that no tongue can tell it, forever and forever, and there will be no end to it." And some of them will tell you that God, before the foundations of the earth, in the very beginning, chose a few out of the rubbish of nature to be saved and exalted to His divine glory, and the rest were doomed to everlasting condemnation and ceaseless misery in flames and torment with the devil and his angels. Which is the more liberal doctrine of the two?

"Everlasting Punishment."

But what about this "everlasting punishment?" Does not the Bible teach everlasting punishment? Yes. If I had time I would read something from Section 19 of this Book of Doctrine and Covenants in regard to that; but I will briefly allude to it. The Lord revealed to Joseph Smith that "eternal punishment is God's punishment," because God is eternal. The meaning of that is this: An eternal Being, having eternal laws, has also eternal penalties; and those who will not obey the laws must suffer the penalties. The penalty will abide forever, because it is eternal; but a man will not suffer it forever. Each individual will receive of that punishment that which eternal justice will mark out as his due. To illustrate it in a simple way: Here we have a penitentiary. Some men go in there for six months and when their time expires they come out; but the penitentiary still remains. So with the judgments of our Eternal Father. He is endless, eternal; His laws are eternal. His punishment is eternal. But He is just, and He will give to all who disobey His laws just that meed of eternal punishment which they ought to have, but no more. They will be judged "according to their works." If they are worthy of but few stripes, they will not have many; if they are worthy of many, they will not get off with a few. If they ought to pay "the uttermost farthing" without being forgiven, they will have to pay it. If there are circumstances in their case which warrant forgiveness after a certain amount of punishment, the Lord will forgive them and deliver them.

Work in the Spirit World.

The organization of His Church is for the proclamation of the Gospel, not only in the flesh, but also in the spirit. The Church on earth is united with the Church behind the veil. The Prophet Joseph Smith, who was martyred for the word of God and testimony of Jesus and who sealed his testimony with his blood, and his brother Hyrum, opened the door of salvation to the spirit world for the last dispensation, as Christ opened it for the time that He went there. Our Apostles, Elders and brethren who have followed, who have laid down their lives for the truth, who have been worn out in the service of God and in laboring for the salvation of mankind, are also laboring there among the hosts that sit in darkness. We who still remain in the flesh expect, when our earthly work is done, to follow on; and the priesthood which the Almighty has given us wherewith to labor for the uplifting and salvation of mankind in the flesh, will be our authority and power when we pass behind the veil and mingle with the spirits of the departed. The Gospel will be preached to every creature, whether in the body or out of the body, "the quick and the dead." Christ preached the Gospel to those that were dead as well as to the quick, and we expect to follow in his footsteps, according to His promise, "He that believeth in me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do, because I go to the Father."

My friends, I have only just touched on the outer rim of this great theme of salvation. Our Heavenly Father prepared the plan of salvation before this earth rolled into being, before the cornerstones thereof were laid, "when the morning stars sang together and all the son of God shouted for joy," and when Jesus, our Elder Brother, "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," was prepared for the sacrifice to come in the meridian of time. And Lucifer, who was cast down with his hosts, and who leads men astray, will not gain the victory He will not triumph over the Redeemer. Christ will 'destroy death, and him that hath the power of death, which is the devil;" and as I have read to you, He will redeem all that the Father hath placed in His power—all His brothers and sisters. They in the spirit will be brought out of darkness and punishment, and they will all reach some condition in the places prepared of God. In the many mansions that there are in the Father's kingdom they will all find a place, after they have paid the penalty, where they can bow the knee to the Lord and be happy; for though "Adam fell that men might be, and men are that they may have joy." God has created us to give us happiness and pleasure.

Cherish No Evil Feeling.

My brethren and sisters, let us take care that having received the Gospel, we are led by the spirit thereof and are kind to one another, and that we cherish the spirit of kindness to the world, even to those who may persecute us, and deride us, and say all manner of evil against us falsely. Do not cherish the spirit of retaliation and revenge in your hearts. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." It is not for us to take vengeance. Let us entertain the kindest feelings we can. Where it is appropriate, let us say as Jesus did, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." Oh! I wish that I could say that with regard to some of those who speak evil of us—that they know not what they do; I would cherish in my heart a feeling of sympathy and pity for them; but I know to the contrary. Many of them know what they are doing; and when they speak falsely against us they do it wilfully, with a knowledge that they are telling that which is untrue. But even then we leave them in the hands of our Eternal Father; for He will deal out a righteous judgment to all. We can afford to pity them; for they will reap the consequences of their wicked acts, as sure as the sun rises and sets, and as sure as justice will have its own. Let us be kind to one another. Let us help one another on the road of life, and be a comfort and a blessing to those with whom we associate, instead of a curse. Put away all our evil feelings, our jealousies, our faultfinding, our irritability, our disposition to say and do things that are bad, and let the Spirit that comes from Christ our Redeemer flow down into our souls and quicken and enlighten us. I know that that Spirit is in the Church. I know it is a reality. I know this Church is the Church of Christ, that He has established it, that He is with it, and that His revelations and His Spirit are in it. I know it by experience. I know what I am talking about, just as sure as I know that I am standing here. I know this work will prosper and go on. Barriers may be raised in its way; its enemies may come against it like a flood, and weapons may be formed to attack it; but "no weapon that is formed against it shall prosper, and the tongue that rises in judgment against it God will condemn." The truth will be triumphant; the Gospel will be preached to every creature; the honest will be gathered out; the kingdom of our God will be built up; Christ our Redeemer will come; the earth will be redeemed from sorrow, from sin, and from the power of Satan, and Jesus will "reign in Mount Zion and Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously," and a rich reward shall come to all those who are faithful in Him.

May God help us to perform our part in this great and glorious work, and may we obtain the crown in the kingdom of our Father, for Christ's sake. Amen.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Written by Elder W. T. Davis to Good Friends in Kentucky.

My Dear Friends—While it has been a long time since I have written you, do not for a moment believe it has been so long since I have remembered you. Seldom does a day pass without bringing to mind the many and much appreciated hospitalities you have shown me. No, I cannot forget those who minister to my wants and befriend me in times of tribulation. I often wonder if I shall ever be privileged to repay you for the kindness shown me. "A friend in need is a friend indeed," said one of the poets, and it is verily true. Those who will befriend another when the world generally is in bitter opposition is truly a friend and can be depended on.

In your letter to me, of some months ago, you said that you did not see why the people could not bear the sight of the Mormons. It is strange indeed, because none of them have seen or know from actual experience the truth regarding the Latter-day Saints and their belief, mode of living, etc. Solomon has rightly said that whosoever judgeth a matter before he heareth it is not wise. Were all people to be condemned on the testimonies of their accusers, how long would it be until there would be neither law or order? The time would be very limited when all the human family would be condemned to death. Those who are so narrow-minded as to believe every vile thing they hear of an individual and will not listen to anything good are in the hands of Satan and are filled with that spirit which rebels against truth and right.

John, the Revelator, was shown, in vision, the war in heaven which the Devil and his followers waged against the Lord and His obedient children. From that date to the present there has existed the same opposition. The spirit of hatred, malice, wrath, strife, murder, etc., is throughout the world. Those who cherish such feelings and hold them against their brethren are in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity. They must repent and cherish the spirit of love, long-suffering, peace and good will, or they will never be able to dwell with God and the Saints who have gone before. "He that loveth not knoweth not God," says the Scriptures. Jesus, our pattern in all things, has told us to love our enemies, to pray for those who despitefully use us and abuse us, and return good for evil. Forgive those who do anything against you seventy times seven. Yes, we are commanded to forgive everybody, but God will forgive whom He will. Such are a few of the teachings of Christ, and who dare say they are His obedient children and hold malice, hatred and murder in their hearts?

Of course we are commanded to judge no man, yet we may know them by their fruits—actions. "A pure fountain cannot send forth impure water." We know the feeling existing in the hearts of the people regarding this work, but like the Apostles of old we know of the Gospel and cannot keep silent. The Gospel has been revealed in its purity; we have received it freely and it must be delivered to the whole world without price. The Gospel is to all mankind, whether rich or poor, bond or free, Jew or Gentile. We all stand ready to defend the truth we bring. We declare in words of soberness, "The Gospel is true," and it is with the Latter-day Saints pure and simple. Who will disprove the declaration? For the past seventy years Mormonism has gone through the most scrutinizing examinations, everybody has gazed upon its doctrines, the ministers have tried to tear it down by strong reasoning and Scripture, but what a miserable failure they have met. It is true, and the false traditions of nations, no matter how much cherished, cannot pull it down.

Not wishing to cast any reflection on the religions of the world, but just to examine them and compare them with the Bible—their rule of faith and practice—to show how far from the Word of God they have departed. Jesus came into mortality 1900 years ago and gave the children of men certain laws and ordinances which they were to follow, promising the obedient blessings. Paul tells us that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are faith, repentance, baptism and the laying on of hands. (Heb. vi.:1-2.) The New Testament is replete with proofs of the above, hence we will pass on. Jesus gave us gifts and blessings; the speaking in tongues, prophesying, healings, casting out of devils and many others, all to be with the Saints. Wherever the Gospel was in its purity there would the blessings be also. He also placed Apostles, Prophets, etc., in the church for its perfection and that the church might be edified. Jesus said, "If ye are not one ye are not mine." Solomon said, "Where there is no vision the people perish." Amos has told us that the Lord God would do nothing save He revealeth His secrets to His servants—the prophets. Paul exhorts the Corinthians to desire spiritual gifts, but rather, or above them all, desire to prophesy.

Ask the ministers if they believe in prophets today, and the answer will be, No. Do you believe in the gifts and blessings enjoyed by the early Christians? They answer in the negative. Ask them why their churches have not the foundation laid down by Jesus, which is Apostles and Prophets. They were to remain until we all come to a unity of the faith. Why not have them? Do they believe in revelation? The answer comes that the heavens have been closed for 1900 years, yet Amos says that the Lord will do nothing unless He reveals His secrets to His servants—the Prophets. Well, then, without revelation and prophets God will do nothing for His children. What can we do without Him? Here is my conclusion of Christianity: They have the letter and the Scriptures say "the letter killeth." They possess all that poor mortal man can reach, but what is that? To me modern Christianity is to the living spiritual gospel of Jesus what the body of man is when the spirit has taken its flight—inanimate. The form is there, but nothing more. No, the vital, vivified portions are lost. It is dead, hence its effects can be nothing but death.

Brother, probably I have spoken too rashly, but these are my views and, according to the freedom of this age, you have a perfect right to disagree. I do not say this to offend you; no, it is not my intention to wound any of your feelings. I know that the Christians, most of them, try to do right, but they cannot gain salvation only by obedience to the truth. Now, then, search for it, fast and pray for it, do not rest until you are in possession of it. God will reveal it to all honest seekers.

My testimony to you and to all the world is that God has again spoken from the heavens, His Gospel has been delivered to man, the Mormon Elders, hated as they are, hold the power and authority to preach, teach and baptize in the name of Jesus Christ and to confer the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. Everyone who will obey their teaching will know that I speak the truth and I declare the same before God and angels. Search, fast, pray and ask in faith to know whether my letter is the truth or not and whether the Mormons are truly the messengers of Christ.

May God's holy blessings ever be poured out upon you for your good deeds, and may you see the light of the Gospel and embrace it. In the end, God grant you eternal life in His presence. These, with all other blessings of earth that are for your good, I pray God to give you.

Your true friend and well wisher,

William T. Davis.

History of the Southern States Mission.

Sept. 1899—This month found more or less sickness among the Elders. The yellow fever was raging in the lower states adjoining the Mississippi river, and some of the Elders were quarantined. Elder S. F. Smith, John W. Berry and P. E. Johnson were reported very sick in Mississippi—the two former ones being transferred to the Chattanooga Conference.

Elders J. H. Horr and D. D. Jones were disturbed while holding meeting in a Christian church in Carroll county, Mississippi. After services were dismissed this professed servant of God shamefully abused the Elders.

Having investigated to some extent the mobbing in Jasper county, Georgia, the following letter, which is self-explanatory, was addressed to Gov. Chandler:

To His Excellency, Gov. Allan P. Chandler:

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 8, 1899.

My Dear Sir:—Pursuant to my conversation with you relative to the mobbing of some of our Elders in your state, I now present my finding in the Jasper county case. Shortly after my talk with you we sent a man to the scene of trouble to look over the situation. He spent some time in Jasper county, and now reports that, in his opinion, no chance whatever to receive justice from the local officials. It is reported to us that even the sheriff of the county is in league with the mobocrats, and we do not believe a grand jury made up of citizens of Jasper county, would return an indictment, no matter how strong the evidence might be. We are forced to this conclusion because we are informed that it is almost common knowledge as to who the guilty parties are, indicating that the local officers are either sympathizers or men who are afraid to do their duty. We see no way for these lawbreakers to be reached, save the state take the matter in hand.

Enclosed please find some letters which I have lately received, one from Mrs. Cunard, and two from Mr. Bryant. You can see from Mrs. Cunard's letter who the mobbers are and the reign of terror existing in that community. Mr. Bryant is confident that he can produce the guilty parties and furnish enough evidence to convict, if the parties were taken to Macon, Ga., for trial. With these facts it seems to us that the state should take vigorous steps to punish these outlaws, who openly commit crimes, and then mock the courts of justice. We appeal to you not to let these people, who are a standing menace to law and order, go unpunished.

With highest personal regards, I remain, yours most respectfully,

Ben. E. Rich.

On the 29th Elders E. T. Lofgreen and J. A. Handcock were run out of Lancaster county, South Carolina, by a mob of about fifteen armed men, led by a postmaster, Frank Osborn, of Flat Creek By the Elders agreeing to leave no violence was done. Elders Sylvester Low, Jr., and W. J. Fife held a three days' debate at Pireway, S. C., with a Rev. Hygema, a free Gospel advocate. The debate resulted in much good to the cause These same Elders were also arrested and taken before a magistrate on the charge of insulting one Gaston Stanley, a Baptist minister. The minister had said while denouncing Mormonism, "The Mormons believe Joe was a Christ." After services the Elders called the gentleman's attention to the error, and asked him to rectify it or allow them the privilege. The minister promptly ordered the deacon to put the Elders out of the church. The brethren said they did not desire to create any contention, and after shaking hands with the preacher they quietly left the place. Next morning at the instigation of Deacon Thos. Stanley, they were arrested and brought before the magistrate. They were released by paying part of the costs.

Elders Thos. Hall and Bryan W. Peck, while holding meeting in Sulphur Springs, Lincoln county, Tenn., had eggs and rocks thrown at them and their meeting disturbed. The eggs were ancient and strong with age, which made the Elders' clothes very odious.

Beginning on Sept. 24th, a four days' debate was held at Poplar Springs, Stewart county, Tenn., between Elder W. B. Poole and Rev. Matthews, a Campbellite preacher of Windy, Ky. Subject for discussion, "Which is the Church of Jesus Christ in practice and doctrine?" As usual, the minister resorted to abuse and slander and the debate resulted in a victory for Elder Poole and the Gospel. On the night of the 27th Elders Thos. Halls and Bryan W. Peck were disturbed in their meeting by a large rock being thrown against the door of the school house. This occurred at Cyruston, Lincoln county, Tenn. On the night of the 28th, while these brethren were preparing to hold meeting a Dr. Hulbert, of Cyruston rode up to the place of meeting and informed the Elders that a drunken mob was being organized to do them harm. This kind friend took the brethren to his home for the night, leaving the deserted school house to the cursings of angry demons.

There was some persecution in almost every part of the Mission. The crusade against Congressman B. H. Roberts aroused much prejudice in many sections, which caused us much trouble. In the larger cities the work is opening up well, and being pushed with vigor.

On the 25th the following Elders arrived at Chattanooga for missionary work: Edward Duffin, St. George Morris, Willis Rogers, W. L. Rich, Jr., Geo. L. Bennet, John Henry Chase, David B. Thorn, Charles Dewitt Priday, Herbert Z. Lund, Alvin Warner, Z. M. Redd, and E. E. Morgan.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE ERASTUS SNOW.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

The subject of this sketch was born at St. Johnsbury, Caledonian county, Vermont, Nov. 9, 1818. He was the sixth son of Levi and Lucinda Snow. On his father's side he was a descendant of the early settlers of Massachusetts. His mother was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist church and Erastus became early impressed with religion. In the spring of 1832 Orson Pratt and Luke S. Johnson introduced the Gospel to the Snow family, all of whom received it except the father and two sons. William and Zerbabel were the first baptized and Erastus, then but 15 years old, was baptized Feb. 3, 1833, by his elder brother William. He was ordained a teacher June 18, 1834, by Elder John F. Boynton. His brother William ordained him a Priest.

In this capacity he extended his missionary labors into New York and New Hampshire, where he held meetings and baptized a number of honest souls.

He was ordained an Elder Aug. 16, 1835, and continued with much zeal in his missionary work. Nov. 8, 1835, he left his home for Kirtland by water, being almost shipwrecked en route, but reached his destination in safety Dec. 3. He met the Prophet for the first time and lived with him several weeks. In the winter he attended the Elder's school and in the spring received his endowments in the Kirtland Temple, together with nearly 200 other Elders.

APOSTLE ERASTUS SNOW.

About this time he was ordained into the second quorum of Seventies and received his Patriarchal blessings under the hands of Joseph Smith, Sr. Thus in youth he became a witness that God had renewed His choice spiritual blessings upon men in the flesh. He soon left on a mission to Pennsylvania, April 16, 1836. He was gone eight months, traveled 1,600 miles, preached 220 times, baptized fifty persons, and organized several branches of the Church in western Pennsylvania, returning to Kirtland Dec. 29, 1836.

Brother Snow was almost incessantly engaged in missionary labor. He traveled in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. On one occasion six ministers assailed him on the Book of Mormon. He proposed to produce as much proof for the Book of Mormon as they could for the Bible, but none of the six would accept the proposition, and in order to present the truth to the people he accepted of other terms and came off victorious. At one gathering he debated twelve hours with his opponent.

In May, 1838, he received a message to return to Ohio for the purpose of removing to Missouri.

June 25th, 1838, Elder Snow started with about fifty others for Far West, Mo. After nearly a month's journey by water down the Ohio 950 miles, up the Missouri 550 to the Richmond landing, and forty miles by team, they arrived in Far West July 18, 1838.

Dec. 13, 1838, he married and during the winter taught school in Far West. With others Brother Snow visited the Prophet Joseph in Liberty jail. In an attempt of the prisoners to escape, the visiting brethren were locked in the jail, and placed under arrest. Threats of a violent character were made upon their lives, but the Prophet Joseph told them not to be alarmed; that the Lord would deliver them and restore to them their horses, saddles, blankets and all that had been taken from them. When they were brought to trial, Elder Snow, by advice of the Prophet, plead their own cause without the aid of a lawyer, and was so inspired in his address that at the conclusion of the same, the attorneys flocked around him and wanted to know where he studied law, stating they had never listened to a better plea.

During the effort to secure the liberty of Joseph and his brethren, Erastus Snow took a leading part. He visited the state authorities at Jefferson City, Mo. They treated him contemptuously, but by faith and perseverance he finally succeeded in procuring a change of venue and on the way from Liberty, the prisoners escaped the guard and made their way to Illinois.

In the spring of 1837 Elder Snow commenced to build a home in Nauvoo, but soon after rented a small dwelling in Montrose, Iowa, and started on a mission. He preached in several counties of Illinois, administered to the sick, and while journeying on this mission the Lord revealed to him in a dream that his family were sick, and that he should return home. On his return he found his wife and other relatives very sick with the fever and ague. Elder Snow, with others, went from house to house administering to the sick until he was seized himself with the fever.

In October, 1839, Brother Snow became a member of the High Council at Montrose. He endeavored to be active in the ministry during these days of sickness among the Saints and by over-exertion was prostrated again and in Knox county, seventy miles from home, was laid up at the house of Brother Haws. At the same time his family were very sick at home. On the return of the Prophet from Washington in 1840 he told Brother Snow that his labors were needed in Pennsylvania.

Through much sickness he was reduced to poverty, but by the kindness of Saints in Commerce he secured some means and left on his mission April 27, 1840, with Elder S. James as a companion. They traveled by water on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers a distance of 1,400 miles to Wellsburgh, Va., where they commenced their labors. He debated two days with Matthew Clapp, a Campbellite preacher, with victory to the truth. They proceeded to Philadelphia and during this mission, Elder Snow did successful missionary work in Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey and Rhode Island, baptizing a goodly number and holding a great many meetings. He returned in six months to bring his wife to Pennsylvania, having traveled 5,650 miles. He started on his return Nov. 7 and soon after his arrival in Pennsylvania he published a tract in answer to a publication issued against the Saints by a Methodist preacher.

While laboring with great zeal in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, he met Elder Geo. A. Smith on his return from England, also Hyrum Smith and others who visited the New England states. Elder Hyrum Smith expressed a desire that Brother Snow should go to Salem, Mass., and introduce the Gospel to the inhabitants of that city. Previous to this, the Lord had revealed to the Prophet Joseph that he had much people in that city. Brother Snow had expected to return to Nauvoo. Protracted sickness in his family and continued absence from home had reduced him to poverty. Notwithstanding this, he started for a strange and unknown region. He took his wife and child to his brother's home in Rhode Island and continued his journey to Boston, where he met Elder Benj. Winchester, who had been assigned as his traveling companion.

On Sept. 3, 1841, they proceeded to Salem, a city of 1,800 people at that time. They secured lodging at one of the cheapest hotels and the next day hired the Masonic hall to preach in. They then wrote an epistle to the people of Salem, setting forth the principles of the Gospel in plainness, and circulated about 2,500 copies of them among the people. Elder Winchester then repaired to Pennsylvania, while Brother Snow labored in Salem, preaching four times a week in the Masonic hall. The congregations contributed to pay the hall rent. Opposition soon began, and friends also were raised up who took an interest in the message delivered to them. His friends became numerous and he was no longer required to live at a hotel. He also asked the Lord to provide a home for his family, and this prayer was soon answered, for a Mr. Alley, of Lynn, five miles from Salem, invited him to bring his family to his home and there abide. Subsequently they removed to Salem. The opposition to Brother Snow was led by a priestly editor who published in his paper scurrilous falsehoods against the Saints, but refused to publish Elder Snow's replies. This led to a six days' public debate held in Masonic hall. About 500 people were present, and as the days went on, the interest increased. The popular feeling turned against the editor, whose arguments were made up of slander and abuse. Many more friends were made, new investigators came to the front and on Nov. 8, 1841, five persons were baptized and soon after thirty more. On March 5, 1842, he held a conference in the Masonic hall and organized a branch of fifty-three souls. By the following June another conference had been held in Salem and the number of members increased to ninety. In Salem, May 1, 1842, his first son was born. Elder Snow continued his labors in Salem and vicinity until the spring of 1843. During this time he baptized many, the sick were healed, branches organized and many meetings held. He had several discussions with ministers of various sects, always resulting in a victory for the truth as represented by Elder Snow. Among his opponents the notorious apostate, John C. Bennett, came to Salem and lectured against Joseph Smith, and the Saints, telling base falsehoods. Elder Snow met him so ably and firmly that Bennett soon left the town. Concluding his fruitful mission, Elder Snow left Salem Aug. 9 and reached Nauvoo April 11, 1843, leaving his family in Salem.

He returned to Salem in May, labored several months in the mission field, and brought his family to Nauvoo in November, 1843.

Elder Snow remained in Nauvoo during the winter. He was intimately associated with the Prophet Joseph Smith, with whom he spent many pleasant hours. He was successful in the mercantile business with Elder Parly P. Pratt. He became a member of the Masonic lodge at Nauvoo and soon advanced to the degree of Grand Master. At the dedication of the Masonic Temple April 5, 1844, Elder Snow delivered the dedicatory address. At the April conference in Nauvoo, 1844, Elder Snow was again called to the eastern states, where he labored diligently.

He returned to Nauvoo, finding the Saints bowed down in sorrow over the sad martyrdom of their beloved Prophet and Patriarch. He shared in all their sorrows, and was a support to the Twelve in encouraging and sustaining the people in their great affliction. He was present at the special meeting Aug. 8th, when the Twelve, with President Young as their senior, was acknowledged to be the presiding authority in the Church in the absence of the First President. Brother Snow was a living witness to the transfiguration of President Young and felt, with the Saints present, that truly the mantle of Joseph Smith had fallen upon Brigham Young. Elder Snow spent the winter in Nauvoo, being diligent in his calling and laboring with his hands to provide for his family.

In September, 1845, the mob renewed with vigor their persecution. Elder Snow was present at the general council of the Church in October, '45, where Gen. Warren, Judge Douglass and other representatives of Gov. Ford were present to negotiate with the Saints to leave the state. This they agreed to do the following spring. The state authorities guaranteed their protection until they could arrange their affairs and leave. This pledge, like the one to protect the Prophet, was never kept, for the mob before the time for all to leave, were suffered to do them violence and destroy their property. The Saints now intensified their diligence in completing the Temple. This accomplished, they set to work administering the ordinances therein.

Before the exodus Elder Snow sent to Quincy to prepare supplies for the pioneer company. Upon retiring he was asked by President Young to prepare himself and family for the journey. He accordingly sold his personal property at a low figure, provided himself with teams and provisions such as his limited means would allow, and with his family left Nauvoo Feb. 16th, 1846. Crossing the river the boat capsized, resulting in the loss of some of his property and the narrow escape of his eldest child from drowning.

His family pressed on to Mt. Pisgah. On his arrival he found it difficult to sell his property and had to dispose of it at about one-fourth its value. From here they proceeded until they reached the main body of Saints at Council Bluffs, and thence crossed the river to the Camp of the Twelve at Cutler's Park. Subsequent to this he had much sickness. His youngest child died Sept. 9th, 1846. In the winter he made several trips to St. Joseph, Mo., and other points to lay in supplies for his family and others, to sustain them in their pilgrimage.

At a special conference April 6th and 7th, 1847, Elder Snow was selected as one of the noted 143, who constituted the Pioneer Company to Salt Lake Valley.

The interesting episodes of this great Latter-day exodus, in which Erastus Snow was a leading spirit, would fill a volume of itself.

Their patience and endurance in sickness, privations and dangers from Indians was truly that of men and women whose trust was in the living God. After three months' journey Erastus Snow, with Orson Pratt, emerged from the canyon overlooking the Salt Lake valley, July 21st, 1847. When they first sighted the blue waters of the Great Inland Sea, Brother Snow says: "We simultaneously swung our hats and shouted, Hosannah! for the Spirit told us that here the Saints should find rest."

Brother Snow took an active part in laying out the city and building the Old Fort. He started on a return trip Aug. 26th, 1847, to bring on his family. On his arrival at Winter Quarters his joy was mingled with grief over the death of a sweet little daughter, Mary Minerva, who had died during his absence. Finding the Saints very destitute at Winter Quarters, having been robbed of their homes in Illinois, Elder Snow was appointed to accompany Apostle Ezra T. Benson to the branches of the Church in the Eastern States and solicit aid from the Saints and others to alleviate the wants of their suffering brethren and sisters.

Some received them kindly, while most of those not in the faith turned the cold shoulder to them. They were absent about three months. Upon their return all was activity, in preparing to cross the plains with their families and a large company of the Saints. He reached the valley with Presidents Young, Kimball and his family Sept. 20th, 1848. The following Feb. 12th, 1849, Erastus Snow was called and ordained one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church. It is not unsafe to say that no man called to the Apostleship in this dispensation had been a more constant and efficient laborer in the cause from the time he was 15 years of age up to the date of his ordination than Erastus Snow. Following his ordination he worked in the ministry and labored with his hands incessantly to build up the country and strengthen the Saints to endure their trials.

At the October conference, 1849, Elder Snow was appointed to open the door of the Gospel in Scandinavia. He left on his mission Oct. 19, 1849. They had an interesting journey across the plains, thence to the Atlantic coast, and across the ocean from Boston to Liverpool.

where he landed April 16, 1850. He visited the branches in England, Scotland and Wales. Accompanied by Elders George P. Dykes and John E. Forsgren, he set foot in Copenhagen, Denmark, on the 14th of June, 1850. Brother P. O. Hansen, a native of that city, who had embraced the Gospel in America, conducted them to a hotel. Here they knelt in solemn prayer and dedicated themselves and their mission to the Lord. The details of Elder Snow's labors in Scandinavia, the manifestations of God's power, his mastery by study and inspiration of the Danish language, and all associated with his remarkable mission would make many chapters of themselves, and present to the honest incidents as remarkable and impressive as those attending the ancient Apostles in introducing to the world the pure plan of salvation. The first baptisms in Denmark were performed by Elder Snow, near Copenhagen, Aug. 12, 1850. Fifteen were baptized on that occasion. The first branch was organized Sept. 15,1850, with fifty members, in Copenhagen. While on this mission Elder Snow wrote a pamphlet in Danish, called "A Voice of Truth." Others were translated into Danish, and a most effectual door opened in Scandinavia. Scores were baptized, many branches organized. From that day until the present the fruits of the Gospel have been enjoyed in the Scandanavian countries. Thousands have embraced the Gospel and emigrated to Zion. They are among the most faithful Saints of the Church, the most honorable citizens of the country, and best redeemers of a barren country.

Erastus Snow was beloved by all the Saints, but he is especially endeared to the Saints and their children who have come from the far off Scandinavian countries of the north. To them his name is almost the synonym of love and admiration. He was gone on this mission nearly three years. He arrived in Salt Lake City Aug. 20, 1852. The following year, October, 1843, Elder Snow, with Elder George A. Smith, was called to gather fifty families to strengthen the settlements in Iron county, which they did successfully. In 1854 he was called to preside over the Church in St. Louis and the Western States. Nov. 4, 1854, he organized a Stake in St. Louis, and soon commenced the publication of the St. Louis Luminary. He assisted in the emigration of 2,000 Saints in 1855, and returned home Sept. 1 of that year. Between April 22 and Aug., 1856, he filled another mission to the States, and later filled another in the East. Subsequent to this he was called with Apostle George A. Smith to locate other settlements in Southern Utah. The Missionary company left Salt Lake City Nov. 29, 1861, and ever since that time Brother Snow has made his home chiefly in Southern Utah. The great pioneer, the wise counselor, the constant worker, his labors as a pioneer and colonizer have also extended into Arizona, Mexico and other places, and wherever he has gone, either to preach the Gospel or counsel the Saints in practical matters, Erastus Snow has left the impress of a wise leader and a great man. For God has made him such. Brother Snow repeatedly represented Southern Utah in the Council of the Utah Legislature for many years. In 1873 he went on a short mission to Europe, visiting England and Scandinavia. Since that time he was constantly at work among the Saints at home, traveling throughout the Stakes in Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Arizona, Canada and Mexico. He has probably done more pioneer work than any other Apostle in the Church. He was a true patriotic American, and yet during the anti-Mormon crusade he was an exile from home. He might with consistency ask as the Savior did, "Many good things have I done unto you, and for which of these do ye persecute me?"

Brother Snow was an active participant in all moves looking to the material development of the country, and the employment of the Saints. He was interested in the education of the youth, and a staunch supporter of the Church and public schools. He instilled into his sons and daughters by example and precept the habits of industry, temperance and economy. He was kindhearted and benevolent. He was a man of fine appeaarance, strong in build. Like all great men, he had his peculiarities. He was a deep thinker, and at times so swallowed in profound thought that he took but little notice of things around him. Sometimes when asked a question he would not answer it until the next day or perhaps later still. Some would think that he did not hear the question, but he seldom failed to answer it at some future time. An amusing incident is told of him by one who was present. It was Saturday afternoon. He sat with his wife and others in a room of his house in St. George. While the others were conversing he was intently looking at the floor and tapping his cane on the heel of his shoe. His wife spoke to him and said: "Brother Snow, will you preach at Washington tomorrow?" He made no answer, and did not appear to notice the question. The interrogation was not repeated and conversation went on as before. The next morning as the family arose from their knees in prayer, Brother Snow quietly said: "Yes, Minerva, that is my intention." At first they were a little dazed, but suddenly it dawned upon them as the answer to Sister Snow's question propounded the day before.

After a most remarkable and useful life, fraught with great events, and crowned with blessings not a few, Apostle Erastus Snow departed this life at his home in Salt Lake City May 27, 1888, a little under the age of three-score years and ten. He had said before: "I never want to outlive my usefulness," and when through hardship and exposure his body gave way to the blows of adversity, the Lord took him to a field where he could continue his labors in the cause of truth. He was an honest man, a true husband and a kind father, a wise counselor, an efficient pioneer and colonizer, a great statesman and in every sense of the word truly an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ. His name and his works will live forever in the generations of the Saints who loved and respected him as their friend and counselor. God bless his memory.

TO MAKE MEN FREE.

To make men free has been the dream
Of every noble soul on earth—
To bring a better time to birth;
To see the future's hills agleam
With the first holy light
Of a new era bright,
From which the human night
Of ages speeds away,
Its sable folds withdrawn
Before the golden dawn,
Where earth goes rolling on
Into the grander day.

To make men free from court and throne,
Free from the money-changer's greed,
Free from hypocrisy and creed,
Free from the dreaded last of need,
And free to reap where they have sown
Free from earth's scourge, the conqueror,
Free from the murderous lust of war,
Free from the robber's cry of more;
And free to have their own.

Free voluntarily to share
Their blessings for the common good;
Free to each other's burdens bear,
In brotherhood and helpfulness,
Free in security to live
And seek the blessing of content;
Free in the freedom love can give—
The freedom of enlightenment!

To make men free! It is with me
The dearest purpose of my heart
That I may know and do my part
To help the cause of liberty;
My energy and life to be
Made consecrate to the one theme,
The single purpose and the dream,
In every land, to make men free—
To make men free.

A MINISTER'S HARANGUE.

BY ELDER JOHN T. HORNE.

On the 22d of July last, in a church situated near the junction of Boyle, Casey and Marion counties, Rev. Thomas Hall, an eminent preacher of the Baptist creed, made himself quite conspicuous by delivering a lecture "For Men Only." The object of his discourse was "to expose the evils of Mormonism," and was of such a character that the fair sex and all boys under 16 years of age were debarred the privilege of attending it. This harangue of abuse proved to be nothing more than a rehearsal of the old fabulous stories which have been written and reiterated by a jealous clergy until worn threadbare; coupled with a late construction of falsehoods, purporting to expose various crimes perpetrated by the Latter-day Saints during the efforts of B. H. Roberts to obtain his seat in congress. To prove the veracity of his statements, Brother Hall frequently read and quoted from the writings of a Methodist minister. This history (?) has been written since the expulsion of Mr. Roberts, and because of the recent date of its publication, our reverend brother says "its authenticity is unimpeachable." He forgets, I suppose, that religious bigotry and prejudice is waxing worse instead of abating as the tide of time ushers the world nearer its final destiny. Paul graphically depicts the deplorable condition into which the human family were to drift in the last days, and as we are living in that important time, it might be well to quote his prediction. In writing to Timothy, he says, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. (II Tim. 3:1-6.) The people of this age are certainly an enlightened race, but notwithstanding their intelligence, many leaders of modern Christendom are gifted with fully as much envy and jealousy as has been the case in any epoch of the world's history. There were four of our Elders present when Dr. Hall gave his lecture. At the close of the services we requested the privilege of using the church to repudiate the false assertions which had been made, and vindicate the cause we believe is of such infinite importance. Our request was not granted, however, but through the liberality of some fair-minded persons, we obtained the use of a nice, large grove, and upon the following Sunday presented our side of the question to a large and very attentive audience. After the services we sang with vim the soul-inspiring song, "Utah and the Mormons," which was very appropriate for the occasion, and well received by those present.

Brother Hall's was another fruitless attempt to injure the Mormon cause. "Truth is mighty and will prevail," and by means of this lecture we were permitted to present the Gospel plan to many who probably would not have heard it otherwise.

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Recently we received a tract published by the Pastors' Association of Salisbury, N. C., upon the front leaf of which, in glaring block type was inscribed these words, "Dangers of Mormonism; or Why We Should Not Join the Mormons." If our readers will be indulgent and bear with us, we will, by the help of God, proceed to explode some of the facts (?) contained therein, and ventilate its foul pages with a pure, wholesome air of truth, which is foreign and unknown upon this slanderous sheet. If we speak plain, and to the point, it is because we desire to firmly assert the truth of the matter, and defend boldly that cause which is everywhere spoken against. We will not wreathe our thoughts into a pretty bouquet of nice sounding terms or cull from rhetoric a garland to garnish and embellish the same; but simply state the truth in outspoken, plain, simple language, that all who chance to read may know and understand.

First, this tract is written by professed ministers of the word of salvation, men who pose as "Truth Reflectors," whose mission is to call sinners to repentance, expound the Word of the living God, and earnestly exhort all to render obedience to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Coming from such an enlightened (not inspired) source, we shall expect to find in their affirmations the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. These ministers launch forth with this assertion: "Mormonism originated in fraud and impos ture;" but they do not cover eight lines before they stick in the mud of falsehood, and dabble with untruths, in which falla cious mire they sink deeper and deeper, as they bedaub the history of our people. After making the above declaration they proceed to say that the Mormon Church was organized with six members, "under the direction of the younger Joseph Smith, who claimed to be a prophet, and the discoverer of the Book of Mormon." Joseph Smith did not claim to be a "discoverer" of the Book of Mormon, as the divine (?) gentlemen accuse him. Again, here is another falsehood: "Smith claimed that an angel had directed him to dig on the summit of the hill Camora (we suppose they mean Cumorah), and that he would find a volume, which had been buried there for upwards of fourteen hundred years." Joseph Smith never made any such claims; he proclaimed that this volume was delivered unto him by the angel Moroni; that neither "digging" nor "discovering" were necessary to bring about the same. Such palpable errors as this are enough to sicken the honest in heart, and cause the intelligent and sound-minded to nauseate. Those solemn, sanctimonious prelates know, or had ought to know, better than this, or else keep silent until they learn. These stories about Joseph Smith discovering or digging up a "Golden Bible" are as fabulous as Robinson Crusoe, Sinbad the Sailor, and the like. It was revealed to him, delivered by an angel, given into his care and keeping by a heavenly messenger, until it was translated into English, when it was returned to its proper custodian—the an gel. Gentlemen, confine yourself to the truth, and give due credit to the claims of this young man, as he himself affirms them, and as his advocates bear testimony. Take his claims, and fight these, if you are so anxious to antagonize and oppose, but do not construct from your own silly imagery a dummy, call it "Mormonism," and then stand off and pelt it with mud.

These gentlemen tell a very funny story about Joseph's encounter with the devil, and how his Satanic majesty kicked the boy four feet in the air. We suppose they consider it very humorous; so do we; but strange to say, they admit that he succeeded in triumphing over the evil one, which none of his servants are able to do, for how shall a man be greater than his master? Perhaps the adversary has no need to "kick" about the way that those good pastors are conducting affairs. They rehash the Solomon Spaulding story, distorted, discolored, but the same old romance, as a proof for the origin of the Book of Mormon. Gentlemen, did you ever read that book? If so, you could never accredit its composition to a crack brained, crank preacher; and again, the original manuscript of the Solomon Spaulding story can be found in Oberlin College, Ohio, with President Fairchild's attested signature, that there is no semblance or similarity between the two. You say, "The very men who aided in copying and publishing the Mormon Bible a few years afterward solemnly swore that their former affidavits concerning the genuineness of the book were false." Not so! David Whitmer, just previous to his death (he was one of the three witnesses of the Book of Mormon) wrote this brief but significant statement: "My testimony in the Book of Mormon is truth." Oliver Cowdery for some years ceased to be affiliated with the church, owing to transgression, but finally renewed his covenants, and was faithful until death. Martin Harris bore witness to the end of his days that he saw the angel and the plates. In the face of these facts, what can you say to excuse your falsity? These men fell, but never denied their testimony. Gentlemen, when ye think ye stand take heed lest ye fall.

Again it is stated, "Joseph Smith, who was illiterate but shrewd, and Sydney Rigdon * * * were the joint compilers of the Book of Mormon, using Sprague's (we suppose they mean Spaulding's) Lost Manuscript as the ground work of the compilation." Let us see, Sydney Rigdon's name is nowhere mentioned in the Book of Mormon, and he was not an aid in its compilation. The Church had been organized, and missionaries sent forth; the Book of Mormon had been published, and was in the hands of the missionaries, when Elder Parley P. Pratt visited Sydney Rigdon at Kirtland, Ohio. (Remember, that Joseph Smith was in New York). At this time Sydney Rigdon had never seen Joseph Smith, and never before heard the proclamation of "Mormonism." Parley P. Pratt presented him with a copy of the Book of Mormon, which aided in his conversion, and yet our pious brethren in Salisbury, N. C., indulge in that oft-repeated falsehood that the Book of Mormon was the combined production of Joseph Smith and Sydney Rigdon. You say that "Their neighbors were always willing to accord to them the privilege of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own consciences." If this be true, why is it that they have been driven from state to state, and finally from the confines of the United States? How is it that over 80 per cent. of the mobs organized to antagonize and abuse this people, have been instigated or led by some professed preacher of righteousness? It cannot be refuted, for we have the proofs at our elbow.

You say, "The Book of Mormon pretends to be a history of the ten lost tribes of Israel." It makes no such pretension, but is a history of the descendants of a family who were of the tribe of Joseph. If you will read Chap. 29 of II. Nephi, Book of Mormon, you will find that the "lost tribes of Israel are mentioned," and that a record of these tribes will at some future time be revealed, but the Book of Mormon is not that record, and does not purport to be. Now, what do you say to that? Where have you been getting your fund of information? You must have placed yourself in the clutches of error, and she has woven out these "yarns" for you; we see no other alternative. Will you admit that you are so weakly made as to be driven by such false devices, and not strong enough to confess your fault, and make reparation? Need we go far then than this? Is it not evident that these pastors are wilful prevaricators, or the ignorant dupes of falsehood and misrepresentation? They appeal to the people very coaxingly and say, "You have near you learned, blameless, devout ministers of half a dozen or more reputable churches of Jesus Christ. These ministers and churches you know. Why for sake their counsel?" This is very pretty, and quite self-righteous, for pastors to call themselves "learned, devout, blameless ministers." Why not tell the people as James the Apostle, or a Mormon Elder, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." (James 1:5). Yes, today preachers are learned, more learning than brains, more learning than love, more learning than the Spirit of God. Many churches (half a dozen or more in Salisbury), many faiths, a heaven beyond the bounds of time and space, a God without "body, parts or passions," whose center is everywhere, and whose circumference is nowhere—a monstrous nonentity, a great big NOTHING.

They give as their mode of rendering judgment, "The rule of testimony is that if the witness is false in one declaration he must be regarded as false in every one." Now, gentlemen, to be judged by your own rule, measured by your own yard-stick, is it necessary to continue further, since we have proven your statements false, in more than one or two declarations, and you say: "If the witness is false in one declaration, he must be regarded as false in every one." It is your own rule, your own line of measurement, and not ours, therefore you cannot dodge the judgment. Be just and fair! Tell the good people of Salisbury that you have been misinformed, that your assertions were erroneous, and that you have misstated the faith of the Latter-day Saints, and misrepresented the Mormon people. There is a day coming when Justice will claim His own, and every man be judged according to his works. We await the coming of the judgment day, with joy and gladness in our hearts, for we know in whom we have believed and trusted. He is a God who says, "I will never leave thee, I will never forsake thee." You say that your "historical statements have been gathered from such authentic sources as the Encyclopedia Brittanica, The American Review and some reliable tracts published by religious bodies." We agree that it must have been "gathered from," yea, a long ways "from," but never coming in contact with "authentic sources." A solemn warning, a word spoken in due season, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name onf Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the Gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2:38).

On another page will be found a few things relative to the life and mission of Joseph Smith, Jr., written by one who knew him, associated with him, and labored for him. Read it, ye who would pelt your unsavory epithets at his fair name. Ye accept the testimony of eleven interested witnesses who bear record of Christ, and yet reject the words of those who knew the Prophet Joseph Smith in life, and who testify that he was a man of God. Be generous, as was the Master. There are thousands of living witnesses who stand ready to declare before high heaven that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Most High God.

BORN OF WATER.

A religious journal, an exchange, says:

"Born of water cannot signify water baptism. Because baptism is a burial ("Buried with him in baptism."—Rom. 6:4), and not a birth."

If "born of water" does not mean baptism, what does it mean? When one comes forth from the watery tomb, having been immersed therein, do they not gasp the breath of life just the same as the infant born into the world? Our friends tell us that "born of the water" means to be born of His word, begotten by His everlasting truth! Why spiritualize away the first, and accept the second in its literal sense? Jesus said, "Born of the water and of the Spirit;" you accept the latter as meaning just what it says, but the former you change and alter, saying it means "born of the word." Oh, consistency and reason, where art thou? Logic and judgment, where is thy dwelling place? Did you ever stop to think that baptism is more than a mere burial? Leave your baptized converts buried, keep them in the watery tomb, and life would soon be extinct. You not only bury them in baptism, but they must be risen also, and walk in a newness of life, thus signifying the new birth.

The Savior meant just what He said, when He looked upon the astonished Nicodemus and said, "Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the Kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) There is no need whatever for the sons of men to quibble and say that He meant this thing, or that thing, or the other thing. Herein lies the fault of the Christian sects; they profess to believe the Bible, and endeavor to change some of its most plain and precious truths, by spiritualizing and placing private interpretations upon the Scriptures, while such capers are strictly condemned by the word of God. (II Peter 1:20.) All of the words of our blessed Savior are plain and simple, easy to be understood, convincing to the honest in heart; still professed followers of the Lamb, with their much learning, higher criticism and other seductive influences, seek to mystify, make obscure, and hide from the understanding of man, those clear-cut, open truths.

If there were any reason for us to believe that "Born of the water" meant born of the word, we may give it some credence, but as it is, there is neither reason or Scripture to warrant this assumption; therefore we are left with it in its proper and divine expression. "Born of the water," nothing more, and nothing less than just what it says.

Brother James O. Earnest, of Lynchburg, Va., called at the office on his return to his home in the Old Dominion State, after visiting for a space of two years the good people of Utah and Idaho. Brother Earnest speaks highly of the people where he has spent the two last years, and says it seemed like leaving home to part with the hosts of warm friends who made life so pleasant for him in the west. They treated him royally, and he carries to the people of Virginia a good and honest report of his visit.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

The subject of this sketch was born at Paris, Idaho, March 17, 1877. He is a grandson of the late Apostle Charles C. Rich, and his parents were among the first settlers of Bear Lake Valley. His early life was spent on the farm, and he attended the public schools until the age of 17, when he was moved with a desire to obtain higher scholastic training than the public schools could afford. His parents were untiring in their efforts to promote the welfare of their children, and through their self-sacrifice, energy and economy the way was opened for our brother to attend the Agricultural college in Logan, Utah. He spent three years in this institution of learning, his special study being mechanical engineering.

After leaving the Agricultural college he spent two years as a pedagogue, that he might obtain the necessary means with which to pursue his course of study. It was while teaching school in Wyoming that he received a summons from the Prophet of God, soliciting his labors in the mission field. Only a short week elapsed from the time of receiving his notice until he was in Salt Lake City, reporting for duty. He was set apart for his mission April 13, 1899, and arrived in Chattanooga on the 17th.

He was assigned to labor in the North Carolina conference, but was afflicted with illness which necessitated a transfer to North Alabama. For some time his labors were required in the office, where he acted as commisary to the mission. When President Syl. Low, Jr., was released to return to the west, Elder Humpherys was appointed to labor in his stead, and so we find him today down in the Palm Leaf state, among the piney woods of South Carolina, presiding over one of the brightest and best conferences in the south. In a letter written to the office, he says:

"I crave at all times the assistance of God that I may follow Paul's advice to Timothy: 'Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.'"

Mighty deeds of valor stand out in the pages of history as so many incentives to greatness of action in the present. Great armies and navies, arsenals and fortifications, empires and powerful states win from us our appreciation, but what are they? Empires are overthrown, cities crumble into dust, nations cease to exist, but a written word endures for all time and the "handwriting on the wall" as a living reality throughout all the ages.—The Book World.

ARE MORMONS POPULAR?

This seems to be a popular question, and from the interest manifested by some of our reverend friends, in their teachings, one would naturally think that they were. We decided to spend Sunday, the 13th of May, with Brother George Garmond in Union county, N. C., and arrived at his home at 4 p. m. Saturday. On arriving we were made acquainted with the fact that Elders Lumburg and Welker had made an appointment near New Hope Church, about seven miles distant, and that a Mr. or Rev. (?) H. G. Hotchkiss was going to meet them there and expose Mormonism. We decided to grace the meeting with our presence, and on Sunday morning set out for the appointed place, in company with Brother Garmond. We arrived at New Hope just in time for the services of Rev. (?) Hotchkiss. After singing and prayer he commenced his little recitation on Mormonism, using the same old accusations that have been hurled at this people more than a thousand times. He had the rapt attention of all present, Elder Georgeson and myself included. Mr. H. presented his irrefragible truths (?) to the people with all of the eloquence at his command. His lungs were well tested while exerting his malicious powers to the utmost to infuriate the minds of the people against Mormons. O! what rapture must have filled his bosom when the deacon of the church countenanced his jargon with a nod. Mr. H. thought that he had won his celebrity. He then launched forth with renewed vigor to impugn the character and virtue of Joseph Smith and the Mormon Church. After making a few bold assertions, his calumny was turned on the Elders. They were accused of being "murderers, thieves and liars," and our reverend friend event went so far as to say that there was not an honest man in the Mormon Church. It is evident that the gentleman (?) never has read the sayings of St. Paul (Rom. 2:1), or if he had, thought that by making such a vigorous attack on the Latter-day Saints, he could gain the confidence of the people and thus hide some of his miserable trickery. However, there must be a clown in all "big" shows, and Rev. H. with his pestiferous remarks played his part well. The characters of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Smith, Sr., were next assailed. The former was accused of being a swindler and almost always in an inebriate condition. The latter, he said, was a witch and schooled her son in the art, making him proficient in locating far sheep and chickens. No proof whatever was furnished to substantiate his naked falsehoods. Mr. Hotchkiss, beware! Remember Pharaoh and learn wisdom. Good advice to you, Mr. H., would be to never murmur against God's anointed. Remember the two hundred and fifty princes of the children of Israel, who were swallowed up in the earth for murmuring against Moses. (Num. 16:2, 31-33). Mariam, who was stricken with leprosy for murmuring against the prophet. (Num. 12). Do you remember Paul, how he was stricken blind on the way to Damascus, for persecuting the Saints? O, ye vile accuser! Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near; forsake your evil way and your evil thoughts; return unto God and He will have mercy upon you. During the dark ages or times of ignorance God winked; but now He commandeth all men everywhere to repent. If ye say that ye have no sin, ye deceive yourself and the truth is not in you. Mr. Hotchkiss said that Mormons were teaching that Jesus Christ had a plurality of wives and that while upon the cross He looked upon His own seed. Mr. H. admitted that he never heard an Elder preach such doctrine, "but some one else told him." Yes; it is the same old smile. A naked falsehood. A lie! He says that "Mormons are not fools. You can't corner them on the Bible." No! Mr. H., you cannot, and that is the plain reason that such men as yourself resort to such infernal, miserable trickery.

"Mormons are arraigned in the Temple, and with uplifted hand are made to swear by oath not to question the authority of the Church, not to betray any secrets of the Temple; always to remain enemies to the United States, and under penalty of death dare not deny the divine authenticity of any Church work." Such unembellished, superficial, revolting falsehoods are humiliating to Satan himself.

Again, he says that Mormons are still practicing polygamy, and shedding innocent blood. His friend, a pastor of the Presbyterian church, keeps him posted. Mr. H., if your friend in S. L. C. knows these things to be true, why does he not take steps to put a stop to them? Doesn't he claim to be trying to Christianize the world? O! you tell me that you cannot convict a Mormon in Utah. No! and why, Mr. H.? Simply because the law cannot convict an innocent man. "These Elders are shipping our fair sex out of North Carolina by the car loads." On whom is Mr. H. casting reflections? I answer, on the female sex of North Carolina, and not on the Mormon Elders. If a despised Mormon can ship women to Utah by the car loads, what could a well-dressed sharper from New York do? He could take them all! Are the women of North Carolina as he represents them? God forbid! Mr. H. is a blight to the fair sex of this state, and should be silenced by the brothers and fathers of his community. I will not rehearse any more of Mr. H.'s little speech, as it is old and not as good as second-handed. I only appeal to the reason of intelligent people. Such opposition doesn't discourage a true servant of God. Nay! but the love of Christ and freedom instilled in their bosom by loving mothers prompts them on and they know no defeat. I am sorry that in this day and age of the world we still have blind leading the blind, and with the Scribes and Pharisees of old, cry, "If we had lived in the days of our fathers we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Prophets and Apostles are sent among them in this day. Some they persecute and drive from the synagogues and punish in the meanest ways possible. They are in a stage of gross darkness. Their hearts are waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts and should be converted." (Matt. 13:15). Christ said to His apostles: "He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that despiseth you despiseth me, and he that despiseth me despiseth Him that sent me." Mr. H., do you despise the Elders? They are God's chosen servants and have a like commission to the apostles of old. The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God. The foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men. God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and He has chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty. We speak, not in the words which men's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth. The Gospel which we teach we received not of man, neither were we taught it; but by the Holy Ghost. At your meeting, Mr. H., you didn't allow us liberty, but you must remember that Paul said: "Where the Spirit of God is there is liberty." (II. Cor. 3:17). And now you must admit that your circumlocution was not from the Spirit of God. Like the apostles of old, we (the Elders) are sent out, as it were, appointed unto death; for we are made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men. We are fools for Christ's sake; but we are wise in Christ; we are weak, but we are strong; we are honorable, but we are despised; being reviled we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we entreat; we are made as the filth of the world and are the off-scouring of all things unto this day. The Kingdom of God is not in word, but in power, and our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Haughty ignorance and bigotry will yet be constrained to cast their honors in the dust; and bow their reverend heads at the feet of real worth, and learn in humble silence that one fact clearly demonstrated is worth ten thousand theories and opinions of men. Mr. H., we are proud to say that your satanic efforts made friends for the Mormons. "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform."

THE DEAD.

Sister Lora A. Pittman, of Tyre, Douglas county, Ga., passed away from this earth July 29. Sister Pittman was a faithful member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Her life and character since her baptism had been one of emulation. Many a meal she prepared for the Elders, who always found the latch string of her door on the outside.

She was baptized Sept. 24, 1899, by Elder Smith D. Rogers and confirmed by Elder A. C. Candland. She leaves a good and God-fearing husband and five small children, who will miss her from the family circle. May the Lord bless and comfort the grief-stricken family.

W. D. Kitchen, the son of Brother and Sister John A. Kitchen, quietly passed from this life Aug. 21, 1900, of typhoid fever. Sister Kitchen is a faithful Latter-day Saint and is devoted to the cause she has espoused. Brother Kitchen is not a member of the Church, but is very kind to the Elders and deserves much credit for the good he has done. May the Lord bless Brother and Sister Kitchen in their hour of bereavement and sorrow.

From "A Book of Verses," by Nixon Waterman.

My little boy came from his school today
With his heart in a flurry of glee.
"O, papa! they've taken our pencils away.
And I'm writing with ink," said he.

And his breast is filled with a manly pride,
For it joys him much to think
He has laid his pencil and slate aside,
And is writing his words in ink.

O, innocent child! could you guess the truth
You would ask of the years to stay
'Mid the slate and pencil cares of youth
That a tear will wash away;

For out in the great, wide world of men
The wrongs we may do or think
Can never be blotted out again.
For we write them all in ink!

DEATH OF ELDER H. D. BRONSON.

It is with feelings of sorrow and pain that we are called upon to report the sad death of Elder H. D. Bronson, of Fairview, Idaho. For the past nineteen months Elder Bronson has been laboring in the Georgia Conference, performing a noble, successful work, and in every way proving himself an able, earnest, energetic servant of the Master. On Saturday evening, about 4 o'clock, Oct. 5, we received the following telegram from Eatonton, Ga., signed by Elder H. C. Butler. "H. D. Bronson, Fairview, Idaho, was drowned in the Oconee river this morning at 7 o'clock; body not yet found." This was a terrible shock to all at the Office, and it was some few moments before we could thoroughly sense the message. A cloud of sadness and a gloomy shadow seemed to rest upon us, and we at once felt that someone should go to the scene of the calamity and render assistance in discovering the body. Elder L. E. Jordan was appointed to make the trip, and at 6 p.m. was seated on the southbound train to Atlanta. Arriving in Eatonton, he wired the following message, dated Oct. 7: "Instructions received from Rich. Body not found yet; will embalm at Macon. Have Elder ready to accompany home." The second message from Elder Jordan, dated the 8th, was: "Can't find body; will use dynamite at daylight." And again on the 9th came the following: "Not yet found; working, hoping to hear from Rich; can't get photo; plenty help." L. E. Jordan. Thus we were kept in anxious suspense, while the Elders were doing their level best to recover the body of our beloved brother. Tuesday evening, Oct. 9, we received word that the body had at last been found, and was prepared for shipment to the West. It was found on the morning of the 9th, just after Elde Jordan had sent his last message, Eatonton, the telegraph station, being about fifteen miles from the spot where the Elder was drowned.

Elder Manasseh Smith wrote the following brief account of the drowning:

There were four of us (Elder Bronson, Butler, Mayhew and myself) traveling down to the lower counties, where we had been assigned to labor, and on arriving yesterday morning about 6 o'clock at a point on the Oconee river called the Long Shoals Factory, we called to the ferryman on the other side of the river, but failed to get a reply. So, after waiting an hour and a half, Elder Bronson and Butler decided to swim the river and bring a boat over and get us and our grips, but when they got about one-third of the way across the stream Elder Bronson turned and said he could not make it, and called for help and sank. Elder Butler turned and swam as fast as possible to him and caught him just as he was going down the third time, and they both went down together, but Elder Butler brought him to the top again and tried to save him, but he himself being exhausted, he had to let go of Elder Bronson in order to save his own life, but I assure you he did all he could to save him, but it seems that our Heavenly Father had a better work for him to do on the other side. Elder Butler and I got across the river in a boat and went to Brother C. J. Callihan's, at Eatonton, and wired you. We had to walk about twelve miles, and that is the reason why the message was late. I remain, as ever, your brother in the Gospel of truth, Manasseh Smith.

Elder Bronson was a leader among his companions, a power for good wherever he went, and a faithful defender of the Gospel. A young man, single, with loving parents, who will grieve the loss of a dutiful, affectionate son. His whole desire was to do his duty, and he met his death while performing an act which was to benefit his companions. He was just 22 years of age, being born Aug. 18, 1878. Much credit and praise is due to those good, kind people who generously labored night and day for the recovery of his body. Elder Jordan accompanied the body to Chattanooga, and from here to Salt Lake City it will be accompanied by Elder J. F. Perkins, of the North Alabama Conference.

We trust that the Lord will bless those who are near to our departed brother by the endearing ties of kindred affection, and that they may ever enjoy the sweet, life-giving and comforting influence of His Holy Spirit.

History of the Southern States Mission.

OCTOBER, 1899.—This month opened with cooler weather, which was much appreciated by the Elders. The tidal wave of mobocracy, prejudice and hatred which had swept over the country was subsiding, and a better feeling seemed to exist in all parts. The ministers, however, were not dilatory in inciting the people against the faith, and the newspaper journals were occasionally loaded with vile stuff, calculated to damage our cause. Elders were at work in nearly all the large cities throughout the south, where much street preaching was being done. A good work was done in Nashville, Knoxville, Montgomery, Raleigh, Richmond, Cincinnati, Louisville and other prominent cities of the south. Many friends and investigators were made, and some baptisms were reported.

President T. H. Humpherys and Elder Matthews made an effort to work Birmingham, Ala. After exhausting every means to effect an opening they were forced to give it up for the time being. The mayor was intensely bitter and denied them every privilege pertaining to their work in the city, until they could secure from each of the four local ministers a document saying that Mormon literature would not be objectionable to the citizens of Birmingham. An appeal was made to the city aldermen, who, without reference to what the mayor had said or done, passed an ordinance prohibiting all Mormons from preaching or officiating in any capacity in the city, outside of their own church buildings. Later the mayor repented somewhat, and allowed the Elders to preach on the street corner, but denied them the privilege of selling books or distributing literature. A little excitement was created, when it was announced through the papers that the Mormons would preach on the streets. Great interest was manifested, and each night the street was crowded with people.

Rachel L. Baird, who for some six or seven years had been an invalid, was instantly healed by the power of God through the administration of Elders Reeve and Stewart. This occurred in Pickett county, Tennessee. The sister had been confined to her bed for these many years, but she arose, was baptized, and came up out of the water exclaiming, "I am well now."

On the night of the 4th, President J. U. Allred and Elder J. A. Kirk were holding meeting in Nashville, when a minister interrupted them and vilely accused them of being guilty of defiling houses. The Rev. (?) gentleman was promptly challenged to there and then prove his accusations, but he suddenly disappeared.

Elders C. H. Wentz and Thos. Halls, while laboring in Fayetteville, Tenn., had notice served on them by the "Raw Dough Society" of that place to leave the city. The Elders did not leave, and were not molested. The Elders in Marshall county, Tennessee, upon entering Petersburg, were notified to leave at once. The notice was served by a colored boy who said he was acting in behalf of the city police. This was the result of an agitation started there by a local preacher, who "swung high" in the anti-Mormon crusade. The Elders in Houston county, Tennessee, were denied the right of laboring in Erin, the county seat, and even prohibited from remaining there longer than the calling for their mail required. Some of the citizens remarked that if this injunction was violated that they would enforce it, not beneath masks or blackened faces, but in the full light of day, and in the garb of citizens.

President Lewis Hobson gave a brief report of work in Louisiana, as follows: A great deal of persecution was experienced, caused by ministers communicating with our enemies in Utah, and also as a result of the anti-Mormon literature scattered broadcast over the land. An attempt was made to mob Elders Carter and Hobson, but the hand of providence prevented the accomplishment of the evil plan. Mass meetings were held at Mount Carmel, where seventy men pledged themselves to get "shet" of the Mormon Elders, even to the spilling of blood if necessary. Elder P. V. Carter, who had been left with Saints on account of a sore foot, was, on the 9th, visited by a mob of seventy-eight ruffians headed by a Baptist preacher—J. D. Ford. They were met at the house by Sister Clark, and ordered not to come in. The mob demanded the Elder, but his friends refused to give him up. Ford was allowed to go in unarmed, and interview Elder Carter. Mr. Ford stated that, as the representative of the "seventy-eight" and 500 more, he demanded that all Mormon Elders leave and never return. Elder Carter endeavored to reason with him, but to no avail—abuse was his only weapon. On the 12th, a heavily armed mob of twenty-five men came to Victoria, where President Hobson and Elder J. N. Miller were staying, and demanded of them to leave the country. Mr. John R. Jones and his "mill" hands protected the Elders, and robbed the mobbers of their innocent prey. On this, as well as on all other occasions, the Elders were kind, and tried to reason with the self-righteous bigots, but their appeals were met with vulgar insults. When the leader was asked by what authority he demanded them to leave, he boastingly replied, "In the name of Jesus Christ, and as a representative of the people of this parish." The Elders were given until the 15th to leave the parish. President Hobson went to Shreveport.

At the close of the month 10,000 Orson Pratt's Works were printed, also a new missionary hymn book.

A TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH SMITH.

BY ELDER LORIN F. RICH.

In this day, people who profess to be Christians, accept the Apostles' testimony that Jesus is the Christ. They do this because the Apostles were acquainted and associated with Christ, and better knew His character than His enemies did. On the other hand, Christ's enemies called Him "a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of the publicans and sinners."

Those who were broad-minded, open-hearted and seeking for truth, investigated the teachings of the Savior. As they progressed in their searches for truth, their belief became knowledge and they bore their testimony that Jesus is the Son of God. This is the testimony that is accepted by professed followers of Christ. Why do they accept this testimony? Simply because an acquaintance of the Savior would know His mission and speak the truth as to the divinity of His work.

If the so-called Christians of today would ask who Joseph Smith was, and inquire as to his claims, who should he go to, for a true answer? Should he go to enemies who have not investigated his claims, or should he go to one who was acquainted with Joseph Smith? Only people who are narrow-minded would seek advice from bigoted enemies. Joseph Smith's enemies (who can be found wherever priest-craft exists), abuse his good name and character with the same injustice as Christ's enemies did when they called Him "a sinner," etc. But those who were broad-minded enough to investigate, and were seeking for truth, bear their humble testimony to the world that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the Most High God.

While thinking over the above ideas and truths, I remembered that my grandfather, who is still living, was intimately associated with Joseph Smith. I desired his testimony, and a short time ago wrote for it. One testimony strengthens another. My grandfather would have no object in deceiving me in a matter pertaining to life and salvation, and I firmly believe his testimony.

Believing the following will be of interest to the readers of the Star, I publish the same as it was received from Lorin Farr, my grandfather, in a letter to me, dated Aug. 14, 1900:

"I had the great pleasure of becoming acquainted, when I was quite a young boy, with the Prophet Joseph Smith. I don't suppose there is any man living who was so well acquainted with the Prophet Joseph Smith as I was. I used to live with him, and done work for him, when but a boy. I never got acquainted with a man that I thought as much of as I did of him. He was a very kind man to his family. He used to call on me to take my turn in family prayers. He was a very humble, prayerful man. He was a very industrious man, always doing something useful; and was not afraid to reprove a person for wrong doing in the past. Lorin, I positively know, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that he was the greatest man that ever lived on this earth, except Jesus Christ. He was chosen and ordained to hold the keys of this dispensation; to come and take his tabernacle in this day and age, and did take it on the 23d of December, 1805 A. D.

I have traveled with him; slept with him; was with him a great deal through some of the most trying times, and know that he was faithful and true to the last. He brought forth the same Gospel; the same plan of salvation that Jesus Christ brought forth, but his enemies would not let him live. They took him whilst he was under the care of the Governor of Illinois, and put him to death. He sealed his testimony with his blood, and the inhabitants of this great republic will know and understand some day that they have put to death one of the greatest men that ever lived on this earth.

The Jews took Christ, after he had labored between three and four years, and put Him to death. He sealed His testimony by His blood. But the Jews have been paid pretty dearly for their terrible crime. Christ said (Matt. 24:14): "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached unto all the world, as a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come," or the destruction of the wicked.

I think if the Christian world would read the 24th chapter of St. Matthew a little more, and try to understand it, they would begin to see what is coming and what is about to take place on this earth.

Joseph Smith was the great forerunner to prepare for the second coming of the Savior. I embraced the Gospel of Jesus Christ under the preaching of Joseph Smith, and the ("Mormon" church, as it is called) Church of Jesus Christ from the beginning, and I know full well what I am writing is the truth.

There was a portion of the 24th chapter of Matthew fulfilled in the days of the Savior here on the earth, and that which has not come to pass will all be fulfilled. The Church of Jesus Christ has been set up and has come to stay. Notwithstanding they killed the Prophet Joseph, the Church remains and will remain until Christ comes to reign on the earth as He now reigns in Heaven, and there shall be no power on this earth that can stop it."

GLEANINGS.

I have many dear and highly esteemed friends and acquaintances, readers of The Star, to whom I desire to send greetings, love and kindest regards; also inform them of my safe return home, after an enjoyable stay of two years in Utah. Left numerous friends and loved ones there in coming to Virginia, the home of my childhood, and will say to my southern friends that they are entertaining worthy servants of God—the Mormon Elders. I have had the privilege and pleasure of visiting all over the state and was kindly treated; other strangers treated likewise; they are more industrious than any people I was ever amongst; have no drones or beggars in the "Beehive State."

I am kindly and gladly received back at home and lots of friends are anxious to hear me talk of Utah and the "Mormons;" say they will believe me, so I am arranging to travel and lecture on the wild west, expose the Mormons, etc. Have a long, busy and enjoyable visit among friends in Appomattox, Campbell, Charlotte and other counties I esteem so highly. The Elders and friends are invited to call and see me; be at home with me; also write. With kindest regards to all, I am your humble brother in Jesus Christ,

James Earnest.

Dear Editor—Please allow me space in the little Star to express my feeling towards the Church of Christ and the Saints in it, for I love them all, wherever they are. I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints nearly three years. I was baptized Feb. 18th, 1898, by Elder W. M. Wooley, and I can bear a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel and the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith. I had never heard the Gospel preached until I heard Elder Killpack preach it. I am a Mormon, and I am not ashamed of it. I wish that I could only tell the world about my "Mormonism." The Lord has delivered me out of all my persecutions, and I know that "all that will live Godly in Christ shall suffer persecution."

Sept. 26, 1900.

We have had the misfortune to lose our little girl. She was born Jan. 23d, 1896, and died Aug. 30th, 1900, after an illness of two days. She was a very hearty child, and it was a sore trial to part with her; but we have the consolation of knowing that if we, as parents, do our duty, that we shall again have the privilege of meeting her in the Father's Kingdom. I have been a member of the Church for five years, and I can testify before God and the world, if need be, that Joseph Smith was an instrument in the hands of the Almighty in setting up His kingdom in these the last days. I feel to thank the Lord and bless the day that He seen fit to bless me with a knowledge of the same.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE PARLEY P. PRATT.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

Parley P. Pratt, who was one of the First Council of Apostles in the dispensation of the fulness of times, was born in Burlington, Otsego county, New York, April 12, 1807. He was the third son of Jared and Charity Dickinson Pratt. While still in boyhood Parley was noted for his remarkable activity of body and mind. He worked hard upon his father's farm, and when opportunity afforded him the privileges of school he was cited as an example of studiousness worthy the following of all his associates. He was a descendant of Lieut. William and Elizabeth Pratt, who were among the first settlers of Hartford, Conn., in the year 1639. The supposition is that they accompanied the Rev. Thos. Hooker and his congregation of about 100 from Cambridge, then known as Newtown, Mass., through a wilderness inhabited by savages and wild beasts, to the place where they founded the colony of Hartford, Conn. in 1636. This early pioneer, William Pratt, was a member of the Connecticut legislature for some twenty-five sessions, his long term of service proved his efficiency to hold the office and the high esteem in which he was held by the people. The general court gave him 100 acres of land in Suybrook, Connecticut, for gallant services rendered in the Pequot war. He was a judge in the first court of New London county. Parley P. and Orson Pratt are lineal descendants of the seventh generation from that worthy pilgrim and pioneer.

Parley P. Pratt was distinguished in his early boyhood for the maturity of manhood in his thoughts and actions. The opportunities afforded him for education were extremely limited, and yet the originality of his thought was so distinguished that he was looked upon by many who knew him as a leading spirit with a great destiny before him. He also displayed strong tendencies of a religious character and for some time was associated with the followers of Alexander Campbell.

APOSTLE PARLEY P. PRATT.

In September, 1830, he felt strongly impressed while residing in Ohio to journey eastward. Acting upon this suggestion of the Spirit of the Lord, he went eastward several hundred miles, where he came in possession of a copy of the Book of Mormon. He read the sacred volume with a prayerful heart and arose from its perusal a witness that the promise contained in the Book that those who read it with a desire to know the truth should receive a testimony of its truth. Parley immediately set out in search of the honored men who had seen the Angel and heard the voice of God. He soon found some Elders and learned from them of the organization of the Church on April 6, 1830. He received baptism and was at once ordained an Elder. He visited Canaan, Columbia county, New York, where he had spent many of his boyhood days. He preached several times in the neighborhood and baptized his brother Orson on the 19th anniversary of the latter's birthday, Sept. 19, 1830, and then went to Seneca county, New York.

In October, 1830, Parley P. Pratt and three others were commanded by revelation to carry the Gospel to the Lamanites or Indians located in the western boundaries of Missouri. On their journey they spent some time at Kirtland, Ohio, where they preached the Gospel to Sidney Rigdon, Orson Hyde and other followers of Alex Campbell. They baptized many of them and pursuing their journey to Missouri, Bro. Parley P. Pratt was among the first of the Latter-day Saints to stand upon the favored site where the city of Zion and her glorious Temple are to be reared in the last days.

Early in 1831 he went east as far as Ohio and in Kirtland met the Prophet Joseph Smith. During the summer he performed another faithful mission in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, preaching the Gospel, baptizing many and promoting by every possible means the interests of the Church. While the Presidency of the Church and main body were established in Ohio, Bro. Parley was among the number located in Jackson county, Missouri, building up the city of the Saints in that chosen land. In the fall of 1833 he, with over 1,000 men, women and children were driven from their homes and dispossessed of their property in Independence and surrounding country. Two hundred houses were burned; also hay stacks, cattle and hogs were shot down; many of the Saints cruelly whipped, others killed, and the body of the people driven across the river into Clay county. Subsequently Elder Pratt performed a long mission of over 1,200 miles to the east, preaching the Gospel and encouraging the Saints.

In 1834 he returned to Clay county, Missouri, and wherever he went was a most energetic and capable minister of the Gospel. He returned to Kirtland, O., and on Feb. 21, 1835, having been previously called to the Apostleship, received his ordination. After his ordination he went east with his fellow Apostles and performed a faithful mission in New York, Pennsylvania and the New England states.

In 1836 he preached the Gospel in Canada, where he organized a large branch of the Church in Toronto, and others in neighboring towns. Upon this eventful mission he baptized the late President John Taylor and others who became such substantial advocates of the cause of Christ in the last days. Before leaving Kirtland Apostle Kimball prophesied to Bro. Parley that in Canada he would find a people prepared to receive him, and that his wife should bear him a son. They had been married ten years without posterity. Both these remarkable predictions were literally fulfilled.

In 1837 Bro. Pratt founded a large branch of the Church in New York City.

In 1838 Elder Pratt removed from Ohio to Caldwell county, Missouri, where persecution was raging in a furious manner. Over a score of men, women and children were murdered in cold blood. Many hundreds of thousands of dollars of property were destroyed, over 10,000 people banished from the state. Elder P. P. Pratt was among the number captured by the mob militia through the treachery of Geo. M. Hingle, and sent to prison in Richmond, Ray county, Missouri, with other brethren.

He was kept in prison seven months without trial. By the help of the Lord, he escaped from prison, on July 4, 1839, and successfully regained his liberty. In this way he joyfully celebrated the nation's anniversary. Upon gaining his freedom he published a history of the Missouri persecutions, the first edition appearing in Detroit, Mich., in 1839.

He went with the Twelve to England in 1840, and became the first editor of the Millennial Star, a periodical now sixty years of age, and still running as the exponent of the history and doctrines of the Church, especially devoted to the interests of the European mission. In 1841 he was appointed to preside over the British mission. In this capacity he continued to edit the Star, visit the several conferences of the mission, superintend the emigration of the Saints, and in a most efficient manner conduct all the general affairs of the mission. He also wrote and published several interesting little works explaining the principles of the Gospel.

In the winter of 1842-3 he returned to Nauvoo, the home of the Saints, continuing at home as well as abroad faithful at work in his ministry.

In the summer of 1844, when the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith occurred, Elder Pratt was doing missionary service in the east with most of his quorum. All at once he was impressed to leave prematurely for his home in Nauvoo. Taking passage on a canal boat near Utica, N. Y., his brother William, also on a mission, came aboard the same boat. Bro. Parley felt overcome with gloom and said to his brother, "Brother William, this is a dark hour, the powers of darkness seem to triumph and the spirit of murder is abroad in the land and it controls the hearts of the American people, and a vast majority of them sanction the killing of the innocent." Many other expressions did he utter of like character, without knowing the exact cause, but it was June 27, 1844, in the afternoon, and about the same hour when a furious mob 1,000 miles distant were shedding the blood of Presidents Joseph and Hyrum Smith and Elder John Taylor in Carthage, Ill. He hastily returned to Nauvoo, receiving on the way the revelations of the Holy Spirit that all would be well. The work of God would roll on and His kingdom be established regardless of all efforts to destroy it. Bro. Parley was full of encouragement to the Saints and loyal to the Holy Priesthood during these trying scenes.

In the spring of 1845 he was appointed to preside over the conferences of the eastern and middle states, with headquarters in New York City. While there he published an interesting and spirited periodical entitled "The Prophet." He returned home in the summer of the same year. In February, 1846, he again became an exile, being driven, with 15,000 coreligionists, from their homes in Nauvoo, for no other cause than the one which induced Cain to slay his brother Abel, the brethren of Joseph to sell him to the Ishmaelites, and the Jews to betray and crucify the Redeemer. The victims of hatred had offered a more acceptable offering unto the Lord. The home of Elder Parley P. Pratt still remains in Nauvoo in good preservation, a monument of his never-ceasing industry.

Himself and family passed through many tribulations in their pilgrimage and finally found a temporary resting-place in the Indian country at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Here he was called by the voice of inspiration through the Prophet of the Lord to perform another mission in Europe. He left his family almost destitute of food and shelter upon the broad prairies of Iowa, to comply with this divine call. He accomplished a faithful work in the British Isles, visiting the various conferences and strengthening the branches of the Church. He returned to his family in the spring of 1847, and the same summer and autumn wended their way across the great plains to Salt Lake valley, where they arrived in the fall of 1847. They passed through the ordeals and hardship incident to the founding of settlements in the once desert lands of Utah. Bro. Parley was a most industrious, hard-working man. Making new roads, building bridges and in every practical way promoting growth and developement among the Saints of God. He was prominent in the formation of a constitution for the provisional state of Deseret, elected a senator in the general assembly, and subsequently served with distinguished ability in the territorial legislature of Utah.

In 1851 he went on a mission to the Pacific Islands and South America. He was absent upon this mission about four years. Returning home, he occupied much of his time visiting the colonies of the Saints in their several places of location, and when at home was busy in manual labor, improving his home and the city of the Saints.

In the winter of 1855-6 he officiated as chaplain in the legislative council of the territory, convened at Filmore City. In the fall of 1856 he crossed the plains with a company of Elders and spent the winter visiting the Saints and preaching the Gospel in Philadelphia, New York, St. Louis and other places. In New York City he met his warm, devoted friend, Apostle John Taylor, whom he had baptized twenty years before. While there, having a premonition that the finale of his earthly career was rapidly approaching, he wrote his poem, called "My Fiftieth Year." Throughout the poem is the spirit of prophecy pointing to the end of his mortality. President Taylor also knew by the spirit of revelation that it was the last time he should ever see Bro. Parley in this life. Elder Taylor wrote in beautiful verse an appropriate response to Bro. Parley's poem, "My Fiftieth Year." These productions are to be found in the autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, as written by himself and published by his eldest son, Parley, many years after his father's decease. On his way home he came by Fort Smith and Van Buren, Ark., where he was arrester on a trumped-up charge of a bitter anti-Mormon, thrust into prison. Upon his trial before the court he was proven innocent in the fullest degree and given his liberty. Several of the old settlers, who knew Elder Pratt in that section of Arkansas, still remain and testify in the highest terms of the nobility and grandeur of the character of Parley P. Pratt. The judge who tried his case said to a relative subsequent to the trial, that he never experienced so sublime a spirit and influence as when in the presence of this great man, and "if there is such a thing as an Apostle of Jesus Christ, Parley P. Pratt is such a man."

When he was discharged, and friends, knowing of the bitterness of his enemies, felt sure of his assassination, and offered him weapons of defense, he answered no, that the end was near and that his mission was peace on earth and to man good will.

On the 13th of May, while journeying westward on the wagon road running from Fort Smith to the Indian territory, he met his death at the hands of a wicked assassin. He was laid to rest near the fatal spot by Elder Geo. Higginson and a few kind friends who lived in that region. Parley P. Pratt was one of the most efficient Apostles of the Lord who has ever lived in any dispensation. In writing and speaking the word of the Lord he was filled with the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. He was truly poetical, and many of the choicest poems and hymns familiar to the Latter-day Saints are the expressions of divine inspiration through Apostle Parley P. Pratt. He wrote "The Voice of Warning," "Key to Theology," a history of his own life and travels and many smaller works, all of which bear the unmistakable evidence of an inspirational mind. His "Voice of Warning" as a means of conversion to the honest in heart, has no superior among books, save it be the Book of Mormon and other records of divine truth. At times he was so full of inspiration, that the influence which radiated through him, and the intensely interesting character of his conversation in public and private, that to his listeners many hours apparently reduced themselves to brief moments of time. While traveling as a missionary on foot without purse or scrip, the Spirit of the Lord would often inspire him to write, when he would sit down by the roadside or in the shady wood land, and write the glorious truths of heaven. He also wrote much while in prison for the Gospel's sake. He traveled thousands of miles in his own and foreign lands for the salvation of the human family, and was instrumental in bringing many souls into the fold of Christ.

He had a testimony that every principle revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith was true and so taught his own family. All his children are in the Church, imbued with the faith of their honored sire, and his memory will outlive the limits of time and extend to all the eternities of the boundless future.

President John Taylor wrote concerning Bro. Parley in the preface of his autobiography: "He has gone—but has left a name and a fame that will live throughout time and burst forth in eternity. And in the morning of the first resurrection, when the opening heavens shall reveal the Son of God, and He shall proclaim, 'I am the resurrection and the life,' when death shall deliver up the dead, I expect to meet Bro. Parley in the resurrection of the just."

Certificate of Character from Mark Twain.

During the campaign of 1880, Mark Twain, for the first and only time in his life, took an active part in politics. While visiting in Elmira, N. Y., in the fall of that year, he made a short speech one Saturday night, introducing to a republican meeting Gen. Hawley, of Connecticut. In the course of his remarks, Mr. Clemens said:

"Gen. Hawley is a member of my church at Hartford, and the author of 'Beautiful Snow.' Maybe he will deny that; but I am only here to give him a character from his last place.

"As a pure citizen, I respect him; as a personal friend of years, I have the warmest regard for him; as a neighbor, whose vegetable garden adjoins mine, why—why, I watch him; as the author of 'Beautiful Snow' he has added a new pang to winter.

"He is a square, true man in honest politics, and I must say he occupies a mighty lonely position. So broad, so bountiful is his character that he never turned a tramp empty-handed from his door, but always gave him a letter of introduction to me. Pure, honest, incorruptible—that is Joe Hawley. Such a man in politics is like a bottle of perfumery in a glue factory; it may moderate the stench, but it doesn't destroy it. I haven't said any more of him than I would say of myself. Ladies and gentlemen, this is Gen. Hawley."—Chicago Chronicle.

GLEANINGS.

Somerville, Tenn., Oct. 2, 1900.

As I haven't seen anything from Fayette county, I will pen a few lines to the much prized little Star that visits our home once a week. We are always anxious for it to come, it has so much valuable reading in it that it does my soul good to read it. I think it ought to be in every home. I never saw a Mormon Elder until last March two came to our house—Elder Larsen and Elder Redd. They were invited in; they came in and talked a little on their faith and left a tract, which we read with interest. Sunday following Elder Larsen spoke to the people at a school house nearby. Myself and family attended and were well pleased with his sermon. In May following Elder Osborn and Elder Redd came back and preached to the people at the same place again.

They stayed with us while in the neighborhood, and while here spoke of wanting a place to spend a few days for their President to visit them. We were only too glad to hear them speak of wanting to stop in the neighborhood. We invited them to come to our house and told them that our doors would always be open to receive them; that they were welcome at any time.

President Strong, Elder Humpherys, Elder Osborn and Elder Redd came to hold a three or four days' meeting. They preached Saturday night, Sunday night and Monday. We attended every time. I never heard the Scriptures explained so clearly in my life. The people, most of them, in the neighborhood would not go to hear them; they treated the Elders very unkindly. As for myself and family, we went to hear them and treated them the best we were able to while here. I thank the Lord for sending His servants in our midst, for if they had not come I would have been groping in utter darkness yet, for I fail to see the right Gospel preached in these other churches. I am no member of the Church, but hope at the earliest opportunity to become a member of the Latter-day Saints, for I do believe that they teach the Gospel that Christ taught while here on earth. I also believe that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of God. May the blessing of God attend all the Elders and Saints in His service is the wish of your most devoted friend, Mrs. S. E. Cox.

Shelton, N. C., Sept. 30, 1900.

Perhaps you have never heard a word from any of the Saints of Surry county, North Carolina. For some time I have felt desirous of penning you a letter, if perchance I might encourage some poor, persecuted Saint to press onward in the work of the Lord. I have been the recipient of that most valuable little paper, The Star, for some time. It is indeed the brightest star that ever shed its flickering rays over the Saints. It inspires with new hope, courage and determination.

To read of the persecution, mobs and evil treatment heaped upon the Elders is strong proof that the Latter-day Saints have the only true and everlasting Gospel, and, on the other hand, to witness the divisions and contentions among the so-called Christian denominations is conclusive proof that they are wrong and delusive, for we read that God is not the author of confusion, but of peace. God is the same yesterday, today and forever. It seems to me that to be a Mormon Elder, going forth as sheep among wolves, without purse or scrip, facing mobs and all sorts of abuse requires more heroism than that of Hobson, Dewey or any man of war going forth amid the applause and sanction of a nation.

May God bless the humble Elder while away from home and dear ones, among a frowning world.

There are but a few of us members of the Church in this settlement, but we are desirous of having a Sunday school established in our midst. We have secured a school house for the present and will build a church as soon as practicable. I realize that if we fail to inherit the promised blessings it will be because we have failed to do our duty. I am willing to do anything the Lord will have me to do. May God bless you all in the spread of truth. Your brother,

J. Monroe Hiatt.

Prida, La., Sept. 25, 1900.

As I have never seen anything in the Star from this part, I will ask for a space to express my thoughts as to the so-called Mormons. I have been a member of the Church three years, being baptized by Elder J. P. Sharp, of Vernon, Utah, and confirmed by Elder Ellis H. Johnson, of Meca City, Arizona, June 13th, 1897. When first hearing of the Mormon Elders in our parish we were never satisfied until we had met them. Elders Joseph P. Sharp and Joseph A. Cornwall were the first Elders we ever met, and after hearing them speak were convinced of the truthfulness of the Gospel. I am thankful to God to be permitted to live in this dispensation of the fullness of time, when the Gospel has again been restored to earth, and is taught in all its purity, and I know that all who will obey its teachings will inherit eternal life. I know that the Gospel is true, and that it is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe. I also know that Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor and others were Prophets of the true and living God. I have met with some opposition, but that only helps to strengthen my faith, for I realize that all who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. May the blessings of heaven attend all the Saints and Elders, and desiring an interest in their prayers, I am your sister in the Gospel, Lillie May Craig.

Doing One's Best.

That is all you can demand from people—and all one can insist upon from one's self—to do one's best in every sphere and situation. In the shop or factory, at home or at school, in the pulpit or on the bench, the inexorable law is the law of doing one's best.

As to what is the best, that is to be left to the individual, and it is not our business to set down a canon or standard as to our neighbor's conduct. Let us sweep the snow from our sidewalk first; let us do the nearest duty to be done; let us breathe into our work all our manhood or womanhood, all our earnestness and determination.—Jewish Messenger.

For Good or Evil.

On trifles that seem light as air, deep and far-reaching issues are hung. A word, a smile, a frown, a moment's hesitation, a thoughtless step—who can tell what destinies shall turn on them? For this reason God has determined that men shall give account in the day of judgment for every idle word they shall speak. An idle word may be a potent word for good or evil.—Lutheran.

Clean hands, pure hearts, honest conduct and godly lives are the essentials for glory in the life that is to come.

ARTICLES OF FAITH
OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Conference Presidents.

All Conference Presidents whose biographies have not yet appeared in The Star will greatly oblige us by sending in the same at their very earliest convenience, together with a cabinet photo suitable for cut. We are desirous that these will be forthcoming at an early date, and that no unnecessary delays will be made.

NON-FIT.

A big, square peg cast longing eyes
At a small, round hole in an oaken beam,
And sighed and cried in great surprise
Because forbidden by fate to rise
And enter this goal of its wish supreme.

A country lad of a lowly race
Yearned for the whirl of a city life,
Abandoned a modest but model place
To find a gilded but grim disgrace
Amid our metropolitan strife.

'Twas ever thus; men never learn
The homely adage old Time has writ
On pages of souls with pens that burn,
In symbols of pain that writhe and turn—
Success is to stay in the spot you fit.
—H. J. Butler.

ENLIGHTENMENT.

If there ever was a time in the history of the Latter-day Saints in which a spirit of energy and ambition was needed more than any other, it is the present. The young men and women who have been blessed with a testimony of the Gospel realize, or should do at least, that the "dispensation of the fullness of times" has been ushered in; the mammoth dispensation of all ages past; the dispensation which will witness the consummation of all things; the redemption of the faithful Saints; the celestialization and sanctification of the earth. During this epoch the Lord will gather together all things in one, both which are in heaven and in earth. The honest-in-heart are to be gathered out from the wicked and ungodly. The nations of men must be warned, the Gospel must be preached to every creature, and Zion—the habitation of the pure in heart—must be built up preparatory to the second advent of the Son of God. To many, especially those of agnostic tendencies, these things may appear to be a "whim of the brain," but no, all these things spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets, both ancient and modern, will be fulfilled.

To accomplish this great work—and the responsibility of its accomplishment rests with those whom the Lord has commissioned to act in His name—energetic servants of the Master are needed, and servants, too, whose qualifications must needs be adequate to the task.

Never in the history of the world has intelligence reached a higher stage of perfection and development than in the present age. To ponder upon the ingenuity of the human mind today, together with the wonderful discoveries found, and inventions wrought, is almost to conclude with amazement and astonishment that it has certainly reached its Himalaya of accomplishment. But still it moves on into the field of knowledge, daily revealing to the world great truths which confound and bewilder the curious multitude, who eagerly follow their leader into the labyrinth of science, wrestling with the giant truths which present themselves to view. Universities, academies, colleges, and seminaries of learning have ceased to be a rarity. The notoriety occasioned by "going off to school," is no longer considered remarkable, but has quietly taken its place among the everyday events of life. Public institutions of education are to be seen in every hamlet and village; and both young and old tread the path of development and advancement. But notwithstanding the remarkable development of the age, in a scientific, philosophic, and intellectual line, it must be remembered that the spiritual side of the masses has been sorely neglected, or at best poorly trained.

Some may suppose us pessimistic in our views of the spiritual characteristics of man, but no, we believe that there are several good sound reasons why he has not advanced in this regard. It is true that so-called Christianity has been offered to a low per cent. of the world's population, but of its purpose as decreed by God it must be acknowledged a failure; not only has it failed with those to whom it was carried, but also among those very ones who have been nurtured in the lap of this so-called Gospel, for nowhere has it produced the gifts and graces promised by Jehovah. The discord and contention, the contradiction and dissension, the war of words issuing from every pulpit and press, as exists in the Christian world, are stumbling blocks to the intelligent and thinking minds, both of the Christian and also of the heathen nations.

Instead of the world coming to a "unity of the faith" the breach is getting wider and wider, and the line of demarcation more distinct and visible. Division and subdivision, "confusion worse confounded," is written in the dome and pinnacle of the so-called Christian world. Instead of "One Lord, one faith, and one baptism," there are many Lords, a multiplicity of faiths, and a baptism, or non-baptism to suit every mind. Instead of Christianity producing the fruits and gifts of the Spirit of God, they bear the manifestations of hatred, malice, antagonism, rancor and disunion, while they piously remark with a sanctimonious visage, that "These things are all done away with, as no longer needed." Furthermore, it might be said, that if our good Christian friends continue in their work of diminishing, and a few more New England curates adopt the High Criticism system, the Bible, too, will be buried as another "fad of primitive Christianity," needed only for the "ignorant" Saints of old, whose inferior intelligence and knowledge necessitated the "Law and the Prophets," "Living Oracles," the communion of God, and the companionship of the Holy Ghost, with all its gifts and graces.

Modern Christians are inclined to look upon the Former-day Saints as effeminate and childish. They were commanded to "search the Scriptures;" living oracles—Apostles and Prophets—were given them for the work of the ministry, the edifying of the body of Christ—the Church, and their perfection. But the so-called follower of Jesus today has soared above them, and in their exalted position, and superior development, sorry to confess it, they possess neither mercy or justice, wisdom or knowledge, to say nothing of the spiritual barrenness of their creeds and sects. If they were merciful and just, they would not persecute and misrepresent their fellows; and if they possessed wisdom and knowledge, they would preach the fullness of the Gospel of Christ and practice the teachings of the Great Law-giver—God. Yes, indeed! The early Saints required all the graces of the Gospel; they stood constantly in need of the help of the Lord, for they knew that this was the only means by which they could become perfect even as their Father in heaven was perfect. They may be called, by their professed brethren and sisters, the weaklings of Christianity, whose inability demanded every gift and grace of the Gospel, but let us not overlook this self-evident fact, that the superiority of one man above another depends solely upon the light and intelligence emanating from the presence of God. The fact of the matter is this, the early Saints were the peers of the profesed Christians of today!

Peter and John, the poor, humble fishermen of Galilee, with little or no learning, and Matthew, the despised tax collector, could preach in plainness and simplicity the plan of life and salvation by the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost to the convincing and conversion of whole multitudes of sinners; while great divines today, with their much learning, make these simple and plain teachings of the Apostles mysterious and profoundly obscure. Although these learned prelates have become gray in their study of theological lore, and ecclesiastical dessertations, still they are at a loss to explain the fundamental principles of righteousness and truth.

It is evident that the Christian world has departed from the "old faith," that "faith once delivered to the Saints," which Jude exhorts us to contend earnestly for. They have digressed from the primitive Gospel of Jesus Christ, (it is the same from everlasting to everlasting), having the naked form of godliness, devoid of the power and life thereof. It is not our purpose in this article to prove the apostacy, for one need only look at poor destitute Christianity and compare her lifeless form with that of the living Church of Christ, with inspiration coursing through every vein, and all parts working in perfect harmony, to realize the utter deficiency and marked depart. ure. Our epistle is to encourage the Saints and Elders of Israel.

Today the all-searching eye of science and revelation, both ancient and modern, is making known the unreasonableness and errors manifest in many of the dogmas and theories of Christianity, and confirming and indorsing the truths of that which the world calls "Mormonism." As a result, many of the more intelligent and thinking class of people are becoming agnostic and infidelic in their views upon religion, for they see the many inconsistencies which Christianity has been palming off upon the world, and trying to crowd down the throats of humankind. Not willing to sacrifice their good names and become connected with the universally despised, and everywhere spoken against Mormons, they endeavor to blunt their finer sensibilities, and deaden their spiritual passions, by saying, "There is no God. I don't believe."

Germany, one of the most intelligent nations under the sun, and perhaps the leading country of the century in education, produces more infidels and agnostics than any other land, and daily they are increasing to such an alarming extent that the success of the Church is in jeopardy, owing to its continual leakage. In our own country the same spirit is taking root in the minds of many, as is also true in all the civilized countries of the world. Why is it? Is it not because the traditions and error in so-called Christianity, when unveiled by reason and revelation, cause men to reject the whole system as a fraud forged upon the human family?

The thinking class of men find it impossible to associate the terms, God of truth, unchangeable, everlasting, whose spirit breathes love and peace, mercy and justice, with the generally accepted theory of God in Christendom, together with its decayed fruits. On all sides you hear the freethinker and agnostic declare, "Behold your God, a being whose spirit incites His children to contention and strife, yea, even to mobocracy and murder, that their sect might prevail! Could I worship a God like that? No, my principles of freedom and right are superior to those of creed and sect, and so I will remain apart from them. To join a Christian church is almost to admit that I am willing to persesute, misrepresent and slander my fellows of some other denomination, to say nothing about the unscriptural and unreasonable theories I will have to believe in. No, away with such a religion, for your acts are not only unjust, unfair, erroneous and false, but also unscriptural, unreasonable, inconsistent and illogical."

To this assault upon the religion of Jesus, the so-called Christian world are totally unable to reply with satisfaction or conviction. For them to attempt to defend their positions from Holy Writ, means to expose to light their own weak, shallow foundation, which is in contradiction to primitive Christianity; and to apply the searchlight of reason to their creeds is dangerous in the extreme, because that would disclose such egregrious errors that to attribute them to a God of intelligence, justice, mercy and truth, would be to exalt the intelligence of man above that of God—a most reasonable state of affairs! What can be done for those whose intelligence has lifted them above superstition and dogmatic assertions? There can be only one answer. If ever they are converted to true Christianity—the principles of truth revealed by Christ, and taught by His Apostles—it will be done by appealing to their intelligence and reason. They are not to be duped with a simple assertion or dogmatic assumption, based upon sheer superstition. No! Reason must play her part in the role of conversion; for she is a gift of God destined to lead man into truth, so far as the finite mind can comprehend, and she must not be ignored or neglected.

As Latter-day Saints, we are able to give a reason for the hope within. We know that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is true, that it has God for its author, and Reason as a supporter, while science is an advocate. We are not afraid to have the principles of our religion exposed to the searching ray of Scripture, reason, or science. Our belief, mode of worship, conduct towards others, and organization, may be searched with the scrutinizing eye of revelation, and she will fail to point out one defect, flaw, or fault, in the whole fabric or system.

For seventy years passed the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as revealed in these "Last Days," has withstood all the forces of reason, all the powers of revelation, yea, more, it has withstood the more horrible, yet less forcible opposition—fire, smoke, blood, and banishment, and still it stands even firmer than before, unshaken in its purposes, unmoved from its foundation, like the mighty Rock of Gibraltar, 'gainst which the angry waves of sectarian hate dash only to rebound a mass of foam and spray. The walls of superstition shake, totter, tremble, and soon will fall, but truth will stand unmoved amid the battle's din, triumphant in the end!

Brother R. S. Humphries and wife called at the office on their return trip from the west, where they have been spending some time in visiting friends. Brother Humphries lives at Awensdaw, S. C., and is an influential citizen of the Palm Leaf State. Sister Humphries went to Utah in June, while Brother Humphries left in the early part of September and spent a month with the Mormons. They report that they had a very enjoyable time and that they found the Mormon people, not as they had been represented in the South, but a people fraught with good deeds and abundant in loving acts. They had the privilege of attending the Semi-Annual Conference, and of sitting under the sound of the voice of Living Oracles of God, who spoke with authority and power as the Spirit gave them utterance and not as the Scribes and Pharisees. They feel amply repaid for time they have spent in the Sego Lily State, and only have words of praise for the people of Deseret. It is good to meet with those who have the manly and womanly courage to speak of people as they are, and these folk are just the very ones that are true to themselves and to their fellowmen, let them be what they may, religiously, politically or otherwise. "Stand for the right and let us speak of all the best that we can," is the motto of Brother and Sister Humphries.

FREEDOM AND EDUCATION.

It is often urged by those who do not know our people as they really are, but who are willing to believe the rank assertions of our enemies, that we are a low, debased, immoral, godless sect; that our leaders and chief officials have ever been the worst kind of men, and have strenuously and successfully kept us in the dark, duped and hoodwinked; reveling in ignorance. The people of the world, generally speaking, are inclined to look upon what they term "the Mormon Priesthood," as an awful, fearful, hierarchy, organized for the sole purpose of despotism, militarism and politicalism. They imagine it a political machine, which crushes all who dare oppose its progress, and seeks to gain control of the government at large. They suppose that it thrives best where ignorance prevails, and that it contravenes intelligence and education, desirous of remaining in the dark rather than being exposed by the light.

Those who believe the above assertions are indeed and in truth the ignorant ones; for had they searched beyond the denunciations of our bitter opponents; had they been fair-minded enough to hear both sides of the matter; and did they but really know something about our people, they would not indulge in such vain and malicious sophistry, but would be eager to partake of the Truth, to accept it, and live up to it. The Mormon people are not ignorant. Mormonism does not flourish in ignorance, but to the contrary, she has taught, from the commencement, that "no man can be saved in ignorance," and that "the glory of God is intelligence." Trace the history of the Mormon people, and it will be seen that they have been staunch advocates of education, believing that by this means the people are enlightened, which enlightenment is absolutely necessary for the advancement and progression of God's work on earth. As early as 1832 the Prophet Joseph Smith received a revelation from the Lord, in which the following was enjoined upon the Saints of God, by way of commandment: "Seek ye diligently, and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (Doc. and Cov., Page 318:118). From this one can readily observe that the Saints were not to remain ignorant, but that they were commanded to search out of the best books, and teach one another words of wisdom.

Mormonism grants more freedom, and perfect liberty to its communicants than any other organized body of religious worshippers under the sun. When we say "freedom and perfect liberty," we mean freedom to serve God and "perfect liberty" to advance in the paths of holiness and peace, not freedom and liberty to do evil, but freedom and liberty to do good; for it is neither freedom nor liberty that allows man the right to do wrong, but license, which we do not grant—they may have the privilege, but not the right. When Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," He did not mean that they would be released from duty or freed from service, but the "freedom" He promised was into service, into duty; in other words, they should be made free from the entanglements and bondage of sin, that they might serve Him, walk in a line of Christian duty and keep His holy commands. So it is, and thus it ever will be, with all those who earnestly desire to follow in His steps; they will ever be willing to accord to each other the liberty which makes men free!

The people called by the world "Mormons" look after the education of their children. The Herald and Presbyter of July 25th says: "And Utah, which we are hurling stones at—Utah, which we consider lost to saving grace and lots of other good things—Utah looks after the schooling of its young." And not only the young, but also for those of mature years are there institutions of learning. Yes! Utah holds her place, and ranks with the most advanced in educational facilities. The inspired men, who stand as watchers on Mount Zion, have urged the young to avail themselves of the many opportunities to obtain a good education which have been placed within their reach. They contend that Truth, Reason, Intelligence and Education go hand in hand, and are destined to gain the ascendency and supremacy over Error, Bigotry, Ignorance and Illiteracy. Those who follow the teachings and exhortations of the "Mormon Leaders," as they are called, will avail themselves of the educational facilities granted in this land of the free.

Where true education is there we shall find freedom and liberty; where ignorance prevails there we shall find bigotry and intolerance. The Gospel of Jesus Christ courts investigation by the learned, the educated and the mental giants of the land. Like Paul to Agrippa, so we to the world can say, "This thing was not done in a corner;" neither is it hidden, but all who desire can investigate its claims and scrutinize its organization and development. Priestcraft does not lead the Latter-day Saints, the Holy Spirit guides, the voice of inspiration points the way, and holy men of God receive revelation for the work of the ministry, the perfection of the Saints, the edifying of the body of Christ. Thus by love unfeigned are all the workings of Christ's people conducted. The spirit of love pervades all, and unites in one perfect whole every part of the organization. It is the spirit of God which unites the Saints, and prompts them to render obedience to those whom God hath placed over them. Education properly applied but acts as a stimulus, while freedom gives us the liberty to serve God, and become like unto our Father in heaven.

Freedom and Eucation are both honored, respected, taught and practiced by the Latter-day Saints. They are not curbed or Priest-ridden, but are free to act and choose for themselves. They affirm that all mankind have their free agency; that it is given them of God, and no one has the right to suppress, coerce, or intimidate them in the exercise of the same. Freedom and Education will make the world better, brighter, lovelier far! We crave it, seek to bring about its glorious reign, and welcome all who strive to facilitate these two grand principles—Freedom and Education.

President W. D. Rencher, of the Georgia Conference, called at the Office en route to his home in Eager, Arizona. This is the second mission that Elder Rencher has filled in the Southern States. His first mission was spent in Mississippi, where he labored some twenty-seven months, during which time he acted as president of that Conference, being engaged in this responsible position for about one year. The first six months of his second mission, the one from which he is now honorably released, was spent in Mississippi, after which he assumed the reins of conference affairs in Georgia; this makes something like two years and six months that he has acted as Conference President. He returns feeling well repaid for the time spent in the service of the Lord, and is filled with the spirit of his mission, crowned with honor and success, and enriched with the blessings of the Holy Priesthood. President Rencher will act as an instructor in the St. John's Stake Academy, Arizona, and we wish him success and joy in that line, even as he has been successful and found joy in his missionary labor.

History of the Southern States Mission.

November, 1899—The month began with beautiful weather and the health of the Elders generally good. The work was prospering, but as the time for congress to assemble drew near the ministers became more bitter and aggressive in their efforts to stir up prejudice against the Elders and their teachings, the subject, as before stated, being centered in the case of Elder B. H. Roberts.

President Rich began his tour over the Mission, and on the 4th and 5th held conference in North Carolina, at Goldsboro. The Elders met with much opposition and were forced to use a vacant lot for the purpose of holding services, as no building in the burg could be procured. This condition was the work of professed servants of God, who were no doubt fearful that their salaries would diminish and their craft be in danger if the people learned the truth about the Mormons.

The Virginia Conference convened in Richmond on the 5th and 6th. The newspapers were fair and gave an unbiased report, but still the same opposition caused by the anti-Roberts crusade was met. One minister stood at the door leading to the conference meeting place and entreated the people not to go in.

On the 7th Elders F. P. Carlisle and J. E. Myler received a whipping at the hands of a mob. This occurred five miles from Morganton, Ky. President B. F. Price sent in an account of the mobbing which can be found on page 413 of Vol. 1. Nov. 11th and 12th, conference was held at Knoxville, Tenn., with the Elders of the East Tennessee Conference. The public meetings were fairly well attended and a good time was had. The newspapers were very fair, although the ministers, as usual, were bitter in their denunciations of the Mormon people. The new town hall was very generously tendered and four meetings were held therein.

At Hopkinsville, Ky., on the 15th and 16th, the Kentucky Conference was held. The people of the city treated the Elders with due respect and not a few came out to the meetings. A large number of Saints were present and a most enjoyable time was had. On the 19th and 20th the Elders of the North Alabama Conference met at Tuscaloosa, Ala., in annual meeting. Some very strong opposition was here met with, and the papers were full of all sorts of mean things about the Mormons. The North Kentucky Conference convened in Louisville, Ky., on Nov. 25th and 26th, and the Elders of the Ohio Conference met at Columbus, Ohio, on the 28th and 29th. Successful meetings were held at both these places and a time of enjoyment was had by the Elders.

Florida reported success in the cities of Cammilla, Ocala, Fitzgerald, Pelham, Tipton and Quincy. President Osmer D. Flake reported the following from Mississippi: During the month three parishes in Louisiana were opened, viz., St. James, St. Bernard and Plaquemine. In the first the Elders met but little success and only a few meetings were held; were disturbed by mobs several times, and pelted with eggs, until finally, after a stay of two weeks, they were driven out by a mob, who told the Elders (M. N. Fisher and M. E. Gifford) that the people there were all good Catholics and Baptists, and wanted no Mormon preachers. In St. Bernard parish Elders J. W. Vance and Wm. Isom found but few white folks and no hospitality. They were forced to sleep in the woods part of the time. E. R. DeWitt and E. T. Kingsford met with very little encouragement in Plaquemine parish. Were compelled to go without food for three nights at a time, and one night had two shots fired at them.

President J. U. Allred, of the Middle Tennessee Conference, reported that much trouble was experienced in getting a place of meeting for conference. This was owing to the anti-Mormon sentiment created by anti-Mormon mass meetings.

The month closed with the health of the Elders generally good.

Letter from Elder Charles G. Larsen.

As I have had the sad news reach me a short time back of the death of my beloved mother, I thought I would write a short biography of her life, and if you see fit you may place it in The Star.

Annie Sophia Larsen was born in Sweden, Oct. 12, 1839. At the age of 17 years she embraced the Gospel of Jesus Christ as taught by the Elders in that land. In the year 1875, in company with her husband, she emigrated to the land of Zion, and lived in Utah until the year 1881, when they move to Idaho (Oakley) and lived there until her death, which occurred on July 21, 1900.

She had been a faithful member until her death. She leaves a loving husband and four children to mourn her loss. The eldest (Charles G.) was laboring in the state of North Carolina as an embassador of Truth when the sad news reached him of her death.

If you can find space in your valuable paper to copy the above biography I will be pleased. Please correct all errors and arrange it different if you see fit.

It was hard for me, when I received the news of her death, for I know that I have lost my best friend on earth. I hope to live so when I am called to leave this probation I may be permitted to meet her again, for I know she has filled her mission with honor both to her God and family. I will close, hoping this will meet your approval. I remain your brother in the Gospel of Christ,

Charles G. Larsen.

CONSOLATION FOR A BEREAVED MOTHER.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 10, 1900.

Mrs. E. H. Bronson, Fairview, Idaho:

My Dear Sister:—I feel it my bounden duty to write you a few lines with a sincere hope that I may say something that will tend to console and comfort you in the hour of your grief and affliction. I know that it is hard to part with those we love; we are loath to return those precious jewels which the Lord so kindly tendered to our care—even our beloved children. Yes, they are jewels of priceless worth, and to part with them gives sorrow of heart, but could we penetrate the dimming vail which separates us from them, methinks that our heaviness would be turned to joy, our grief to gladness, and our sorrow to enraptured bliss.

What is this mortal life but the school room in which we are trained for a higher and a better life; in which we are disciplined for a grander sphere, and taught those Holy Laws that prepare the soul and pave the way to the blessed boon we all would gain, even life eternal in the kingdom of God. Yes, this life is the university, in which we gain a varied experience, and from which we are destined to graduate to a higher grade, providing that we learn our lessons well, and pass the final examination. As in the college, so is it in real life; when we graduate from this mortal sphere it is but the commencement exercise for another grade, which is higher, brighter and nobler far than this present one.

Temptations beset us on every hand; tribulation, affliction and trials meet us in the way, and obstacles arise before us. Our course is not strewn with roses or paved with pearly gems; but stern reality which manifests itself in thorns and briars must be encountered on our journey. With courage and patience, faith and hope, we pursue our course, and blessed are they who have the companionship of the Holy Spirit, for then the rough places are made smooth, the obscure plain, the crooked straight, our seeming obstacles surmounted, while we are enabled to endure our trials and tribulations with fortitude and long-suffering. Oh! the Spirit is a wonderful Comforter, a Holy Guide, a divine Companion! Were it not so, then life would be miserable indeed, but now we can have joy, not joy because trials await us, but because of the more abundant life which is promised to the obedient and the faithful. "Adam fell that man might be and men are that they might have joy." We are here that we might have joy, and you will remember that Jesus said: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Do we perform our part well here, then we shall be raised to higher stations. Do we honor God and love Him here, then He will honor us and love us there! He is merciful, He is kind, He is loving, He is just, and if we only trust Him to the end, He will prove His love and mercy by exalting us in glory with the redeemed!

The kindred affection of a mother to her boy is centered in a mould that is finely fashioned, and touched with love's pure finger—the heart. Under the home roof you have seen him grow from childhood to manhood. You have given him the strengthening nutriment, you have nursed him in sickness, nourished and cared for him while under your paternal keeping, and when he honored the call to perform a mission to the people of the Southern States, and the hour to say good-bye arrived, you bade him God-speed with a mother's blessing. He went as a true and trusted soldier to his post of duty; you thought of him when he was far away; yes, thought of him all the livelong day; and when the shades of evening fell, you knelt before the Throne of Grace and prayed the Lord to bless him.

The Lord heard your supplication in his behalf, and blessed your darling boy so that he prospered to a marked degree. Yes, he became a mighty worker in the vineyard of the Lord, enlisting his every effort for the advancement of God's righteous purposes upon the earth, wielding the sword of truth and proving himself a power for good wherever he went. His companions loved him, and he was beloved by all who knew him. Always ready and willing to assist a brother, lending a helping hand to all, making himself useful and beneficial to those who stood in need, and when, in a righteous endeavor to aid his companions, he met his sad and sudden death in the turbulent waters of a treacherous stream, his spirit returned to that God in whose service he was engaged.

All that remains of his earthly tabernacle has been casketed and returned to the home of his childhood, but you, dear sister, his loving mother, will not grieve as those who have no hope. Mother! Sister! you will meet your son again, know his gladsome features, you have marked his cheerful smile when he played around your knee in infancy, and you will know him when the trumpet of God shall sound and the dead in Christ shall rise. You will know him, and he will know you and then shall we all know and realize that "God doeth all things well."

I pray the Lord to bless you, and comfort you; to bestow in your grief-stricken home the Spirit of consolation, and shed around you that benign influence which makes the mourner to rejoice and the sad to find joy in the Lord.

Your loving sister and true friend,

Nina F. Rich.

SOUTHERN BOXERS.

Sept. 29, Elders C. G. Anderson and George O. Holt entered a little settlement called King's Creek, in Cherokee county, for the purpose of visiting some Saints whom they had recently baptized. Just before reaching their destination they were accosted by eight men, who warned them to leave inside of two hours, and were only protected then from the cowardly assaults of the villians by a man who interfered in behalf of the Elders. After dusk a mob of thirty-five men started upon the track of the Elders, but were confused in the route of the brethren and abandoned the pursuit.

Oct. 6th, Elders J. P. Illum and J. T. Lazenby were passing through the same neighborhood, en route to Blacksburg, and were evidently followed and located at the home of Brother J. L. Etters, at Blacksburg, by three men. Elder Lazenby was sick and went to bed as soon as he arrived. Elders Anderson, Holt and Illum held meeting the same night at the home of Brother Sanders. After meeting Elder Anderson returned with Brother and Sister Etters, where Elder Lazenby had been left sick in bed.

About 11 o'clock, as they all sat enjoying a pleasant conversation, their peace and silence was broken by confusion and clamour like a pack of Russian wolves in the act of surrounding their helpless victims. The house was soon surrounded and filled with cowardly fiends, who bore every characteristic quality of the Prince of Darkness. One miserable coward drew a gun on Sister Etters when she interferred in behalf of the Elders, and threatened to treat her like they intended to mete out to the Elders. Brother Etters also was covered by two or more guns, as was Elder Anderson.

In the meantime several men entered an adjoining room, in which Elder Lazenby was sleeping, and cruelly dragged him from his bed and started with him in the direction of the woods, with no other clothing on than his garments.

Upon trying to reason with the mobocrats, Elder Lazenby was struck over the head with a weapon, which nearly rendered him unconscious. Elder Anderson was pulled out of the house by four men, and taken with Elder Lazenby into the woods, where the mob's horses were tied.

Elder Anderson was partly stripped of his clothing and given forty lashes, while Elder Lazenby was given but eighteen, because of its being his first entrance into the county. They then were released and warned to leave the state at once, under penalty of hanging. Elders Holt and Illum, who were stopping at the home of Brother Gordon, were at once notified of the presence of a mob, and found refuge in the woods.

The mob, which consisted of thirty-five men, then went six miles to Cherokee Falls, and severely whipped Brother Thomas Martin, who has just recently joined the Church.

Elder Nix and I, on the afternoon of the mobbing, went over the line into North Carolina to see some Saints. On entering a little town named Grover we were informed by a man that there was a mob after us. We took no notice of the rumor, but continued on to our destination, supposing our presence was the cause of the action. Monday we returned and learned of the trouble; also that part of the men had come from North Carolina. We went at once to the officials at Blacksburg, whose duty it is to maintain peace and order, and asked for protection, as a petition to ostracize and drive out the Elders, Saints and friends from the county has been and now is in circulation among our enemies.

The justice of the peace gave us no satisfaction whatever and intimated by his prejudiced conversation that his code of laws afforded no justice for a "Mormon," which indeed was amply proven by remarks made by him to one of our members, in which he said: "The law can't get at the "Mormon Elders" for preaching their doctrine; neither can the law get at those who mob them."

There is an effort now on the part of these fiends to effect a union between the merchants and millers to prevent the Saints and friends from getting food and supplies.

As is invariably the case, we have found at the head of this mob a man who professes to be preaching the Gospel of Christ and who pretends to teach those righteous principles which will result in the universal brotherhood of mankind. Among the mob also was a merchant and others quite as prominent. May the Lord have mercy on their poor souls, should they ever be considered worthy of beholding His presence on the day of judgment.

FOR THE RELIGIOUS.

BY ELDER N. D. FORSYTH.

It is strange to observe that people who claim to be so much wrought upon by the extension and forceful rays of enlightenment that is said to have come down to them, will make null and void their affirmation by endeavoring to facilitate the downfall of their fellowman by misrepresentation and fraud.

One would naturally think that where such perfect systems of ethics and religion existed there would be seen manifest but few of the fruits of the evil spirit. Especially would he look for their comparative scarcity among those of the "regenerated" who profess to have been called to the very grave and responsible work of preaching the gospel of peace. It would be only reasonable to expect that the predominence of education over ignorance would mean the decline of at least such earthly features as narrow-mindedness and bigotry.

If modern Christianity be the embodiment of all that has been given for the perfection of mankind, in short, if it be, as it is often claimed, the culmination of that progressive system which Jesus Christ established 1900 years ago, the observer is compelled to either take the very critical position that its evolution has been on the road of degeneracy and it is now sadly in need of reconstruction, or, that like causes will not produce like effects.

In the person of Jesus Christ, the founder of ancient Christianity, may be recognized the beneficent and admirable effects of the system he practiced. His mind, we find, was too full of such virtues as meekness, gentleness, love and charity, to allow any room whatever for such wretched and demoralizing vices as are to be seen emanating from the more conspicuous figures in modern Christendom.

Therefore, in keeping with the former position, we wish to say that we are personally acquainted with professed ambassadors of our Lord who, by manifesting evil fruits, not only lead us to discredit the idea of their being His true followers, but who persist in exposing their gross ignorance by clinging tenaciously to and teaching time-worn and truth-subverted ideas the absurdity of which common intelligence would readily teach, for the purpose of harming a cause with the true merits of which they are quite unfamiliar.

Prominent among the many ideas which are now and then rehashed for evil purposes, is that concerning the tragedy of Cane Creek. It is the general impression among those who know no better than to believe all their pastor tells them, that the reason why the Mormon Elders were killed, was because they not only taught but practiced a part of their devilish system which is so repugnant to the virtueloving minds of the people who thus exhibited their heroism.

It is also believed that the hero (B. H. Roberts) who rescued the dead bodies, stepped far beyond the bounds of manly conduct and bravery by disguising himself and deceiving the fiendish cowards, who were anxious to further exhibit their brutish power.

For the benefit of the blind, both those who do not see and those who do not wish to see, we herewith give information reliable, having taken pains to investigate the matter to the extent of visiting personally the spot where the Elders were killed, and getting the direct testimony of the parties most familiar with the case. Also the direct testimony of those assisting in the recovery of the dead bodies.

To whom it may concern:

With the view of correcting the erroneous ideas which seem to be prevalent regarding the Cane Creek tragedy, the undersigned being personally acquainted with the whole affair, solemnly bear our testimony to the effect that, not only was it an event absolutely uncalled for, but was wholly and perfectly out of order. The men who were thus called to yield up their lives for the sake of what they believed to be the Gospel, were to the best of our knowledge, honest, upright, straightforward and virtuous men. Never in all our experience with them did we see anything in their characters unbecoming perfect gentlemen and true servants of their Master. The many evil reports circulated about them were, to our knowledge, entirely without foundation. And we are forced to say that they were innocent and defenseless men martyred in cold blood.

The mob who perpetrated the cowardly deed was composed of men who had neither respect for themselves nor regard for the rights and privileges of others They were intolerant, they were ignorant, they were barbarious. And they premeditatedly and without the least cause committed the crime which now brands them as cowards and murderers.

Elisha Talley, Malinda Condor, Bannister Talley, Mary Ann Sealey, Wm. J. Condor.

To whom it may concern:

As it is thought by many that Elder B. H. Roberts of the Mormon Church, resorted to illegitimate means in the recovery of the bodies of Elders Gibbs and Berry, who were martyred Aug. 10, 1884, by a mob on Cane Creek, and, being asked to publish our knowledge concerning the affair, we, the undersigned, being participants in the work, solemnly testify that the means adopted by Elder Roberts and ourselves was wholly and strictly justifiable. Under such conditions as then existed we deemed it quite inadvisable to endanger our lives by proceeding to the task under the leadership of one known to be a Mormon Elder. For truly the lives of such people were then in danger. The mob would have gladly treated him as they had treated his brethren. The means he devised and the courage he exhibited were only indications of wisdom and true heroism on his part.

Henry H. Harlow, Wm. Church.

It is hoped that the above will be carefully considered, especially by those who are occupied in teaching religious truths to people who confide in their doctrine.

THE DEAD.

Miss Maud E., the 15-year-old daughter of Jesse J. and Martha A. Price, departed this life Aug. 30th, 1900. Brother Price's whole family are faithful Latter-day Saints, and Miss Maud was baptized Aug. 27th, 1897, and lived a true Christian ever since. She was loved by all who knew her, and bore the pain of a billious fever with wonderful fortitude. Her people are comforted with a hope of a reunion in eternity on the morning of the first resurrection.

Edgar Lee, the sweet little baby boy of sister Doaralles Bonner, of Blackburn, La., passed away from this mortal probation on the 20th of August, 1900. He was a dear little child, beloved by all who knew him, a joy and a comfort to his parents, and the life of the family, so that his loss is greatly felt in the home of his childhood. The loving mother has been sore afflicted with grief over the loss of her darling boy, and still mourns for him. It is hard to part with those we love, but we know that they have gone to the home of a loving Father in heaven, and they await our coming, for "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Little ones are made alive in Christ, and through His atoning blood are they fully redeemed from all sin: therefore we need not mourn their departure from this earth of sorrow, grief and pain. Our seeming loss is their ultimate gain, and all is well! We shall meet again and they will know us, and if we are worthy of their sweet and pure society, then we shall once more clasp them to loving hands and enjoy their innocent companionship. The little boy was almost 4 years old, and was a great favorite with the Elders who have labored in that community. We trust that the Elders will write to the bereaved parents and counsel them in the hour of their sad affliction.

WHILST THERE'S LIFE THERE'S WORK TO DO

Whatever thy place in life may be,
List to my motto—you'll find it true;
There is a mission appointed thee,
And whilst there's life there is work to do.

Be thine a rich or a poor estate,
Work on, work on, but withal be true;
And thou wilt find that it is thy fate,
Whilst thou hast life to have work to do.

And if ourselves no help we need,
As this life's journey we travel through,
How many we find to prove indeed
That whilst we live there is work to do.

Then whatsoever thy lot may be,
List to my motto, you'll find it true;
There is a mission appointed thee,
And whilst there's life there is work to do.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE FRANKLIN D. RICHARDS

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

Apostle Franklin Dewey Richards was born in Richmond, Berkshire county, Mass., April 2d, 1821. He was the son of Phineas and Wealthy Dewey Richards, and was the fourth born of nine children. Like most all of his early associates in the Church, he was of the old New England race, who had distinguished themselves in the early settlement of our country by toil, courage and patriotism to the young Republic. Franklin was raised on a farm, and by no means a stranger to hard work. He early displayed a strong desire for education and used his spare time in seeking for treasures of knowledge. Before he was 10 years old he had perused every book in the Sunday School, which comprised several volumes, and at 13 he attended for one winter the Lenox Academy. His parents were devout Congregationalists and trained their children in strict piety. Franklin early developed strong impressions of a religious character. He was so decided in his views that he differed with most of the people around him on Scriptural points of doctrine. Because of this he declined a special offer made him to be educated for the sectarian ministry. Elders Brigham and Joseph Young visited Richmond in 1836 and presented the Restored Gospel. Franklin read the Book of Mormon, accepted it as the truth, and later, when his father went to Kirtland, O., with his younger brother, George Spencer Richards, they were baptized into the Church. On his return to Kirtland he found his son, Franklin, ready for baptism and administered that ordinance to him June 3d, 1838, in his native town. Oct. 22d, 1838, he bade adieu to his native home to cast his lot with the persecuted Saints in Far West, Mo. While crossing the Alleghenies he received the sad tidings of his brother, George S. Richards, being assassinated at Haun's Mill, Mo. Undaunted, he journeyed on to Missouri, and soon after his arrival found employment along the Mississippi river. In May, 1839, he first met the Prophet Joseph Smith. The following spring he was ordained a Seventy and went on a mission to Northern Indiana. He was very successful and soon established a branch of the Church in Porter county. Before he attained his twentieth anniversary he delivered a series of public lectures, which attracted much attention and left a lasting impression upon the minds of those who were in attendance. He attended the laying of the corner stone of the Temple in Nauvoo at the April Conference in 1841, and then resumed his labors in Indiana. He continued his missionary work, though sick with fever most of the time. In December, 1842, he married Jane Snyder. In May, 1844, he was ordained a High Priest, and started on a mission to England, but hearing the sad news of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, he returned to Nauvoo. In the fore part of 1845 he traveled over 1,000 miles in gathering means for the Nauvoo Temple.

After this he was called to be a Scribe in the office of Church Historian. He also labored as a carpenter and joiner on the Temple. He received his endowments in the Temple and subsequently officiated in administering the ordinances to others. In the exodus of 1846 he sacrificed his little home, built by his own hands, and started his family westward with the moving Camp of Israel. After seeing his family driven into the wilderness he turned his face eastward, and with true heroism left to fulfill his mission in England. Franklin possessed the faith of the ancient Apostles, for with meager clothing and almost destitute of money he made his way to the Atlantic coast and thence across the mighty deep to the shores of Europe. Before leaving the shore of America the last word he received from the exiled Saints was that his wife had given birth to a baby boy and she was lying at the point of death. With this additional trial he resolutely commended his family to the Lord, pursued his way to England. Upon his arrival in Europe he was appointed to preside over the Church in Scotland. Shortly afterward he became one of President Orson Spencer's Counselors over the British Mission. He was then 25 years old, and through the serious sickness of President Spencer Elder Richards sustained the responsibility of virtually presiding over the entire Mission. He labored efficiently and faithfully until Feb. 20th, 1848, when he started homeward, in charge of a large company of emigrating Saints. During his mission he received the sad news that his brother, Joseph William Richards, had succumbed to death while marching as a member of the Mormon battalion. Brother Franklin's daughter, Wealthy, had also died during his absence. Upon his return he found his wife and their relatives who had survived the perils of the exodus at St. Louis, Mo. This was the middle of May, 1848. In June he went to Southern Iowa to buy cattle with which to move the company under the direction of his uncle Willard Richards across the plains. The company left for Salt Lake Valley July 5th, 1848, with Franklin as Captain of fifty. The journey was a most trying one, as Sister Richards was very sick nearly the entire distance, but by the blessings of the Lord and kind, helpful friends she survived the journey and is today one of the Presidency of the Relief Societies throughout the Church. They reached their destination Oct. 19th, 1848, with hearts of gratitude to God to be once more with the body of the Church, and especially far removed from the scenes of mobocracy and persecution. Elder Richards exchanged his cloak and other available articles of clothing for building material, and by dint of honest toil and hard labor constructed a small room in which they sojourned during the winter. While dwelling in this humble adobe habitation he was called to receive his ordination to the Apostleship Feb. 12th, 1849. He immediately became associated with the leading men of the community in forming the provisional government of the State of Deseret, in Church work generally, and was very active in establishing the Perpetual Emigration Fund. In October, 1849, he was again called to Europe to continue his missionary labors in a foreign land. He traveled across the continent and ocean with Apostles John Taylor, Lorenzo and Erastus Snow, with other Elders. Hostile Indians, inclement weather, icy streams, etc., went to make up an eventful journey. January, 1850, they visited friends and Saints in St. Louis. They arrived in Great Britain March, 1850. This was an eventful year in the history of the Church, so far as spreading the Gospel abroad is concerned. President Taylor was sent to open the door of salvation to the French nation, Lorenzo Snow to Italy, Erastus Snow to Scandinavia. Orson Pratt was presiding in Liverpool, but being called hastily to Council Bluffs, Brother Franklin was left to edit the Millennial Star and preside over the British Mission. He founded the Perpetual Emigration Fund in England on a solid basis, and labored efficiently in every department. Apostle Pratt returned to England. Elder Richards became his assistant, and upon the release of Brother Pratt in 1851 Apostle Richards became President of the British Mission. With energy and great zeal himself and fellow-laborers spread the Gospel throughout the British Isles. He increased the labors in the Liverpool office very materially. In a short time he revised and published a 25,000 edition of the Hymn Book, a new edition of P. P. Pratt's Voice of Warning, stereotyped the Doctrine and Covenants, prepared and published the Pearl of Great Price, paid an interesting visit to Elder Taylor in France, and from 1850 to 1852 about 16,000 souls had been added to the Church by baptism in the British Mission. He started to Zion the first company of Saints which sailed from Europe under regulations of the Perpetual Emigration Fund, with Apostle Erastus Snow, arranged for the organization of a company to manufacture iron in Utah.

Soon after his return he was again elected to the Legislature and resumed his labors as a law-maker. Early in 1853 he participated in the dedication of the Temple grounds, and laying the corner stones thereof in Salt Lake City. In July of this year he went to Iron county to establish iron works, but this project, under existing conditions, was impracticable. While there Gov. Young and Lieut.-Gen. Wells issued military orders, owing to Indian hostilities. Brother Richards labored faithfully in gathering in the outposts, changing the site of Cedar City and preparing the people to resist the aggressions of the Indians. Returning to Salt Lake City, he was just in time to witness the decease of his mother. He returned to Iron county in October, 1853, and labored there until called to his Legislative work in the winter. While in Salt Lake City he was notified to prepare again for the British Mission. Before leaving he dedicated his home, property and all he possessed to the Lord. He reached England June 4th, 1854, and immediately assumed the responsibilities of the Mission. His letter of appointment from the Presidency implied the amalgamation of the European Missions all under one head, as it authorized to him "to preside over all the Conferences and all the affairs of the Church in the British Isles and adjacent countries." While presiding in Europe he visited the continent, promoting the interests of the Gospel of peace and harmony among the people. It was during this mission that Brother Richards baptized that noble man who has done so much for Zion, especially the youth, in religious and secular education —Dr. Karl G. Maeser. In 1855 he secured for the growing necessities of the Mission the premises now renowned as 42 Islington, which have been occupied from that time to the present as the Mission headquarters. In October, 1855, under President Richards' personal direction, the Saxon Mission was established in Dresden, which has yielded many intelligent converts to the faith.

He was constant in his travels, and it was also within his province to direct the branches in the East Indies, Africa, Australia and other parts, which required the concentration of every interest, with an eye ever single to the glory of God. Brother Franklin was probably better informed on every detail of foreign Missions than any other man. Previous to leaving for his home the Presidents of Conferences met in London and paid a glowing tribute of respect and esteem to President Franklin D. Richards. Oct. 4th, 1856, he once more reached his mountain home. He again became a member of the Utah Legislature, and was re-elected a regent of the Deseret University. April 20th, 1857, he was elected and commissioned Brigadier-General of the Second Brigade of Infantry of the Nauvoo Legion. During the Johnston army troubles he was engaged with a detachment from his brigade to support Gen. Wells in Echo Canyon. With others he left his property to be committed to the flames in case the army persisted in driving the Saints from their homes and despoiling them of their property. July 21st, 1859, he began a political tour in Southern Utah to arrange for the election of a delegate to Congress. Upon his return to Salt Lake City he was appointed with President John Taylor to meet two companies of emigrants, many of whom were old and endeared associates of these two Apostles. During the seven years following he was laboring chiefly among the Saints. His labors were varied and multifarious, ecclesiastical, political, mill building and agriculture. He was never idle, but the embodiment of industry with hand and brain. July 29th, 1866, he was again called on a mission to Europe, was on the way in two weeks, reached Liverpool Sept. 11th, 1866, and immediately commenced a tour of the Conferences, including Scandinavia and several continental Conferences. In July, 1866, he again became President of the entire Mission. He had a noble corps of Elders to labor in the various fields, and the year following Great Britain alone furnished over 3,400 souls for baptism into the Church, and in about the same time more than 3,000 Saints emigrated to Utah. Up to this time sailing vessels were used for transporting the Saints to America, but President Richards, looking to the future, deemed this inadequate, and changed from the sailing vessel to the steamship, and this has continued until the present time.

This was Apostle Richards' last foreign mission. He had crossed the ocean eight times, and had spent much of his time in the ministry abroad. Under his supervision, the Lord directing him, many thousands of souls had embraced the Gospel, and a much greater number gathered to Zion. His missionary zeal had not abated, but his wise counsels were needed at home with the body of the Church. A new experience in his labors now came to him. In February, 1869, he was elected Probate Judge of Weber county. He occupied this position for fourteen years. He served with great ability and wisdom, making friends on every hand. He was familiarly called by business and political men "Judge Richards." He had many warm friends among the non-Mormon population of the community. Ogden City and Weber county are recognized as next in importance to Salt Lake City and county, and much of the growth and progress of Weber is due to the potent influence of Brother Richards. Up to this time Ogden had no paper. He established and for some time edited the Ogden Junction, which subsequently took the title of the Ogden Herald and is still running. He did much to improve the schools of Weber county. He organized societies which preceded the Mutual Improvement Associations, and originated a plan by which the youth of Weber county, without cost, could hear the most talented lecturers of Utah on scientific and other subjects. He taught the people by precept and example how to avoid the influence of the mixed population so rapidly gathering into Ogden City, and how to make home pleasant and attractive. During his administration of fourteen years as Probate Judge no decision of his was ever reversed by a higher tribunal. Hundreds of cases of divorce, land estates and land suits were brought before him. He adjudicated the land titles of Huntsville, North Ogden and Plain City. None of these arrangements were ever set aside by any court. Besides these, he had many criminal cases presented before him, the decisions in none of which have ever been reversed. His administration financially was also a great success. Roads were built, and many bridges. The only toll road in the county, the one through Ogden Canyon, was purchased and made free. His position had no salary attached, and yet he labored with unselfish devotion to the county and people. The expenses of the county were maintained entirely free from debt. He continued a member of the Legislature, traveled, preached and counseled throughout the Territory.

He assisted President Young in organizing nearly all the Stakes of Zion up to the decease of President Brigham Young. Nearing the close of his official career, Congress passed a law known as the "Hoar Amendment," which authorized the Governor to fill vacancies caused by failure to elect officers at the August election of 1882. By claim of authority from this act Gov. Murray appointed James N. Kimball Probate Judge of Weber county. Judge Richards denied the vacancy, and Mr. Kimball instituted a mandamus suit to compel a relinquishment of the office and records to him. The District Court decided in favor of Mr. Kimball. Judge Richards appealed to the Supreme Court of the Territory, which affirmed the lower court. He then appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it rested until the time of Mr. Kimball's appointed term had run out. This was a test case, and had it not been contested with determination the Governor's appointees would have displaced the officers elected by the people, and thus given the political control into the hands of the "Liberal Party."

For many years Apostle Richards was Church Historian and General Church Recorder. This position he filled with usual ability and devotion until the time of his death. He was much interested in work for the dead, and had accomplished as much perhaps in this line as any other man except President Woodruff. He took great interest in the Genealogical Society of Utah, and sought to interest others.

When President Lorenzo Snow became President of the Church Brother Richards succeeded to the Presidency of the Twelve Apostles, and occupied this place when he departed this life. He was endeared to his associates and to all the Saints and many not of our faith because of his kind, affable manner. During the latter years of his life his time was chiefly occupied in the office of Historian, but he visited many of the Stakes and was faithfully industrious to the last. In the fall of 1899 he became enfeebled through strokes of paralysis, and after an illness of several weeks, accompanied by brief spells of apparent improvement, he passed quietly into the spirit at 12:14 Saturday morning, Dec. 9th, 1899, at his home in Ogden City.

President Richards was noted for the kindness of his heart, the gentleness of his manners, and his constant, unceasing devotion to the work of God, and while he has gone to the unseen world he still lives by the great labors of his life, and will be perpetuated in the love and memory of the Saints throughout all generations. His funeral was held in the Ogden Tabernacle Dec. 12th, 1899, was attended by a host of the Saints, and his remains were laid quietly to rest in the Ogden Cemetery. President Snow, his Counselors, Elder Brigham Young and others spoke at his funeral in terms of highest esteem. Among the glowing tributes of respect to the character and faith of President Richards President Joseph F. Smith said that he had seen him under such trying ordeals that few could endure, and under which President Richards had shown the patient submission, faith and devotion of Job, when he exclaimed, "Though He slay me yet will I trust in Him." The industry, integrity, faith, purity and devotion of such men will serve as a beacon light to all generations who shall read his history, bless his memory and praise God who sent him to perform his part in the great dispensation of the fulness of times.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Special traits of character inherited or developed in progenitors, frequently are seen in their posterity; and this is true to a marked degree in the subject of our sketch. President J. Spencer Worsley was born in Provo City, Utah, Oct. 17, 1878. He is the eldest child of a family of six children. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Worsley, resided in Provo City until he was 8 years of age, when they removed to Ashley Valley, Uintah county, Utah, where they resided some eight years. However, through the lack of educational facilities, due to the early growth of a new country, they returned to Provo that they might have better opportunities to educate their children. Since that time he has been compelled to pursue his search for knowledge in connection with worldly duties, which he did until December, 1898, when he received a call to take a mission to the Southern States. He then applied himself to a theological course in the Brigham Young Academy at Provo.

His labors in the missionary field prove that he has made good use of the chances he has had. On April 20, 1899, he left his home and loved ones, in obedience to the call he had received. Arriving at Chattanooga headquarters, he was assigned to labor in East Tennessee Conference, arriving at his field of labor on the 26th of the month. President Worsley comes from "good old English stock" on his father's side. His grandparents joined the Church in England, came to Nauvoo and took part in the travels and hardships in the early rise of the Church. His grandsire died at St. Louis, Mo., leaving a widow, two sons and four daughters, who are all faithful Latter-day Saints. His father is a blacksmith, which accounts for the iron will of his son in trying to do his duty in the dissemination of Gospel truths. On his mother's side his progenitors are a race of people of whom we may be proud, tracing his lineage back to the martyred Apostle David W. Patten, Titus Billings and Isaac Worley; names so prominent in the early history of the Church that it is not necessary to detail their labors. His grandfather, A. N. Billings, came to Utah in 1848, passing through all the trials of frontier life. He suffered heavy losses by Indians and other causes; was called to fill a mission to Eld Mountains, of which he had charge and built a fort near the present site of Moab, Grand county, Utah. President Worsley's mother was born in Manti, Sanpete county, Utah. Her parents moved to Provo, Utah, when she was small. She attended the best schools until she became a teacher, which prepared her to instruct her son, and the effects of her training has proved of great value to him. With such parentage and such home teaching we look for a good work from President Worsley.

Abstracts from Correspondence.

If you will kindly spare me a little space in The Star I would like to give my testimony as to the truth of the Gospel. I know that Joseph Smith, our Prophet, was sent of God to restore the Gospel in this, the last dispensation of time. I know the blessings promised of God to those who obey His ordinances are enjoyed by the faithful today, even as when the Former-day Saints were on earth, and that the signs do follow those who believe. As soon as I listened seriously to the Elders as they unfolded the plan of life and salvation I became convinced of its truth, and was baptised, on the 6th day of last May, by Elder Joseph R. Jeppson. That same night, after my baptism, my sister was taken violently ill. All the remedies we gave her failed to relieve her, and we felt she would die if she could not receive help. I asked her to have the Elders administer to her, and she consented, and immediately after fell into a sweet sleep and slept until morning. It would take too much space to tell all the things that make me know it is the true and everlasting Gospel of Jesus Christ, which was delivered by the angel to Joseph Smith, our noble Prophet, for my testimony is added to and grows stronger each day. "Line upon line and precept upon precept," the testimony is given through the whisperings of the Holy Spirit, that Comforter which was promised us by our Lord and Master ere he left us to ascend into heaven, and I would that all people and all nations might know the joy and peace which fills one's whole being when earnestly striving to follow the teachings of the Spirit, and obey the Gospel commands. May God bless and keep us each and every one, and may we hold to the iron rod until it leads us to the throne of God in His beautiful kingdom prepared for those who love Him, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

EASY TO CRITICISE.

"It is easy to sit in the sunshine
And talk to the man in the shade."
It is easy to float in a well-trimmed boat,
And point out the places to wade.

But once we pass into the shadows
We murmur and fret and frown,
And our length from the bank, we shout for a plank,
Or throw up our hands and go down.

It is easy to sit in your carriage
And counsel the man on foot;
But get down and walk and you'll change your talk,
As you feel the peg in your boot.

It is easy to tell the toiler
How best he can carry his pack;
But no one can rate a burden's weight
Until it has been on his back.

The up-curled mouth of pleasure
Can preach of sorrow's worth;
But give it a sip, and wryer lip
Was never made on earth.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

To glorify God is the mission of every soul upon the earth.

"DOING GOOD."

What volumes may be penned from these two words—"Doing Good!" What wholesome pleasure; what blessed happiness would be ours to enjoy; if every soul were but engaged in doing good! Yes! Life would be more sweet; our homes a divine abode; and the earth would be transformed into a heaven—being full of the glory of God, full of peace, bliss, unity and good-will! The secret of real joy here with a hope of eternal salvation hereafter, depends upon our conscious application of these two words, and our practical daily adoption of them. To do good, is to aid all that stand in need of our assistance, shun evil, yield not to temptation, honor your calling and prove yourself a useful instrument in the hands of a merciful God.

Peter, the Apostle, that stalwart giant of truth, while speaking to his brethren concerning the Lord Jesus, summed up the whole of the Master's life, mission and work, in these two words—Doing Good. Said he: "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with Him." It matters not where the Lord was found; whether He was in the Temple at Jerusalem; on the stormy sea of Galilee; the streets of the Holy City; the wilderness, the mount, or the Council Chamber, "He went about doing good." Yes! doing good to all; leaving blessings for the downcast; joy for the mourner; comfort for the sorrowful; strength for the afflicted, and words of light, life and truth for the children of men. His whole life was made up of acts which characterized Him as one who went about doing good! He restored to the blind their sight; to the deaf their hearing; to the dumb their speech; to the lame strength in their limbs; to the bereaved Jarius his daughter in life, and to the sorrowing widow her only son. What a wonderful life was His! How replete with blessings for all; how superabundantly kind, merciful, and forgiving was He! His was a life devoted to the will of His Father; prompted by love for the human race, crowned with a desire to do good unto others, administer to their wants, and bless them in their trials and tribulations. Well may such a noble, divine, holy life be expressed in these very significant words, "He went about doing good!"

There is a great deal of difference between trying to do good and the act of doing good! What we should aim at is the end—doing good! and not be content with the mere trial. There are a thousand ways in which we can apply ourselves in the exercise of doing good; there are innumerable avenues opened on every hand that we may traverse and find regions awaiting our administrations. There is a vast field outstretched before us and the possibilities for doing good are met on every side, so that no one need be idle or excuse themselves because of a lack of opportunity, for the field is ripe with privileges for all who are inclined to avail themselves of the same. Jesus did not merely strive to do good, but He actually went about doing good, so the Good Word informs us. May we not then naturally enough expect to find all His followers engaged in the same holy Christ-like conduct? It is the only reasonable and logical sequence; if they follow Christ they are going to be transformed into His image and likeness, and become like Him in all things.

Oh! how very true it is, that there are those who loudly profess their fidelity and loyalty to Christ and His laws; who claim Him as their Lord and King, and yet at the same time will become so loose, vile and wanton, that they will persecute, mock and revile those who may chance to differ with them as pertains to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. In persecuting your fellowman are you doing good? With hatred and malice manifested in your lives do you think for one moment that you are following the Lord, who went about doing good? Verily no! Such were impossible! When you hear some self-righteous, pious old minister belch forth a storm of anathemas, and wild denunciations against another class or sect, you may know by his mean display what is in the heart of the man. You may know by whom he is led if you will study the passions and propensities that govern his nature. We are commanded to follow the Lord and keep in His steps, then we should ever be found doing good, blessing and not cursing, alleviating and not suppressing, pointing out the way of Eternal Life, exercising towards all love unfeigned, with malice and hatred for none.

It may be that you have read lives of Christ, beautifully written with eloquent composition, and you have admired the talent of the persons who could write so well; but the best life of the Messiah is written in those words accredited to Peter; "He went about doing good!" This is a concise biography, but a remarkable one indeed, for it omits nothing and covers the whole. Do we follow Christ; do we go about doing good? Do we love Him with a pure, unselfish, disinterested love, yes, do we love Him because we are grateful to Him for His atoning sacrifice, and for His precious words of heavenly truth divine, not obedience that is prompted by force; nor of compulsion; nor of fear; but one that is influenced by the same spirit which actuated the Son of God when He said, Father, Thy will be done!—working for the honor and glory of God. The very act of doing good brings joy and gladness to the heart of the doer, and comfort and happiness to the recipient thereof. The inward peace and bliss which one feels when he is doing good is of itself sufficient to repay one for the action; but this is not all, by doing these things we not only realize joy in this life, but salvation in the life that is to come.

Let the love of Christ burn in the heart and soul of a person, and let that heavenly power influence them in their acts, and they will not, cannot go astray. Nothing but our own transgression and evil ways can separate us from the love of God which we have received in Christ Jesus our Lord. If we will ever let this question arise before us in our journey through life, Am I doing good; is this a righteous act? we will not scorn or hate, mock or revile, deride or persecute our fellowman, for these things are not good and they shall have no place in our midst. God is the Eternal Parent of all things good, while the wicked Lucifer is the author of all things bad.

Christ dealt out the honest truth to the people and so must we. He obeyed the will of His Father, we must therefore do likewise. Regardless of the esteem of the world, popular opinion, and public favor; averse to all human parade, pomp and ceremony, He stood for the right, went about doing good, and glorified God, whose only begotten Son He was. His trials and temptations were many; His persecutors and offenders not a few; but He braved all, led the Way, marked the Path, erected the Signal-boards and raised the Finger-posts, pointing the course of Eternal Life. "Make us like Thee," should be our constant prayer, our daily supplication; that we too may brave the storms of persecution, shun the wiles of the evil one, overcome temptation, and do good to our fellowman.

"These are Thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty, Thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; Thyself how wondrous then."

History of the Southern States Mission.

December, 1899.—On the 1st and 2d conference was held at London, Kentucky, with the Elders of the East Kentucky Conference. It was impossible to procure a hall in which to hold public services, so a large room in the Riley House was prepared for that purpose. This conference assembly was a success, so far as the Elders were concerned, but a failure from a public point of view.

The Middle Tennessee Conference was held in Nashville on the 9th and 10th. The Odd Fellows' hall was secured for the occasion. A very slim attendance of strangers was noticeable, perhaps from the fact that the weather was disagreeable. The Nashville American gave a fair report of the Sunday meeting.

On the 16th and 17th the Chattanooga Conference was held in Chattanooga. Two public meetings were held in the Congregational hall, 708 Market street. The attendance was fair and the meetings were spirited and good. President Rich extended an invitation to all the ministers of the city to call on the Elders at headquarters. He said: "Let us not hate one another, but let us reason together. If you have a truth that we have not, we will gladly accept it, and if we have an error that you can point out, we will as willingly abandon it, and be thankful to you for showing it to us."

No doubt it was in accordance with this invitation that Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, pastor of the First Baptist church of this city, preached the same night a sermon on "Mormonism and Polygamy." The tirade was in keeping with the regular falsehoods afloat about our people. The Rev. said: "There are some things about Mormonism which must be given up before it can be recognized as a Christian church." "Mormonism is based on a tissue of lies," was another charge made by this worthy gentleman. Two or three days after this sermon was delivered Elders J. Stokes and L. F. Rich called on Dr. Brougher, who admitted to them that he had never read anything at all concerning the Latter-day Saints except from their enemies. He would not discuss the principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, neither would he ask the brethren any question about their faith, for they tried every possible way to get him into a conversation upon the subject of Mormonism, of which he had said so very much in his sermon on Sunday night. This learned divine is a fair sample of those who revile the people of God most—they know not of that they do speak about.

President Rich made a vigorous reply through the columns of the News, one of Chattanooga's dailies. This appeared on Dec. 25th (see page 69, of vol. 2, of The Southern Star). The Rev. attempted to answer on Jan. 1st. His second attack, like the first effusion of total ignorance and unmitigated hate, may truthfully be called No. 1 enlarged upon. President Rich replied to this (see page 77 of vol. 2, Southern Star.)

This silenced the doctor and he at once sent to Nashville for one Rev. E. E. Folk, who had recently spent almost two whole weeks with the Mormons in Salt Lake City. This fellow delivered one of the most sensational sermons ever heard in the city of Chattanooga. According to Mr. Folk, virtue was unknown among the Mormons. He painted such a black, filthy picture that many of the people who were present left in disgust long before his sermon was finished, which lasted over two hours. To this new-comer President Rich replied in very forceful terms and the same was published in the News; it may now be seen page 86 of vol. 2. The liberality tendered by the News showed them to be Americans. They exhibited a fairness not often shown to the Mormons.

This incident occasioned much comment in religious circles in Chattanooga, and was the means of making many friends for the cause of truth and explaining the principles of righteousness. Many personally expressed congratulations for the able manner in which the discussion was conducted on the part of President Rich, and also letters were received to the same intent. The work was prospering very nicely, and the month closed with all well in the field.

January, 1900.—The New Year dawned and found us all well and not anything startling going on in the Mission field. The annual report was published in the Star and made a good showing. On the 20th and 21st conference was held in New Orleans with the Mississippi and Louisiana. The conference made a good impression. New Orleans journals spoke very highly of the Elders. In addition to the presence of President Rich there were also Brother and Sister Hyldahl and Elder L. R. Anderson.

On the 22d the following Elders arrived from the West: A. J. Stoddard, John Knight, Neils Behram, John V. Sperry, Thos. H. Karren, R. A. Palmer, N. B. Porter, J. H. Stocks and David Sudwort.

On the 27th and 28th conference was held at Macon, Ga., with the Elders of the Georgia Conference. It was a success and allayed much prejudice in that city. Many men of high standing there expressed themselves in terms of praise for our people. (To be Continued.)

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder R. L. Houtz was born in Salt Lake City, Aug. 13th, 1876. His parents, Henry P. and Sarah Houtz, having accepted the Gospel in the East, came to Utah in 1848. They experienced the trials and endured the hardships incident to Pioneer life. In 1880 they left Salt Lake City and settled in Idaho. In 1886 they returned to Salt Lake City, in order that their children might have the benefits and advantages of the better schools than those of Rockland, Idaho, where they resided.

Brother Houtz attended the District school, and later attended the L. D. S. College, where he spent three years. In 1892 thy moved back to Rockland, and engaged in the sheep raising business, so that it can be said of him, as of David the Psalmist, "he tended his father's flocks." He was always attentive to religious duty, and was ever interested in Sunday School and mutual improvement work. In the Ward he was obedient, energetic, and ambitious.

ELDER R. L. HOUTZ.

It was on the 31st of October, 1898, that he was informed by letter from Box B. that his presence, time and talents were desired in the Mission field. The Lord required his labors, and he cheerfully responded to the call. On the 14th of December he was set apart for a mission to the Southern States, and upon arriving at Chattanooga was assigned to labor in the North Carolina Conference. He had scarcely spent one year in the service of the Master before he was called to act as a counsellor to President J. M. Haws. He filled this calling with signal ability, and was beloved by all his brethren.

When President W. H. Boyle was released from his labors in the South Alabama Conference, Elder Houtz was chosen to fill his place, and so we find him today President of the South Alabama Conference. Brother Houtz is a willing worker, humble, steadfast, and true. In a recent letter he said, "My only desire has been, and is now, to do my whole duty; that I may be a credit to my parents, and an honor to the cause I represent; that when I may leave the Mission field, it can be said, 'He did his duty.'"

OPENING ADDRESS OF THE CONFERENCE.

President Lorenzo Snow at the Seventy-first semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, October 5, 1900, said:

Brethren and Sisters:—I feel to rejoice greatly for this opportunity of meeting with you this morning and to deliberate upon all such things and talk about them, as may pertain to our present condition and secure our future prospects. When this Gospel—these principles which we have espoused, came to our ears in the different countries and nations where they found us, of course they opened up to us certain prospects—prospects that relate to the present time, and to present time matters, of the highest consequence in relation to our temporal salvation; and again, prospects in reference to the future; what should be the outcome of keeping the commandments of God; what should follow; what should be the results when we have accomplished these things that are required of us; what would be the results in the next life?

Now, so far as regards our temporal advantages and our temporal prospects, they certainly must be far superior to any that were before us before this Gospel reached us; before the offer of salvation saluted our ears. In the days of Noah the Gospel which we have espoused was proclaimed to the people of his generation, and the same prospects as are presented to us were presented to them, temporal advantages, temporal salvation, and spiritual exaltation and glory; and the circumstances were of that character that every person that listened to the voice of Noah could receive clear manifestations, satisfactory knowledge, that what he said came from the Almighty—came from the Lord. Now, when we received these principles it was clear to us, I presume, that we received, actually received, assurances, the most perfect assurances, that what was said to us, was actually of the Lord, that the parties that brought us these principles were actually inspired from the Most High, the nature and character of the work that each one would necessarily have to perform, the circumstances that would surround us and the trials and temptations to which they had to be exposed, would require a perfect understanding, not through the teachings of these individuals that proclaim to them these principles, but actual manifestations and assurances that should come from the Lord, either by extraordinary faith or by a perfect reception, physical and spiritual, of the Holy Spirit, a baptism of the Holy Ghost, as was promised in former days to those that should receive the Gospel.

Witness of the Truth Necessary.

And I dare say that the people that are before me this morning have learned that it was an absolute necessity to have a perfect understanding, a perfect knowledge, and that it should come from the Lord, that what they had received and what they had sacrificed for—it was necessary. I say, to have a perfect understanding, and an understanding that could only come directly from the Lord. It would not be satisfactory simply to turn over the leaves of the New Testament and to see that these principles were in accordance with those preached by the Apostles of old, but to have this knowledge come direct to themselves from the Lord. Now, I say this in order that if there are any here, any person, any Latter-day Saints, who have not advanced to this knowledge and can see and understand clearly that they have espoused the principles of salvation and exaltation and glory, and that directly from the Lord, it is time they were about it—about receiving this information.

Trial and Sacrifice Essential to Perfection.

We are not through with our labors yet, although we have got through a great many of them that have been considerable of a trial to us, and temptations, perhaps, have been to some of us of a nature that almost amounted to a disposition to turn away from the principles that we had received. The trials, the temptations, have been very great to many of our people, and more or less, perhaps, to all of us. It seems to me the nature of the gospel of life. The Lord seems to require some proof on our part, something to show that He can depend upon us when He wants us to accomplish certain things in His interest. The reason is that the condition in which we will be placed in the future, as time passes along, as eternity approaches, and as we move forward in eternity and along the line of our existence, we shall be placed in certain conditions that require very great sacrifice in the interests of humanity, in the interests of the Spirit of God, in the interest of His children and our own children, in the generations to come, in eternity. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was once placed in a condition that it required the highest effort in order to accomplish what was necessary for the salvation of millions of the children of God. It required the highest effort and determination that had to be exercised before the Son of God could pass through the ordeal, the sacrifice that was necessary.

I believe that His Father had educated Him, had passed Him through scenes that were of a very serious character, of great trials, and He knew just what He could depend upon from the facts that were illustrated and shown by His experience. We place men here from time to time in positions of Presidents of Stakes, as Bishops of Wards. We are called upon sometimes to take into consideration whom we will place in this Stake or that Stake of Zion to preside over us. Perhaps there are 14,000 members, Latter-day Saints, in that Stake, or there may be 15,000 or 20,000, and the prosperity of the people of that Stake, to a certain extent, anyway, depends upon the qualification of that President.

How Responsible Positions are Filled

Well, now, how can we determine in order to make the proper selection? How are we to determine so as to make a wise selection, in placing the responsibilities upon a man that we propose to take this position? The people of the Stake are greatly concerned; they want a good man; they want a wise man; they want a man that by night and by day will think how he can best improve them, make them happy, place them in circumstances that will be agreeable and advance them. We look around to find a man that we feel has a thorough interest in the people and who is a wise and a good man, and it is well that we should. That is our business—to look after the interest of the Saints, and to place such men before them to look after their interests as will be faithful in their calling and will be unselfish, and will not spend their time in any other direction than that which pertains to the general advancement of those they are appointed to look after. Well, is it possible that we sometimes make a mistake and get the wrong man? Is it possible? Well, you perhaps should be the judges. But I can tell you one thing surely, that we use our best efforts to find the proper man. How do we do it? Well, we send somewhere about 1,800 missionaries to the nations of the earth. We keep about that number of missionaries in the different nations. We appoint men here at home, we place responsibilities upon them, large responsibilities. We look over the history of these men. Perhaps this man was a Bishop. Well, how did he act and perform his duties as a Bishop? Did he devote himself to the interests of the people of his Ward, or was he trying to make himself wealthy? Was his mind devoted to saving what he could for himself and in enhancing his own individual interests and that of his wife and children, and neglecting the interests of the people of his Ward? How is it? Well, we inquire around. We get the history of the man, his past experiences. He has had several calls here and there. Did he answer those calls? Was he called as a missionary to leave his wife and his children and go to the nations to be gone two years or three years or four years, as the case may be? And did he go or did he say: "Oh, no; I would like to go very well, but my circumstances are not quite so pleasing or advantageous as they ought to be under such circumstances in order that I might go; I cannot go and leave my family very well?"

Did he make these excuses, and how has he been all along the path of his life for the past few years or for many years, as the case might be? We judge the man not always by his looks or appearances; not always by hearing him preach a sermon; but we judge him by what he has done or failed to do in the past. That is just the way the Lord intends to do with you or me exactly. We will be judged according to what we have done or what we have failed to have done all along the line of our experiences. When Jesus was placed in a condition where acting in propriety or otherwise confronted Him; when He saw before Him the cross and the immediate prospects of being placed upon it and of His undergoing those excruciating tortures that He had seen others experiencing, then His nature failed as it were and He said: "Father, if it is possible that this experience or this cup pass from me, let it pass."

That is the way He told the Lord. But notwithstanding, He said: "If this cannot be done, Thy will be done, and not Mine." So He was placed upon the cross and suffered that excruciating torture. Supposing that He had failed, the nations of the earth, and the people of the Lord, His sons and daughters, would have failed to be put into that position of having the opportunity that you and I have today. They would have failed for a long time, to say the least. Of course, the provisions would have been made and the work of the Almighty would have been proceeded with, but there would have been a halt there. But the Lord knew just what He could depend upon, and therefore He selected that Son of His, our Savior, Jesus Christ, and He has wrought out that great work of redemption for the human family, the living and the dead.

What the Gospel Has Done for Us.

Now, brethren and sisters, what have these principles we have espoused done for us? Are you satisfied? I am, perfectly and fully satisfied. I have gone through a great many things that were very unpleasant, far from being agreeable all along the line, and I do not know how much further or what else will be required of me of this character; but I am satisfied with what the Lord has done for me and what I expect He will do in regard to my temporal affairs, temporal salvation, and also in regard to the future.

My hopes in reference to the future life are supremely grand and glorious, and I try to keep these prospects bright continually; and that is the privilege and the duty of every Latter-day Saint. I suppose I am talking now to some Latter-day Saints that have been sorely tried, and they have thought sometimes, perhaps, like the Savior felt, that He had no friends; that His friends had all gone; and everything was going wrong, and everything was disagreeable, and his circumstances were continuing to get worse and worse, and those that he depended upon for assistance failed perhaps to render the assistance expected, and all that sort of thing. Likewise everything sometimes becomes dark to us and we almost forget the relationship that we stand in to the Lord, and begin to feel as though it was not what we expected.

I wonder if there are not a few here within the sound of my voice that have feelings of this kind, like old Job had, for instance. A poor man who wondered why his children were taken from him: why his herds were destroyed and why his houses, his dwelling, went up in flames, and why he was left without anything. He formerly was a very wealthy man, left without anything. Well, his friends came about him. They were supposed to be friends. They were friends formerly. They came about him and wanted to show him that these evils came upon him because he had failed to do his duty in the past; because he had committed some sin. That was the kind of ideas that they had that they communicated to him. But there was nothing of the kind. It was not so. They were vastly mistaken. The Lord has a certain position in which He sought to place Job in the future. At some futre time, when years and years had rolled away, perhaps, and He wanted to try him. He wanted to educate him so that he would not complain, no matter how illy he thought himself treated by the Lord. That was a glorious trial of Job's. It has come down in history; his experiences and his trials, and it has been a wonderful consolation to the people of the Lord to read the history of his experiences and his trials and how well he passed through them.

Glorious Future Prospects.

The religion that we have received, the principles of exaltation and glory that you and I have received, bring upon us persecution, or else they are not those principles that we thought they were. They bring upon us trouble upon the right hand and upon the left, but we should seek to be calm and cool as Job learned to be calm and cool under circumstances of the most unhappy character. We should learn to do this and there are things that are provided for us by which we can learn this. Think of how much worse you and I might be, and then think of what superior blessings we actually possess. We know that in the future, after we have passed through this life, we will know this. We will then have our wives and our children with us. We will have our bodies glorified, made free from every sickness and distress, and rendered most beautiful. There is nothing more beautiful to look upon than a resurrected man or woman. There is nothing grander that I can imagine that a man can possess than a resurrected body. There is no Latter-day Saint within the sound of my voice but that certainly has this prospect, of coming forth in the morning of the first resurrection and being glorified, exalted in the presence of God, having the privilege of talking with our Father as we talk with our earthly father.

What a glorious thing! We'll know no prison walls, your friends turning away from you, your being dispossessed of your property, being driven from your home, being cast into prison, being defamed. These things do not hurt you one particle. They do not destroy your prospects, which are still glorious before you. And then we should understand that the Lord has provided, when the days of trouble come upon nations, a place for you and me, and we will be preserved as Noah was preserved, not in an ark, but we will be preserved by going into those principles of union by which we can accomplish the work of the Lord and surround ourselves with those things that will preserve us from the difficulties that are now coming upon the world, the judgments of the Lord. We can see, as we read in the newspapers, we can see that they are coming upon the nations of the ungodly: and they would have been upon us if we had stayed among the nations, if the Lord had not inclined our ears and brought salvation to us, we would have been as they are and will be.

Well, now, brethren and sisters, I feel to say God bless you. Here are my counselors. We are one. We are united. We do not quarrel with each other. We speak well of one another because we ought to do it, and we think we are worthy of being well spoken of by each other. And here we have twelve men sitting in front of me—twelve Apostles. There are many of these that you know. You know them from hearing what they have accomplished. You have a personal acquaintance with some of us. Now, they are with us heart and soul. We are united together. We do not quarrel with each other. We do not slander each other, but we go where council requires and we are heart and soul together. What for? Not to make ourselves rich, not to make ourselves wealthy, but to see what we can accomplish in the interests of the people, and we are laboring continually to see what we can do. We come together every week and we talk about what we can do for the people. What can we do for these forty-two or forty-three Stakes of Zion? Are some of the Presiding Elders, some of the Presidents of these Stakes, getting too old to administer to the people? Are some of them neglecting their interests? We talk these things over. We study and consider them. We try to ascertain what they are doing and what their feelings are and how they manifest themselves in the presence of the people. Are they working for themselves? Are they trying to see how much money they can get into this bank or the other, or are they engaged heart and soul in doing what should be done in their respective responsibilities? Well, we are not idle in these things.

You will have some speakers here during this Conference, you will probably have in the neighborhood of twenty speeches here. When the brethren arise to speak you ask the Lord to let them say something that you want to know, that they may suggest something to you that will be of some advantage to you. If you have any desire to know certain matters that you do not understand, pray that these brethren in their talks may say something that shall enlighten your mind in reference to that which troubles you, and we will have a grand and glorious Conference, a better one than we have ever had before. Strange as it may appear, our last Conference always seems the best, and may this be the case; and you, brethren and sisters, let your hearts raise up to the Lord and exercise faith while our brethren are talking to you. We will not be disappointed and you will not go home, you will not retire from this Conference without feeling that you have been greatly and abundantly blessed. Amen.

THE DEAD.

Brother S. B. Mormon, of Defeated, Smith county, Tenn., departed this life Oct. 12th, 1900. He was born July 6th, 1868, and was baptized August, 1900, by Elders Emery Barrus and John Kingdon, and lived a faithful Latter-day Saint up to his death. He bore a faithful testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel while lying upon his deathbed. He leaves a mother and brother and several sisters to mourn his loss.

Little Alice Jones, the infant girl of L. T. and Quilla Jones, departed this life Oct. 7th, 1900. She was born May 2d, 1899, and was the only child of loving parents. Earth hath no sorrow which heaven cannot heal.

A JOYOUS GATHERING.

Logan Journal.

It was such a reunion as Logan has seldom witnessed, no loud demonstration or ostentatious display marked its beginning, only the quiet assembling of a little band which had stood together for the right in a far off clime; but no meeting of old comrades in arms was ever marked by more genuine brotherly feeling, or keener joy to its participants than this one.

When the train pulled in on Saturday bearing the visiting contingent there were scenes, pathetic and inspiring. Young fellows who had tramped together the roads of Tennessee, who had suffered and triumphed together for the truth's sake, and who had not seen each other since leaving the missionary field, jumped into one another's embrace, and danced away to their carriages, while others stood with clasped hands, their hearts too full for utterance.

The Logan contingent was on hand to receive the visitors and on Saturday the afternoon was spent in visiting the colleges and other points of interest. In the evening a ball was given in the Palace Hall, and all those present thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

On Sunday morning, or rather just at noon, a meeting was held at which the following officers of the organization were elected:

President—J. S. Sears, of Salt Lake City.

Vice President—Ralph T. Mitchell, of Logan.

Secretary and Treasurer—Samuel B. Thatcher, of Franklin.

It was decided to hold the next reunion in Salt Lake City next October.

In the afternoon the time at the Tabernacle was turned over to the young Elders. An account of the services appears elsewhere.

In the evening a meeting was held in the Fourth Ward meeting house, which was entirely too small to accommodate the throng which assembled there. The following programme was carried out:

Address—Elder H. L. Bair.
Solo—M. J. Ballard.
Address—C. A. Merkley.
Recitation—Miss Nellie Hayball.
Address—Elder A. H. Young.
Song—Miss Nora Eliason.
Address—Elder Soren Peterson.
Song—Miss Minnie Petersen.
Address—Elder H. E. Shrives.
Address—Apostle A. O. Woodruff.

The visiting members of the society were:

J. R. Halliday and wife, of Pleasant Grove.
W. E. Robinson, of American Fork.
George A. Smith and wife, of Salt Lake.
Nathan Tanner, of Ogden.
H. L. Bair, of Richmond.
Thomas W. Sloan, of Salt Lake.
John P. Janes, of Paradise.
A. H. Young, of Perry, Utah.
J. S. Sears, of Salt Lake.
H. E. Shrives, of Franklin.
S. B. Thatcher, of Franklin.
Joseph B. Woodward, of Wellsville.
C. A. Merkley and wife, of Fairview, Wyo.
A. R. Cutler, of Preston.
James Roskelly, of Smithfield.
T. H. Smith, of Paradise.

The Logan members of the Reunion Society are: R. T. Mitchell, Soren Peterson, Elias Kimball, Ariel Cardon, J. E. Everton, E. R. Needham.

At the Tabernacle.

Services at the Tabernacle on Sunday were held under the auspices of the Union of the returned Elders of the East Tennessee Conference.

Elder Ralph Mitchell presided, and about him were grouped a dozen or more of the visiting Elders, forming as fine looking a group of young men as one often sees.

In opening the services the congregation sang the hymn, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah." Elder H. L. Bair, of Coveville, offered prayer. A selection by the choir followed, and then Elder Ralph Mitchell introduced as the first speaker of American Fork. He told of the great joy experienced by Elders in meeting once more after having been separated for a period of time. "While President of the Eastern Tennessee Mission," said the speaker, "I had for a companion Elder S. B. Thatcher. I learned to love him, and no one but those who have been on missions can compare the great joy that swelled up in my heart and in his when we met once more." Elder Robinson then told in interesting detail of his call to and labors in the missionary field; relating incidents of the providence of God as manifested in behalf of the Elders in the mission field.

Elder W. E. Robinson,

Elder John R. Halliday, of Pleasant Grove, spoke next. He, too, expressed his pleasure at being able to greet his old missionary comrades.

The speaker dwelt at some length upon the objects of the missionary reunion. "We do not gather particularly to instruct the Latter-day Saints," said he, "but we hope by our example to impress some idea of the greatness of the Gospel upon the minds of the young.

"Missionary work is a wonderful factor in the development of God's people. Every year we send out nearly one thousand missionaries, and of course as many return each year. These men have rubbed up against the many opinions of the world, and as a result a crystalization of all the ideas of the world will be found in Utah. This is not alone helpful to the individuals themselves, but also to the community at large."

Elder Nathan Tanner, of Ogden, was the third speaker. He bore a strong testimony to the divinity of the Gospel and voiced his pleasure at being present at the reunion.

Elder Thomas W. Sloan, of Salt Lake City, spoke next. He said: "There is great satisfaction in addressing a congregation of Latter-day Saints, for no matter how strange to each other we may be, the Spirit of God which the Saints enjoy soon makes us friends. The world greatly misunderstands the Mormon missionary, and this fact makes it hard for some of the Elders to pursue their calling, but nevertheless I can say that the happiest moments of my life were those spent in spreading the Gospel in Tennessee." The speaker urged all young men to prepare for and strive to obtain a call to the missionary field, for there you will find the supreme joy of your life.

Elder Elias S. Kimball

followed Elder Sloan. He said: "A man does not know the real joy of life until he has been out in the world seeking the souls of men. There is no joy that compares with it, and although, like other men, I love riches and the luxuries of life, down in my heart there is the knowledge that the greatest pleasure and satisfaction is found in laboring in the interest of God's work. Seek the Spirit of God, for it is more valuable than any worldly gift you can obtain. God is blessing us wonderfully, and from now on, if faithful, the Saints will make great strides in the knowledge that will not perish."

The speaker urged his hearers to repent and seek to walk always in the light of God's Spirit.

Elder John S. Sears

was the next speaker. He but recently returned from the missionary field. He corroborated the statements of those who preceded him, relative to the joy found in promulgating the Gospel. I traveled over 5,000 miles in the East Tennessee Conference and I was not compelled to go hungry or to want for a bed, and I can bear my testimony that God does bless and provide for those who put their trust in Him.

The missionary is called upon to make great sacrifices, but none realize so well that sacrifice brings forth the choicest blessings of heaven as the missionary.

Some of the Saints misjudge the returned Elders. The one who is gifted in oratory and is profuse of speech is apt to be credited with having performed an excellent mission, while his humbler and less gifted brother is looked upon as having done less good in the field. This is a mistake, as the unlettered, humble servant of God is frequently the best laborer in His vineyard.

The choir then sang and Elder Merkley pronounced the benediction.

Then take your fortune as it comes,
Whatever God may give,
And through the day
Your heart will say,
'Tis luck enough to live.

Liberality consists in giving to those who stand in need.

Lavish not your gifts upon those who are overloaded.

Be kind without partiality; amiable without hypocrisy.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE CHARLES C. RICH.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

Among the great and good men of this dispensation is the subject of our sketch, Charles Coulson Rich. He was the son of Joseph Rich and Nancy O. Neal, and was born in Campbell county, Kentucky, Aug. 21st, 1809. His parents were of the substantial class of people who are always the backbone and sinew of every country and community. They were industrious and possessed the traits of hospitality and kind heartedness so proverbial in the South. Charles C. imbibed these characteristics in his early youth, and maintained them with uniformity throughout life. While not possessed of the tendency to pious religious profession that so many in these days manifest, he exhibited a consistent practical view of religious matters, which protected him against the fanatical zeal of many by whom he was surrounded. When the restoration of the Gospel in these last days was made known to him he received the impressions of its truth, and with an honest, earnest heart embraced the same without delay. He was baptized April 1st, 1832, by Elder Ira M. Hinkley in Tazewell county, Illinois. He soon started to Kirtland to see the Prophet Joseph Smith. While on his way he was ordained an Elder by Zebedee Coltrin in Fountain county, Indiana. He honored his calling as an Elder by laboring faithfully in this office at home and abroad until in 1836 he was ordained a High Priest by the Patriarch Hyrum Smith. He also received his endowments in the Kirtland Temple, participating in the blessings of that holy Temple. With his father he removed to Far West, Mo., and was soon involved in the trials and tribulations which came upon the Saints through mob violence. He received in marriage Sarah D. Pea Feb. 11th, 1837, near Caldwell county, Missouri, who shared with him all the persecutions of those days, was exiled with him from place to place, bore to him noble sons and daughters, and survived her husband several years. Her son, Benjamin E. Rich, now presides over all the Conferences of the Southern States Mission, APOSTLE CHARLES C. RICH.

the land that gave his father birth, and afforded to the Church of Christ one of her Twelve Apostles. It is but a fitting coincident that Charles C. Rich should be represented in the Southern States by one who presides over the interests of the Church in that land. Though the truth today is submerged in the muddy stream of prejudice, founded on false report, and which shuts the door of investigation, the day will come when the sons of the South will rejoice in having produced such men as Charles C. Rich, Abraham O. Smoot and others of similar mould, who had the courage of their convictions and embraced the Gospel as revealed from Heaven to the Prophet Joseph Smith. Elder Rich, with undaunted valor, took a most active part in defending the Saints against mob violence. While carrying a flag of truce he was shot at by Samuel Bogart, a Methodist preacher, only about thirty feet distant. At the battle of Crooked River, when Apostle David W. Patten was fatally wounded by the mob, Brother Rich laid down his sword while the battle was raging and administered the ordinance of healing to the dying martyr. He then resumed his weapon of warfare, took command, and the battle was won by the Saints. On account of the prominent part he took in these troubles, and because justice for Latter-day Saints was not found in the courts of Missouri, Brother Rich was compelled to flee for his life to the State of Illinois. After the founding of Nauvoo and the more complete organization to meet the growing needs of the Church, he was ordained a member of the High Council in Nauvoo, and also became a member of the City Council. He filled both places with becoming dignity and ability.

At the exodus of the Saints Brother Rich left Nauvoo Feb. 13, 1846. The following winter he presided over Mt. Pisgah Branch, and left there for Winter Quarters March 20th, 1847. From this point he took charge of a company of Saints and commenced the journey to Salt Lake Valley June 14th, 1847. He was a good pioneer, and a source of encouragement to the Saints in their pilgrimage across the plains. He reached Salt Lake Valley

Oct. 3d, 1847. While the Twelve were absent on their return to Winter Quarters brother Rich acted as Counselor to Father John Smith, the Patriarch who presided over the new colony. On Feb. 12th, 1849, Elder Rich was ordained one of the Twelve Apostles. He was constantly faithful in building up the interests of the growing city of Salt Lake, and in his ministry. Oct. 9th, 1849, he started on a mission to California, returning Nov. 4th, 1850. March 6th, 1851, he started again for California, accompanied by a portion of his family. The purpose of the mission was to purchase land for the location of the Saints who might be gathered from the Pacific Islands.

Amasa M. Lyman and himself purchased a large tract of land at San Bernardino, comprising about 100,000 acres of land, at a cost of $77,500. The company of Saints from Utah moved to this large ranch and began the settlement of a section, which is now among the choicest spots in California. When the Buchanan war was inaugurated the tract at San Bernardino was sold and the Saints returned to Utah. Brother Rich left California in April, 1857, arriving in Salt Lake City the following June. He was associated with Gen. Daniel H. Wells at Echo Canyon and Fort Bridger, impeding the progress of the army until President Buchanan should send a committee to investigate the situation in Utah. It is a notorious fact that the sending of the army to Utah was actuated by the scurrilous falsehoods of Judge Drummond, who said the Mormons were in rebellion and had burnt the court records. This was a base falsehood in every particular. The counsel and assistance of Apostle Rich in those trying times was of paramount importance. He was wise and courageous. He had learned in Missouri the lesson of facing mob armies on the battle field and was well prepared for any emergency that might arise in later times.

After the trouble subsided and the building of homes and settlements resumed with vigor, Elder Rich, in 1860, was called on a mission to England. Upon his arrival there he was associated with Elder Amasa M. Lyman in the Presidency of the European Mission. He returned home in 1862, resuming his faithful labors among the Saints. In the fall of 1863 he explored Bear Lake Valley, removing his family there in the spring of 1864. He was the leader of the pioneers in that valley, which today is one of the most beautiful and prosperous valleys in the West. The climate is cold and rigid. The snow falls deep in the valley, and much more so in the mountains adjoining. In those early times, long before the advent of the railroad, the only way of receiving and sending mails was to cross the mountains on snow shoes. This was a hazardous undertaking when the storms of winter were beating viciously upon the snow-clad mountains. When others shrank from this task, Apostle Rich would set out. His physical endurance was wonderful, so great that he scarcely knew its limit. He made such trips many times, and being for several years a member of the Territorial Legislature, he would go to and from its sessions across the mountains on snow shoes. Bear Lake Valley was then in Utah, now in Southern Idaho. Rich county, in Northeastern Utah, was named in honor of Brother Chas. C. Rich. Elder Rich was a natural pioneer. Much of his time was spent on the frontier. He continued his labors in the Apostleship, chiefly among the Saints during the latter years of his life, and in every position was capable and faithful. He was stricken with paralysis Oct. 24th, 1880, and suffered very much for three years. He died at his home in Paris, Bear Lake county, Idaho, Nov. 17th, 1883. During these years of affliction he never murmured, but cheerfully resigned himself to the trying situation, acknowledged the "Hand of the Lord in all things." Apostle Rich was a humble, unassuming man. He was not given to many words in public or private, but what he did say was full of good counsel and wisdom. His example was his best sermon, and that was preached every hour. He was a man of great moral and physical courage. He had the courage of his convictions, not merely the courage to face the foe in sanguinary conflict upon the battle field, but the higher courage to act upon the right, against the popular sentiment of a frowning world. Under the strains of martial music, many a man will face death in the conflict of war who would shrink from the sentiments of the world around him. The man who is truly brave is he who dares to do what is right against the power of might. Such a man was Apostle Charles C. Rich. He dared to embrace unpopular truth and declare it to all the world. He had the courage to dress plain, to patronize home industry, to speak and act for the weak and unprotected. He was noble, generous and brave, qualities which are wanting in most men of this favor-catering sycophantic age. These great qualities of heart and brain he sought to impress by example upon all around him.

Perhaps no man more than Brother Rich entertained and acted upon the sentiments of freedom expressed by the poet:

"Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for our own dear sake,
And with leathern hearts forget
That we owe mankind a debt?
No! True freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear;
And, with heart and hand, to be
Earnest to make others free!
They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak,
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think;
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

Apostle Rich believed in the words of Jesus and Paul: "If ye were the seed of Abraham, ye would do the works of Abraham," "and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." He was the father of a large family, and not only this noble, patriarchal family mourned the loss of a noble husband, father and friend, but all who knew him throughout the Stakes of Zion. When the trump of God shall sound and the sleeping dust awake, Apostle Charles C. Rich will be of the first fruits of the resurrection.

THE MISSION OF CHRIST.

BY ELDER R. O. LARSEN.

My thoughts often revert to the days and ministry of Christ. To his humble birth at Bethlehem, born as He was amidst the struggles of poverty as far as this world was concerned, but rich as to divine favor and approval. I remember with admiration His quiet and unobtrusive early days as they were spent in the little hamlet Nazareth in Galilee, surrounded by the grand and inspiring mountain scenery, sheltered by nature in peace and quietude, within view of the hills of Gilead, and the peaks of Hermon and Lebanon.

Our admiration for our Savior's simplicity should be greatly augmented by the fact that in early youth He was already conversant with the grandeur and magnitude of His own mission; with His origin and with His destiny. Note how His tender years were watched by the two powers, the power of God and the power of Lucifer, and how the evil one employed his agents that he might accomplish the destruction of the infant King before His earthly mission had scarce begun: but by the power of God manifested in dreams, through the influence of the Divine Spirit, the path of safety was shown to those who were now Christ's earthly guardians. Thus by the flight into Egypt was fulfilled the words of the Lord by His Prophet, "Out of Egypt have I called my Son." (Hosea 11:1.)

Thus the Lord always adopts measures whereby He may accomplish His purposes, irrespective of the desires and plans of the evil one to frustrate them. When in the course of time Herod died, the angel of the Lord appeared unto Joseph and bade him take the young child and its mother, and again return to their native land, witness with what care Joseph avoided going where prejudice toward the Son of God might still exist; therefore they wended their steps toward Galilee and to the city of Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

Thus when prophetic words are uttered under the inspiration of God they will and must eventually come to pass; they come from a source which knows no failure, but where power and love ever abound. The early life and childhood of the Savior was being guided by the power of the Almighty. He was being prepared for the future great and eventful life which awaited Him. Behold Him at the tender age of 12, discussing with and confounding and astonishing the wise and the learned. The power of Heaven, the mantle of His calling, rested upon Him. Through the light of prophecy and inspiration was opened up to Him, the channels and avenues of wisdom and knowledge. How grand it would be if we, too, who pretend to be His followers, would drink of that knowledge which today flows from that same eternal fountain. The opportunity is ours if we but will. Christ came, He lived, and He died. And for what purpose? If we consider for a moment the labors of Christ and those whom He called to assist Him, and upon whom the work after His departure devolved, it will at once become apparent what the purpose of Christ's mission was. Christ came to make salvation possible and to offer its laws and conditions to mankind. He gave His time in life to His Father's purposes. His love and His greatness of soul did always predominate in His every day action.

What, then, were those laws of salvation as established and offered by the Savior? The efforts of His life's work is before us, recorded in Holy Writ. We are told that He gave Himself as a ransom for all. Yea, He gave Himself, His human body, as a sacrifice to satisfy the demands of justice. Paul says: For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. (I Cor. 15:21, 22.)

Christ through His love for us made future advancement possible. He redeemed us from the grasp of sin and death. He did that for humanity which they could not do for themselves. He broke the chain of death, but beside that, did He not make requirements of us by obedience to which we may gain the fullest benefit of His atonement? If not, why then His arduous labor as a teacher and preacher of doctrine for three and a half years among the Jews? We find Him on one occasion saying: If ye love me keep my commandments. (John 14:15.) If there had been no requirements, if there had been no commandments, Christ would not have made such a statement. His ministry was spent to a purpose. He preached what His Father sent Him to preach, and established laws which the children of men must obey if they would share the full joys made possible by His last and crowning work here on earth. How well the children of men have kept those laws and availed themselves of their privilege is a subject which must of necessity question the individual to answer, because by perusing the Scriptures we find that it was an individual work required. The Scriptures are replete with accounts of the work of the Savior and those whom He called to assist Him in the ministry. The commission He gave His Apostles, Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned, (Mark 16:15, 16), lies before us and is worthy of our consideration. The words and admonitions of the Apostle Peter (Acts 2:38, 39) on the day of Pentecost to the assembled multitude, ought to prove the fact that it is an individual work required of us as well as of those unto whom the Apostle was speaking. Thus Christ, through His authorized servants, made known to mankind what they were expected to comply with. We find the Apostle Paul later on delivering the same message, or rather referring to it as having been formerly delivered to the Hebrew Saints (Heb. 6:1-2) as that preached by Peter on the day of Pentecost. Did Christ and His Apostles teach the people that they must have faith, repent, be baptized and receive the Holy Ghost through the imposition of hands? If so, is that doctrine in its fullness taught by the preachers of today? If they do not, their condition and punishment is made very clear by the Apostle Paul when he says: But though we, or an angel from Heaven preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other Gospel unto you than that ye have received let him be accursed. (Gal. 1:8-9.) Was there any blessings promised to those who believed on the teaching of the Apostles and acted in accordance therewith? Read Mark 16:17-18, and there learn of the marvelous signs promised by the Savior, to follow the believers. Are these signs promised today, and do they follow those who believe on the various preachers? If not, can a substantial reason be given why they should not? Let us not lull ourselves into happy dreamland with the idea that nothing is required of us, that Christ has done it all, for such is not the general tone of the record of His faithful ministry. The organization which formerly existed is also made very plain to us by the Apostle Paul in his writings, both to the Corinthians and Ephesian Saints, and to the latter he emphasized the fact that these officers of which he spoke should remain in the Church, for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. (Eph. 4:12-13.)

Is the religious world, or the various Churches of today, organized after that pattern, or do we find them greatly changed, so that they, in many cases, are reduced to lay members and a "preacher?" How can intelligent people consistently harmonize the two organizations? Which of the two would it be most profitable for us to follow, the one organized by the Savior and His Apostles or the changed form, organized by man? As men have their free agency they have a privilege to exercise it in this respect, and of course abide the consequences.

Those who embraced the Gospel in the days of the Savior and His Apostles, had a right to enjoy the Spirit of God and be in possession of the fruits of the same, so beautifully portrayed by the Apostle Paul in his epistle to the Galatian Saints. He says: But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance. (Gal. 5:22-23.) Are these fruits predominating among professed Christians of today, or do we find them nearer that other state also described by Paul in his letter to the highly beloved Timothy. Paul, with the power of inspiration resting upon him, looked down through the unborn ages of time and declared that the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned into fables. (I Tim. 4:3-4.) And as a consequence that deplorable condition of the world in the latter days, which the same writer depicted in the third chapter of the same epistle. It should not be difficult to establish in our minds the fact whether such a condition exists in the world today or not. Other Prophets have spoken concerning the condition of the world in latter days. Isaiah says: The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, broken the everlasting covenant. (Isa. 24:5.) By reading the whole chapter it is clear to be understood that the Prophet here spoke concerning the last days, and those who will compare the doctrine which Christ taught with the doctrines of the manifold sectarian Churches of today, must confess that the conditions of the world as foretold by Isaiah has most effectually come to pass, and that it is quite as universal as the same Prophet in his twenty-fourth chapter, second verse, said it would be.

Much more could be said upon this subject of apostacy from the Gospel of Christ, for the Scriptures are full of prophecies concerning it; but one more reference will perhaps prove sufficient at present. The Prophet Amos, in his writings, says: Behold the days come, said the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord, and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. (Amos 8:11-12.)

CHURCH AND STATE.

Salt Lake Herald. Oct. 3, 1900.

According to the Herald's dispatch from Price, published yesterday, the Rev. T. C. Iliff of the Methodist church made a good republican campaign speech to the congregation and its friends there. The report says that the audience which was assembled to hear a sermon was much surprised to hear a campaign talk instead. If the people of Price knew the doctor as well as he is known here they would have been surprised if he had not talked politics. The turmoil and excitement of a campaign is in a way as interesting to the doctor as a revival meeting. The impropriety of church interference in political affairs never occurs to him unless it happens to be the other fellow who talks, and then he objects.

If Bishop Scanlan, for instance, were to rise up and protest publicly in the cathedral against the way this administration has allowed the Catholic churches in the Philippines to be desecrated and despoiled, none would be quicker than Iliff to protest against church interference in politics. If President Snow were so unwise as to publicly declare his approval or disapproval of either of the presidential candidates, who would be heard from as suddenly as Iliff?

He has been prominent in every effort to separate church and state in Utah—unless the church helped the republican party—since the division on party lines. If he stopped to consider the welfare of his denomination he would see that nothing can so embarrass its mission in Utah as to have it identified with the very thing that injures a church most—the impression that it is being used for political purposes.

To The Soutnern Star:

As the letters of others have been a great help to me, I wish to say a few words in regard to the Latter-day Saints, that those who are earnestly seeking the truth may know that they are the true servants of God. The first Mormon Elders I ever met were Elders Dunkley and Nuttle. I had been very weak for some time, not able to do my work. Those two Elders spent the evening with us. As I have said, I was very weak, but it seemed to me that God gave me strength to go into my kitchen and cook those two servants of God their supper, which I did with pleasure, and felt much better afterwards. I have met a great number of Elders since that time and am always ready and willing to do what I can for them to help them proclaim the true Gospel. I have been a member of the Missionary Baptist church for a number of years and tried to live a Christian. But felt that something was lacking. It did not take me long to see that the so-called Mormons had a much truer pattern of the Church of Christ than any other it has been my lot to hear, so I went to hear them every chance I got, and the more I hear the more I wanted to hear them, notwithstanding my folks would rave on me for going to hear them or having anything to do with them; but their raving only made the few sparks kindle and shine brighter. Finally I made up my mind to do what was right, let the consequence follow. So on the 25th of June, this year, I and my husband and oldest daughter were baptized and confirmed by Elder D. H. Elton. I can truthfully say that I am perfectly satisfied with what I have done, and am not ashamed of the name Mormon. Your sister in Christ,

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

Easy Enough to Be Pleasant.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life flows by like a song,
But the man worth while is the one who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong.
For the test of the heart is trouble,
And always comes with the years,
And the smile that is worth the praises of earth
Is the smile that shines through tears.

It is easy enough to be prudent
When nothing tempts you to stray;
When without or within no voice of sin
Is luring your soul away.
But it is only a negative virtue
Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth
Is the one that resists desire.

By the cynic, the sad, the fallen,
Who hath no strength for the strife,
The world's highway is cumbered today;
They make up the items of life.
But the virtue that conquers passion
And the sorrow that hides in a smile,
It is these that are worth the homage of earth,
For we find them but once in awhile.

THE RESURRECTION.

Perhaps there is no other subject upon which the people generally have such varied, confused and erroneous ideas, as the one here given above—the resurrection. It is true that Christian worshippers unanimously, and universally, declare their belief in the resurrection, but as to the joys, tangibilities and realities thereof they are at sea; at a loss to know—the advocates of senseless theories. The popular theory of the resurrection is that it is solely spiritual, and this spiritual without form, knowledge or comprehension; that the resurrected ones will gently waft through space as angels winged and feathered, sitting upon silvery clouds, playing on golden harps, to the adoration and satisfaction of a Being whom they term God, whose lofty dwelling place is no other than the toppermost pinnacle of a topless throne. To the reasonable person, to the man blessed with his proper capabilities and intellectual faculties, these theories are vain and nonsensical; and to the devoted student of the Holy Bible, who has gained a fair understanding of the written word, they are false and delusive, being contrary to the declarations of inspired men of God. We need only rely upon the spirit of wisdom, the Holy Ghost, and the word of God will at least convince us that the popular theories of the world are not in accordance to His will.

It is hardly necessary to prove that, according to the Scriptures, there will be a resurrection of the dead, seeing that we are living in a blest community of people who hold aloft the Holy Bible and say, "We believe it to be the word of God;" for this doctrine—the resurrection—is plainly and profusely taught in that good old Book, yea, that Holy Book of Books. Paul, in defending the Gospel and preaching concerning the resurrection of the dead, gave this concise, but comprehensive, statement, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ, shall all be made alive." (I. Cor. 15:21). And again,, speaking of the doctrines of Christ, the same Apostle writes, "Of the doctrine of baptism, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." (Heb. 6:1). From these passages, and a score of others which might be given, we can readily see that there will be a resurrection of the dead, so that as concerns this phase of the subject we should be convinced and satisfied. There will be a resurrection of the dead, for for this cause (that He might bring to pass the redemption of the body from earth's silent tomb) was the Son of God revealed in the meridian of time. Said Jesus, "This is the will of Him that sent me, that everyone which seeth the Lord, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." (John 6:40). Again, the Messiah spoke these words, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." (John 12:32). This assurance we have, that there will be a resurrection of the dead, for "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." (I. Cor. 15:19).

Let us first see who are the ones to be made partakers of Christ's atoning sacrifice, so far as the redemption of the mortal body is concerned. We must not overlook the fact that the atonement is far-reaching, that its redemption is universal, that it provides for the salvation of all things. From the scripture given heretofore, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," we are led to believe that the atonement extends in its redemption unto all the sons and daughters of men; whether they be good, bad or indifferent; righteous, sinful or negligent, they are all to be made alive through the Savior's self-sacrifice, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." The Master taught that they "that are in their graves shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." (John 5:29). And Daniel testified, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." (Daniel 12:2), while Paul in his defense before Felix acknowledged, "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets; and have hopes toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24:14-15). From these words we come to understand, having faith in the Scriptures, that the resurrection is universal, and provides for the general salvation of all classes, whether penitent or impenitent, righteous or ungodly, good or evil, holy or unholy. They will all be loosened from the thralldom of death and lifted up at the last day. "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Jesus Christ, who gave Himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time." (I. Tim. 2:5-6).

Having briefly touched upon the question as to the recipients of Christ's atonement in the resurrection, and having discovered that all, without exception, are unconditionally appointed to share in this free gift, let us next investigate as to the time of the resurrection, and see what the good old Book—the Holy Bible—has to say upon this subject, by way of giving us light and intelligence concerning the same. In writing to the Thessalonian saints, the great Apostle to the Gentiles says: "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." (I. Thess. 4:16). The "dead in Christ," then, are to be raised first. Now, who are "the dead in Christ?" Are they not those who have died in the faith of the Lord Jesus? Yes! these are they who have been valiant soldiers of the cross; who have accepted Christ, and become the recipients of His choice blessings. These shall rise first. Paul in writing concerning the saints, and the many trials they passed through, and persecutions endured, said that they braved all; "that they might obtain a better resurrection." (Heb. 11:35). Then there is a "better resurrection" in store for those who, like these persecuted saints, remain faithful unto the end, and deny not the tender mercies of Christ, "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." (Heb. 11:25).

Let us investigate this better resurrection. John, the beloved Apostle, in vision upon the lonely isle of Patmos, when the curtains of the present were parted aside and he was permitted to gaze down the vista of future ages, saw, among other grand and glorious things, the resurrection of the just, the millennium, and the general, or last resurrection. Speaking of the righteous—those who had not worshipped the wicked beast—he says, "They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he who hath part in this first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." (Rev. 20:4-6). The resurrection, here designated by the Apostle as "the first resurrection," is indeed that "better resurrec tion" of which Paul spoke in his Hebrew letter, and which we have noticed hereinbefore. We are not at all surprised that the saints were perfectly willing to sacrifice their all upon the altar of consecration, and even life itself, for the privilege of sharing the joys and glories of this first, or better, resurrection. The dead in Christ, the righteous and just, will be redeemed from the bonds of death when the Messiah cometh to gather the faithful and make up His jewels; while the wicked, the sinful and the ungodly will be reserved in chains of darkness, woe and misery until one thousand years have passed, during which time the redeemed saints, with the immaculate Savior, will live and reign upon the earth. At the expiration of the "thousand years," millennial reign, the Apostle says, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." We learn, then, that between this first and last resurrection, that a thousand years will elapse, a thousand years of peace, when the wicked shall not stand, and Christ as King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, shall reign supreme and supervise the celestialization, sactification and universal redemption of the earth.

But some one may say, How are the dead raised, and with what bodies will they come forth? The dead will be awakened by the voice of the Almighty, and raised from their graves by the power of God. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth." (John 5:28). To the unbelieving Sadducees, who denied the resurrection, Christ said, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." The power of God is sufficient to raise the dead, and is the means applied for their redemption. As pertains to the body, it is self-evident, from the scriptures of Holy Writ, that the same body that died and was placed in the tomb, will be made alive and come forth. Yes! come forth from the grave; as the mortal body dies, and is placed therein, so the immortal spirit breathes life, and brings it forth therefrom. But the question is asked, "Where in the Holy Bible is there any declaration or necessary implication, that the identical material body which was a tabernacle for the spirit in life, will be made alive?" By reference to Paul's letter to the Romans, we find a plain, positive declaration that the mortal body shall be made alive in the morning of the resurrection; for it is written, "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies." (Rom. 8:11). We are also informed by the same Apostle, "that if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection." Now, let us see, Jesus was born of the Virgin Mary, and took upon Him the seed of Abraham. He grew to manhood, and possessed a tangible, material body of flesh and bones, much the same in appearance and dimensions as His fellow-countrymen. This body of flesh and bones was nailed to the cross, and when life was extinct therein was taken down and laid in the tomb. Three days later this selfsame body was resurrected, and Jesus once more stood upon the earth. If we are to be raised in the likeness of His resurrection, as the Scriptures declare, then how can anyone consistently declare in favor of a mere spiritual, shadowless, formless resurrection? After His resurrection He appeared to His disciples and showed His hands and side to them. He ate with them, and to the doubting Thomas, He said, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." (John 20:27). Christ is our divine Pattern in the resurrection, as in all holiness and truth, or, as Paul expresses it, "Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming." (I. Cor. 15:23).

The Apostle Matthew records, "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after His resurrection, and went into the holy city and appeared unto many." (Matt. 27:52-53). The bodies of saints came out of their graves and appeared to many in Jerusalem. This is as plain as language can make, or words express it, that the body that dies and sleeps in the tomb will be made alive. The patient Job, a man perfect in all his ways, believed and taught a bodily resurrection, for he says: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." (Job 19:25). Isaiah also says: "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise." (Isaiah 26:19). These inspired writers plainly and emphatically teach that the same body that dies will be redeemed and loosened from the grave. It will be a resurrection of the dead—of dead bodies. If the selfsame body that dies is not raised, it cannot be called a resurrection, but a new creation.

Our bodies will be raised in a refined state and made immortal—the corruptible blood being stricken from our veins. After this change it will still be the identical body which the spirit inhabited, but purified, redeemed, and clothed with immortality. "And the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall all be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." (I. Cor. 15:52-53). What will put on immortality in the morning of the resurrection? Will it be a new and spiritual body which never died, that will be thus clothed? Paul answers these inquiries when he says: "This mortal must put on immortality." That which dies and is placed in the tomb will be resurrected, and clothed with immortality. When clothed with immortality death will have no power over the body. We shall know each other, yea, know even as we also are known, and will have a divine, sacred work of a glorious nature to perform.

Through the atonement of Jesus Christ mankind are raised from the tomb, and death is swallowed up in victory. Thus will the redeemed and sanctified sing this triumphant song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" while they enter into celestial joys, and are forever with the Lord.

EVILS OF IDLENESS.

Man was born to work. To be happy he must have something to busy himself with. The mind, as well as the body, must be occupied with labor or problems of some nature. Unhappiness, discontent and unhealthy conditions all come from idleness. And all human beings are alike susceptible to these evils.

A splendid illustration of this fact is found in the recent farewell address of Hon. E. G. Coffin, late warden of the Ohio penitentiary. He said:

"It will be clearly seen that, although these financial results have been happily achieved, they have not been at the expense of the prisoner's welfare. We have reduced the number of idle-houses from six to one, and that contains, on an average, less than fifty men, all infirm or convalescing from illness. It might now appropriately be called a 'rest-house,' where men whose vitality has been impaired by sickness can recuperate.

"When I assumed the wardenship I received hundreds of applications for work from the enforced idlers, who looked upon their condition as one of slow torture. One of them said:

"'I know how many nails there are in the floor within reach of my eye, and the number of seams, also. I am familiar with the stained spots, the splintered furrows, the scratches and the uneven surfaces of the planks. The floor is a well known map to me—the map of monotony—and I con its queer geography all day and at night in dreary dreams. I know the splotches on the whitewashed wall as well as I know the warts and moles on the hopeless faces opposite me. My mind is a mill that grinds nothing. Give me work—work for hand and mind, or my heart will lose its last remnant of reason.'

"But now, and for a long time, all this has been changed. Even the men in the idle-house contribute something to the industry of the establishment, by assisting in the preparation of the vegetables for the great kitchen. I believe in labor. Whatever capital there is in existence is the fruit of labor. Work and wealth are parent and child. Work is a wonderful medicine, and it is not patented by anybody. It cures the blues and conquers time and trouble. While it may be that contract labor in any form is not the best system of prison labor, it is better than idleness. It is also better than a mere pottering and tinkering that cannot be styled labor. If I had my way, every prisoner should enjoy the net product of his labor, after deducting the necessary expense for keeping him."

RELIGION.

BY L. E. JORDAN.

The above word signifies an outward expression of devotion and love for something superhuman, or overruling power. Religion is found in every nation and clime under the sun. The sage and savage, black, white, red or yellow, all appear infected with this attribute (which comes from God), to worship some form of deity.

The inclination to bow down in religious devotion and praise to a God is general among all the children of men, in all the world. The Asiatic appeals through his idols to Buddha and Brahma, whose teachings in connection with Confucius, are the embodiment, to him, of all that is divine. He is willing to make weary pilgrimages, hundreds of miles, sometimes measuring the distance with his body, prostrating himself with the most sacred and humble devotion to his idol, and his sincerity cannot be questioned. These enthusiasts are willing to sacrifice all and even life itself in the service of their God.

In the city of Benares, in India, during the great annual festival held in honor of the idol juggernaut, many of these frenzied idolaters sacrifice their lives. When the great car, containing the idol, rolls forth, drawn by thousands of fanatics, many will stand in the way and willingly throw themselves beneath the wheels, being ground to pieces and considered martyrs to a glorious cause. Their carcasses being left on the ground to be devoured by vultures, which are also considered sacred, and who glut themselves during this annual high festival with the blood of these poor fanatics.

The sincerity of the Hindoo mother cannot be questioned, when she will willingly throw her only child, her bosom's joy, into the river Ganges to appease the wrath of her God and satiate the appetite of the sacred crocodile. Millions of infants have thus been sacrificed to this inhuman and unnatural system. Such rites and ceremonies have, and do still, disgrace the sacred name of religion. The fakir still practices his austerities and macerates his body, will tie himself in some unnatural position and thus remain for years, before disease and death liberates him from his self-inflicted torments.

The Mussulman dervisher, in his fanaticism, will whirl in his mazy dance until exhausted and insensible, and the true followers of Mahomet are ever found willing to sacrifice their life for their religion. It is thus we find him courting death in battle, making of him a brave and intrepid warrior, hard to overcome. He believes that if he dies in defense of his faith that Paradise and a beautiful harem await.

The sincerity of the above so-called heathen cannot be brought in question, and the Protestant reformers were equally as honest in their views. Many of them died at the stake and were burned to death for the principles they espoused. Sectarians as well as Catholics; Pagans as well as Christians, all have suffered tortures and death for their religious principles, and to say men or systems of religion are sincere does not imply their truthfulness. Many people today believe that for a person to die happy with a benign and cheerful countenance, expressing great faith in religion, that their salvation is secure and that such a person has gone to heaven. I would say to those people—be not deceived; such enthusiasm, emotion and fervor is no token of true religion and the gifts of heaven are not secured by any such manifestations.

Many deceitful spirits are gone forth and made manifest in the various rites and ceremonies of a corrupt Christianity. The enthusiasm displayed through religion is deceiving the world and superhuman efforts are being made by the father of lies to give miraculous manifestations of his power, to attest his claim, as "the God of this world;" in consequence many are following these delusive spirits.

One hundred years ago, in the south, great religious revivals were in progress. Large bodies of worshippers would gather in camp-meetings and wonderful powers were witnessed—men and women were cast to the ground, were rolled and tossed to and fro, fell in trances, acted like maniacs and otherwise were transported with enthusiasm—being possessed of devils. At this time it was called an outpouring of the Holy Ghost; a second Pentecostal shower; the greatest ever witnessed in America!

Since that time many revivals of a like nature have occurred and the same spirit has been manifested; perhaps not to such an extent, but still today peculiar phenomena and miraculous things occur through the influence of evil spirits, in the name of religion. Old men and old women, crippled, gouty and stiff with age, will leap and dance like the young, shouting glory, being apparently transported to the third heaven with glee. This exhibition of enthusiasm lasts until the victim of such fanaticism sinks exhausted in a delirious trance or visionary insensibility.

The following, which I recently clipped from a newspaper, shows the same enthusiastic fanaticism displayed by the fakir of India, the dervisher in Asia, and the American Indian, who will dance around his camp fire until he becomes drunk with excitement, and many times in his fervor falls in the fire, a victim to his religious superstition.

The religious order of Shakers practice similar methods. The article reads as follows and is headed, "Some Sanctification:"

"For some days a sect with no known title, composed principally of ignorant country people, has been holding revivals in Roylston's big camp-meeting ground. After they have prayed ten minutes, all present, young and old, of both sexes, rise from their knees and dance most violently. There is no concerted movement, each individual gyrating as the spirit impels. Some of the women whirl around in a continual circle until too dizzy to continue. Men cut all sorts of capers, keeping up the most infernal din until finally all become completely exhausted. Then, with the perspiration streaming from their faces, they proceed to exhort all within hearing to join the sect and become sanctified.

"All claim that they are constrained to this peculiar conduct by the fact that they have lydite, dynamite and other explosives in their souls. The ceremonies yesterday were especially violent."—Roysston (Ga.) Special to the Philadelphia Evening Telegram.

The only apparent difference in this sanctified class and other fanaticism is that they are filled with more modern and powerful explosive material.

Common gunpowder might do for the Methodist and Baptist, who may be more moderate in their enthusiasm, but an up-to-date deacon, occupying the amen corner, in this enlightened age, must be filled with gun-cotton and lydite, or the bottom will be knocked out of his religion, founded on enthusiasm.

From the above we can readily see that the foundation of modern Christianity is generally based on emotion and enthusiastic fanaticism, and it would be true to state that this same system of religion is practiced the world over, being bred and fathered by Paganism.

True religion will stand scrutiny and honest investigation; it is logical and philosophical and will not conflict with truth, wherever found. A scientific truth is just as valuable as if gleaned from the sacred pages of Holy Writ, and true religion will not conflict with the Word of God.

In these days, as well as in the past, archæologists and geologists and other scientists who have delved into history and science have been condemned by bigoted Christians, who have looked upon their discoveries as being in conflict to the teachings of the Bible. The fact generally has been that their own interpretation of the Word of God has been in error. The false doctrines which are taught in the name of religion are astounding. Several hundred professed faiths, all claiming Christ as the author and founder of their views, when the rites and ceremonies they practice are absolutely framed and manufactured by man.

Let us view some of the traits of the religion which Jesus taught in Judea. He was unpopular and branded as a wine-bibber, blasphemer and imposter, but the preachers of today are very popular, nevertheless they teach for doctrine the commandments of men and are ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Jesus did not worship an etherial being who lived beyond the bounds of time and space, who sits on the top of a topless throne, and who is described in the creed of the Church of England as a God, without body, parts or passions. Jesus did not sprinkle, christen or baptize infants. He did not deal in penitent forms, mourners' benches, with their attendant dancing and shouting. He did not wear a beautiful gown, with a mitre on His head, when delivering His discourses. He did not have any tiaras, croziers and beautiful vestments, nor teach His disciples to adore the virgin Mary. He did not teach that belief alone would save a man. He did not pander to the rich, but chose His followers from the meek, poor and lowly. He did not indorse the religion of the Jew, be he Sadducee, Pharisee or Esenee. He did not say the Pagan, epicurian or academic was right. He did not sympathise with Greek philosophy and its pleroma.

Jesus Christ pronounced them all wrong. He laid the axe at the root of the tree and looked upon the whole system of theology, in His day, as being very corrupt. He called all men to repentance and taught an exclusive faith. He said, "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the Kingdom of God." His religion was looked upon with disfavor by all the world. He warned His disciples, however, that they would be hated of all men for His name's sake, but that, if they would endure to the end, they would be saved. He taught them faith in His Father, of whom He was the brightness and express image of His person, that is, a material God, with a body, with parts and with passions, a God that could hear, taste, see and smell, with all the attributes of man, as man was made in His image. His converts were all baptized by immersion that their sins might be washed away, and hands were laid upon them that they might receive the Holy Ghost. He, in connection with His Apostles, traveled without purse or script, taking no thought of the morrow. They did not labor for filthy lucre, preaching for hire and divine for money, thus making merchandise of the souls of men. Jesus said, "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven," and "If ye love me, keep my commandments." In the most beautiful sermon ever recorded, He said, after teaching the people, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto the foolish man, which built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell; and great was the fall of it."

This same Teacher taught humility and took infants in His arms and blessed them, and told His disciples that except they became pure like a little child, they were not His, "for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." He taught His disciples to observe all things whatsoever He had commanded them, gave them authority and sent them forth to preach His Gospel and cry "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."

Jesus Christ's Church, or exclusive system, was governed by Apostles, Prophets, Seventies, High Priests, Elders, Priests, teachers and Deacons, which officers and instructors were to remain until all were brought to a unity of the faith and a knowledge of the Son of God. It embodied "one Lord, one faith and one baptism," and the spiritual gifts which would follow believers were wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, descerning of spirits, tongues, interpretation of tongues, etc., and He also said that these signs shall follow them that believe, they should cast out devils, speak with new tongues, they should take up serpents; and if they drank any deadly thing, it should not hurt them, and they should lay hands upon the sick, and the sick should recover. These same Apostles, when asked by believers what they must do to get saved, said, "Repent, every one of you, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of your sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." They also taught that this system of salvation was not only applicable to the generation in which they lived, but was "to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

The above are a few of the Scriptural truths taught by Jesus, the Nazarine, the Captain of Salvation and the founder of Christianity. His theology is pure and undefiled and finds no place among fanaticism and intolerance. Let us therefore follow Him and keep His commandments and be truly religious. Let us build upon a good foundation, so that we may be able to withstand the storms of scepticism, fanaticism and wickedness, which overwhelm the earth. Thus we will bring about the reign of peace and righteousness, the desired end of Christ's system of theology.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

The third president of the Chattanooga Conference—Elder Geo. A. Adams—was born Dec. 4, 1864, in Iron county, Utah. He comes of good, valiant, sturdy pioneer stock, and his parents are enrolled among the early settlers of Utah and the West. His father worked on the Nauvoo Temple, Illinois, and was an eye witness of the remarkable transfiguration of President Brigham Young when the mantle of the martyred Prophet Joseph rested upon him, and he spoke as with the voice of Joseph, while in appearance, attitude and figure the resemblance was strikingly similar.

It was in 1849 that Brother Adams' family settled in Iron county, Utah, and began to till the soil, irrigate the crops, and make the sterile wastes to yield the bounties of life. George A. worked on the farm in the summer and attended the district school during the winter season of the year. He remained at home until the spring of 1881, at which time he was called to locate in San Juan county and reclaim that barren plain. He obeyed without hesitation, and engaged in various kinds of labor.

Realizing the truthfulness of the word of the Lord when He said, "It is not good for man to be alone," Brother Adams changed the name of Nancy E. Mortensen to Sister Adams. This lucky move took place April 22, 1885, and since that time six sweet babes have been sent to cheer their hearts and make of home a home indeed! These little ones are faithful to fast and pray for "Papa" and the progression of God's work.

ELDER GEORGE ALBERT ADAMS,
President of the Chattanooga Conference.

In January, 1899, Brother Adams was notified that his labors were desired in the ministry of the South. He cheerfully responded, and with a ready, willing heart was set apart March 15, 1899. Arriving in Chattanooga, he was assigned to labor in the East Tennessee Conference. Here he spent a few months, and then was transferred to the Florida Conference. When President David H. Elton was released from presiding over the conference, that he might devote his time and talents to the work on The Star, Elder Adams was called from Florida to succeed him, and so for some four months he has presided over the Chattanooga Conference.

Brother Adams is an earnest worker, untiring in his efforts to warn the people to flee from the wrath to come, and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God. He has no peers in the line of book selling, and when he fails to sell a book no others need apply. He is steady, deliberate, conscientious and faithful. He is wise in counsel, and is beloved of all the Elders under his jurisdiction. With such a valiant corps of soldiers, and such a gallant, trusted captain, we naturally enough look for a good, praiseworthy work from this Chattanooga Conference. Brother Adams is very humble, and this excellent trait, coupled with his stability and earnestness, makes him a power for good among his associates. He has the faith and love of all; the esteem and good will of his companions, and this has much to do with his present success.

Funeral of Elder H. D. Bronson.

The train bearing the earthly remains of Elder H. D. Bronson arrived at Preston, Idaho, Oct. 14, 1900, at 11 a. m. There were present at the depot a sorrowful father, a weeping mother, and host of relatives and friends of the deceased. The Bishopric and almost the entire community of Fairview were on the platform of the station when the train pulled in.

The body was first taken home, and then to the meeting house, where a large congregation had assembled to show their esteem, love and respect to the departed brother and friend, who had laid down his life in the service of the Lord.

Meeting was called to order at 2 p. m. by Bishop M. W. Pratt. There were present Apostle M. F. Cowley, Geo. C. Parkinson, S. H. Hale and Jos. S. Geddes, of the Stake Presidency. The choir sang that beautiful hymn, "Home, Sweet Home," and prayer was offered by President S. H. Hale. Continued singing, "The Resurrection Day." Bishop Pratt then introduced Elder John F. Perkins, who had accompanied the corpse from Chattanooga. Elder Perkins spoke in glowing terms of the faith and fidelity of the deceased brother while he labored in the vineyard of the Lord, and also explained how he came to lose his life.

Bishop Pratt also spoke words of praise for and in behalf of the deceased. Apostle Cowley, Wm. C. Parkinson, Geo. C. Parkinson, and Jos. S. Geddes all spoke words of commendation for the noble, sterling characteristics of Elder Bronson, and words of consolation for the bereaved parents. The choir then sang, "Farewell, all earthly honors," etc., and the benediction was pronounced by Apostle M. F. Cowley.

LOVE'S SONG.

I saw a youth and maiden
Upon a pleasant day,
Their hearts responses beating
To raptures of the May.
Young buds with fragrance waited
To greet them on their way;
Sweet birdies carolled gladness
From every bush and spray.
So happy were they all they needs must sing:
"Oh, welcome, oh, welcome, lovely spring!
The earth is fresh and flowers gay,
And love is love in joyous May."

I saw two happy beings
Whose lives were made complete,
For scenes of summer beauty,
Of wreaths and roses sweet.
Bright autumn's golden harvest
Of luscious fruits and grain,
And winter's hoary whiteness
All breathed the soft refrain:
"Oh, love, thou gift to mortals given,
Thou gift which flows from out of heaven!
Each gentle word, each tender thought,
By thy sweet spirit, Love, is taught."

I saw two white-robed angels
Upon that far-off shore,
Where earthly scenes had vanished
And earthly trials were o'er;
With crowns of glory resting
Upon each peaceful brow,
This holy anthem pealing—
(I hear it even now)—
"Oh, love, thou love which e'er endureth!
The angels' song the theme immureth:
Though life and time no more shall be,
Thou lasteth through eternity."

—L. Taylor.

OBITUARY.

ROBERT A. PAXTON.

Robert Anthony Paxton was born in Kanosh, Millard county, Utah, Oct. 25th, 1874. He attended the B. Y. A. at Beaver, and was the first missionary called from that branch.

The poem here given was written by his father.

He sailed on the lifeboat Zion,
Launched from the land of the brave
To rescue the perishing freemen
Who strive on the brink of the grave.

He knew not the points of the compass,
He cared not the depths of the sea,
He heeds but the voice of the Captain
Who calls from the letter box "B."

He bent to the oar like a seaman,
He sought but the stranger to save;
No thought for himself in the conflict,
He heeds not the malarial wave.

When drifting about on half rations,
Or fainting he sank on the deck,
He still throws a line to his neighbor,
A wreck in search of a wreck.

As I read the notes in his journal,
Each contents marked with a sob,
My heart grows sick with emotion
When I think of my brave boy, Rob.

He made many friends of the foemen,
His colors he nailed to the mast,
And threw out a buoy to his comrades,
With a rope to the vessel made fast.

He died on the good ship Zion,
Full of faith, with the harbor in sight,
And said with a smile when parting,
"I have fought, I have fought a good fight."

The angels have opened the portals,
A hero has pass'd in his check,
The Master has read from his passport,
He died at his post on deck.

—James M. Paxton.

History of the Southern States Mission.

February, 1900—On the 3d and 4th, conference was held with the South Carolina Elders at Columbus. The meetings were well attended and a good time was had by all present. Business of an important nature called President Rich to Ohio, so Elder L. R. Anderson took charge of the affairs of the Conference in his absence. The press in Columbus gave a fair report, and the Elders were treated very nicely by all the good people of that city.

On the 5th a company of Elders arrived from the West, and gave their names as follows: F. Layton, W. M. Holmes, G. H. Mower, T. Bingham, Eli Gordan, A. S. Hawkins and Joseph Brimhall. On the 11th and 12th, the Florida Conference was held in the Park Opera House, Jacksonville, Fla. The papers treated the cause with silent contempt, and miserably broke their contract to publish notice of the meetings. This Conference completed Brother Rich's tour of the Mission, and was one of the most successful held, there being a large turnout at the last meeting.

The second annual Conference of Conference Presidents was held in Chattanooga on the 17th and 18th. The details were given in the Star—Vol, 11, page 105. Four Elders arrived on the 19th. The names of this quartette are W. J. Rushton, A. T. Jones, A. L. Day and J. D. Brown.

On the 26th a telegram from Mesa City, Ariz., announced the death of Elder Alva T. Stewart, who left here on the 19th inst., en route home on account of sickness. He died on the morning of the 25th.

Elder Stewart labored in the South Carolina Conference and performed his labors with honor and credit. He arrived in the field in June, 1898, and can be truthfully termed a martyr for the truth. His death was occasioned, it is believed, by quick consumption, which was contracted by overwork. (See Star, Vol. 2, page 120.)

On the 27th, Elder J. U. Allred, of the Middle Tennessee Conference, telephoned the death of Elder Bryan W. Peck, of Gentile Valley, Idaho. His death was caused by a backset of measles, which terminated in acute bronchitis. His relatives were wired the sad news. On the 28th President Rich met the body of our dead brother in Nashville, had it embalmed, placed in a nice casket, and sent home in charge of Elder J. H. Belnap.

On March 4th Elder Belnap telegraphed his safe arrival in Gentile Valley, where he was met by the bereaved relatives.

Elder Peck came to the Mission June, 1899, and was untiring in his zeal, faithful and courageous in the work of God. God took him, no doubt, to do a grander and a greater work. (See Star, Vol. 2, page 120.)

March—On the 15th, Elders W. H. Jensen and W. P. Jacobs were mobbed in the city of Albemarle, N. C., by a band of mobocrats numbering some 100 men, one of the men having the audacity to say, "We are Christians." Letters were sent to the Governor of North Carolina, and also to the Sheriff of Stanley county, where the mobbing took place.

On the 7th the Elders in Jacksonville were abused by a drunken fellow, who struck Elder Jensen and called the Latter-day Saints all sorts of bad names. The Mayor refused to grant the Elders protection, and so the work in that city was abandoned for some time.

In the Georgia Conference, good weather, good health, peace and prosperity prevailed. On the 21st President Rich left for the West to attend the April Conference.

(To be continued.)

A Testimony of the Gospel.

I trust you will allow me a little space in the valuable little Star to bear my humble testimony to the truthfulness of the Gospel as taught by the Latter-day Saints.

I never was a member of any church until I joined the one established by our Lord and Master, and revealed in these the last days to the Prophet Joseph Smith. I first heard the Elders preach about July, 1893, in Calhoun county, Ala., and commenced to investigate their doctrine, and by January, 1895, I was so well satisfied of its divinity that I applied for baptism, the ordinance being performed by Elder Murphy, and was confirmed by Elder Beckstead.

I have had a testimony of the Gospel ever since, and it becomes stronger every day; and I know that any person who will investigate the doctrine with a prayerful heart can have a testimony, for Christ has said, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine."

We often meet with persecution, but this only strengthens us and makes us press ahead and live near to the Lord.

John Hicks.

THE DEAD.

Brother James Monroe Hale, of Provo, Ala., died at his home Oct. 10th, at 1:30 a. m. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn his loss. Brother Hale was a loving husband, a peaceful citizen, a large-hearted neighbor, and a faithful Latter-day Saint. He has gone to enjoy the glories of eternity and mingle with the redeemed.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE ORSON HYDE

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

The subject of our sketch was one of the first Quorum of Twelve Apostles chosen in this last dispensation. He was the son of Nathan and Sally Hyde, and born in Oxford, New Haven county, Connecticut, Jan. 8th, 1805. Like all his associates in the first Council of Apostles, Orson Hyde and his progenitors for several generations were native born Americans. The love of country was a strong element in their composition, and this trait Orson inherited from his forefathers in a high degree. His father was a talented man intellectually, possessed of keen wit, and was athletic and strong in his physical anatomy. Nathan Hyde, Orson's father, served in the United States army in Canada and was several times wounded. He was on the frontier in the war of 1812. Orson's mother died when he was 7 years old. Himself, eight brothers and two sisters became separated by living in different families. Orson was placed in the care of Nathan Wheeler, a gentleman, with whom he lived until he was 18 years of age. When Orson was 14 Mr. Wheeler moved from Derby, Conn., to Kirtland, Ohio. The young man Hyde walked the entire distance, 600 miles, carrying his knapsack. Subsequent to his arrival in Kirtland he launched out into the world for himself, reliant and dependent upon the providences of the Lord to ever rule his course and guide his footsteps in proper channels. He labored at various occupations and for some time served as a clerk in the mercantile establishment of Gilbert & Whitney in Kirtland, Ohio. In 1827, under the influence of a religious revival, he joined the Methodist church and became a class leader. Realizing, however, that the truth he had received was only fragmentary and that he must look for something better, he subsequently embraced the Campbellite persuasion, which taught faith, repentance and baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. This being in form more Scriptural, he accepted it as a step in advance. He went to reside in Mentor, Ohio. Under the direction of Sidney Rigdon he took up various lines of study, and by close application of mind became quite proficient in several branches of education.

He soon became a preacher and took part in organizing branches of the Campbellite persuasion in Loraine and Huron counties, Ohio. Over these branches he was appointed pastor in 1830. In the autumn of that year several Elders, Oliver Cowdery, Parley P. Pratt and others came to Ohio with their Book of Mormon and declaring a new dispensation. This was the first time Sidney Rigdon had seen the Book of Mormon, notwithstanding the oft repeated fallacy that his learning was coupled with Joseph Smith's ingenuity to produce the Book of Mormon. The book was published to the world several months previous to Sidney Rigdon ever seeing the book or the Prophet Joseph Smith. Orson Hyde read a portion of the New Record, and by request preached against it, but feeling convinced that he had done wrong, he determined to say no more against it until he had investigated thoroughly for himself with an unprejudiced mind. He recognized the great truth that no man can know a thing nor justifiably oppose anything concerning which he knows little or nothing. "He that judgeth a matter before he heareth it is not wise." After some consideration of the new message he went to Kirtland to see the Prophet Joseph Smith, and bent on further investigation. Upon his arrival there he learned that Sidney Rigdon and others of his Campbellite associates had embraced the faith taught by the Latter-day Saints. Upon a more mature investigation, with a prayerful spirit to obtain light from Heaven, he became convinced that God had really spoken from the Heavens and established anew the Church of Christ after the primitive pattern. He accordingly presented himself for membership and was baptized Oct. 31st, 1831, by Sidney Rigdon and confirmed the same day by the Prophet Joseph Smith. He soon received strong and most convincing manifestations of the Holy Spirit concerning the truth of the work, and began in earnest to bear witness to his former associates. Shortly afterwards he, with Hyrum Smith, performed a very successful mission among the Campbellites of Ohio. Brother Hyde had been ordained a High Priest in the Church. They baptized a goodly number, organized several branches of the Church, and under their administration many sick people were healed. The Lord "confirmed their words with signs following" in a remarkable manner. In those days spiritualism and other counterfeits of God's power were not extant in America. They are prevalent today, as predicted by Joseph Smith and the ancient Prophets. In the early days of Elder Hyde's ministry in the Church, thousands of people had been, by the operation of the Spirit of the Lord upon their own hearts, in course of preparation to receive the Gospel. They knew the voice of the Good Shepherd, and followed the same. It was the good fortune, God-given, of Elder Orson Hyde to reap the fruits of Gospel seed, sown by the Almighty in the hearts of thousands, who readily received baptism when the truth in its purity was presented to them. In the spring of 1832, with Samuel H. Smith, he accomplished an arduous mission in Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island and Maine. They traveled on foot 2,000 miles without purse and scrip, and rejoiced in being counted worthy of so great an honor.

Early in 1833 he went with Elder Hyrum Smith and performed a faithful mission in Ohio and Pennsylvania. They baptized many people in the course of a brief mission. Returning to Kirtland, Elders Hyde and John Gould were appointed as message bearers to the persecuted Saints in Missouri. They traveled on foot 1,000 miles, and crossed the rivers and large streams by swimming. Orson Hyde was strong and active in body, cheered on by the living faith and a certain testimony of the truth. They frequently walked forty miles a day. They performed their mission faithfully and returned to Kirtland in November of the same year. Shortly after this he, with Elder Orson Pratt, filled another important mission in Pennsylvania. In May, 1834, he went with Zion's Camp to Missouri. On the way to their destination Elder Hyde, with Elder P. P. Pratt, called on Gov. Daniel Dunklin to secure his offices in restoring the Saints to their homes and lands in Jackson county. This property they had secured legally from the government and by purchase from individuals, and from which they had been driven without provocation or even the shadow of law, by ruthless mobs, the excuse of their enemies being that the Saints believed in revelation, fulfillment of ancient prophecy, spiritual gifts and blessings, and in the abolition of slavery. The Governor gave them no encouragement, and their effort to save the chief executive of Missouri from the shame of cowardice, because he feared to do his duty, was comparatively in vain. Sept. 4th, 1834, he married Marinda Johnson, a sister of Lyman E. and Luke S. Johnson, who were also members of the first Council of Apostles. In the winter of 1834 Elder Hyde was chosen to be one of the Twelve Apostles and ordained to that holy calling Feb. 15th, 1835. With his associates in the Apostleship he traveled on a mission through Vermont and New Hampshire. In 1836 he went on a mission to New York, thence to Canada, where, with Elder Parley P. Pratt, he raised up several branches of the Church. In 1837 he went with Elder Kimball and others to introduce the Gospel into England. The history of Apostle Hyde in this first mission to Europe is largely the same as that of President Kimball and the other Elders associated with them. The spread of the truth was rapid. The power of God richly attended their labors, and in one year the baptisms in the British Isles approximated 1,500 souls. Elder Hyde returned to Kirtland May 22d, 1838, and in a short time removed to Far West, Missouri. Following the bitter persecutions endured by the Saints in Missouri he removed to Nauvoo, Illinois, and took part in the early settlement of that historic place. At the April Conference in 1840 Brother Hyde was called on a mission to Jerusalem. He was soon on the way, bearing the Gospel message to the land of Caanan, where once dwelt the Messiah and His holy Prophets and Apostles. John E. Page was appointed to accompany him, but failed to comply, and Elder Hyde proceeded alone.

Crossing the ocean to Great Britain, he passed on to Germany and in Bavaria sojourned awhile to learn the German language. He proceeded to Constantinople, thence to Cairo and Alexandria, and encountered many hardships during the journey. He reached the Holy City in October, 1841, and on Sunday morning, Oct. 24th, 1841, he ascended the Mount of Olives, the sacred spot where once stepped the feet of the Savior, and where He will stand again in the last days, and consecrated the land for the gathering of the Jews. He erected a pile of stones there as a witness, and one upon the Mount Zion, in verification of a vision given him before leaving Nauvoo, and the predictions of the Prophet Joseph Smith concerning him. He reached his home in Nauvoo December, 1842. Brother Hyde was active at home as well as abroad in preaching the Gospel and assisting to build up the interests of the Saints in Nauvoo. When the Prophet and patriarch were martyred Elder Hyde was on a mission with other Apostles, but returned with them to Nauvoo after receiving the sad news. Apostle Hyde was with the Saints in their exodus from Nauvoo and endured patiently the hardships incident to those trying ordeals. In 1846, with Elders John Taylor and Parley P. Pratt, Brother Hyde went on a mission to England to set in order the Churches in that land. Upon their arrival he was placed in charge of the Millennial Star, while Elders Taylor and Pratt visited through- the mission and regulated the branches of the Church. He edited the Star efficiently, and his writings were read with much interest by the Saints in the British Isles. He returned to Winter Quarters in 1847. While the Pioneer company explored the West and located the resting place of the Saints in Salt Lake Valley Elder Hyde remained in charge of the Saints at Winter Quarters. He published a paper at Council Bluffs, known as the Frontier Guardian, and came to Salt Lake Valley in 1851. He was energetic in helping to found the new commonwealth and in every way promote the growth and development of the Church and the country. In 1855 a mission was established in Carson Valley under the immediate Presidency of Apostle Orson Hyde. He organized a county there, which was then in Utah, but subsequently was a part of Nevada. In later years Brother Hyde was sent to take charge of the interests of the Church in Sanpete county, making his residence at Spring City. He was the leading spirit in that region up to the time of his decease. For a number of terms he represented his county in the Territorial Legislature, and was an active, efficient law-maker. He was also occupied with President Young and other leading men of the Church in visiting the settlement of the Saints and encouraging the people in all their labors, both spiritual and temporal. He was also a member of the committee for the construction of Manti Temple. More than 73 years of age, and after a life of useful activity, in which he suffered many trials and hardships, Apostle Orson Hyde departed this life at his home in Spring City, Sanpete county, Utah, Nov. 28th, 1878. He left a large family and a numerous host of co-religionists and friends, who loved him in life and mourned his absence when the hand of Providence beckoned him to another sphere. Apostle Hyde was a man of marked ability. He had a strong physical constitution and a powerful intellect. By application of mind he acquired a good education, which, coupled with a long and varied experience, made him a strong instrument in the hands of God in disseminating and defending the truth. He was a great Scriptorian, and it was said of Orson Hyde that in his younger days if anyone should quote or read a passage from any part of the Scriptures Elder Hyde could quote the next verse and tell you where to find it. He was a gifted speaker and writer, and like all true servants of the Lord, ascribed all the praise, honor and glory to our Heavenly Father.

A DISGRACEFUL AFFAIR.

Cleveland, O., Oct. 23, 1900.

President Ben E. Rich.

Dear Brother—Since last I wrote I have been mobbed, but feel more persistent and determined to battle for truth.

Last Monday, Oct. 15th, Elder C. D. W. Priday, George Summerhays and I set out for Damon, Ashtabula county, to hold a series of meetings. After an eleven minutes' walk from the end of the car line we arrived at our place of destination and were welcomed by our many friends. Tuesday the news that the Mormon Elders would speak in the church was noised around. The meetings held Tuesday and Wednesday evenings were successes in every particular. Thursday, when we went to the church, we found the following notice:

"To the Mormon Elders who are now assembled in Damon: You are hereby notified to leave town within twenty-four hours and avoid further trouble.

"Judge Lynch."

The significant brand, skulls and bones, was on the whitecap sheet. During the day rumors were afloat that the Mormon Elders were to be mobbed. We supposed that there was more "threat" and "blow" than anything else, so paid little or no attention to the circulating stories.

Thursday we held forth. The services were unmolested. Part of the mob had assembled, but being fewer than the number of friends, there were no serious results—a few eggs were thrown.

Notwithstanding the many threatenings, Friday night found us about our Father's business. Scarcely had the strains of the second song, "Weary not," died away, than pealed forth a war whoop that would make the strongest heart shring. Immediately the door flew open. About two dozen rotten eggs struck us and the pulpit simultaneously. The women and children rushed screaming into the aisle, thus getting quite besmeared with bad eggs. The men leaped to the door and succeeded in closing it against the mob. One man grabbed an iron rod and calmly told the lawless ones that they would walk over his body before a hair of an Elder's head was touched. The mob rushed to the window near the pulpit. Soon eggs, apples and most everything they could get hold of was piling through the window. Brother Priday and I received some stinging pelts. The rabble was very determined. It was some time before the men within dared to venture out. When they did the howling outlaws were dispersed and pursued in all haste across the meadows. None were caught, but most of the offenders were identified.

Saturday morning, when we went to the church, we found several baskets, a can of tar and a jackknife. What their intentions were I'll leave you to judge.

The church was badly damaged. It will have to be repapered. The pulpit and floor were a loud mess. When I saw the age of some of the eggs I did not wonder from where the mob could get feathers. However, it was rather reversing the order of tar and feathers. Our clothes were spoiled. The dresses of many were ruined.

Now, distinctly understand that the Damon people did not take part in this disgraceful affair. The blamable ones were factory hands and hoodlums that live nearby. The good citizens of Damon regard it as most disgraceful and as an insult to the neighborhood. The cowardly rascals will be handled by the State. The charge is riot. It is to be hoped that the guilty ones shall find a home at Columbus. All praise is due the Damonites for their manly stand in behalf of right and truth. We will keep you posted on court proceedings.

I hardly thought that I should ever be mobbed for the cause of Christ, that, too, so near the place where the Prophet Joseph was stripped, covered with tar and beaten on the night of March 25th, 1832. However, I thank God that I have a testimony of the Gospel for which I am willing not only to be whipped but to die. Your brother,

H. Z. Lund.

"Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

"Everyone that loveth is born of God and knoweth God."

SUCCESS.

BY LEROY PUGMIRE.

This life is a university; experience is the pedagogue; the earth the school room, and all people scholars. Each member of this alma mater has lessons assigned, examples allotted, and problems apportioned them to solve. Old Father Time stands at his post of duty; the past he has written and her record he has sealed; the present is revealed upon the page before him, while with his unerring ruler he points into the future, and warns us that the hours are swiftly fleeting by. Learn your lessons, learn them well, battle with experience; brave the trials that beset you on every hand; make your seeming defeats rounds in the ladder to success; your obstacles stepping stones to higher grades.

Some of the best lessons we ever learn we learn from mistakes and failures. The error of the past, carefully and judiciously avoided in the present, becomes the success of the future. One great man has very truthfully remarked thus: "The longer I live, the more deeply am I convinced that that which makes the difference between one man and another —between the weak and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy —invincible determination—a purpose once formed, and then death or victory." These words bespeak in forceful terms the secret of true greatness, and sound in striking tones the keynote to success.

Example is better than precept; the acts of men are safer guides than mere theory or verbosity. Look over the pages of history and biography; peruse the acts and general conduct of the great and mighty men of the earth, scan with delight and satisfaction the joyful results of their labors, until you are filled with pride and ambition, and led to exclaim. "What man has done men can do," like causes will produce like effects under similar conditions. You will find that these noble sires whose worthy names grace the history of the past, whose records are cniseled on the monuments of everlasting remembrance; whose lives are deeply engraven as examples of honor and sterling integrity, have been men who were willing to work with muscle and brain power, not disposed to shirk the present duty nor content to lounge in wealth and splendor, or spend their moments in idle pastime or trivial enjoyment. No! they were valiant, sturdy, energetic souls, whose energy knew no defeat, and whose invincible determination surmounted every seeming obstacle in their way. The men who have been truly great in the public mind, whose lives we honor as exemplary, whose acts we deem worthy of emulation, and whose immortal names we cherish and revere, have been men who, for the most part, have arisen to their prominence through the school of adversity, who have braved the trials of human kind and trod with weary feet life's rugged way.

The successful man is he who first learns to govern himself; for if he can master self, and better his condition, then he is gaining the ascendency in the scale of progression and advancement. To be successful means to be great, and to be truly great means to be good, and goodness consists in helping one's self and others, instead of standing idle with arms akimbo expecting some one to help you, and making yourself weary calling for assistance. It is said of the Master that He went about doing good, and thus it can be stated of all great and good men; they are the successful ones in life. If one would be successful, then he must needs be useful. No matter in whatsoever avocation he may be placed, let him learn to be useful, exhibiting a careful willingness to make the very best of life, to take the good of every day and hope for more tomorrow. Honor your calling, whether it be in the lower walks of life, or in higher circles, for no matter what the calling may be, it will never degrade the man, but the man may, and oft times does, degrade the calling.

Success in life depends upon the well directed ambition, the will to do, the energy to do it, and the understanding to do it well. "Wisdom," says the wise man, "is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom, but in all thy getting, get understanding." Success is an achievement; if we would gain it, then we must win it, achieve it by our efforts if you will, for men are not born successful, and success is not a legendary virtue, a gift of ancestry. Its satisfying results are the natural consequences of well directed energy, prompted by righteous ambition. Successful men have possessed the mind and will to do it, and they either found a way or made one. It was not with them a faltering attempt, an indecisive endeavor, but a firm, determined resolution, which carried out with vim and vigor, gave them a name, never to be forgotten or erased, but forever to be remembered, honored and revered. The nation's history is full of examples of men who, by their firm integrity, determined energy, and indomitable stick-to-it-iveness, have overcome barriers, surmounted obstacles, and became heroes of the past. Galileo, in prison, where one ray of light shone in his cell, worked out his astronomical problem proving that the world moved around the sun. Milton, the poet, was blind; Beethoven, the musician, was deaf. These masters of art, literature and science came up through the school of adversity, which has produced more noble graduates than any university in the world. Adverse winds filled their sails, and wafted them to the shore of Success. We are placed in more favorable positions than were these honored souls, we labor under more advantageous conditions than they, and our opportunities for development and advancement are more prolific and plenteous than theirs. Kites rise against the wind, not with it. No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm. Opportunity! why, her avenues are legion, her channels are innumerable! She greets us on every hand, she smiles upon us on all sides. Like the stinging nettle of the meadow, she must be grasped firmly and tightly, if we would claim her as our own, held tenaciously, and worked out energetically, that the boon Success may crown our efforts. Let no one lament—sorrowing because of a supposed lack of opportunity, or bewail thinking there are no privileges of becoming great and successful. Their mourning and weeping is in vain, for through the tears which bedim their eyes may be distinctly observed the avenues and highways they imagined barred and hidden. Then it is not a lack of opportunity which checks the course of progression, but the inability to grasp it and apply it to its proper use. All things in nature are useful, save to be an idle, shiftless man, and all things have been placed here for a purpose. The deadliest of poisons act as an antidote, and the little insect under the water builds a rock; everything is made for some end. The sun has her appointed station in the luminaries, the moon her course arranged, and the twinkling stars their place in the spacious firmament, but pray, what were men created for—shall he, the crowning glory of all creation's handiwork, be useless, helpless, and unsuccessful in his lofty sphere? Common sense will not have such to be so, and reason forbids the reiteration. You have heard a score of times that if you do but drop a pebble in a brook it causes a small ring at first, then another outside of that, and then another, and then another, till the influence of the pebble is perceptible over the entire bosom of the water. So success hinges upon the doing well of small things, and the gradual, but continual ascendency into those positions for which we are best qualified and fitted.

Contentedness is a blessed gift, and a stimulus to success. Not that one should be content to be idle and ignorant, no, not by any means whatever, but content to remain where you are placed, to fill your lowly calling with signal and marked ability, and then step higher as your qualifications may merit, and your faithfulness deserve. Do not leave your humble position to degrade one which you are not able to fill. Gen. Washington was contented as a farmer in Virginia. Abraham Lincoln conceived some of his brightest thoughts while splitting rails. James A. Garfield was happy while working for his mother in a little log cabin. Thomas A. Edison was contented with the workshop. The lives of these illustrious men stand out as monuments of honor, and signal posts to the present generation. The secret to success, the keynote to the whole situation, is to have some righteous target in view with a determined will to deliver the shaft. I can't has never accomplished anything, while I'll try has wrought wonders. Invincible determination is what we need to possess and utilize. The proper and lawful exercise of this resolute will power shall prove to all a blessing, it is a stimulus to noble deeds, an inspirer for the accomplishment of lofty purposes. Man is his own star, the master of his own fate, the architect of his own destiny. If he would build a monument that shall never crumble or decay, then let the foundation stones be first hewn, then squared, then smoothed, and fitted in their adapted places by wisdom's gifted hand. Erect a superstructure worthy of this broad foundation, and with well directed effort, energy and tact you may place the cap stone of success on this pinnacle of honor. The greatest man is he who chooses right with the most invincible resolution, who resists the sorest temptations from within and without, who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully, who is calmest in storms, and most fearless under menaces and frowns. What can be said of the great man can be as properly applied to the truly successful man, for the success of one will make him great and the greatness of the other will make him successful.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

THE KINGDOM.

A religious journal on exchange, recently published an article entitled "Phoenix, Miss., and Mormonism," written by John Lee Black. It appears that Mr. Black has been down in Mississippi holding religious services, and that while at Phoenix he was suspected and taken for a "Mormon Elder." Of course the accusation was false, but nevertheless it caused Mr. Black no small annoyance, as he readily perceived the intense hatred manifest toward the Mormon people, and was on this account refused permission to use the school house. To prove his identity, or at least to prove that he had no connection with the so-called Mormon Church, he says, "I gave them a discourse against Mormonism to convince them that I was not a Mormon in disguise, as I had been accused."

Evidently Mr. Black was preaching some glorious truths, and advocating parts of the everlasting Gospel which led the people to suppose him a Mormon, and then, fearful of the consequences of such a supposition, he winds up with a "discourse against Mormonism." The truths he advanced when he first entered that hostile and bitter community were in strict harmony and perfect accord with the doctrines as taught by the genuine Elder, and therefore he was silenced; but when he exhibited an antagonistic feeling for the Mormon Elder, he was allowed to remain in peace and quietude, and preach early and late. It is ever thus: so long as a fellow will revile the Latter-day Saints, scoff and scorn at their peculiar faith, deliver racy sermons in condemnation and derision thereof, he will be granted "both sides of the road," an open field and innumerable favors shown; but just let a Mormon Elder arrive upon the scene, who minds his own business and preaches the word of God, pure and simple, and the "tables are turned," another vastly different episode takes place and he is compelled to depart on danger of bodily injury or peril of his own sweet life.

In speaking of the Latter-day Saints, or as he designates them, "Mormon Prophets," Mr. Black says: "If they (the Mormon Prophets) give us another Gospel, Paul says we are accursed if we preach it; and if they give us the same Gospel, we have it already, and so we have no use for the 'Latter-day Prophets.' 'Whether there be prophecies they shall fail." (I Cor. 13:8.) The gentleman has evidently overlooked the fact that John the Revelator in prophetic vision saw the time when an angel should restore to the earth the everlasting Gospel (Rev. 14:6), and inasmuch as God deals with the children of men through His servants, the Prophets, (Amos 3:7), it becomes absolutely necessary that the Lord should prepare and appoint a Prophet to receive this heavenly, angelic message—the everlasting Gospel. If the children of men already possessed the Gospel in its fullness, then John's words are delusive and his professed vision a myth. So far as the Scripture contained in (I. Cor. 13:8) and quoted above by Mr. Black, is concerned, it is but an additional proof for a firm belief in prophecy. Prophecies were not to fail until perfection was attained, when we should see eye to eye, know as we are known, the dimming vails removed, and all mysteries understood. This is clearly seen by perusing the following verses: "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Have we arrived at perfection in the knowledge of the Lord or in the unity of the faith? No! Then prophecies have not yet failed to be a gift of the Spirit, and consequently are enjoyed where that goodly influence prevails. There is no denying this fact; it is an evidence for, and not against. Those who use the same to overthrow Mormonism are condemning themselves, and are finally prostrated in their own pitfalls.

Mr. Black continues: "The Mormons say that the kingdom prophesied of by Daniel (chap. 2) was set up by Joseph Smith in the year 1830, because it was to be in the 'latter days;' but Peter tells us that the things which happened on the day of Pentecost were to come to pass in 'the last days.'" (Acts 2:17). The prophecy of Joel as referred to by Peter was not altogether fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, for the things which did transpire on that memorable day, were only in part and not in full, as Mr. Black would infer. So, then, we have no evidence to prove that these manifestations were not to be witnessed at a much later date than Paul or Peter's time. The gentleman asks this question: "If Peter had the keys of the kingdom (Matt. 16:19). how could Joseph Smith unlock the door eighteen hundred years after Peter's time?" Of course there is only one way that this could be done, and that is for Peter to restore those "keys" and the authority of the Holy Apostleship upon the boy prophet—Joseph Smith—which the latter day prophet solemnly declares he did. The testimony of Joseph Smith to the people of this generation is to the effect that the Apostles Peter, James and John came from the mansions of glory and conferred upon him all the keys, authority, privileges and blessings pertaining to the work of God on the earth, and the setting up of His kingdom among the children of men.

The time of the setting up of this kingdom spoken of by Daniel, the prophet, in his second chapter was not to be in the meridian of time—the days of Christ's personal ministry on earth—but in the dispensation of the fullness of times—the great and mammoth dispensation of all ages—the last days. The kingdom of God is eternal, everlasting, and although it may be overcome in the earth through the wickedness and sinfulness of men, still it exists in perfection and completeness in the heavens of glory. From the very matter of fact that Daniel speaks of the setting up of a kingdom which should "never be destroyed," or "left to other people," it gives us to understand that at some time it may be destroyed in the earth or given to other people, but at this specific time it would not.

Our brother will discover that that which the world erroneously calls "Mormonism" is well guarded against all assaults, fortified for all attacks, and perfectly able to defend her glorious system, in the face of all opposition. Our claims are broad, because we stand upon a broad foundation—the solid rock of revelation; our faith is steadfast because we heed the voice of God as He speaks through His servants the prophets; and our feet are kept in the straight and narrow way, because we march to the music of heavenly inspiration. We testify that the kingdom spoken of by Daniel is being established upon the earth, that God has communicated His mind and will to man, and that the Gospel of salvation is being heralded from shore to shore, as a witness unto all nations, before the end comes.

"For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power and of love, and of a sound mind."

EDITORIAL THOUGHT.

An ambitious man without energy is like a well equipped vessel stranded upon the shores waiting for some favorable tide to waft it upon the ocean of fortune.

Persistent effort, determined energy, and a resolute will, guided by a righteous motive, and prompted by holy desires, are sure to win success in the struggle of life.

Strive for godliness, manifest humility, exercise charity, and overcome evil with good.

Let no man deceive you, the prize of Eternal Life awaits the enduring faith of the righteous.

Would you be loved, then bestow love upon others; would you have mercy extended unto you, then be merciful; would you receive the forgiveness of another, then see to it that you are willing to forgive.

Pluck, push, perseverance, these three are necessary in the affairs of life. Take hold, stick to and don't let go, for by thus doing you can shape your own fate, and master your own destiny.

Scatter seeds of truth in the stream of time that when launched upon the bosom of eternity you may reap the peaceable and everlasting fruits of righteousness.

We are here for a purpose, and our stay is brief. The end is not far distant, and the day of final accounts is near. Will we procrastinate the day of our redemption, and woefully neglect the salvation so graciously offered us by our Lord?

Our three worst enemies are, idleness, superstition and vice. The first wastes, the second frightens, and the third poisons. These are enemies to our tranquility here, and will prove detrimental to us hereafter.

Let us step aboard the ship of Zion as she stems the tide of persecution, and braves the tempests of false accusation. Her destiny is the harbor of life everlasting, and the shores of Eternal Bliss. No matter how the waves may dash, the winds howl, and the storms beat, the ship of Zion will suffer no harm, and all who keep aboard shall land in safety and security.

Do we fear the foe, then are we cowards; do we fear God, then are we His chosen sons. Never fear the puny arm of flesh, but trust in God and do the right, for to him that doeth good and loveth God there is a glorious crown in store.

A mighty and just Ruler is our God, whose ways are love, mercy and truth. To the murmurer He gives faith, to the weak strength, to the mourner joy, to the afflicted comfort. For all His wayward erring children, He has love and abundant mercy. To all who will come unto Him in spirit and in truth He has promised to bless, and not turn aside empty-handed, or cast them out forlorn and disappointed. Serve ye the Lord, and sing ye of His goodness, for He doeth all things well

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Away down in the extreme southern part of Utah, on the banks of the turbulent Rio Virgin river, in Washington county, at the little village of Dunsaw, Elder John Reeve first saw the light of day in a mortal existence. The village is now vacated by reason of the fact that the river washed away much of the town and farming land. In 1892 the family sought a new home at Hinckley, Millard county, Utah, at which place they are now located—it being the home of the subject of our sketch.

The parents of Brother Reeve were converted to the Gospel on the other side of the Atlantic in the sunny isle of Great Britain, and are English by nativity. They emigrated to Utah in 1853, and are therefore well acquainted with the trials and hardships of pioneer life.

To those who are familiar with the educational facilities of Southern Utah, it is needless to say that they are limited, scant and meager. Like the majority of sturdy Westerners, Brother Reeve attended the public school for a few months in the winter, and during the summer worked upon the farm. After locating at Hinckley he was imbued with a strong determined desire to obtain a higher education, and so he attended the Latter-day Saints College, and afterwards the Brigham Young Academy at Provo, Utah.

ELDER JOHN REEVE,
President Middle Tennessee Conference.

After leaving the academy he taught school for two winters, and it was while teaching at Leamington, Utah, in the spring of 1899 that he received a call to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the Southern States.

It was June 15th, 1899, when he left Salt Lake City for the South, and four days later he arrived, with the company, in Chattanooga, from which place he was assigned to labor as a canvassing Elder in Davidson county, Tenn., of the Middle Tennessee Conference. When the Middle Tennessee Conference was held in Nashville, Dec. 9th and 10th, 1899, Brother Reeve was called to act as a counsellor to President J. U. Allred, and upon the release of the President in June, he was selected to succeed him in the Presidency, choosing for his counsellors Elders Emery Barrus and John Kingdom.

President Reeve is a married man, and has two sweet little boys and a loving wife in his cozy domicile at Hinckley, who anxiously and longingly await the time when he shall return with honor and the blessings of the Holy Priesthood. Brother Reeve will be 28 years old on the 13th day of the first month of the new year. He is energetic, zealous, fearless and bold, being an intrepid defender of the faith and a stalwart supporter and advocate of righteousness and truth. His testimony to all the world is this. "The message delivered in these last days through the Prophet Joseph Smith, is the Gospel of Jesus Christ—the power of God unto salvation."

IN HONOR BOUND.

(Inscribed to W. S. Stratton.)

In honor bound to serve the state—
Humanity. Alone the great
Are they who nobly strive with fate
And love their fellow men;
Who bravely share the lot of those
Who by their manly toil uprose
To well-earned competence, and chose
To help their brothers then.

In honor bound to seek the right
Of public questions—hail the light—
With brain and brawn urge on the flight
For justice and "The Stars;"
To follow where our heroes led,
To trust our leader who has shed
New glory on our vallant dead,
And won in righteous wars.

In honor bound to meet a debt
With honest dollars. Never yet
Knew freedom shame, or base regret,
Or greed of place and power.
On in the march of progress! Yield
No foot to treason! Ours to shield
Savage from savagery! Our field
Is earth's God-given dower.

THE DEAD.

Brother R. J. Ridgway, of Clarendon county, S. C., has been called to mourn the loss of one of his sweet little girls, who departed this life about Oct. 7th, 1900. Brother Ridgway is a faithful Latter-day Saint, and has been called to suffer much affliction for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He is heart-broken over the loss of his sweet little girl, and we trust the Lord will bless him in the hour of his bereavement, and comfort him by the sweet consoling life-giving influence of His Holy Spirit.

Opportunity.

The recent death of ex-Senator John J. Ingalls will give new interest to the poem, entitled "Opportunity," which he wrote many years ago. It has been widely printed and much admired:

Master of human destinies am I!
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate
Deserts and seas remote, and, passing by Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late
I knock unbidden once at every gate!

If sleeping, wake—if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore.
I answer not, and I return no more.

A Chicago professor predicts that in 1,500 years Chicago will be inundated by Lake Michigan. The city is sinking at the rate of nine inches every 100 years.

"His truth shall be thy shield and buckler."

The Narrow Way.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Near two thousand years ago the Captain of Salvation uttered the above in connection with many beautiful truths. After His resurrection, when all power was given unto Him both in Heaven and in earth, He gave a commission unto His Apostles (eleven of them), saying, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you." "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost."

Upon the strength of the above commission, men of all nations, creeds and colors have taken it upon themselves to go forth in the pomp of their own doctrines, rites and ceremonies and preach their system of religion, calling it Christianity. The result is that upwards of 500,000,000 of the inhabitants of this world profess a belief in Jesus of Nazareth and accept Him as Divine, "the Son of God," the way, the truth and the life," and apparently Christianity has been a success in bringing humanity to a knowledge of its faith.

In this age of the world man has adopted a system of manufacturing parsons, and seminaries of learning have been provided so that men whose ambitions and aspirations are of the clerical order might be educated in the profession of a preacher, and a line of argument adopted so that each particular sect might, with apparent authority, have the conscience to proselyte its particular faith.

We thus have multitudes of uninspired parsons, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith, in every nation under the sun, preaching dogmas contrary to the instructions of the Divine Master they pretend to follow.

Such is the general condition of Christianity, and with its multitude of creeds, rites and ceremonies, it is sneered at by the Pagan and held up in derision as a system of discord and disunion, a "house divided against itself," stigmatized and branded "confusion."

"God is not the author of confusion," and sent His Son Jesus in the meridian of time to introduce a system of pure theology. He came from the Father, with due authority, and presented His "Everlasting Gospel," which was a code of laws, suitable for mankind, to purify and sanctify them and make them perfect. Jesus was "the perfect man" and practiced what He preached, designing that His Kingdom should be an everlasting Kingdom and that His Father's will should be done on earth as in Heaven; also that He should reign on the earth, as King of Kings and Lord of Lords. In fact, He laid the foundation for a theocratic government, whose pure and equitable laws should abound, from the east to the west and from the north to the south; which should eventually cause all men to see eye to eye and knowledge to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. The ultimate design of Christ's system of theology is perfection, and is embodied in the expression, "Be ye perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect."

In order to attain perfection, it is absolutely essential to secure an entrance into "the strait and narrow way" and become citizens of Christ's government, and then to walk uprightly, not swerving to the right or to the left. Snares are laid by the adversary, and man, unless he is thoroughly clad in the armor of righteousness, is apt to stumble and fall. Perfection is apparently unattainable in this life, and although we may strive our utmost to overcome the weaknesses of the flesh, we fall and are compelled to recognize the fallibility of man.

We need a guide that we might get on that "strait and narrow way," and the "law and the testimony," the "Word of God," should be studied, which is the plan of salvation. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." If we will do this, taking the advice of Jesus, and study the acts and doings of the Apostles, who walked and talked with the Captain of Salvation for upwards of three and a half years, we will find that faith was one of the essential requisites, and that "without faith it is impossible to please God," that whosoever would come unto Him must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them who diligently seek Him. (Heb. 11:6.) Another essential gift in the order of salvation is repentance, which is a godly sorrow for sins committed, which would work a repentance unto salvation not to be repented of, whereas the sorrow of the world worketh death. (II Cor. 7:10.) The next requisite was to obtain a remission of sins, and, according to Holy Writ, this could not be obtained only through baptism by immersion, which was ordained by God, for to remit sin. (Mark 1:4.)

The tabernacle now being pure, is a fit receptacle for the Holy Ghost, for man must be born of the Spirit. Anciently this was conferred by the laying on of hands. (Acts 19:6.)

All the above gifts could not be bestowed by the devout Pharisee or Sadducee, much less by the magician or sorcerer, and the keys of the Kingdom were only held by one man, at one time, who was recognized as the mouthpiece of God upon earth, "a Prophet, seer and revelator." In the primitive church Christ chose His Apostles and delegated Peter to be the head, bestowing the keys of the Priesthood of Melchisedec upon him, that whatsoever he should loose on earth should be loosed in Heaven, and whatsoever he should bind on earth should be bound in Heaven. (Matt. 16:19.)

This authority upon the earth did not grant to others the right to officiate in the name of Jesus Christ. The epicurians and gnostics, likewise academics and platonics and all the Pagan faiths, were equally obnoxious to Christianity. The devout Pharisee, Essenee and Sadducee were equally gone astray and grovelling in the dark, and unless they repented they likewise would perish. All the world stood opposed to the Gospel of Christ and the principles of righteousness. The theology of Jesus was therefore exclusive, it was not a system of many lords, many faiths and many baptisms, but only acknowledging "one Lord, one faith and one baptism"—but two ways, the one broad and the other narrow, and it is not everyone that saith Lord, Lord, that enter Heaven, but it is the one who doeth the will of the Father.

Just before the ascension from Bethany, Jesus imparted His final instructions to the Apostles, which was that they bear His Gospel and deliver His message unto all the world, and "He that believed and were baptized should be saved, otherwise they should be damned." These men who had been duly chosen by the Savior, filled their mission acceptably, judging from the record of "the acts of the Apostles." They preached and exhorted all men to accept Jesus as the Christ, and called upon them to exercise faith in Him, repent of their sins, be baptized for a remission of the same, and receive the Holy Ghost. These were the initiatory principles, to adopt aliens into the Kingdom of God, and to fully attest the divinity of this message, certain signs should follow believers.

Upwards of six weeks elapsed after the departure of Jesus, and these Apostles were met together in an upper chamber conversing of past events, and the miraculous work of the Messiah. It was in Jerusalem, at the feast of Pentecost, when the Jews were gathered from all nations, understanding different languages, when lo! the Holy Ghost, the promised Comforter, came to testify to the divinity of the mission of the Nazarene. The Apostles spake in strange tongues, declaring to each nation represented the glad tidings of great joy. Apparently the message spread consternation among the Jews, and they thought such actions was the result of drunkenness, but Peter boldly told them it was the operation of the Spirit, spoken of by Joel, the Prophet, which should eventually be poured out upon all people. These foreign Jews listened, became convinced and converted to the fact that the Son of God had actually been led as a lamb to the slaughter. Many of them had not taken active part in the crucifixion, nor consented to His death, and others again had actually taken part in that sad drama before Pilate and had shouted with the rabble, "Crucify Him, crucify Him, away with Him, the blasphemer," and perhaps they had spat upon their Redeemer; however, they were filled with remorse, and believed, crying "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter, in the majesty of his Priesthood, said unto them, "Repent and be baptized, everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2:38.)

The above is but a very brief account of the establishment of the Kingdom of God upon the earth in the primitive days. That particular event was remarkable and attested by great power, about three thousand being added to the Church and were baptized. The labors of those ministers of salvation, who, by the way, were not college-bred, seminary-learned parsons, but were chiefly composed of poor, illiterate fishermen, were confined for many years to the land of Judea, among the lost sheep of the house of Israel. As the Church grew they obeyed the law of consecration and had all things in common. In order that the temporal affairs of the Church could be better attended to, seven men were ordained by the laying on of hands, to the lesser Priesthood, which held the authority to preach and baptize, but not the authority to confer the Holy Ghost. (Acts 6:6.)

Philip was one of the seven, a man who performed a remarkable mission among the Samaritans. He baptized many into the Church and worked many mighty miracles, but in order that they might be endowed with the Holy Ghost, it was necessary for Peter and John to travel from Jerusalem to Samaria, a distance of seventy miles, and lay their hands upon the heads of those baptized converts, that they might be filled with the Holy Ghost, and the record says: "Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." (Acts 8:17.)

In the latter part of this same chapter we also read of another convert, who desired to get into "the narrow way," a man in authority, being a treasurer to Candace, Queen of the Ethiopians. This man evidently was a Jew and a student of the Prophets, being deeply interested in the prophecies of Isaiah. Philip rode in his chariot and interpreted the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah to him, giving the eunuch such evidence that convinced him that Jesus was the Christ.

When he was converted, like the Jews at Pentecost, and the people of Samaria, he desired membership into Christ's Church through the door of baptism, saying: "What doth hinder me to be baptized?" And Philip said, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." And he answered and said, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." (Acts 8:38.)

Contemporaneous with these events, and an active mobocrat against the Christians, was one Saul, a young man born in Tarsus, in the province of Silicia. His father, a Jew of the Pharisee order, having aided the empire in conquests, was granted his citizenship and made a Roman. Saul was educated in the hellenic schools, and learned the trade of tentmaker, but in order to give him more faith in the religion of his fathers, he was sent to Jerusalem and instructed in theology by the great teacher, Gamaliel. In this school he was taught to believe Jesus an impostor, and he labored faithfully, as an honest mobocrat, to expunge this new religion from off the earth. He was in league and union with the Sanhedrin and Priesthood of the Jews and was remarkably active in driving the Christians from Jerusalem.

At the head of a band of mobocrats, with due authority from the High Priest, he started on a long journey to Damascus for the purpose of persecuting a few Christians organized there. En route, when near his destination, this assiduous worker of wickedness was called upon to halt in his career, and henceforth we find him transformed into a worker of righteousness. It required a remarkable manifestation and a verbal conversation with the slain Messiah to convert this young man. The brilliancy of the light from Heaven affects his sight, and we find him a blind, helpless, penitent sinner, searching for Ananias, a devout Christian of Damascus. Ananias had been duly notified in a vision of Saul's conversion and was instructed to go to the house of Judas, in Straight street, and he would find the repentant Saul, who had fasted three days and nights and was fully prepared for the message of Ananias. Saul was commanded to be baptized and wash away his sins, and Ananias laid his hands upon his head, thus bestowing the Holy Ghost and restoring his sight. Saul was born again, and started in that strait and "narrow way," putting off the old man with his sins and putting on the new man in Christ Jesus. He was afterwards generally known by the Greek appelation, Paulus, or Paul, and was the most intrepid and valiant disciple that the primitive Church had. As a soldier of Christ, he was clothed with the armor of righteousness, being always in the van in contesting with the powers of darkness. He was persecuted and finally martyred in Rome. A short time before he was beheaded, he made use of the grand expression, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love His appearing." (II Tim. 4:6.)

Another notable convert in those days was Cornelius, a Gentile. Being a Roman citizen and a soldier of renown, he had been made a man in authority, a centurian, or Captain over one hundred soldiers. The record states that he was just, prayerful and hospitable, and that his supplications before the throne of grace had come up as a sweet memorial, so much so that God sent an angel to visit him, to give him instructions and set him on the "narrow way," that he might obtain salvation. Cornelius, who resided in Caesarea, was told to send for Simon Peter, who at that time was lodging with a man named Simon, a tanner, at Joppa, and he would tell him what he should do, in order to get into the Kingdom of God. The instructions were obeyed, and Peter traveled that thirty-three miles to Caesarea, in order to tell Cornelius and his household words whereby he and all his house could be saved.

Peter was not convinced that the Gentiles were fit subjects of the Kingdom, and it was necessary for the Lord to send him a vision, of a variety of beasts let down in a net, when he was commanded to kill and eat. Peter being a Jew, was very particular about what flesh he partook of, and he said: "Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean." The answer was: "What God has cleansed, that call not thou common." Immediately after this vision the messengers of Cornelius were admitted, and Peter accompanied them to Caesarea, saying, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him." Afterwards Peter taught this household the doctrines of a resurrected Savior, and the Holy Ghost came upon them, as upon the Jews at Pentecost, and this Gentile family spake in tongues and glorified God. Until this, Peter appeared reluctant about allowing the Gentiles in the strait and narrow way, but upon seeing that the Holy Ghost operated among them, he said. "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Thus the Gentiles were started in the "narrow way" and made heirs of salvation. (Acts 10.)

I will recount one more instance of the Gospel being taken to the Gentiles, also a Roman, a native of Philippi, then I will close this article. Paul and Silas had been preaching and organizing a branch of the Church in the city of Philippi, had started Lydia and her household in the "narrow path," baptized them, and were meeting with some success, when they were taken and whipped by the authorities and cast into prison. During the night an earthquake shook the prison, liberated the captives and opened the doors. The jailor, in terror, believing his prisoners had gone, drew his sword and attempted suicide. He had been asleep on duty and it was a capital offense, under the Roman laws, to allow a prisoner to escape. Paul said, "Do thyself no harm; for we are all here." The jailor appeared filled with gratitude and thanksgiving at this joyful news, and he washed their stripes. Undoubtedly the backs of Paul and Silas were raw and sore with the beating they had received, and the grateful jailor administered comfort to them and washed and anointed their backs. Paul meanwhile preached the plan of redemption to this man and his family, converted them, took them out in the night and baptized them, starting them also in the "narrow way." (Acts 16.)

What more need we add? Is not the way made clear, so that a man, though a fool, need not err therein? Does not the Gospel of Jesus, as taught by Him and His Apostles, show clearly that the fundamental laws requisite to get into the "narrow way" are, first, faith, second, repentance, third, baptism by immersion for the remission of sin, and fourthly, a baptism of the Holy Ghost, which is conferred by the laying on of hands? These ordinances being duly administered by one holding authority. (Heb. 6:1.)

Reader, examine the several hundred sects in Christendom and see if they resemble the primitive Church of Christ, as described in this article. This Church was built upon the foundation of Apostles and Prophets, High Priests, Seventies, Elders, Priests, teachers and Deacons. See if their rites and ceremonies are identical with those enumerated above. Ask them if signs follow believers as they did anciently, when the sick were healed, devils cast out and men spake in tongues and prophesied.

Thus you can prove all things and hold fast to that which is good, and be a follower of Jesus Christ, a "Latter-day Saint," and you will go on unto perfection, growing in grace and a knowledge of the truth, learning line upon line and precept upon precept, until you become perfect, having walked in the "narrow way" and earned the crown of righteousness laid up for the faithful.

History of the Southern States Mission.

April, 1900.—President Rich visited the Ohio Conference during the latter part of the month. The conference was divided, and Elder H. Z. Lund was called to preside over the North Ohio Conference, with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, while Elder L. M. Nebeker was appointed to take charge of the South Ohio Conference, with headquarters in Cincinnati. President Maycock was called home on account of the death of his father.

The city of Jackson, Tenn., was opened during this month, and a good work was performed in that place. Some opposition, led by a sanctified preacher, was encountered, and a few eggs were thrown, but no serious damage was done.

In Macon county, Tenn., Elders J. Reeve and E. S. Parkinson were molested and threatened. Hickory switches were left on the door step of the home of Brother Choate, with a note warning Elders that they would be visited in the night. The threats were made by cowards, and nothing came of it outside of the above. All was peace! The arrivals for this month were: Silas S. Smith, A. G. Haskell, W. Sowards, John Banks, R. E. Skinner, L. Dunn, F. Childs, Ira D. Massey, J. S. Brown, J. R. Poulson, Geo. Davis, Geo. R. Lyman, W. R. Bybee, W. W. Selck, D. A. Brinton, J. E. Follett, A. N. Allred, J. W. Lewis, Theo. Martineau and J. D. Frankland.

May—The Elders met with some little opposition during this month. On the 9th President Rich made a remarkable and somewhat hazardous trip to Yazoo county, Miss. The purpose and intent of his visit to that place was to see that the Saints were not despoiled of their rights. The trip was entirely satisfactory, and President Rich was able to hold meeting, bless two children, and return unmolested.

The arrivals for May: E. T. Mayhew, W. A. Lindsay, Hyrum Brinkerhoff, W. A. Adams, H. Randall, Isaac Clegg, E. R. Wooley and F. L. Hickman.

June—In Buchanan county, Va., on the 4th Elders Lewis Bastian and K. R. Sowards were in the woods reading, when they were attacked by some demons in the form of men, who amused themselves by throwing rocks at the Elders. Some shots were also fired, but the Elders escaped unharmed. Elders Hugh Roberts and W. G. Miles, Jr., were egged in the town of Corbin, while preaching on the streets, but instead of being a detriment to the cause, it made many friends for the Elders.

At Middleton, Tenn., a crowd of unruly fellows gathered for the purpose of breaking up meeting, but failed in their attempt. Several shots were fired, but no one was injured.

On the 18th inst. an armed mob of forty-four went to Brother Gray's house in Hardeman county, Tenn., in search of Elders Fisher and Brown. The Elders had not been there for several days. The mob intended to drive the Elders out of the county, and made many threats.

In Georgia a mobocratic spirit was manifest. Elders M. Smith and G. H. Mower were compelled to leave McWhorter and vicinity, Douglass county, because of the orders of an "Organized Mob" of about fifty men. Elders R. D. Green and E. T. Mayhew had a meeting broken up in Forsyth county, Ga., by a gang of about thirty hoodlums, while a few nights later they were pelted with rocks and eggs. (See Star, page 238.)

In the East Tennessee Conference Elders J. H. Woolsey and W. A. Adams received some rough treatment at the hands of a masked mob, who molested them at Brother Gorman's home, Cabarras county, N. C. (See Star, page 228.)

The June company of Elders were: Geo. Miner, A. C. Jensen, C. R. Sullivan, V. Bean, B. J. Bean, M. O. Cooley, R. J. Evans, J. W. Prince, W. R. Johnson, Ezra Bunker, Jas. Smith, C. E. Napper and Jens J. Jensen.

Cows Wearing Glasses.

Cattle with spectacles are to be seen on the Russian steppes. The steppes are covered with snow more than six months of the year. The cows subsist on the tufts of grass which crop above the snow, and the rays of the sun on the snow are so dazzling as to cause blindness. To obviate this calamity. it occurred to a kind-hearted man to protect the cows' eyes in the same way as those of human beings, and he manufactured smoke-colored spectacles which could be safely worn by cattle. These spectaclts were a great success, and are now worn by upwards of 40,000 head of cattle, who no longer suffer from the snow-blindness which once caused such suffering among them.—Exchange.

GLEANINGS.

Trenton, Fla., Oct. 11, 1900.

To the Southern Star.

With pleasure I herewith write to the valuable little Star—the welcome visitor to the homes of the Saints—and tell of the good and pleasant meetings we had together with the Saints and Elders in the Branch Conference over at Moroni school house, near Old Town, Fla., on the 30th day of September. Elders Peter Vanorden, Andrew J. Reese, Charles H. White and Wiliam L. Eldridge, the Elders that were present, who, being notified by President Bankhead that he and his companion, Elder Nelson, would meet with them on the occasion. But on account of the sickness of the President, the Elders had learned he would not be present. The Elders present proceeded with the organization of the Branch Conference. Meeting was called to order by Elder Vanorden at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon. The name for the branch was sugested by Brother John L. Hogan to be the name of Zarahemla, which was adopted, and Brother John L. Hogan and D. H. Arline were ordained Elders. But Brother Hogan was sustained to be the Presiding Elder over the Branch. Harvey Arline was sustained as clerk and Sister Annie Hogan as assistant clerk. Brother D. H. Arline was sustained as treasurer, this being the officers elected in the Zarahemla Branch, and enrolling thirteen of the names of the other members of the Latter-day Saints gives to the Zarahemla Branch forty-three members in this part of the vineyard. Fourteen able, instructive sermons were delivered by the Elders on the true and pure Gospel of Christ.

A good spirit prevailed throughout the whole entire meeting, and much good is being done in the Sunday School also, which is bringing about much good in the cause of truth. J. R. Smith.

The Eternal Remedies.

There is usually but a single remedy for every evil, great or small. Sophistry, temporizing, experimenting or dodging are alike futile, says the Toledo Bee. One remedy for each ill is law.

The remedy for slavery is liberty.
The remedy for doubt is faith.
The remedy for transgression is repentance.
The remedy for trouble is hope.
The remedy for indolence is industry.
The remedy for sin is renunciation.
The remedy for want is prudence.
The remedy for unhappiness is content.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE EZRA TAFT BENSON.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

Ezra T. Benson was born on the anniversary of Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, 1811, in Worcester county, Mass. He was the eldest son of John and Chloe Benson. His father was a farmer and Ezra, who, like his father, was extremely industrious, worked upon his father's farm until he was sixteen years of age, when he went to reside with his sister and her husband, who kept a hotel in the city of Uxbridge. His Grandfather Benson suddenly died while at work in the field, after which Ezra T. was placed in charge of the farm, which he managed successfully. At the age of twenty he received in marriage Pamelia Andrus, of Northbridge, Worcester county, Mass. Soon after this he moved to Uxbridge, bought out his brother-in-law and became a hotel keeper. He was engaged in this business two years, in which time he made considerable means, which he invested with his wife's brother in renting a cotton mill, and commenced the manufacture of cotton in Holland, Mass. A combination of circumstances which he could not control rendered him unsuccessful in this business. He lost money and, retiring from it, went to hotel keeping, and was also postmaster in the same town. He was very prosperous in this avocation, rapidly making means, but a strong, unexplainable desire came over him to visit the west. He knew not why, and yet he could not shake off this feeling. Early in 1837 himself and family left for the west. In Philadelphia a gentleman whose acquaintance he formed spoke against the west and persuaded him to locate in Salem and he would assist him with means to establish himself in business. He acted upon this suggestion and spent one year in the place. In the meantime this great desire to go west remained with him, and he could not rid himself of the feeling. His friends offered him money and tried to persuade him to tarry and locate with them, but to no purpose; he longed for the west and in that direction he started. Calling at St. Louis, he purchased a small stock of goods and went up the Illinois river, not knowing where he should land. While on the river he became acquainted with a gentleman who proved to be his father's cousin. He lived at Griggsville, Illinois, where Ezra concluded to stop. He was still unsettled in his feelings and only remained a short time, when he moved to Lexington, Ill., thence to the mouth of Little Blue river, where he and a man by the name of Isaac Hill located and laid out a town and named it Pike.

At this place he built a dwelling and a warehouse, but the place was sickly and his restless spirit led him to move onward. In 1839, early in the year, he was led by his impressions to Quincy in search of a home. Soon after he heard of the place he was impressed to move there, and here for the first time in his life he met the Latter-day Saints, who had just been exiled from their homes in Missouri. Becoming acquainted with their history and sufferings, his sympathies were enlisted. He heard they were very peculiar in their views, yet in conversation with them and listening to their public discourses he was very favorably impressed.

During the winter he boarded with a family of the Saints, whose faith and deportment in the walks of life led Brother Benson to hold them in high esteem. About this time a public debate was held in Quincy, in which a Dr. Nelson opposed the doctrines of the Latter-day Saints. The Prophet Joseph was in attendance and Ezra T. Benson listened with honest attention to both sides. At the conclusion of this debate he was fully convinced that the principles of the Saints were superior to those of their opponents and in perfect harmony with the Bible. While rejoicing in their victory over the opponent, Ezra had no idea at that time of joining the Church. He and his wife continued to hear them and their doctrines were the chief topic of conversation. His wife first declared her faith in the doctrines, and when the people who knew them learned of their belief in "Mormonism" they made a determined effort to get them identified with a sectarian church. About this time Elders Orson Hyde and John E. Page, on their way to Jerusalem, preached in Quincy, and all doubts, if any still existed in the mind of Ezra T. Benson, were removed. He and his wife were baptized by the President of the Quincy Branch July 19th, 1840. From the time he reached Quincy all desire to move left him. He was content, and when the light of the Gospel was given to him through obedience to the same he knew why he wanted to go west and why discontent attended him in every place until he reached Quincy, the home of the Latter-day Saints. The Lord led him by his own right hand and prepared his heart and that of his wife to obey the truth and accomplish the great work which Ezra T. Benson subsequently performed as a servant of God. In the fall of 1840 at conference in Nauvoo he was ordained an Elder. Soon after his return to Quincy he was honored with a visit from President Hyrum Smith, who ordained him a High Priest and appointed him second counsellor in the presidency of the Stake recently organized by President Hyrum Smith in that place. In April, 1841, he moved to Nauvoo, purchased a lot, built a home and was in every way active in promoting the growth of the Church and the city of Nauvoo.

June 1st, 1842, he went on a mission to his native Eastern States, performed a good work and returned in the fall of 1843. In the month of May, 1844, he went east with Elder John Pack and was absent until they learned of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, when they returned to Nauvoo. In the fall of 1844 he was called to be a member of the High Council in Nauvoo, and soon after was sent on another mission to the Eastern States. He presided over the Boston Conference until May, 1845, when he was counseled by the authorities of the Church to gather up the Saints in that region and lead them to Nauvoo.

Upon his return he went to work on the Nauvoo Temple, working hard by day and many times by night standing guard to prevent the onslaught of fiendish mobocrats.

At the exodus from Illinois, Ezra T. Benson and family moved out with the first company in 1846. William Huntington presided at Mount Pisgah, and to him Ezra T. Benson was appointed a counsellor. While at Pisgah he was notified of his appointment to the Apostleship to fill the vacancy in the Council of the Twelve made by the Apostacy of John E. Page. He moved on to the main camp of the Saints in Council Bluffs, and at this place was ordained to the Apostleship July 16th, 1846. From Council Bluffs he went on a brief mission to the east, returning Nov. 27th, 1846. In the following spring he was selected by President Young as one of the honored company of 143 to pioneer the great West and find the home which God had held in reserve for his people. When Brother Benson, years before, felt the spirit urging him westward little did he dream how great the import of such impression. That in the west he should find the True Plan of Salvation and carry the standard of that Gospel still westward 1,500 miles, plant the Stars and Stripes on Mexican soil, and be himself one of the first men in founding the greatest commonwealth of people ever founded in our great republic.

Soon after his arrival in the valley he returned to meet the companies of Saints en route and inform them that a place of location had been found. He accompanied them to their destination and then returned to Winter Quarters with the pioneers. He next performed a successful mission in the east, being absent several months. On Jan. 14th, 1847, he with others was named in a revelation to the Prophet Brigham Young to organize companies of Saints for their pilgrimage to the Far West. "Let my servants, Ezra T. Benson and Erastus Snow, organize a company," was the word of the Lord to His mouthpiece on the earth. Upon returning from his mission to the east he was appointed to preside in Pottawattamie county, Iowa, where he was associated in the management of the Church in that region with Apostles Orson Hyde and George A. Smith. Concluding his labors in Iowa, he moved to Salt Lake Valley in 1849. En route he was seriously ill, but by the prayers of the camp, with fasting, the power of God was manifested and he recovered. Again in 1851 he was sent to Pottawattamie county, Iowa, to gather up the Saints and help move them to the body of the Church. From this mission he returned in 1852. While at home in Utah he was constantly at work either with his hands to improve and develop the country, in council with the Priesthood, or preaching the Gospel among the Saints. In 1856 he went on a mission to Europe, where he was associated with Apostle Orson Pratt in the presidency of the British Mission. He returned home the following year. Elder Benson was not considered as a great public speaker, yet he was vigorous and earnest. When the weather was oppressively warm it is said that he would take off his coat while preaching and remark to the congregation that he believed in "comfort more than in style." In 1860 he was called to preside over the Saints in Cache Valley. He made this his home the remainder of his natural life, being the Apostle of the Northern country. He was wise in council, industrious and exemplary, and a source of great strength to the people in colonizing and building settlements in that valley. In the early settlement of Cache it was so cold that it was hardly deemed feasible for being occupied. Today it is the best watered and has under cultivation a greater percentage of its land than any other valley in Utah.

He went to the Sandwich Islands with Apostle Lorenzo Snow, Elders Joseph F. Smith, Alma L. Smith and Wm. W. Cluff, to regulate the affairs of the Hawaiian Mission. He, with President Snow, narrowly escaped drowning while approaching the coast of one of the islands by the capsizing of the boat. This was the last mission abroad performed by Apostle Benson.

Aside from his labors abroad he performed many important missions among the Saints. He was an active member of the Provisional State of Deseret. Afterwards he became a member of the house for several sessions in the Territorial Legislature, and the last ten years of his life was elected and served with ability in the legislative council.

In 1869 he became associated with Elder Lorin Farr and Bishop Chauncey West in constructing the Central Pacific railway. They had a large contract of grading on the promontory. On Oct. 3d, 1869, while in Ogden City attending to a sick horse he was suddenly stricken with heart failure and died the same day. His funeral occurred in Logan a few days later, with a numerous family and thousands of Saints and friends to mourn his departure.

He had "fought the good fight, kept the faith and finished his course." He went to receive the crown of glory laid up for the faithful and left to his sons and daughters the legacy of a good character, a faithful record of devotion to God and His cause. He gained eternal riches and "He that hath eternal life is rich."

History of the Southern States Mission.

July, 1900—Owing to the revivalistic feeling prevailing throughout the South at this season of the year, the Elders were counseled to conduct themselves in a quiescent manner, and therefore the month opened with things in a quiet way, generally speaking.

Elders J. A. Welker and W. A. Adams encountered a mob in Cabarras county, North Carolina, but the brethren escaped unharmed. In Charlotte, N. C., the Gospel was opposed by a sectarian preacher, and a discussion was carried on through the columns of the Charlotte News. Fair play was granted on both sides, and we trust that many honest souls were thus brought to a knowledge of the truth, or at least, a better understanding of our faith.

Elders E. G. Anderson and Joseph H. Lewis were forced to leave Chester City, Chester county, S. C., being ordered to do so by a band of mobbers. (See Star, 308-310.) In all the work is progressing, although the reports of the Elders are small.

The arrivals from Zion for the month of July are: J. W. Imlay, George H. Clark, C. L. Riding, Lot Robinson, N. L. Richards, Joseph Mills and Eugene C. Miller.

August, 1900—The month opened with the weather hot and dry. There seems to be much illness among the Elders, owing the excessive and oppressive heat. In North Carolina several cities were opened, and work in them successfully conducted. The Elders in Mississippi were threatened with mob violence, but they avoided the ruthless fiends and the Lord protected them.

On Aug. 9th Elder Robert A. Paxton, of the South Carolina Conference, was taken sick at Greenville. After languishing for twelve days he was taken to Blacksburg, where he could be better cared for by the Saints and Elders. He showed every sign of recovery until Aug. 25, when a change was noticeable. He steadily grew weaker until the evening of the 27th, when he passed peacefully from this mortal probation, saying, "I have fought a good fight." President Rich, who had just returned from New York, received word in Richmond, Va., of the death of Elder Paxton, and hastened to Blacksburg, at which place the body was embalmed. (See Star, Vol. II, 313, 328, 392.)

Only five Elders came during this month. They were: James M. Taylor, Alfred B. Hill, W. C. Crump, Jr., Ira De Mill and W. H. Wilcox.

September, 1900—The spirit of heathenism was manifest in Statesville, N. C., and Elders W. G. Atkin and A. O. Smoot were commanded by a band of about twenty men to abandon the city and keep out of its precincts. Florida reported that not a few of her Elders were sick and unable to work.

This month, like unto August, witnessed the death of one of our faithful and valiant Elders, whose energy and zeal made him an efficient and successful worker—Elder J. D. Frankland. His death was sudden, and his beloved companion, Elder A. L. Meacham, did all in his power to help him, but the call to a higher mission could not be thwarted, and he succumbed to the summons Sept. 12th at 8:40 p.m., near Ansley, Pike county, Ala. (See Star, 338, 347, 351.) He died, as he had lived, a faithful servant of God.

On the night of Sept. 9th Elders J. F. Hamilton and A. T. Jones met with an experience in Battletown, Ky., which assumed a serious aspect. Having just received a visit from their President, they appointed a meeting at a friend's house, and were favored with a large congregation. The President and his companion remained at the friend's home, while Elders Hamilton and Jones left for the home of another friend. On their way they were compelled to pass through a thick patch of woods, and here they encountered a shower of eggs, ancient with age, and strong to the sense of smell. As luck would have it, none of these "rotten members" found a resting place on the Elders, although the womenfolk in the company received a goodly share, more than the average sister would bargain for. The President left the next day, but the Elders remained to hold meeting in the city. A large crowd turned out, and the brethren felt safe and secure, but when meeting was over and they were walking around the house they were very much surprised to find themselves confronted by a mob of masked men, about twelve or fifteen in number. One of the ladies present recognized the voice of one of the mobbers, and procuring a lantern she went up to him and uncovered his face. Her recognition was correct, for it proved to be her own brother, and when he found himself thus identified he became exceedingly angry, and grabbed his sister, kicked her, struck her violently with his fist, and finally endeavored to choke her, and it is doubtful if she will ever fully recover from his wicked, uncalled, malicious assault. At this juncture the hearts of these outlaws began to fail them and quake with fear, so they decided to go. The Elders took advantage of the opportunity and left also, moving to another part of the county, that they might continue their work without molestation.

Only two Elders arrived during this month, and these two, Heber C. Kimball and Oliver Jackman, were fitted out and assigned to their fields of labor.

(To be continued.)

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep His commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Louisiana is soon to become a part of the Southwestern States Mission, but before we bid adieu to her and her noble Elders, we desire to present to the readers of the Star a brief sketch of the life of Elder F. H. Critchfield, who now presides in that Conference. In the cold, bleak month of December, on the 13th, in the year 1874, at Batesville (now Erda), Toole county, Utah, he first saw the light of day.

When 6 years of age his parents moved to Oakley, Idaho, at which place they now reside. In a newly settled region it was not possible for our brother to obtain a high scholastic education; such blessings were not afforded him, but he labored with his parents to redeem the barren land and make the desert to blossom as the rose. Under such conditions one would naturally develop more brawn than brain, more muscle than mentality. Environments, to a great extent, make us what we are, and if you would find bold, sturdy, true-hearted, whole-souled men, then explore the regions of the West, where the towering peaks of the snow-clad Rockies stand out as sentinels to the clear, blue sky.

In the winter you might find our brother in a little log school house, wrestling with mathematical problems, dictation exercises, spelling, or articulating grammatical difficulties. The summer found him upon the farm, attending to the necessary chores, and making himself generally useful. From the log school house he graduated to the Cassia Stake Academy, where he spent a few months in study.

Although his father never obeyed the Gospel, he accepted it, and taught his children to ever observe the Golden Rule. At the age of 17 he commenced to work for himself, separate from the household. For some time he herded sheep, and this exercise in the material, literal world gave him a slight insight for his future work of gathering lambs for the fold of the Good Shepherd, Jesus. In 1894 he became the husband of a sweet damsel, who awaits his release with expectant anxiety.

It was on the 2d day of April, 1899, that he was notified that his services were required to preach the Gospel in the South, and, as all the faithful have done heretofore, he responded. Scarcely a year has passed since he was set apart (Nov. 16th, 1899,) and today we find him presiding in Louisiana.

He has but a very small corps of laborers, the smallest in the Mission, but they are doing a good work, and the Lord is blessing their noble efforts. Brother Critchfield and the Elders of the Louisiana Conference have a hard field, but by the help of our Father they struggle with might and main for the Gospel of salvation.

The Magnificent Revenge of the Governor of Missouri.

A few years ago, while Robert Stewart was Governor of Missouri, a steamboat man was brought in from the penitentiary as an applicant for a pardon. He was a large, powerful fellow, and, when the Governor looked at him, he seemed strangely affected. He scrutinized him long and closely. Finally, he signed the document that restored the prisoner to liberty. Before he handed it to him, he said: "You will commit some other crime and be in the penitentiary again, I fear."

The man solemnly promised that he would not. The Governor looked doubtful, mused a few minutes, and said:

"You will go back on the river and be a mate again, I suppose?"

The man replied that he would.

"Well, I want you to promise me one thing," resumed the Governor. "I want you to pledge your word that, when you are mate again, you will never take a billet of wood in your hand and drive a sick boy out of a bunk to help you load your boat on a stormy night." The steamboat man said he would not, and inquired what the Governor meant by asking him such a question.

The Governor replied: "Because, some day, that boy may become a Governor, and you may want him to pardon you for a crime. One dark, stormy night, many years ago, you stopped your boat on the Mississippi river to take on a load of wood. There was a boy on board who was working his passage from New Orleans to St. Louis, but he was very sick of fever and was lying in a bunk. You had plenty of men to do the work, but you went to that boy with a stick of wood in your hand and drove him with blows and curses out into the wretched night, and kept him toiling like a slave until the load was completed. I was that boy. Here is your pardon. Never again be guilty of such brutality."

The man, cowering and hiding his face, went out without a word.

What a noble revenge that was, and what a lesson to a bully!—Success.

The Road to Success.

Dr. D. K. Pearson, millionaire, philanthropist and patron of colleges, says that the rules of life can be summed up as follows:

1. Practice steady economy. Do not spend until you have it to spend. Be strictly honest, and never take advantage of men. Avoid show and extravagance. Use your money to educate the poor.

2. Be your own executive. Trust no man to administer upon your estate. You cannot carry out of this world any amount with your dead hands. There is no use for money beyond the grave.—Saturday Evening Post.

OUR CONFERENCE PRESIDENTS.

Elder John H. Bankhead was born at Wellsville, Cache county, Utah, Oct. 12th, 1874. His parents are Utahns—on his mother's side of English descent, and on his father's of Southern Dixie lineage; thus we may properly designate him an Anglo, Southern American Utahn.

His early boyhood days were spent upon the farm in the summer, and in the Wellsville district school in the winter time. After graduating from the district school in 1893, he entered the State Agricultural College. In 1897 he received his diploma, which conferred upon him the title of B. S., having completed a four years' commercial course. He taught school in Wellsville during the winter of 1897-98 and 1898-99. While thus engaged he received a call to perform a mission to the Southern States. His call came in the early part of March, 1899, and on the 18th of said month he left Salt Lake City for Chattanooga.

ELDER JOHN H. BANKHEAD.
President of Florida Conference.

Upon arriving in Chattanooga he was assigned to labor in the North Kentucky Conference. He spent the first nine months as a canvassing Elder, and was then called to act as first counsellor to President Don C. Benson. During the three months that he occupied this position he visited all the Elders in that Conference.

In the latter part of June Brother Bankhead was transferred to the Florida Conference to succeed President George W. Skidmore, of that Conference. Since July 16 he has assumed control of Conference affairs in the Balmy State, and his work and manly effort is a striking and lasting testimony of his worth and sterling integrity. He exercises great care, is judicious, wise and discreet. His reports show him to be a careful and earnest presiding officer. The Elders love him, and a perfect unity exists in his Conference.

Elder Bankhead is a married man, and Miss Annie Mipplesen was the lucky girl, who is now the honored spouse. His labors have been a source of joy and pleasure, and we trust they may ever continue so to be.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

"BE NOT DISMAYED."

Mankind are easily discouraged in this life, and oftentimes, otherwise noble, valiant souls, sink beneath the yoke of disappointment, failure, affliction and persecution. While it is true that in this mortal probation we have many trials which in their nature are discouraging and depressing, yet we can also find joy, consolation, strength and encouragement. There is no trial but what there is also a way by which it may be successfully encountered, and triumphantly overcome. Many trials and much affliction seems to be the common heritage and legacy of the people of God, and to all such the Father of mercies has, through His inspired servants, both ancient and modern, given words of encouragement and comfort.

Speaking by the mouth of the prophet Isaiah, the Lord says, "Fear thou not; for I am with thee; be not dismayed; for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." (Isaiah 41:10). Here we have a divine expression of the help of the Lord, a comforting counsel to "be not dismayed," a promise of strength, and that we shall be upheld with the right hand of righteousness. It has ever been necessary for the Father to comfort His people, for they have at all times been subject to the wrath of the evil one, targets for the enemy, and material for the scoffs, jeers and ridicule of the ungodly. So we find the Creator blesses them with inspired men, upon whom He bestows the spirit of wisdom, counsel and revelation, that they in turn might impart the same unto the people and comfort them in their afflictions. To the gallant Joshua, the valiant captain of Israel's host, the Lord spake thus: "Be strong and of good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." (Joshua 1:9). When we have the blessed assurance that God is with us, and that by His holy spirit He will shield, strengthen, guide and comfort us, we need not be dismayed, or fear the hosts of the wicked, for legions of angels stand ready to protect the servant of righteousness. Could we but realize the majesty, might and overruling power of our God, and then consider that One great as He is even our Rock and Defense, why should we fear the foe or be dispirited for the conflict? The Father has in times past bared His mighty arm in defense of His chosen ones, and He has not lost His strength, neither has His love for His people vanished. He stands ready now to defend the righteous and bring the wicked low in misery and anguish.

Though afflicted, persecuted, scorned and derided, the people of God can lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing full well that their redemption draweth nigh, and that the truth they have embraced will eventually triumph and righteousness fill the whole earth. Ye need not be dismayed, saints of the Most High God, the Lord He is your friend, your strength and your Deliverer! When the wicked scorn, the ungodly deride, and the evil ones persecute, look unto the Lord, read the good word, and find joy in these words, "The Lord is with thee whithersoever thou goest." The joy one derives by reason of loyalty to God, and fidelity to His laws, is a joy supreme, holy and divine, and one which passeth all understanding. In serving the Lord we oppose the world; in serving the world we oppose God. We cannot afford to bow in acquiescence to the ways of the world, neither can we afford to worship at the shrine of mammon. If we would only forsake God, righteousness and truth, and be one with the world, honors from men, titles, dignities and worldly favors would be ours; but, on the other hand, to serve God and walk in His holy ways, means that we shall be subjected to hate, that we shall be maligned, reviled and sneered at by the lovers of this world. We have a faith that impels us onward, forward, upward. Yea, in the midst of persecution, misrepresentation and false accusation, we can plod cheerfully the weary way of life, with a hope of enjoying that more abundant life promised to the faithful.

"Why should we mourn and think our lot is hard?
'Tis not so, all is right!
Why should we think to earn a great reward?
If we now shun the fight!"

This is the theme and song of the righteous. This was the anthem the exiled Saints sang as they crossed the barren desert from Winter Quarters to Salt Lake City! They cried unto the Lord in their distress, and He delivered them from the hands of the enemy. They sang of His goodness and He led them forth by the right hand of righteousness. Footsore and weary, hungry and fatigued, half-clad and destitute, they journeyed on, and the Father brought them to the land of their present inheritance, where they founded a city of habitation, and are now established in the tops of the mountains, exalted above the hills.

Our Father has ever proven a deliverer and a friend unto those who serve Him in spirit and in truth, then let all the faithful take courage, and be of good cheer. "I will never leave thee, I will never forsake thee," are His loving words to His erring children. Oh! that we might never leave Him, or forsake the truth, then our happiness here, and our salvation hereafter would be secured and made certain. He will never leave us, and if we will only cling fast to the word of God, strive for the guidance of His Holy Spirit, we may know that He is our stay, and our course in life pleasing and acceptable before Him. In the hour of trial let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, and when the clouds have rolled away, and we feel the warmth of the sun's bright ray, let us still be found faithful and true, honest in our convictions, and steadfast in our integrity to do the right. Let the wicked scoff, and the ungodly frown, truth will yet prevail, and righteousness reign supreme, while the glory of God shall be poured out upon all flesh.

Be not dismayed, but arise in the strength of the Mighty One of Israel. The goal is in sight, the day of redemption awaits the faithful and true. Cleave to righteousness and truth, that you may be raised at the last day to honor, glory, immortality and life eternal. Be not dismayed, though trials come, and tribulation visits you with affliction, for you have One who stands ready to grant relief, to bestow comfort, and minister consolation. Be not dismayed, though false accusations may arise against you, and vile abuse descend upon your head; the faith of the ancients should be your faith, and such a faith will give you strength to cope with anything. When fierce persecution makes you the butt of violence and oppression, remember the words of the Lord, "Be not dismayed," and the words of the Messiah, when in the throes of death, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

"Fear not, I am with thee, O, be not dismayed,
For I am thy God, and will still give the aid;
I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand,
Upheld by my righteous, omnipotent hand."

LIFE'S COMPLETENESS.

There are no lives unfinished, incomplete.
God gives each man at birth some work to do,
Some precious stone of strange prismatic hue
To carve and polish, till it shall be meet
To place within his temple, still and sweet.
Ere that be done, the soul may not pass through
The door to grander worlds, to aim more true,
To wider life with love's sweet joy replete,
And, if the working time be short, and earth
With its dear human ties be hard to leave,
Be sure that God, whose thought hath given thee birth,
Still holds for thee the best thou canst receive:
Be sure the soul, in passing through that door,
Though losing much, gains infinitely more.

EDITORIAL THOUGHT.

Would you be immune from the odium of the world, then lock arms with worldlings, and love worldliness; then you shall be "Hail fellow well met." Would you so conduct yourself as to be the object of persecution, and the butt of ridicule? then join hands with the righteous, love godliness, and let revealed truth be your choice companion and wise counsellor, and you shall be counted a vain babbler, a rank impostor, a false prophet, heretic, crank and fanatic.

The truly brave man is he who dares to do right in the face of bitter opposition and fierce persecution; whose faith in God and the divinely established laws of salvation will enable him to forsake all, and glory in the knowledge of the truth.

Let us prepare ourselves for the gifts and blessings of heaven as Elisha for the mantle and priesthood of Elijah.

Boast not of riches, boast not at all, but be thankful that the Father of all mercies and good gifts has blessed you in the past, and even now holds out a helping hand to the unrepentant, wilful sinner.

"God hath commanded men everywhere to repent." Repentance, deep repentance, must take place in the heart and be manifest in the acts. If men fail to repent and fail to exhibit a godly sorrow for sin, with a sincere desire to sin no more, then they will most assuredly be punished, and they will fall and fester in their own corruption and wickedness.

No one need be idle; there is work for all, and blessed is the man who doeth with his might the labor assigned. Work will ease the mind, harden the muscles, and strengthen the body. Be not afraid to bend your back, or use your hands in honest toil, for there is a dignity attached to honest toil which makes the trusted laborer a worthy, upright man; a man whom all must respect and honor.

Do you not behold the "Signs of the Times?" The journals of the day bring new accounts of floods, distress, destruction of life and property! These things were to come to pass, and then the Lord of Hosts, Jesus, the light of the world, will suddenly come to His temple. Prepare yourselves, ye sons and daughters of men, and ye inhabitants of the earth, be ye moved to repentance so that when the Lord cometh He may be pleased to own and bless you!

Do not sit idly by and sing, "Rescue the perishing, care for the dying," but arise and let your light shine, that others may behold your good works and glorify God in the highest. As Christ is our Helper and Friend, so should we help and befriend each other.

The riches of heaven are eternal, the joys of the kingdom everlasting. All that the Lord doeth He doeth forever; His handiwork shall never fail. His love and gentle goodness will never fade or grow dim with age.

Let your anthem be, "Glory to God in the highest:" your daily life an exemplification of your seraphic muse.

"What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy?"

THE MYSTERIOUS.

BY A. ARROWSMITH.

The age in which we are now living is, without doubt, the most wonderful through which the world has ever passed. These are peculiar times. Science is producing so much new food for thought that one must be indeed up and doing to keep pace with passing events.

Infidelity and agnosticism stalks rampant through the land, and daily we are being brought in closer touch with things etherial and the unknown world, so much so, in fact, that to the clear, thinking, unbiased mind the immortality of man is an assured fact.

Among the mysterious agencies being made use of in this age, we find Spiritualism taking an active part, also hypnotism and mesmerism. Either of these can be made the agent for good or for evil, and through them many marvelous things are accomplished.

The Bible specifically testifies to a time when Lucifer (the devil) should have such power as to cause fire to come down from Heaven, on the earth, in the sight of men, and deceive them that dwell on the earth by the means of such mighty miracles.

At this day it is impossible, without the spirit of discernment, to distinguish between good and bad, truth and error, right and wrong, and it is hard to detect where truth ceases and error commences.

When the Gospel was restored to this dispensation, Satan realized that truth had once more been introduced, and that, through faith, devils were cast out, the sick healed and the dead raised to life. Knowing that his power and dominion were in danger of being overthrown, he shook off the lethargy into which he had fallen and proceeded to introduce some of his wonders.

Spiritualism, with its rappings, mutterings and unintelligible jargon, was one of them, and it led many from the way of righteousness and truth, to the broad road of infidelity, some of these thus led away being among the grandest spirits of the day, whose noble souls have been deceived with this demonstration of the miraculous.

I believe it to be true that foolish and ridiculous spiritual agencies can make chairs and tables move, and there are powers at work which mortality cannot see, which will raise heavy substances from the floor; that will inhabit the tabernacle of mortality and demonstrate wonderful powers beyond the comprehension of man.

Often a medium who is illiterate and unlearned, will, under the influence of this power, deliver the most learned discourse, perhaps treat on philosophy, archaeology and the higher studies, or charm the hearers with beautiful music, as the case might be, thus making full use of the arts and sciences. It is a fact, however, that nothing new is ever brought out by this means, and what is done is simply a repetition of something formerly accomplished.

These peeping, muttering spirits do not teach us anything but the fact that man is a dual being, and that there is a spirit life closely connected with this mortal life. This system or sect does not recognize Christ as the Son of God, and right here is the key by which we find its source, and it thus discloses from whence it came. The Apostle John says that every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God, but is the spirit of deception, and anti-Christ.

These deceptive spirits have been known thousands of years. We read that before the peopling of this world by mortality, of a war in Heaven, where Satan and one-third of the hosts of Heaven, who followed him, were cast out on the earth, and ever since, they have been busy trying to deceive and decoy man from the path of virtue and truth.

Peter says, "Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he might devour."

Upwards of 2,800 years ago Isaiah advised Israel to avoid these manifestations of evil. He says: "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter; should not the people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? to the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

This condemns spiritualism and shows us plainly that a seeker after the mysteries pertaining to the dead and the beyond, must apply through the legitimate channel, viz., godliness, and the law and the testimony.

The magicians and soothsayers of ancient Egypt, Babylon and Assyria, who performed and worked their marvels through the channels of this "dark art," were able to turn rods into serpents, water into blood and bring frogs on the land of Egypt.

Saul, the King of Israel, disappointed at the withdrawal of his Priesthood and power, desired communication with the unseen world, he sought out a witch at Endor, who had the power to gratify his desire, and he held discourse with Samuel. The result of this interview was misery and death. The same would apply to all who seek after information in this forbidden channel, and is very graphically related in Shakespeare's Macbeth, who is described as a very ambitious Thane, who cruelly murdered the good King Duncan and his friend Banquo, that he might himself sit on the throne of Scotland. His conscience sorely troubled him, and he sought frequently the haunts of witches, that he might get consolation through their power. They gave him encouraging information, and he felt perfectly safe, but the result was deception and he died a miserable and untimely death, cursing the deceptive power which gave him the intentive and wicked encouragement to let nothing stand in the way of his ambition.

We therefore find that these many attestations of power, miraculous as they may appear, are lacking, and invariably those who seek for information through these influences, like Saul and Macbeth, only reap misery and death.

It is said "there is good in all things evil, could men but observingly distil it out," and because we find so much evil arising from the abuse of these powers, we find many who at once pronounce them of the devil and from beneath, without an honest investigation. It is always easy to deny the existence of what we cannot understand; far easier than it is wise; for by such stubborn denials the world is often kept in pitiable ignorance of precious truth.

The mysterious happenings, which appear as supernatural, through the powers of hypnotism, are usually pronounced as impostors and humbug. Leading and acknowledged authorities say that hypnotism is really the basis for the explanation of much of the phenomena that has occurred and that now happens, and that psychology is a true science. They say that the mind of man is dual; it consists of a subjective part, or spirit, and an objective part, or intellect.

The subjective part is immortal, intentive, has control of the bodily functions, is the seat of instincts and memory.

The objective mind, or intellect, is mortal, depending upon the brain as its functioner, and declining its power as the brain declines its physical vigor. Our objective mind is given us to enable us to cope with our environments in this life. It is capable of inductive and deductive reasoning. It is the guide and controller (while we are in this life) of the subjective mind or soul, which it can fit for an eternity of bliss or remorse—that is—we have free will, we are free agents to work out our own salvation.

The All-Wise Creator has provided us with a perfect instrument; but it is left for us to decide whether or not we will keep it in tune and bring out all its music; till on its divine harmonies we soar aloft.

We are free agents, not machines. The subjective mind, when it passes from the control of the objective, accepts whatever premise is presented to it, and reasons from that premise, with wonderful power and acuteness.

It is therefore through the power of a natural law that hypnosis is produced and the subject made to operate, apparently, supernaturally. The objective mind sleeps; the subjective mind is on the alert to receive and grasp any suggestion which is earnestly made to it, by a spoken word or concentrated thought. It is thus disease and sickness is cured in many cases; also men of immoral tendencies have been benefitted through this power.

The "Book of Mormon" declares that the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; "everything which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of God; but whatsoever thing persuadeth man to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny Him, and serve not God; then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil, for after this manner doth the devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good, no, not one; neither doth his angels; neither do they who subject themselves unto him. Then Mormon goes on to say, "Seeing that ye know the light by which ye may judge, which light is the light of Christ, see that ye do not judge wrongfully; for with that same judgment which ye judge, ye shall also be judged. Wherefore I beseech of you, brethren, that ye should search diligently in the light of Christ, that ye may know good from evil; and if ye will lay hold upon every good thing and condemn it not, ye certainly will be a child of Christ."

We all know in past ages that the truths advanced by Copernicus, Galileo, Newton and others were rejected by a bigoted and superstitious people. Even in recent years many truths have been kept back and withheld, through bigotry, being prejudged as falsehood of the devil. Modern christendom has railed against some of the grandest discoveries in this century, simply because they conflicted with their supercilious, arrogant and unscriptural forms of worship and their misconception of the Word of God.

Faith is a mighty fulcrum in moving the powers with which we are surrounded, and God's laws are natural laws; so that if one of His children understand some of nature's laws and can even call down fire from Heaven, he will operate his power through a natural law, God's law. Such a man might be wicked and evil, but his understanding and application of a truth brings the fire, nevertheless. Evil is nothing but truth corrupted and misapplied, and God does not always reveal His truths through His Church.

Edison has been a grand instrument in revealing some of the powers of God, through electricity, and Edison does not believe in vision and revelation and does not understand the channel from whence he gets his inspiration; but he is God's instrument, notwithstanding.

The fakir in India who is the most successful hypnotist is described as living meagerly, on the most simple diet, and he strives to kep his body pure, that it might be a fit receptacle for the influence which gives him power in his profession. Anciently the most wise men sought seclusion in the deserts, macerated their bodies and held long fasts. They were desirous of communication with the spirit world, and if we are to believe history many of them attained great knowledge on things etherial. It is true that many fanatics would sit for years in silent contemplation of the sufferings of Jesus, and it is related that the nail marks, as suggested by thought, would appear on their hands, feet and side.

My object in writing the above is that we might be careful in judging between right and wrong, good and evil, and not condemning everything we see, because we don't understand it. God is operating and controlling all things, and He sometimes makes the wrath of man praise Him. Let us therefore learn how to separate truth from error and apply it in our lives.

The principle of faith has, in the past, as well as the present, been the most potent factor in disclosing the mysterious. Realizing this, we find the Christian Scientist and many others working miracles and healing the sick.

The Roman Catholic exercises faith in the bones and clothing of departed Saints, and they actually idolize such relics. Strange to say, they often obtain miraculous blessings through the faith and prayer they offer these idols.

Many pilgrims who seek for health through the waters that have been blessed by Saints in the past and who bow with reverence and worship to the bones of some supposed Saint, receive benefit, and sometimes, if we are to credit history, many are cured from disease.

Through the exercise of faith these results are brought about, as Jesus would say, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." If some poor superstitious and ignorant fanatic bows down and worships a yellow dog, or even some old rags or bones, be it the coat of Joseph, the carpenter, or the raiment of Jesus, the soldiers of Rome cast lots for, or the bones of a primitive Saint, no matter, that poor soul is a child of God, and an object of compassion, entitled to the respect of a just and merciful Father, providing, of course, the individual is honest, knowing no better, and does the best he can. His poor weak soul, like the Hindoo fakir, is willing to do anything, according to the knowledge and education it has imbibed, to get eternal bliss and immunity from pain, sickness and disease, both body and spirit.

There is a true and a false faith. They will both work wonders. To illustrate, I will relate a circumstance: Some years ago a school of medical men, desiring to test the powers of the imagination, secured for their test a man condemned to die. They blindfolded him, gagged him and bound him to a chair, and while he sat thus, unable to speak or see, he was able to hear all they said. They spoke of how they would open the jugular vein, and by so doing the victim would die inside of five minutes.

One student held his pulse, another a watch, whilst another poured blood tricklingly from the poor fellow's neck into a bucket by his side. The doctor pricked the neck with a pin without injury, but this poor victim of experimentation imagined, fancied, or had faith, false faith if you please, that he had been subjected to the knife, and he believed what the doctors said, that within five minutes he would bleed to death. He heard the blood as it trickled into the bucket, and the false faith that he exhibited caused him to die within the limit.

Many such illustrations could be cited, showing the powers of the imagination, when controlled by a false faith. Why should not this same faith have also a healing influence upon the weak-minded fanatic, even should he exercise it on old bones and relics of the middle ages?

All mankind are the children of the Eternal Father, and the principle of faith is a part of their spiritual inheritance as His sons and daughters. They can all come unto Him in sincere and earnest prayer—and no matter what may be their race or creed, He will regard their devotion when they seek to serve Him as best they can. We therefore do not think that the ears of Deity are open solely to the members of one particular religious body. Faith is not confined to any specially selected individuals. "God is no respecter of persons." The Savior said: "All things are possible to them that believe.' We must give God credit for all good things, and attribute all evil to Lucifer.

WOODRUFF MONUMENT DEDICATED

Deseret Evening News, Nov. 10, 1900.

The monument to the memory of the late President Wilford Woodruff was dedicated with imposing ceremonies in the city cemetery at 1 o'clock today. Something like 100 people were in attendance, mostly members of the family of the departed President. By request the male quartette, consisting of Messrs. Pyper, Whitney, Patrick and Spencer, furnished the music and opened with the hymn "Lord, We Come Before Thee Now." Apostle Heber J. Grant then made a few remarks, speaking of the pleasure it had given the General Board to receive the responses with which their request for subscriptions from the Mutual Improvement associations throughout the Church in aid of this cause had been met, and asking the blessings of God upon the family of President Woodruff.

Elder James Woodruff, son of President Woodruff, then returned thanks to the General Board on behalf of the family, and appealed to all the members of his father's family to so live that he would never have cause to blush for his sons and daughters.

Apostle Lund expressed pleasure with the beautiful monument and said its plain, solid character indicated fittingly the man who rested beneath it.

President Joseph F. Smith stated that the granite from which the monument was built came from President Woodruff's native State, Connecticut. He said he was grateful and proud to see this monument erected to the memory of one who had been so loved as President Woodruff, but he desired to say that the record he had made in life would outlive this monument, and when the granite had mouldered into dust his work would still be remembered, and his great labor known by millions yet unborn. He congratulated the family, and all who had contributed to this monument, that the work had been done under such happy auspices. He urged the members of the Woodruff family to honor the memory of their father, and this they could do in no better way than by showing by their lives and works that they appreciated the example he had set.

President George Q. Cannon followed, speaking of the providence shown in the raising up of men of distinguished characters to stand at the head of this work since its commencement. He told of Joseph Smith's special adaptation for the great work he had to perform during his life, and said that when he fell it seemed as though no one could be found to fill his place. Yet President Brigham Young had been raised up, and he was a man well fitted for the problems with which he had to contend. Then came President Taylor, who had himself been almost a martyr, and whose familiar name was "the champion of liberty." Following him came President Woodruff, a man whose character was the most childlike, humble and unassuming and free from ostentation and pride, more so than that of any character he had ever known among his people. He was the embodiment of truth and innocence, and yet a man of undaunted courage. This was well shown by the "manifesto" which had been issued by him. The speaker said, knowing Brigham Young and John Taylor as he had, he doubted whether they could have brought themselves to do what President Woodruff did in that respect. It seemed as though the Lord had decreed in advance that Wilford Woodruff should be the man to do that work. He spoke of President Snow's particular mission on earth and said he possessed the particular qualities of mind and character that enabled him to perform it, and closed with an appeal to the members of the Woodruff family to tread in the footsteps of their father.

The dedicatory prayer was then feelingly pronounced by President Joseph F. Smith, after which the quartette rendered "The Last Hope," and Bishop John R. Winder offered the final prayer.

Elder Thomas E. Hull, on behalf of the family, thanked those who had taken part in the services and the assemblage dismissed.

The beautiful monument is of solid granite and faces east and west. On the north front are inscribed the words, "Fourth President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1889-1898." On the west side is inscribed the names of the wives of the deceased: "Phoebe W. Carter, born March 8th, 1807, died Nov. 10th, 1885. Mary A. Jackson, born Feb. 18th, 1818, died Dec. 25th, 1894." The monument cost about $1,500, nearly one-half of which was subscribed by the members of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, and the remainder by the Woodruff family. It was erected by Elias Morris & Sons Company.

HONOR GOD'S PRIESHOOD.

BY ELDER W. G. MILES.

It has long been an established fact to the reasoning mind that when God, in past ages, designed to accomplish a certain work upon earth He did it through His servants, who were divinely chosen from among men, and upon whom he conferred His Priesthood or authority. At one period of the world's history so great became the inclination of a people to honor God's Priesthood, and so complete and perfect became their love for each other, that they were translated with their beloved Prophet and leader, Enoch. At another time in the history of the world we find the people almost universally repudiating God's Priesthood and Prophet, Noah, bringing upon themselves the displeasure of a just Creator, manifest by their total extermination in flood. We will not dwell longer upon the condition of man at this stage, but hastily come to the time when God sent His only begotten Son into the world, who was to do not His own, but His Father's will.

As He Himself has said, "For I came down from Heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me," (John 6:38), and that Jesus held the Priesthood of God, with power to confer it upon others, is very evident from His teachings, especially His words recorded in John 14:10, wherein He tells us that the Father dwelleth in Him. By a further investigation of Scripture, we find that Christ did not withhold this Priesthood from others, but it was extended unto the Apostles and those whom He had chosen. The object of this article is not to make a lengthy explanation of this subject, but to briefly point out the necessity of, and the safety in, honoring and obeying those who hold the Priesthood of our Creator; and on the other hand the apparent danger encountered by those who ignore these divinely authorized servants. No better understanding can be had on this point than that given in the words of Jesus as recorded in Matt. 10:40-42, wherein He says, "He that receiveth you receiveth me;" also in Matt. 25:35-46, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me," showing very decisively that whosoever will not receive those servants, sent of Him, but will mistreat them, shall be held just as responsible as though they rejected the Son of God Himself.

But in this advanced age of bigotry and intolerance, when men are professing great piety and holiness, we find them ready on every side, not only to repudiate, but put to death those holding God's Priesthood, and bearing to them the fruits of the Gospel.

Let the world awake from her profound sleep of spiritual darkness and shake off the iron-clad fetters of superstition and error, which are binding her inhabitants so close.

And to those desiring to be among the right ous few, who shall inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, let them become submissive to the will of God, by honoring, upholding and sustaining His Priesthood here upon earth.

THE END OF THE WICKED.

BY ELDER J. W. BERRY.

Varied conclusions have been presented to my mind recently regarding the final destiny of the ungodly and sinners. Many people strive hard to justify themselves by becoming members of some church, and then cease their good works, forgetting that they have an individual labor to perform, to gain the blessings of the Lord hereafter. The Bible is sufficient to at least satisfy the earnest, who desire to know what is required of them. Mark well the prayer of the Psalmist David, "Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, which speaketh peace to their neighbors, but mischief is in their hearts. Give them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavors; give them after the work of their hands; and render to them their desert." (Psalm 28:34). We can see by this petition that he desired assistance from the Almighty that he might be enabled to cease an association with the ungodly.

We will notice in the following verses that Solomon makes mention of some praiseworthy deeds, and their opposite vices. "The fear of the wicked it shall come upon him, but the desire of the righteous shall be granted. As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more, but the righteous is an everlasting foundation. As vinegar to the teeth and as smoke to the eyes, so is the sluggard to them that sent him. The fear of the Lord prolongeth days, but the years of the wicked shall be shortened. The hope of the righteous shall be gladness, but the expectation of the wicked shall perish. The way of the Lord is strength to the upright, but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity. The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth." (Prov. 10:24-31). Is it not our desire to inhabit the earth? The Savior says "the meek shall inherit the earth."

The Apostle Paul in his letter to the Thessalonians gave warning of the appearing of the anti-Christ, who should shortly visit them. He said, "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work, only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of His coming." (II. Thess. 2: 7-8). Read carefully the words of Job, and you will readily see that the transgressor is almost in a hopeless condition regarding the salvation of his poor soul. "But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." (Prov. 2:22).

The Savior in giving a description of the last judgment, says to the wicked on the left hand, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." (Matt. 25:41). Paul, in speaking to members of the Church, said, "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." (Heb. 10:26.) John in his prophetic vision while in banishment upon the Isle of Patmos describes the residence of sinners thus, "But the fearful and unbelieving and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." (Rev. 20:8).

GLEANINGS.

As I see nothing written from Missouri, I thought I would write a few words to the much prized little Star that lights our home once a week. There is so much valuable truth contained in its pages that it does my soul good to read and re-read it.

I moved from Cocke county, Tenn., to Missouri one year ago. You brethren that may chance to see this that have been to my home, remember me in your prayers, and know, too, that I will say to all the Elders who it has been my good fortune to meet that I am well and still firm in the faith. I know we have the Gospel again restored to earth, and I know if I am faithful I shall meet them in heaven. I am surrounded by other denominations, but they do not molest or make afraid. In conclusion, I ask the faith and prayers of all the Saints.

"YE SHALL KNOW THE TRUTH."

(John 8:32.)

What a heavenly gleam of light
Beaming from the Southern Star,
Pointing out the path of right,
Radiates and shines afar!

How the faithful joy to meet thee,
Precious gem of priceless worth!
May success and victory greet thee,
In your mission here on earth!

I have been a constant and studious reader of the Star ever since its inception in the fall of '98, and I desire to communicate through its inspired columns, to my fellow-men of this Southland, a brief recital of my experience, and how I became a Mormon. I am a Georgian by nativity, and Jefferson county is the home of my birth. My parents, Dr. William and Eliza Hauser, were anxious for me to be a defender of the faith, after the order of John Wesley, and so I was sent to Trinity College, North Carolina, and educated for a Methodist Priest. I was turned out in first-class style, I suppose, fully equipped with the schemes and dogmas of uninspired theologians, and fortified with the necessary paraphernalia essential to the defense of the sect I was to represent, and yet I was not content. I could not harmonize the mode of baptism believed in by my tutors with the words of the Apostle, who said, "Buried with Him in baptism," and therefore, to be consistent with my own views and conscientious with my fellow-man, I became affiliated with the Baptist Church, and donned my ministerial cloth in defense of their belief.

All went well; that is, I continued to preach to the best of my ability and understanding of the Scriptures, until 1879, when Elder Matthias F. Cowley (now a member of the Quorum of Apostles), a "Mormon," came into Tazewell county, Virginia, where I was holding forth for a season. Of course, the presence of a Mormon Elder created no small stir in the neighborhood, for the people were possessed of all sorts of strange vagaries and vain imaginations concerning this peculiar sect. It did not take me long to discover the weakness of my creed, when compared with the everlasting Gospel in its fullness, as declared by this young man of tender years. I perceived with plainness and perspicuity that I was without a foundation, adrift upon a sea of confused sectarianism, no anchorage, stability, or landing of security. The words of this young man were convincing, and had a familiar sound, so different from anything I had ever before heard. I listened with attention, believed in faith, accepted with gladness, and rendered obedience with thankfulness to Him from whom all blessings flow. Friends forsook me, my salary vanished, and threats of mob violence were uttered against me. The schemes of theologians, dogmas of commentators, and instructions of Trinity College, were nothing to me now; they had departed as the dew before the sun's directer ray, when brought in contact with the touchstones of truth, and I possessed only that simple faith once delivered to the Saints, with a glorious hope of salvation in the kingdom of our God.

Some may contend that it is not possible for mortal man to know of the truthfulness of the Gospel, but I have a living testimony of its divinity, and through the medium of the Holy Ghost I am enabled to say that I absolutely know that the doctrines enunciated by the so-called Mormon Elders are true, ordained of God, and the only means appointed of the Father for the salvation and exaltation of the children of men. Since the day of my acceptance and obedience until the present time I have never doubted, but, contrariwise, the testimony of the truth has been multiplied upon me and increased. I know that the Gospel is true through the whisperings of that "still small voice," and the influence of the Good Spirit. I know it by comparison with the Holy Bible, by contrasting it with poor, confused, divided Christianity, and by my experience in the world, by the rebuffs, scoffs, jeers and frowns of the ungodly which the faithful Latter-day Saints are called upon to endure. I know that Joseph Smith was a true Prophet of the Most High God, and that he was the chosen instrument in the hands of the Lord to assist in the establishment of His righteous purposes upon the earth. The Book of Mormon is a sacred, divine record, this I know beyond all question or controversy. I am proud of my faith, my co-religionists, my leaders, and all connected with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and I thank God that I am what the world calls "a Mormon."

Your brother in the Gospel,
C. M. HAUSER.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE BRIGHAM YOUNG, JR.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

A son of the late President Brigham Young and Mary Ann Angell Young was born in Kirtland, Geauga county, Ohio, Dec. 13th, 1836. With his parents he removed to Missouri, and thence to Nauvoo, Illinois. In these states, though in childhood, he learned something of the hardships of persecution, and they have never been effaced from his memory. His father, as well known, was one of the first and greatest Apostles of the Church. His mother, too, was a noble type of womanhood, and a true, devoted Latter-day Saint. While in poverty and her husband on a mission to Great Britain, Elder Lorenzo (now President) Snow called upon Sister Young on the eve of his departure to fill a mission in Europe. He asked Sister Young what news from home he should convey to her husband. She answered, "Tell him we are about as well as other people, and though in straitened circumstances, temporarily speaking, we don't want to see him home until he has completed a good mission and has been honorably released." Before their children, the Church and the world this example of endurance and devotion to God and His cause did the parents of Apostle Brigham Young set all the days of their lives. Brigham was baptized by his father in the Mississippi river at Nauvoo, Ill., when 8 years of age.

He was exiled with his father and family from their home in Nauvoo in 1846. With his mother he remained in Winter Quarters until 1848, when they journeyed across the plains and reached Salt Lake Valley in September of that year. Brigham was then only 12 years of age, but he at once performed good service as a herd boy, working in the canyon and other manual labor. He was likewise a "minute man," keeping watch against the encroachment of hostile Indians. In this capacity he participated in several dangerous expeditions. Nov. 15th, 1855, he took to wife Sister Catherine Curtis Spencer, daughter of Orson Spencer. At the approach of "Johnston's" army he did able work as a scout, suffering many hardships while in the mountains from inclement weather and overexertion in his duties. When one of the hand-cart companies crossing the plains were in distress Brother Brigham went as one of a relief party, and suffered such exposure and hardships that he was attacked with inflammatory rheumatism, from which he has suffered at various times ever since.

APOSTLE BRIGHAM YOUNG, JR.

At the April Conference in 1861 he became a member of the Salt Lake Stake High Council. In 1862 he went East with Utah's delegate to Congress, Dr. J. M. Bernhisel. While in New York City he received a letter from his father requesting him to proceed as a missionary to Europe. He promptly complied and sailed for Liverpool, where he arrived July 26th, 1862. His labors were principally in London with Elder William C. Staines. He also visited Scandinavia and other parts of Europe. He sailed from Liverpool on his return home Sept. 1st, 1863. In 1864 he was again called to Europe, this time to associate with President Daniel H. Wells in the Presidency of the European Mission. Accompanied by his wife, Catherine, he reached Liverpool July 25th, 1864. He labored in company with President Wells, looking after the interests of the Mission in all departments, until August, 1865, when he succeeded President Wells as the President of the Mission. During his administration he traveled extensively through the Conferences upon the British Isles, and several times visited the Continent, giving personal attention to the interests of the Church in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, France and Russia. By request of his father he returned home on a visit, sailing from Liverpool Sept. 19th, 1865, Apostle Orson Pratt taking charge of the Mission. A peculiar incident occurred while crossing the Atlantic ocean. A terrible storm arose, threatening to sink the vessel. A portion of the rigging was torn down by the wind, and one man was washed overboard. A burly Irishman on board in the shape of a religious fanatic, attributed the cause of the storm to the fact that a "Jonah" was aboard the ship in the shape of a "Mormon" Elder. He made a persistent demand of the captain that Elder Young be cast into the sea. He was so boisterous and persistent that at last the captain had to interfere and compel the Irishman to hold his peace. After a very rough journey by sea and land, Elder Young reached home Oct. 25th, 1865. In the spring of 1866 he returned to Europe, resumed the responsibilities of the Mission, and continued his labors until he sailed from Liverpool on his return home, June 29th, 1867. While absent he visited the World's Fair at Paris, France. Returning home, he left the Mission under the Presidency of Apostle Franklin D. Richards. While on his mission two of his children were born in England, Mabel and Joseph. The following year Elder Brigham Young, with his brother, Joseph A., acted as agents for their father (in sub-contracting), who had contracted to grade a great many miles of the Union Pacific Railway. Brother Young was also prominent in the Nauvoo Legion as a military man until its disorganization in 1870. In that capacity he displayed considerable talent, and did efficient service in the annual drills of the Territorial militia. Elder Young was previously ordained to the Apostleship, and was set apart as one of the Twelve Apostles Oct. 9th, 1868. From then to the present his chief and almost entire labors have been directly in the duties of his Apostleship. Subsequent to the decease of Apostle Ezra T. Benson he was called by President Young to preside over the affairs of the Church in Cache Valley. For this purpose he removed to Logan City and presided in Cache Valley until the Stake was organized in 1877. At the annual Conference held in April, 1873, Apostle Young was chosen one of the assistant five Counsellors to President Brigham Young, which place he filled until his fathers' death in 1877. During this period he spent much of his time in St. George, looking to the interests of the Church in Southern Utah. After his father's demise he was appointed one of the administrators of his estate. In settling the affairs of the estate he showed a just and amicable disposition, which elicited the confidence and respect of the Saints, as well as that of his father's family. For refusing to deliver certain Church property into the hands of the receiver, W. S. McCormick, he, with President John Taylor, George Q. Cannon and Albert Carrington, were adjudged guilty of contempt by Judge Boreman. Aug. 4th Apostle Young, with the two last named brethren, was sent to the penitentiary, where they remained until Aug. 28th, when they were liberated, the decision of Judge Boreman having been reversed by the Supreme Court of the Territory.

In 1881 Apostle Young went to Arizona, where he spent one year, returning in time to wait upon his noble mother in her dying moments. She departed this life at her home in Salt Lake City June 27th, 1882. Among the many positions of honor and trust held by Apostle Young, and always held with integrity to his sacred trust, he has served several terms in the Territorial Legislature. He has been East on several visits in the interests of the Church, as well as doing considerable missionary labor abroad. In more recent years his labors have been chiefly in the Stakes of Zion, quite extensively in Mexico, Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado, as well as Utah, laboring zealously with his brethren, the Twelve, in the many duties and responsibilities of their high calling While visiting the Yaqui Indians in Mexico he was stricken with yellow fever and brought nigh unto death, but was healed by the power of God. During the anti-Mormon crusade in Utah and surrounding Territories Apostle Young suffered, with many of his brethren, an exile from home. And again in 1890 he presided over the European Mission. He labored with zeal for the spread of the Gospel, possessing the love and confidence of the Elders throughout the Mission. He returned home in the spring of 1893 in time to take an active part in the dedication of the Temple of the Lord in Salt Lake City. Since then he has traveled extensively among the Stakes of Zion, assisting to regulate the affairs of the Church, and has been prominent in the councils of the Presidency and Apostleship of the Church. He stands today the fourth Apostle in the order of the Priesthood, Presidents Snow, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith being his seniors, but they constituting the Presidency of the Church, leaves Apostle Brigham Young the presiding officer in the Quorum of the Twelve. Apostle Brigham Young is a social, unassuming, humble and pleasant man, and from the nature of his disposition is most beloved and appreciated by those who know him best. As a fitting conclusion of this very brief and incomplete sketch of his life, we subjoin the following quotation from the gifted pen of Sister Susan Young Gates, a beloved and devoted sister of Apostle Brigham Young:

"Brigham Young is a noble representative of his father's family. His gentle wisdom, his merry heart, and his integrity and truth are known to all the Saints. No matter what may be his troubles, he does not impose them upon his friends. He has naught but contempt for all forms of hypocrisy or deceit. His own life and soul is a clear, open book, and he would not gain the whole world were it to be secured through policy or subterfuge. A wide stream of bubbling gaiety flows through much of his life. All who know him, even in the least, are well aware of this trait in his character. Yet, well as he loves a joke, he cannot tolerate anything savoring of irreverence or mockery. His wrath is rare, but so much the more to be dreaded. Woe to the doer or speaker of anything which might savor of the betrayal of the Priesthood when Brigham Young is nigh! One of his most notable traits is an innate modesty, which is almost extreme when he estimates his own worth and character. Ask him for the facts of his life and he will innocently ignore that you are asking about himself, and will give you leaf after leaf from the life of his beloved father, or others of his friends and associates. He must be often reminded that it is his life that you are seeking to know about. He will assure you that he is the least worthy of his exalted position of any in his Quorum, and your silent comment thereon is, 'He that is least among you the same shall be greatest.' Today Apostle Young has the same genial tone of voice, the same youthful spirit, and the same quiet wisdom that have been so prominent in his character from boyhood. Those who know him best honor and revere him most. May his useful life be prolonged many years upon the earth."

GLEANINGS.

I have found joy in reading the testimonies and experiences of my fellow-Saints in the South, and I take pleasure in writing a brief testimony for my brethren and sisters to read. The testimonies of others have given me added testimony, and I trust that mine will in like manner strengthen and increase their faith in the Lord and hope of salvation.

My home is in Tipton county, Tennessee, and I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints some five months. I have witnessed the fulfillment of Christ's words where he says, "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (John 7:17.) I have obeyed the will of God, and in consequence thereof I have received a testimony of the truth, so that I can now say, "I know it is the power of God unto salvation."

There were no Saints in this county when the Elders came, and in the month of June last Sister Waldron and myself led the way, being the first to be immersed for the remission of sins in this county, at the hands of a duly authorized servant of God, at least of late years. Since our acceptance fifteen others have been led in the right way, so that we know "Zion is growing! Zion is growing!"

I rejoice in the Gospel of salvation, and pray for the success and final triumph of truth and righteousness. I have my trials, but by the help of the Lord I will strive to endure to the end.

Your sister, Mrs. Fannie Smith.

THE BEAUTIES OF NATURE.

BY W. HAMPTON MAYO.

Written for The Southern Star.
To look upon the forest,
With its many sparkling rills,
And to view the grassy meadows
And the grand old ancient hills.

Just to see the leafy woodland,
With her green and lofty bowers,
Can we tell the varied specie
Of the grasses, birds and flowers?

Oh, how beauteous the creation,
All its scenes our hearts to cheer,
When our minds are overladen
With affliction, toil and care!

There's one star whose light is shining,
That some cold heart it may warm,
With the honest it is pleading
Southern Star, Millennial Dawn!

And when with envy Time transported
Shall think to rob us of our joys,

And I'll go wooing in my boys.

THE WORD OF WISDOM.

If you will kindly spare a little space in your valuable paper for me, I shall be pleased to relate an experience which will doubtless be of interest and benefit to readers of the Star.

Before and after the Elders first visited us I was addicted to the uses of tobacco and coffee—in fact, I was a slave to the former. In lonely hours, the poison weed, I believed, was my best companion; in times of trouble and worry, my best comforter. In fact, it had become so much a part of my life that it seemed impossible to do without it. The Elders taught me the evil of its use; but still I could not realize the evils of using it, nor did I see any wrong in it.

I was convinced of the truthfulness of the Gospel as taught by the so-called "Mormon" Elders, and was baptized; but still I did not see the evil of the tobacco habit, always declaring it to be too good a friend to desert, until one memorable Sabbath morning, while fasting, I retired to a secluded spot in the woods and petitioned our Father above to guide me right, to teach me my duty, and to help me live a godly life. After finishing my prayer I was walking slowly in deep meditation, when suddenly a deep impression came to me, and seemed much as if a voice speaking, which said, "It is best for you to quit tobacco." I stopped, being very amazed, and looked around as if to see who spoke to me; but no one was in sight. I realized the nature of the warning; but I said to myself, as if in argument to the voice, "My tobacco is my comfort, my happiness, and my greatest luxury. I inhaled it with almost my first breath; I have loved and used it from infancy; and now, after fifty-seven years, is it necessary for me to reform?"

This argument seemed a consolation, and I was about to forget the event, when the same impression returned even stronger than ever. The same argument was again used as before, and again my memory was about to lose the event, when the same impression roused me with the same warning as at first, and adding that blessings greater than I had ever dreamed would be given me, providing I would obey.

I had just taken a chew of the forbidden weed; but upon receiving the third admonition I cast it from me, fully determined to obey the prompting.

My faith, however, was very weak, and the struggle to keep my resolve was hard, and to add to the trial the absence of my "comforter" caused me to become despondent and gloomy. I continued thus until the following Tuesday, when the same voice brought consolation to my troubled soul, and repeated the promise that through faithfulness those greater blessings would be realized—blessings that I could not receive while using the filthy weed.

I now felt like a new being, and rejoiced at the victory I had gained, and I soon realized the evil of indulging in the use of the poisonous plant; but above all I felt a greater flow of the Spirit of God and saw more clearly the beauties of the Gospel.

Shortly after, while attending a Conference, I was ordained to the Priesthood, and the blessings of God multiplied, until now I fully understand the necessity of repenting of those evil habits. Today I am proud to say that I am obeying the word of wisdom as near as I understand it.

And now, after being so favored with the blessings of God, allow me to testify to all that the use of tobacco as practiced in its various and filthy forms, is displeasing in the sight of God, and will deprive those who claim to be Saints and use it, from receiving many great blessings, and will drive from us, to a greater or less degree, the Holy Spirit.

Liquor, tobacco, coffee and tea are weapons used by Satan to keep the Saints from the blessings which belong to the faithful Latter-day Saints.

Dear reader, which do you think I enjoy best today, the presence of the Comforter from above or my former consolation (?) I can only answer, All the pleasures of this earth, with its wealth, pomp and show, would not induce me to exchange my present joys for those of former days.

Hoping these lines will be of benefit to others and a strength to those who may read them, I remain sincerely your brother in Christ, E. J. Callihan.

THE BLESSINGS OF GOD.

Thinking a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard will be of some interest to the many readers of the Star, we thought we would let you know how the Lord is blessing us in our labors. I met Elder Morgan J. Rich in Giles county, at Mountain Lake. He had been sent by President Olson to take charge of a Conference that was to be held at that place on the 8th and 9th of September, in connection with Elders Fletcher, Larson, Gooch and Miller. We obtained a beautiful grove, and then we all went to work and placed seats under the trees and made a pleasant place to hold our Conference. All of the Elders spoke under the influence of the Holy Ghost. Hundreds of people listened to the inspired words that were uttered by the Elders.

Elders Gooch and Miller baptized five members a few days after our Conference. Elder Rich and myself then went to Haran and held an interesting Conference at that place on the 22d and 23d. Elders Gooch, Miller and Peterson were with us, Elder Rich taking charge. From Haran Elder Rich and I went up in Bedford county to visit the Saints. We arrived at Montvale on the 16th of October. We found a number of good Saints and a good Sunday School. All the Saints were pleased to meet the Elders once more. The people up in the mountains were anxious for us to hold meetings. We gave out a week's meeting and held them at private houses and out in the groves. We had hundreds of people out to listen to the Gospel plan.

The people insisted on us remaining over another week So we gave out another week's meetings. The Methodists were trying to hold meetings, but they were a failure. Nine-tenths of the people were out to listen to the true servants of God. We baptized six Methodists—and they are an honor to the Church they have become affiliated with. One of the members we baptized was a blind lady over 60 years old, and sick in bed. Her little home was, or is, located high in the mountains, and her name is Mary Dooley. We gave out in one of our meetings that we would baptize her on the following day. The Methodist preacher gave out in his meeting that she would never be baptized by a Mormon Elder. At the time appointed the good Saints fitted up a litter, put some quilts and pillows on it, and marched down the mountain single file and laid the blind lady down by the water's edge. We sang and dedicated the waters, and then grandma was assisted in and Elder M. J. Rich baptized her. When she came up out of the water she looked like a new woman, and thanked the Lord that she had embraced the true plan of salvation.

We will never forget that solemn occasion, when they brought the blind lady to the water's edge. It would remind you of a funeral procession. It brought tears to the eyes of many. One good Christian woman wished that the poor blind lady would drop dead before we could baptize her. But in the place of dropping dead, she was born again. The ministers did all they could to prevent grandma from being baptized. Before we left we strengthened the branch by putting in a President and a teacher and Deacon. The Spirit of the Lord was manifest to a great extent in all of our meetings and at our baptisms. We were only reaping the fruits of other good Elders, and we hope that someone may reap the fruits of our labors. With best wishes to all at the Office, we remain your brethren, F. H. SNOW.
MORGAN RICH.

THE DEAD.

Sister M. P. Cobia, the affectionate and loving wife of Brother W. N. Cobia, was called to answer the summons of death Oct. 21st, 1900.

The deceased was born Oct. 22d, 1860, and became a member of the Church Sept. 17th, 1892, and since that time she has lived the life of a Latter-day Saint.

Her door was always open to the Elders, to whom she gave the best she had. Her husband and twelve children survive her and mourn her loss. We extend our heartfelt sympathies and pray God to give them comfort by His Holy Spirit.

Mrs. Susan Taylor died at her home in Secanto, Florida, Oct. 5th, 1900. She was not a Latter-day Saint, but was a true, devoted friend to the Elders, and was ever willing to minister to their wants when opportunity offered her this privilege. She was laid to rest in the Secanto cemetery by the side of her only son, who preceded her some nineteen years. Her many friends, two daughters and a loving husband mourn the loss of a good, earnest soul in the demise of Mrs. Susan Taylor.

DEATH NOTICE.

"There is a reaper whose name is death—
And with his sickle keen—
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between."

These beautiful and expressive lines come forcibly to mind as we chronicle the sad news of the passing of another of those valiant spirits who only needed to hear the Gospel's glad message to be convinced of its truthfulness. Sister Louisiana Starling departed this life Aug. 12th, 1900, after a brief illness, leaving a husband and a large family of children, besides hosts of friends, to mourn her departure. She was baptized May 30th, 1894, was a true Latter-day Saint, and died in full hope of a glorious resurrection. Of such we say, "Oh, death, where is thy sting? Oh, grave, where is thy victory?"

The beaming Star is a welcome visitor to our home once each week, as it brings us news from those whom we have learned to love most dearly that are bearing the Gospel banner. May it continue to shine till its illuminating powers shall have reached the heart of every son and daughter of father Adam, and shed forth a divine ray that will bring peace and joy to their heavy laden minds and them to a knowledge of the truth.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

"LOVE ONE ANOTHER."

It was a memorable occasion, and one never to be forgotten by the worthy Apostles of the Lamb. Jesus with His chosen servants—the Twelve—had assembled in the appointed "upper room furnished and prepared," for the purpose of instituting the Lord's supper, and further instructing them in the work of the ministry, and their conduct one towards another. As an example of humility, and lowliness, the Savior had girded Himself and taking a towel, had condescended to wash their feet. This having been completed, He gives them some excellent counsel, and admonishes them saying, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 34-35).

Our first thought in considering this admonition is: Was the commandment to "love one another" a new one? Had not this command been a law of God from the very beginning, and was it not thundered from Mount Sinai during that marvelous display of divine majesty and power, when those tables of stone were delivered to Moses, upon which the decalogue was inscribed by the finger of the Creator? Yes; for the Lord promised to show "mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments." Now, we shall find that all these commandments hinged upon love; that love was the nucleus around which they clustered, and from which they radiated. The Father who had given them to the wayward Jews, to bring them unto Christ, was, and is, a God of love. John says, "God is love," and we read in Malachi, "I am the Lord, I change not;" therefore, love was a divine injunction from the very beginning! But why did the Savior remark, "A new commandment I give unto you"? Evidently this was a new commandment to the stiff-necked, hard-hearted children of Israel in that day, for in their struggle for wealth, fame and honored titles they had failed to exercise love. Jesus told them that they had omitted the weightier matters of the law, "love, judgment and mercy," so that, to such as they were, it could be consistently announced, "a new commandment."

Christ desired His people to forsake the ways of the world, to cleave to the perfect word of God, and love one another. Very well, did He realize that the world would hate and despise them, and that in the world they would find no happiness and peace; therefore He said, "Love one another." If they would have joy it must be found in their own circle; if they would be loved it must be by their brethren, for the world stood ready to hate, mock, deride and persecute them. This new commandment to them was an important one, vital, essential and absolutely requisite for their security, happiness and salvation. Where love abounds, peace reigns, and where peace reigns there is a happy contentment, the crowning glory and capstone of pure joy. Love has ever been a law with God, and "love one another" has been a universal summons ever since the creation. In His dealings with His erring children, He manifests love, and exhibits abundant goodness and never-failing mercy. Those worthy apostles did not forget the holy word, for we find Peter saying, "Above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves; for charity shall cover a multitude of sins." (I. Peter 4:8). Charity is the pure love of God, and when this dwells in the heart and soul, then do we behold the manifestation of the fruits of righteousness.

Paul gives us to understand that "love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. 13:10), and the same apostle, when enumerating the fruits of the spirit, mentions "love" first. In order for love to fulfill the law, it must be pure, holy, unfeigned, such a love as the Messiah possessed, which prompted Him to leave the courts of glory in the mansions of heaven and suffer the pangs of death upon the earth, that the will of His Father, God, might be done, and a way prepared for the wanderer to return from darkness into light, from the power and thralldom of Satan unto the almighty power and grace of God. The love of God shed abroad in our hearts will actuate us to perform deeds of loving kindness to all. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from Him, that he who loveth God love his brother also." (I. John 4:20-21).

Oh! how vastly different would be the state of affairs in the earth today if all the sons and daughters of men would but render obedience to this divine command, and earnestly walk in the light thereof. Alas! envy and rank jealousy have supplanted love and good will; and hypocrisy and empty pride have taken the place of straightforwardness and humility; while the stalking horse of vain glory and pomp has overridden the pure wisdom and meekness of primitive Christianity. Did love but abound and sweet charity reign, the world would be better, its people wiser, its homes brighter, and all filled with a nobler desire. What is the status of affairs today, and how goes the world at large? Scientific controversy is indulged in by the philosophers, social disturbances are manifest on all sides, political turmoil is rampant, and religious strife and contention issues from the pulpits of the learned divines. Why all this confusion, political jargon, religious malice, and social jealousy? Is it not due to the fact that mankind have not the love of Christ in their hearts, and can we not trace its inception and nascent operation to a transgression of this divine command, "Love one another?" Yes! Were the Lord to be revealed in the present day of turmoil and strife, when overreaching, penurious sycophants are taking the life's bread from the mouths of the poor, He could well repeat in thunder tones with renewed and vigorous emphasis, "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another."

Yes! it would be new, in deed, if not in thought or verse. Men may read it, quote it from memory, preach eloquent sermons from it, but few, very few, engage themselves to an earnest literal fulfillment of it. They have neglected this weightier matter, love, while they have erected churches to the memory of men, built synagogues and endeavored to convert the poor cannibal with his sharp teeth and small modicum of clothing. Love at home is the first essential, and then success abroad is inevitable. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

This is the divine rule by which we may know the true disciples of the Lord Jesus. Do we love one another? Are we kindly affectioned one to another? Do we manifest good will without dissimulation, and are we charitable to all men? If these can be truthfully answered in the affirmative, then it can be rightfully concluded that we are following the Lord. We are left to choose for ourselves, if we want happiness, then let love abound, and if we want misery and woe to sour happiness, poison joy, blight the bloom of life, and debar us from the heavenly kingdom, then let hatred and malice prevail. It is a duty devolving upon us, that we love one another, and that good will, harmony and a perfect unity, predominate and reign supreme. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another."

FRET NOT THYSELF.

BY PHILLIPS BROOKS.

The little sharp vexations,'
And the briars that catch and fret,
Why not take all to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?
Tell Him about the heartache,
And tell Him the longings, too;
Tell Him the baffled purpose
When we scarce know what to do;
Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden
And carry away the song.

THE WHEELS OF TIME.

The constant rolling wheels of Time have brought us to the close of another volume, and in taking a retrospective view of our labors here in the South, we are led to behold on every hand the remarkable manifestation of God's goodness and love unto us. Were it not for the blessings of God, for the strength and power we receive from Him, and which we derive by obedience to His laws and commandments, then we could not have completed our work, neither could we have maintained our position as His people upon the earth. It has been with us, even as with the great Apostle to the Gentiles, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" What can the puny arm of flesh do in its frail opposition to things divine and eternal? What doth it profit them who array their feeble forces in antagonism to God's work? As well might they go to the seashore and command the stormy ocean to be still, or the surging tide to cease its mighty inward flow, as to oppose God's eternal work of righteousness, which He hath set His hands to establish, and decreed shall come to pass. It is increasing in the earth, and is destined to become mighty and powerful as a defender of justice, equity and truth.

The volume just brought to a close reveals the fact that although men may oppose the Saints of God, and endeavor to despoil them of their rights and privileges as American citizens, still the good work continues, and over one thousand souls have been added to the Church. This record alone, the bare figures in the case, are sufficient to prove that that which the world erroneously calls "Mormonism" is growing and increasing. In the vales of Utah and on the rising plateaus of the Western Highlands the children are singing, "Zion is growing," while here in the Sunny South the Elders are valiantly rolling up their sleeves, baring their arms, and fulfilling the encouraging anthem.

When the Prophet Joseph Smith announced to the world that the heavens had been opened, and divine communication had been given in answer to his humble prayer for wisdom and light, he was scoffed and derided, counted a fanatic, a knave, false Prophet, impostor, fool, etc. Later, when the Church was organized, and willing messengers responded to bear the glad tidings of the restored Gospel to the nations of the earth, the enemies of righteousness and truth raised a hue and cry, saying, "If Mormonism is true it will stand, if false it must fall." Judging from their own assertion (which we do not admit a righteous criterion), Mormonism must be true, for she has stood, and that too in the face of all opposition, supported only by God and the right. Yes! she has weathered a stromy gale of fierce persecution, and her gallant leader was cruelly martyred while piloting her course to the shores of safety and eternal bliss. Still she is afloat, her timbers well seasoned by the storms, her sails well proven by the winds, riding o'er the ocean of time to the shores of eternity.

How thankful indeed we should be to that God who reigns on high, whose children we are! He has been our strength and stay, our rock of defense, and refuge from the storms. The longer we live upon this earth, the more deeply are we brought to realize that without the Lord we can do nothing. We are grateful for the privilege of presenting another volume to the people of the world, and we trust that the many truths contained therein will be utilized profitably, and for the salvation of the sons of men. In closing this volume, we can say that the work has been a joy and not a labor altogether, a blessed privilege and not a mere duty. When the first number of this present volume was issued, it contained in its editorial columns these words, "Our intention is to produce only those articles that will impress readers to be good, virtuous, honest and holy, to strike out for whatever is right and manly, to make principle and not popularity, one milestone in your career, in short, to do good." We shall leave it to the discretion and judgment of the reader, as to whether or not we have fulfilled our claims, and kept the promise made.

Time is on the wing; the days come and go, the weeks pass and are no more, the months and years speed swiftly by to constitute the past. Our life here in mortality is but brief if we chance to live out the allotted three score years and ten, but during the time spent here on earth, the Lord hath made it possible for us to prepare for a never-ending existence in the eternal worlds of glory. Let us prove ourselves true to the trust, valiant in defense of righteousness, sober, earnest, honest, faithful, and obedient children, then the Lord will be pleased to own and bless us, and at the last day lift us up to glory, honor and immortality.

History of the Southern States Mission.

October, 1900—A telegram from Elder H. C. Butler, dated Oct. 5th, brought the sad news of the demise of Elder H. D. Bronson, who met his death by drowning in the Oconee river, near Eatonton, Ga. The message read as follows: "H. D. Bronson, Fairview, Idaho, was drowned in the Oconee river this morning at 7 o'clock. Body not yet found." A full account of the causes which led up to, and terminated in, his death can be found in the Star under date of Oct. 13th, 1900. This intelligence was communicated by wire to President Rich, who, at the time of the accident, was in Salt Lake City. The funeral services over Elder Bronson's body were held Oct. 14th, at Fairview, Idaho. Many glowing tributes were paid to his cherished name. Sister Nina F. Rich wrote a cheering letter of consolation to the bereaved mother, as a token of heartfelt love and sisterly affection. (See page 375.)

In the early part of the month Elders Wilford Bennion and J. J. Facer entered Savannah, Ga., for the purpose of propagating the Gospel in that city and promulgating righteousness. Much bitter opposition was encountered, and for a time they were blankly prohibited from preaching, or distributing literature in any way. Finally, by dint of perseverence and manly stick-to-it-ive-ness, they succeeded in holding forth. Elder Bennion was taken dangerously ill with the dreaded chills and fever, and on this account was released to return home.

The authorities in Zion deemed it wisdom to transfer the Louisiana Conference to the Southwestern States Mission. This will be consummated some time in November, when all necessary changes can be completed.

Elders T. S. Karren and J. M. Redd went into the little city of Milen, Gibson county, Tenn. They interviewed the Mayor, and from him obtained permission to canvass the city and preach on the streets. The Elders at once proceeded with their labors, and at night were out on the streets for the purpose of holding meeting. Near the close of their services they were pelted with rotten eggs. This, of course, created confusion, and gave rise to a disturbance, which was soon brought to a quietus by the night watchman, who rode into the crowd with a pack of hounds. One good fellow, whose heart was truly Christian, cared for the Elders over night, and the next morning they sallied forth with undaunted determination to do the Master's will. They were met by the Mayor and police, who commanded them to leave town, the chief executive saying, "If you do not you will be severely punished." The Elders, remembering the words of Jesus, "If they persecute you in one city flee to the next," departed, and left that burg.

Circular letters were sent out to all the Elders, and their aids at home, giving information of the policy of the Church relative to the Mission, and requesting the Elders to have money on deposit.

A disgraceful affair took place in the North Ohio Conference, in which the Elders were subjected to some severe treatment. (See page 394.) In all, the health of the Elders is at par with the general report. Silent contempt seems to be the most formidable weapon used in opposition, although mob violence is exhibited in some few places. The work is prospering, notwithstanding, and the results are indeed gratifying and very encouraging. The force of Elders is not as large as formerly, and the ranks are being thinned each month. Twenty Elders arrived from Zion and were assigned their fields of labor. In appearance, judgment, and general deportment they were a worthy band of men. Their names and fields of labor are as follows:

John P. Greene, South Carolina Conference.

John A. Richey, Mississippi Conference.

Joseph Johnson, Kentucky Conference.

Franklin Crow, North Kentucky Conference.

William Parkinson, Virginia Conference.

James F. Iverson, Kentucky Conference.

Hyrum Morrison, North Alabama Conference.

Ed J. Smith, Kentucky Conference.

Jefferson Boffin, Georgia Conference.

William C. Wootton, South Alabama Conference.

Oscar Geertsen, North Ohio Conference.

Ed L. Linford, Virginia Conference.

George O. Hamblin, East Tennessee Conference.

Preston D. Thomas, Mississippi Conference.

George Q. Stephenson, North Kentucky Conference.

Jesse H. LeFevre, Georgia Conference.

Ed C. Bagley, North Ohio Conference.

Crozier Kimball, East Ketnucky Conference.

Wilford McKendrick, South Alabama Conference.

W. D. Reed, East Kentucky Conference.

The Conferences report in good style, and all indications point to a steady growth, with a solid united effort on the part of the Elders.

SAINTS OF THE SUNNY SOUTH.

My Beloved Brethren and Sisters:

For some time past I have felt an intense desire to address a general communication to you, my fellow Saints of the household of faith, who reside in this sunny Southland. Ever since I have taken charge of the affairs in this mission, now almost thirty months, I have thought of you constantly, exercised my faith in your behalf, given you the benefit of my prayers, and labored for your welfare and felicity; your future happiness and exaltation. I realize, to some extent at least, the many trials and tribulations you are called to endure, and that persecution is your common heritage in this life, and fierce opposition your inheritance. It has ever been thus since the days of righteous Abel, who fell a victim to his brother's cudgel—the wicked have sought to club and drive from the face of the earth the upright, faithful and honest in heart. The Lord God hath protected His people, and, in obedience to His will and word, they have been given strength, faith, hope, and love. He will, and does, protect us in the present, and soon He will bare His almighty and powerful arm in defense of His chosen ones, and the wicked and ungodly will feel the avenging hand of God, and shall be destroyed from the earth, for they shall have no place or inheritance with the righteous.

You have not forgotten the words of the Father, and how that He hath declared, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." Let no spirit of vindictiveness or revenge have place in your hearts, or be exhibited in your dealings and affairs of life. Rather that you manifest love unfeigned, charity, pure, sweet and simple, forgiveness, forasmuch as we are commanded to forgive all men. The Lord will forgive whom He will, as justice and mercy shall determine; but we must forgive each other and exercise righteousness in spirit and truth.

Just so long as wickedness abounds and evil finds a place in the hearts of the children of men, we may look for persecution, for the Gospel of Jesus Christ, embracing as it does all truth, comes in direct opposition to error, and is averse to evil, so that a conflict ensues as a logical sequence. As the children of God, who have been rescued from the darkness of Satan, and given the light of inspiration, we should so conduct our lives and labors as to be effectual in leading others aright. How very careful we should be that we set an example worthy of emulation, that our neighbors and friends may observe our acts of pure godliness, and fruits of perfect righteousness, and that they, thus seeing, may be led to glorify and serve our Father in heaven.

In the eyes of the Lord you are His chosen people, and to the Church, Latter-day Saints, but to the world you are poor, fanatical, deluded "Mormons." You must never expect in this mortal sphere to gain the friendship, esteem and regard of the world, for the friendship of the world is enmity with God, and those who serve the world are not serving God, but contrawise, they are led by that wicked one, even Lucifer, who seeks the destruction of their souls. You remember that the Apostle Paul said, "The carnal mind is enmity against God." The lovers of this world, and her evil ways are carnally minded, "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God," and in their carnality and worldliness they are not fit subjects for the heavenly kingdom. It is expected of the true Latter-day Saints that they will be spiritually minded, seeking only the glory of God, the salvation of a brother or sister, and the progression and advancement of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. If we will only strive to help others, and keep ourselves unspotted and untainted from the sins of this generation, the Lord will bless us, and reward us with the rich, everlasting treasures of heaven.

To know that you are doing those things which are pleasing and acceptable unto the Lord is, in and of itself, a comfort and a joy, the best of all blessed assurances we can possess, for you remember that this was the testimony given to the righteous Enoch, who never tasted death, "He had this testimony, that he pleased God." Now we can all receive this divine assurance, if we will serve the Lord with full purpose of heart, and never weary in well doing. We should earnestly and diligently strive for the same, and then we can overcome the trials of the world, the weaknesses of the flesh, and the temptations of the devil. Our Savior overcame all, and we are told that we should strive to have the same mind as was in Christ Jesus, in order that we may receive of the joys of our Lord, for He hath said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in His throne."

Love liberty and justice, freedom and equality, while you spurn and shun intolerance and partiality, slavery and dishonesty. Your love of liberty will place you on the right platform, that is, liberty to serve God, and freedom to worship Him in spirit and in truth. You may not have justice meted out to you in this life, but you cannot afford to deal unjustly, notwithstanding, for dishonesty is a crime, and they who indulge therein sinners and transgressors of the law of God. It is better to suffer wrong than do wrong, as it is also better to suffer for well doing than evil doing; for if you suffer for your evil deeds you justly deserve your punishment, but, on the other hand, if you suffer for well doing you justly merit the smiles and blessings of God, who will abundantly reward you when He cometh to gather up His jewels, and call the ransomed home.

"Wisdom is better than weapons of war," says the wise preacher, therefore, "get wisdom." You will be able to escape many seeming trials and difficulties by the proper and legitimate exercise of wisdom. The Savior told His disciples to "Be wise as serpents, harmless as doves." Answer not railing with railing, and where you perceive deep-seated hatred and cankered prejudice, splenetic fury and fiendish malice, do not scatter your precious seeds of righteousness, for these mortal vultures will not only shun the precious seed, but endeavor to destroy the life-giving influence of your words and work. The bread of spiritual life is for the children. "Feed my lambs," says the Savior, but He never told us to stuff them. You have received of the truth, and the truth will make you free. When it was first revealed to you it seemed as though it was the sweetest story ever told, the sublimest message ever announced, and you thought that others would see as you did, and rejoice with you; but no, many forsook you, and you were left to struggle alone, so far as human assistance was concerned, and still you strove manfully against great odds and adverse powers, until a testimony burned within, and you knew it was of God. The Gospel you have embraced is worth more than all the wealth of the world, for it is the power of God unto salvation, the means appointed of the Father, by obedience to which we may be saved and exalted with immortality and life eternal.

Our cause is just, and the time is not far distant when the Prince of Peace, Jesus, the Light of the World, will be revealed in the heavens of glory, and then the faithful can lift up their heads, while their countenances beam with joy and satisfaction, and go forth to meet Him who was slain for the sins of the world. He will vindicate the cause for the righteous, and rule with equity, justice, mercy and truth. We should prepare for His coming, and pray for the glorious advent, that when He comes to earth again we may be found watching. "Blessed is he whom the Lord finds watching. Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation. These are perilous times, times which try the souls of men, and only the faithful and dutiful will stand the great sifting test to which the Saints will yet be subjected. "Fear not, little flock, it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." It was only to be a little flock, and yet the kingdom to them was promised. I would exhort you to be constant in your prayers, faithful in the performance of every duty and the strict observance of every law of God. All that the Lord has commanded us to obey is indeed requisite and essential to our soul's salvation. If it were not so, our Father would never have spoken the word. The law of tithing, and the word of wisdom, are both ordained of God, and vital to the well-being and exaltation of the sons of men. Let us see to it that we render obedience to these holy laws. Pay your honest, lawful tithes and be blessed of God, with the treasures of heaven and the riches of eternity. Away with intoxicants, coffee, tobacco and snuff, they are not good for man, but destructive to the physical being, and poisonous to the finer sensibilities and faculties. Cleanse your systems and purify your bodies, that the spirit of truth may find a fit and wholesome receptacle in which to dwell. We must overcome our habitual tendencies to indulge in stimulants and narcotics, and stand erect, free from the evil customs of the race, in the likeness of our Father in whose image we are created.

Do not be despondent or discouraged, my beloved brethren and sisters. All things work together for good to them that fear God. You stand upon the solid rock of divine revelation; the Church is built upon the pillars of eternity; Christ is our Glorified Head, and God our Eternal Father; therefore be not dismayed, for "All is well! All is well!" As the sturdy patriots sang of their country's flag, so we can sing of our faith and cause:

"And conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our motto, 'In God is our trust;'
And the banner of Justice in Mercy shall wave
O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

May God bless you and multiply upon you the testimony of the truth. May the peace and blessings of heaven attend you, mercy and justice prevail, righteousness increase, love abound, the truth spread, and liberty and freedom extend from pole to pole. Your brother in the Gospel.

RULES FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Deseret News, Nov. 13, 1900.

The Sunday School convention met again this morning (Tuesday) at 10 o'clock, with a large attendance of delegates. "Come, join our celebration," was the opening hymn. Prayer was offered by Elder George Teasdale.

Elder H. S. Ensign conducted the musical exercises and singing practice on the following hwmns: "Rock of My Refuge," and "Kind and Gracious Father."

"Importance of home influence in Sunday School work" was the subject of a highly interesting address by Elder George M. Cannon. He said the influence of environment is a great factor in the formation of character, and the condition of the home surroundings of the child is equal to all other influences which have a bearing upon the growth and development of child character. To obtain the most satisfactory results, home influence should harmonize with the work and purpose of the Sunday School, and each should loyally support and sustain the other. While the work of the teacher sometimes may be crude and his methods open to criticism, the parent cannot afford to do other than loyally sustain the teacher, and if any criticisms is to be made they should be made to the teacher personally. If any criticisms reaches the ear of the child the influence of that teacher over the child is nullified. Encouragement should be given the children at home to prepare their lessons. Regular attendance depends in a great measure upon home influence and training. If the young people are permitted to allow trivial things to prevent their regular attendance at school, they are likely to grow up shiftless, useless members of society. The speaker paid a glowing tribute to mothers, and cited the great influence they had in the formation of noble characters. No great man ever lived, he said, who did not have a great and good mother.

Elder George Teasdale spoke interestingly of the "Duties of Sunday School workers outside the Sunday School." The calling of the Sunday School teacher is a divine one, as important and as direct a calling as a foreign mission. It is a home mission. The speaker read from the Doctrine and Covenants the qualifications of an instructor of the Gospel, namely, humility, a strong desire to bring about righteousness, and the fellowship of the Spirit of God. The learned Jeremiah, the Prophet, said he, should not glory in his worldly wisdom or knowledge, but should glory in the knowledge of God. To get the Spirit of the Lord and keep it should be the aim of every Sunday School worker; by it they will become powerful for good, and all other qualifications will be added to them. Outside the school much can be done by the loving teacher to lead the children to love the lessons of the Gospel he strives to teach them. If any are sick, visit and comfort them; talk to them when met on the street; invite the children to your homes and make them feel that you love them and desire their welfare.

In answer to a question, President Cannon stated that the Sunday School Board recommended that the four standard works of the Church be the only recognized text books, other works were to be used as aids and supplements.

Elder George D. Pyper sang in fine voice the solo, "The Children's Friend."

Elder Horace S. Ensign read the Rules and Regulations adopted by the Deseret Sunday School Union Board for the government of the Sabbath Schools of the Church, which are as follows:

Sunday School Rules and Regulations.

Since the year 1895 the Deseret Sunday School Union Board has adopted the following resolutions and instructions for the government and discipline of the various Sunday Schools throughout the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. They are hereby compiled, classified and presented for the guidance of the officers and teachers:

ON ORGANIZATION.

1st—Superintendents and Assistant Superintendents of Sunday Schools should be selected from among those holding the higher Priesthood. In instances where suitable and qualified men holding this Priesthood cannot be found, brethren holding the lesser Priesthood may act as Superintendents or Assistant Superintendents, or in exceptional cases, properly qualified sisters may act as these positions.

2d—Where Sunday Schools are organized in the various Missions of the Church, it is desirable that the President of the Mission select some Elder to act as Mission Superintendent of the Sunday Schools, who will report directly to the Sunday School Union Board, Templeton building, Salt Lake City, Utah. If desirable every Conference may have a Superintendent of Sunday Schools.

3d—Wherever it becomes necessary to fill vacancies among officers and teachers of a Sunday School, preference should be given to those who practice the Word of Wisdom, honor the Sabbath day, sustain the Priesthood, observe the law of tithing, and are not members of secret societies.

4th—Where the theological department is made up largely of parents and elderly people, it would be better to place pupils who are promoted from the second intermediate class under a separate teacher, and such students be classified as the preparatory theological class. The work of this class should be preparatory to the regular theological work.

ON DISCIPLINE.

1st—As soon as a primary or intermediate department or second exceeds the number of fifty, the Superintendent should, if he has suitable teachers and sufficient room, divide it into two sections. The same lessons shall be taught in both sections.

2d—When the Superintendent and the Assistant Superintendents are absent from the school, they should appoint someone to take charge, but in case they fail to make such appointment, it becomes the duty of the Secretary to call the roll as usual, the senior male teacher then take charge of the school. Should the Bishop also be absent, the senior teacher, providing he holds the necessary Priesthood, should direct the administration of the Sacrament.

3d—The minutes of the Sunday School should always show that the Superintendent presides, if he be present. If one of his assistants takes charge, it should be shown upon the minutes, but the Superintendent, when present, is always recorded as the presiding officer. After the minutes are read, if there are no amendments, or the amendments offered are approved, the minutes should then be accepted with uplifted hand.

Teachers who are present when the roll is called at 10 o'clock should be recorded "early."

4th—When Stake annual Sunday School conferences are held, it is preferred in the future that the Sacrament be administered at the morning session, instead of the afternoon, as heretofore.

5th—It is recommended that the children should remain seated during the opening prayer.

6th—It is preferred that promotion be made once a year. In special cases transfers may be made whenever occasion requires; but at all times by mutual understanding between the presiding department teacher and the Superintendent.

7th—The average attendance of the school should be made up from the full attendance of officers, teachers and pupils each Sunday, as ascertained by the Secretary. The annual average attendance is ascertained by putting down the actual number in attendance each Sunday during the year; add these numbers together and divide the total by the number of Sunday School sessions held during the year. The answer will be the average attendance.

8th—When the Quarterly Conference of the Stake is held, the Sunday School of the Ward in which the conference is held should convene for one hour in the morning, from 10 to 11 o'clock, and a general programme take the place of the regular exercises.

ORDINANCES AND PRINCIPLES.

1st—The following instructions from Superintendent George Q. Cannon have been adopted as the general sense of the Deseret Sunday School Union Board:

"Officers and teachers in the Sunday Schools of the Latter-day Saints should be observers of the Word of Wisdom, who live upright lives and perform the obligations required of them, and who are living examples to the children they are called upon to teach. In no office in the Church is it so necessary for persons to be free from the use of intoxicants, tobacco, Sabbath breaking, profanity, etc., as in the case of Sunday School officers and teachers; for they are examples immediately before the children, and this Board should give the appointment of persons so guilty the stamp of disapproval. It is better that a position in a Sunday School should be vacant for a time than that men who are users of intoxicants and tobacco, profaners of Deity, and Sabbath breakers, should be set up as teachers of the youth of Zion."

2d—In the absence of the Bishop, the Superintendent of the Sunday School should, when necessary, instruct those administering the Sacrament to be cautious about breaking more bread than is necessary for use in the school. The residue of the bread broken should be returned to the brother or sister who has furnished it, and be put to some good use; it should never be wasted. The greatest cleanliness should be required of those who break the bread. Children should be prohibited from drinking out of the Sacrament cups after the water has been passed, or from interfering with the Sacrament service. Buckets and cups or dippers should be provided for the children to quench their thirst.

It is not advisable to require fast day offerings from the children.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Officers, teachers and members of the Sunday Schools are expected to remain aloof from all secret societies, and to refrain from wearing badges, political or others, in the Sunday School.

Superintendents are requested to read at the regular monthly meeting of the teachers all general instructions of the Union Board published in the Juvenile Instructor.

Each Sunday School should take one or more copies of the Juvenile Instructor, so that they may be in close touch with the Deseret Sunday School Union Board and be informed as to its rulings.

Superintendents of Sunday Schools are asked to furnish the Stake Superintendents and the Deseret Sunday School Union Board with copies of all printed matter originating with them, which they propose to use in their schools.

Contentions and debates on religious questions, wherein men assume positions for the sake of argument and then undertake to uphold them, should not be permitted in our Sunday Schools.

In the announcement of hymns, Superintendents should read the pages of both the hymn and the song book.

Under the approval and direction of the Bishopric, each school shall meet once a year in special session, or Ward Sunday School conference, and by vote sustain the officers and teachers of the school. A special programme may be rendered, and the sessions shall only last during the usual time of holding Sunday School. A desirable time to hold such special sessions would be on the Sunday nearest the date of the anniversary of the organization of the school.

Secretary Ensign then called the roll of the Sunday Schools by Stakes. Nearly all the Stake Superintendencies were represented. Most of those not so represented had delegates present, as well as a number of foreign Missions.

Assistant Superintendent George Reynolds, in behalf of the Board, advised the holding of District Conferences in the various Stakes, for the reason that many Stake Conferences are little more than a conference of the one school where held; only a few delegates from other schools being present, few children attending except from the one school.

Elder Reynolds called attention to the Jubilee History of the Sunday Schools of the Church. The book is now ready for distribution, at $1 per copy, postage 20 cents. The Union has on hand also a number of new Bible charts, illustrating twelve of the miracles of Jesus. It also has chronological charts of the Book of Mormon, covering the full period of its history.

"How to use the Sunday School Leaflets" was minutely explained by Assistant Superintendent Maeser. The Leaflets present the lessons in two divisions, first, the subject matter, which includes the text, notes and references; and second, what can be learned by the lesson, which includes the lesson statement, answers to questions. The speaker particularly emphasized the importance of thoroughness; every word and sentence should be fully explained and understood before taking up another lesson, even if it takes a month to get through with a leaflet.

Elder George D. Pyper stated that answer to a question that Sunday School choirs were not intended to do the singing, but to lead in the music; it is desired that all the children of the school should sing.

"Beautiful words of love" was sung as the closing hymn, and the benediction was pronounced by Elder Brigham Young.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Order was called at 2 o'clock by General Superintendent Cannon. "Hope of Israel" was sung for the opening. Prayer was offered by Elder John Henry Smith.

Prof. Evan Stephens directed the music practice for this session, and the following selections were sung: "Improve the Shining Moments," "The Primary March," "Our Mountain Home So Dear."

Elder Thomas A. Clawson briefly discussed the "Study of the Scriptures," urging the importance of a better acquaintance with them. To obtain a knowledge of the laws of God, and of His dealings with the children of men, an acquaintance with the Scriptures is not only desirable, but necessary. Faith in the Gospel, and in the purposes of the Lord in respect to mankind, depends in a great measure upon an acquaintance with the teachings of the truths contained in the Scriptures. Familiarity with the Bible and other holy books is a fortification against evil, and a means of inspiring faith and confidence in our Heavenly Father, and love for Him.

"Kind Words are Sweet Tones of the Heart," solo and chorus, was beautifully rendered by Elder Horace S. Ensign and the assembly of delegates.

President Lorenzo Snow was the next to address the assembly. He expressed delight at what he had heard in the convention. He said that if he, now in his 77th year, could receive instruction in this grand Sunday School work, as he had done at these meetings, he felt that there was none too old to become identified with and receive instruction in the Sunday School. In speaking to the subject assigned, "Tithing," he said he desired to impress upon his hearers the great importance of that principle. He read a portion of the 119th section of the Doctrine and Covenants. It was a singular thing that the land of Zion could be sanctified by the observance of the law of tithing, but such was the fact, and in no other way, he said, could this land become the land of Zion, to the people of the Lord, and it was of the utmost importance that this law be observed. The principle should be taught in the Sunday School, to teachers and pupils. Referring to the land of Zion, he said the spirit of returning to Jackson county was felt among the Latter-day Saints, and wealthy people among them were offering large contributions towards the purchase and redemption of that land. The day was near at hand, President Snow said, for the return of the Saints to the land of their first inheritance. This land is not our home, he said, and the majority of those who were before him would live to see the return of the children of the Saints, the sons and daughters of those who were dispossessed of their inheritances in the early history of the Church. But, he said, the Saints will not be prepared to return thither till they are willing to pay their tithing.

Elder Heber J. Grant was the next speaker, his subject being "Keeping pace with the children." He prefaced his address by singing Brother George Goddard's favorite song, "Who's on the Lord's Side?" One of the means of keeping pace with the children is for Superintendents, officers and teachers meeting together often to study up and devise ways and means of making the work of the Sunday School more attractive, interesting and profitable to the children who attend. Make the school interesting, and take part in all the work of the school, and never ask the children to learn anything that the officers and teachers are unwilling to do themselves.

Elder Benjamin Goddard followed in an interesting talk on "How to induce our young men to attend Sunday School." Elder Goddard said the first essential was the organization of a suitable class for young men, with a teacher who was adapted to the task of drawing young men to the class, and who was thoroughly imbued with the Spirit of the Gospel and capable of teaching its principles, so that he could be master of the situation. Earnest, cheerful class work, in a conversational manner, avoiding discussions, will attract members and keep up their interest. When the class is started, the use of the visiting book in the hands of a committee will soon bring into the class most of the young people of the Ward. Class reunions and other social gathering may be adopted with excellent effect.

But finds her grace.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE FRANCIS M. LYMAN.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.]

This worthy Apostle of the host was born in Goodhope, McDonough county, Illinois, Jan. 12, 1840. He is the eldest son of Amasa Mason Lyman and Louisa Maria Tanner Lyman, both of early Puritan stock. The time of his birth witnessed the days of tribulation to the Saints of God. They had been driven from Jackson, Clay and Caldwell counties, and were now taking refuge in Illinois. In the spring of 1840, Bro. Lyman's family moved into Iowa, thence to Nauvoo in 1841. From there, in 1843, they moved to Alquina, Fayette county, Indiana, where they remained until after the martyrdom of the Prophet and Patriarch of the Church in 1844, when they turned to Nauvoo. Elder Lyman is probably the youngest man living who remembers to have seen the Prophet Joseph Smith, and who also received administration in the Nauvoo Temple, for in that sacred building he was sealed to his parents by Presidents Young and Kimball in 1846.

In June, 1846, he, with his mother and three other children in charge of his mother's father, John Tanner, journeyed west to Winter Quarters, his father having already gone with the pioneers from Nauvoo.

July 1, 1840, being a little over 8 years old, Bro. Lyman was baptized by his father in the Elk Horn river and confirmed by him.

Notwithstanding his tender years, on their journey to Salt Lake Valley, he drove a yoke of cattle and wagon to Utah, arriving in the Valley Oct. 19, 1848. During the next three years he occupied his time in such labor and diversions as were the lot of pioneer children in those early days. The opportunities for education were meagre, but such as they were Francis Marion received the benefits thereof. His father and Elder Chas. C. Rich having purchased a ranch in San Bernardino, intended as a temporary home and outfitting post, the family removed to California in 1851. On the way young Bro. Lyman performed a man's duty in driving loose stock, etc., the entire distance.

APOSTLE FRANCIS M. LYMAN.

For several years he was employed handling animals and freighting between San Bernardino and Salt Lake City, making in these years sixteen trips across the desert between California and Utah. His winter months were spent in school in San Bernardino, obtaining such education as the schools afforded. With Thos. W. Whittaker he worked about eighteen months at the joiner's trade. In April, 1853, he was a witness to the laying of the corner stones of the Temple in Salt Lake City.

In 1857 he was selected as a missionary to Europe, but the advent of Johnston's army deferred his mission for the time being, although he came as far as Salt Lake City en route to Great Britain. Here it was deemed wisdom that he should return to the coast and move his father's family to Salt Lake Valley, all the missionaries and colonizing Saints being called to Utah from California.

In 1856 Bro. Lyman had been ordained an Elder in California by his father, and May 1, 1860, he started on his mission to Europe. While his public life in the ministry really began at this time, he had filled the colonization mission with his father in San Bernardino. In 1858, he had explored with the elder Lyman in Colorado and was ordained a Seventy in Farmington, Utah (where he had removed to cultivate his father's farm) on Jan. 7, 1860. In the winter months of 1859-60 he presided over the Young Men's Literary Association in Farmington.

On Nov. 15, 1857, he had received in marriage Rhoda Ann Taylor, who, with her father and family, had received the Gospel in Australia under the administration of Elder Wm. Hyde. Before leaving for England Elder Lyman built a log room in Beaver, Utah, and to that place he removed his family, consisting of a wife and one child.

En route to Europe he visited Kirtland and by Martin Harris, one of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, was shown through the Temple. Since then he has visited the sacred edifice several times. He takes profound satisfaction in visiting the places of note in the early scenes and history of the Church. At this writing he is on a tour to the east, accompanied by Sister Amoda Lyman, intending to visit Independence, Nauvoo, the Hill Cumorah, the early home of his father in New Hampshire and other points in New England. He sailed for Liverpool on the steamship Edinburgh, and landed in that city July 27, 1860.

At this juncture let us quote a paragraph of his life written for the Juvenile Instructor by Elder Edward H. Anderson: "Let us ask the boys and girls to look back over the life of this boy of 20 years and see what he had accomplished. What an astonishing record of activity and work! Frontiersman at birth and babyhood; pioneer and teamster at 8; herdsman and cowboy at 11; learning a trade at 13; plowing the trackless deserts as a leader and captain at 16; married at 17; exploring the wilds of Colorado at 18; a Seventy and a missionary at 20; with farming, attending school, presiding over improvement associations, building the log cabin of the pioneer, as incidents thrown here and there in between." What an example of industry, labor, faith and devotion, worthy the following of every human being!

While absent he not only labored in Great Britain, but made tours of Scotland, Wales, Germany, Denmark, France and Switzerland. On his return he was accompanied by 300 Saints.

In April, 1877, he attended the dedication of the St. George Temple.

When the Tooele Stake was organized, June 24, 1877, Elder Lyman was placed to preside over it. For the next three years we find him at the head of affairs in that county, religiously and politically. The Liberals had obtained control, and by dishonest extravagance had spent in four years the revenue of five, leaving the county in debt $16,000. President Lyman was elected county recorder and representative to the legislature from Tooele county. He set his mind at once to dislodge from power the Liberal party in Tooele county, and with his determination and persistent qualities he never relaxed his energies until the good work had been accomplished.

In 1878 the legislature passed a law which required the registration of voters, which meant dissolution to the so-called "Tooele Republic." In August, 1878, all the candidates of the people's party were elected by a safe majority. The Liberal officers refused to count the votes and by a system of technicalities declared the candidates of the people's party not elected. Hon. F. M. Lyman filed notice of contest and carrying it to the supreme court, the court issued a peremptory order which required the officers to declare the correct result of the election. This action placed the candidates of the people's party in office and by economy and watch-care the county was redeemed from the debt incurred by corrupt officials. Elder Lyman in this experience, as in all similar ones, has proven himself to be a terror to evildoers.

While on a tour in southern Utah, Arizona and New Mexico, Elder Lyman was called at the general conference in October, 1880, to be one of the Twelve Apostles. Elder John Henry Smith was called at the same time. Bro. Lyman was ordained to the apostleship Oct. 27, 1880, by President John Taylor. From that day until the present his whole time and energies have been devoted to the apostleship. No Apostle travels more among the Stakes of Zion, and reaches more of the settlements of the Saints than does Apostle Lyman. He is incessant in his work by day and by night. Since his call to the apostleship he has performed at least one important mission among the Lamanites of the Utah Reservation, one mission in California accompanied by Elder B. H. Roberts and one in the southern states with Elder Matthias F. Cowley as his traveling companion. When called to fill his Indian mission it was on Nov. 17, 1883, by President John Taylor. Before leaving he asked President Wilford Woodruff of the Council of the Twelve how to proceed. President Woodruff answered that Bro. Lyman was entitled to know the will of the Lord and would be guided aright. While camped on Currant Creek en route to the Unitah Reservation, Apostle Lyman ascended a hill, 1,000 feet above the table land in that vicinity. While climbing the steep his thoughts were upon the difficulty of his mission. He had no practical knowledge of how to proceed. If he asked the agents he might be refused the privilege of presenting the Gospel to the Indians, as other missionaries had been. While thus in troubled thought, the Spirit of the Lord impressed him to go to the summit of the hill. Upon reaching the top he found a large flat rock, upon which he stepped, removed his hat and fell upon his knees in prayer to God with his face toward the east. He says: "I went before the Lord and told Him all about my troubles; how everything seemed against us; how little I knew about the work; how I had learned that the agents at Unitah and Ouray were bitterly opposed to the Mormons and their doctrines; and then asked for the successful opening of the mission to the Lamanites in that region, and that God might guide me aright, and soften the hearts of the agents with favor towards us and our cause."

When he kneeled to pray the atmosphere was perfectly calm, when suddenly a wind began blowing which increased in force almost to a tempest, and lasted during the half hour he was engaged in prayer. When his supplications ceased the wind as suddenly ceased to blow and all was calm and serene. As he arose and left his place of prayer, the quiet yet unmistakable testimony of the Holy Spirit rested upon him and he felt to go straight forward with his mission, visit the agents and all would be successful. Subsequently this testimony of the Spirit was verified in a most remarkable manner, for the agents and Indians received him well, and an effectual door for doing good among them was opened wide. But before the fulfillment of this prophetic conviction as the wind had howled around him while engaged in prayer, so he personally had to pass through well-nigh the ordeal of death. The event is described by Elder E. H. Anderson as follows:

"On the morning of the 12th (May) the camp was up early and it appeared that all the difficulties which had so far surrounded them were at length overcome. He was sitting on a camp stool just before breakfast and reached over to pick up some object, when he was suddenly seized with the most excruciating pain that could be imagined in his left side. It was a threatened rupture. It was so severe and agonizing that all hopes of his recovery were given up. Everything that could be done was done to relieve him, but all to no avail. They had no medicines of any kind; one of the brethren proffered to send fifty miles away for a doctor, but Bro. Lyman forbade him, saying that he could not last till the arrival of a physician. It was suggested that he be taken back, but it was impossible to move him, the pain was so tormenting. For two hours he remained in such terrible agony that the cold sweat stood out in great beads upon his face. During this time he says that every good act of his life passed before him, and, strange to say, not an evil thing that he had done came to his mind—nothing but good. He saw himself carried home dead, and beheld the consternation of his family at his death and what had overtaken him. During all this time, strange to say, neither he nor his companions, although they had done everything to alleviate his sufferings, had once thought of the ordinance of administration. 'It never once entered my mind,' he says, 'nor did the brethren think of it.' At the close of that time, one of the brethren suggested administering to him, which was accordingly done. No sooner were the hands of his brethren lifted from his head than the pain left him as suddenly as it had come. He became perfectly free, and had thus been healed by the power of God by the laying on of hands by the Elders. 'Then,' he says, 'I thought how good it is to only be free from pain! It is the greatest heaven of all. And yet the most of our lives we are free, but scarcely appreciate it.' He fell into a sweet sleep and in a comparatively short time was able to proceed on the journey."

The Adversary determined to frustrate their mission was thus overcome by the power of God. Reaching their destination, the Lamanites and the agents, J. J. Critchlow, of Unitah and J. F. Minness of Ouray, received the brethren with great courtesy. The Gospel was freely taught and the Book of Mormon introduced among them by Elder Lyman and his associates. Elder Nephi, surnamed Lehi by Apostle Lyman, Chief Tabby and other Ute chiefs also preached and bore testimony, being faithful Latter Day Saints, and many were converted to the truth. In the winter of 1893-94 Apostle Lyman, accompanied by Elder B. H. Roberts, performed a good mission in Southern California, visiting some of his father's family and other relatives who still reside there. In the winter 1897-98 himself and Elder M. F. Cowley visited each conference of the Southern States Mission, held a two days' meeting with the general public and one day of Priesthood meeting with the Elders in each conference. His counsels, admonitions and instructions, often couched in quaint sayings, will ever be remembered by the Elders then laboring in the southern states. Apostle Lyman is one of the very most active workers in the Church. He is never idle. He keeps a daily journal, in all probability the most complete in detail of any private journal in the Church. When he goes to the sphere beyond, he proposes to place his journals in the Archives of the Church for the benefit of the Church. He writes it up daily, never getting behind. In keeping a journal, which every active Elder and some of the Sisters ought to do, Elder Lyman's example and method may well be followed with great profit. Apostle Lyman is very practical in word and deed, his teachings are always seasoned with the influence of the Holy Spirit. Owing to his very practical, well adapted teachings to the Saints in public and private, he is often referred to as "The Teacher of the Church." He is pre-eminently a peacemaker. When difficulties exist where the general authorities are requested to participate in their settlement. Bro. Lyman, if within reach, is almost invariably the first man selected to adjudicate the trouble. He is firm, yet kind, never betraying petty anger or a sense of insulted dignity, because of opposition in his efforts to make peace, and yet probably no man more than Elder Lyman, renders more becoming deference to Seniors, and he expects others to observe the same principle. He has the faculty of saying unpleasant things to those who need reproof without giving offense, and thus winning the recreant to a reformation of life.

As in the case of his Indian Mission, he usually sets no Stakes, but depends upon the inspiration of the Holy Spirit to meet the emergency, and never fails to be impressed about right. His "off-hand" answers to questions and quaint sayings, always containing a good thought, would make a little volume, both pleasing and instructive. He was asked before a public audience in the opera house at Jackson City, Miss., by an impertinent fellow, "If the Mormons did not still believe in plural marriage, only discontinuing it because of a compulsory law, and if that law was repealed would they not continue it?"

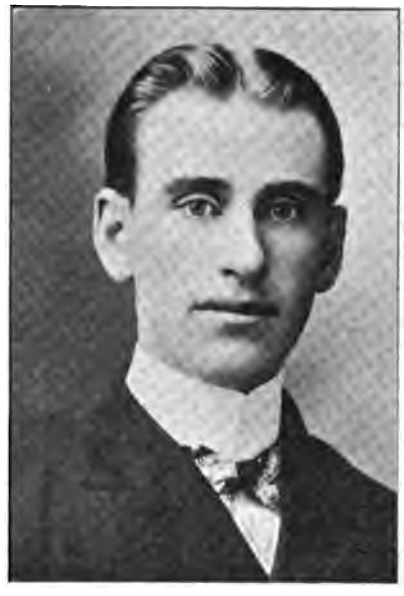
Apostle Lyman coolly replied, "When you get the law repealed will be time enough to answer your question."

During the Tooele troubles, a government official wrote from Salt Lake City and asked him, among other queries: "Who is the heaviest sheep owner in Tooele county?" He answered: "I am. I weigh 280 pounds. Other questions answered on receipt of $2."

Bro. Lyman looks upon death with utmost freedom from concern. His experience while filling his Indian mission doubtless makes him a personal witness that to the faithful "death is sweet," and the grave has no victory. The writer of this little sketch was favored a few weeks after his call to the Apostleship to be with Elder Lyman day and night for four months, and will never forget the lessons taught, through example and precept, by Apostle Francis M. Lyman. He is one man out of many who never meets another, if the slightest opportunity presents, without expressing some thought by which he is ever remembered and which encourages the hearer to do good and shun evil. The people, old and young, male and female, among the Saints universally love and respect Apostle Lyman. He is so pre-eminently one of them and never fails to make them feel at home in his presence. He does not wait to be approached. "He speaks and greets you first and always has a word to say that is well to think of and remember."

Apostle Lyman is now past the age of 60, but of well-preserved body, full of endurance and activity, standing over 6 feet high, weighing 250 pounds and unburdened with surplus flesh. His life of usefulness, his constant labor, his marked ability, his title by merit to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, all endear him to the Saints and make us fondly hope that he shall live for yet many, many happy years. In concluding this imperfect sketch let us repeat the counsel of Apostle Lyman which he gave to the readers of the Juvenile Instructor: "Boys and girls, be pure in thoughts and actions; do nothing that will make you feel ashamed to face any good person in the world. This course will make you free and happy. There is no other bondage so heavy as the bondage of sin; no other freedom so delightful as the freedom of innocence and purity. Guard your good name and your happiness by determining to be free from sin; protect your innocence by thinking pure thoughts; shield your purity by noble actions."

ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.



BY L. E. JORDAN.

Born on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean, Jan. 12th, 1877, beneath the folds of the Union Jack of Old England, was the subject whose picture is herewith presented. In the midland part of England was the home of his nativity, in that quaint historic city of Worcester, on the banks of the River Severn, where the Royal Charles the First made his last and final stand against those sturdy commoners under the leadership of that renowned defender of liberty—Oliver Cromwell. Having been brought up to sing:

"Hurrah! for Merry England,
Her woods and her valleys green!
Hurrah! for England's country!
Hurrah! for England's Queen!"

it is quite natural that he should still cherish a fond love for his mother country, and good old Queen Victoria. There flows in his veins that genuine, pure, unadulterated Anglo-Saxon blood which has ever characterized the people of his race, and exhibits in their lives valor, honor, worth and unswerving integrity.

Brother Elton was almost 14 years old when he left the land of his birth to unite with the Saints of God in the West. He found the ways of the citizens of Salt Lake City diverse from the old-fashioned English customs and manners, but he soon became Americanized and learned the "ins and outs" of the Western land. After spending some seven years in Salt Lake City, engaged for the most part in assisting his widowed mother, he was called to labor as a missionary in the Southern States. Almost thirty-three months have passed since he began his labors here—being the only Elder in the field at present who has labored under the jurisdiction of President Elias S. Kimball.

ELDER DAVID H. ELTON.

For about five months he labored on the balmy peninsula of Florida, but owing to sickness he was transferred to the Old North State, North Carolina. Here he spent eight months, and at the expiration of that time he was called to labor in the Chattanooga Conference. For about seven months he acted as First Counsellor to President Christo Hyldahl, and also as President of the Conference for the same length of time. In the latter part of last March he was called to labor in the Office, a vacancy having occurred when President L. R. Anderson was released to return home. From that time until the present he has been connected with the Star, and for the last four months has shouldered the responsibility entirely.

The readers of the Star need no comments as to his ability as a writer, for his work stands out in bold relief, and both volumes of the "Twinkler" have contained articles from his able pen. Ever since his arrival he has been the Poet Laureate of the Mission, and was always on hand, no matter what the occasion might be, to add charm and interest to the same by the composition of a very choice poem. Brother Elton has had many commissions given to him during his ministerial career, and in none of them has he been found wanting. He has been prostrated on the bed of affliction many times, and although those in authority have advised his release to return home, still by pluck, grit, faith and indomitable will he has triumphed, for the which the Mission has had cause to rejoice.

It has not been Brother Elton's misfortune to be made the material of mobocratic hate, as some of our good Elders have, although many threats have been uttered against him. Whether this has been owing to his dignified mien, or the large voice proceeding from a pair of massive stentorian lungs, we are unable to say, but either would in all probability be sufficient to disperse any ordinary mob, especially the latter. His ability as a writer is equalled, if not surpassed, as a speaker, and we expect to hear his massive voice thundering down the Halls of Fame in times yet to be. His thorough knowledge of the Gospel, combined with his extraordinary ability as an orator, has been the means of causing many to embrace and obey the Gospel truths. He has thirty baptisms to his credit, and twenty babies blessed—six of the latter having been given the cognomen "Elton."

Before donning the Prince Albert coat, and assuming the role of Knight of the Grip, Elder Elton was wont to chase the pig-skin upon the foot ball gridiron, and some of the qualities which gained for him renown as a bucker in the Eleven, have distinguished him since, among which are pluck, determination, a total lack of fear, and splendid growth of hair. "Hit the line hard, boys," has been his favorite motto. Elder Elton will remain in the Mission for some weeks, and if he continues to advance along the lines which h's life has thus far been set, we feel safe in predicting for him health, happiness and success, and the blessings of our Heavenly Father to crown his efforts at all times and under all circumstances.

John Ruskin once wrote: "People are always expecting to get peace in heaven, but, you know, whatever peace they get there will be ready-made. Whatever of making peace they can be blest for must be on the earth here."

THE DEAD.

We are pained to announce that President F. H. Critchfield, of the Louisiana Conference, has been called to part with his loving baby boy. We hope that the peace and blessings of heaven will attend the bereaved parents, and comfort be administered to them in the hour of their affliction.

ARTICLES OF FAITH

OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS.

1. We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in His Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost.
2. We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression.
3. We believe that, through the atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.
4. We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the Gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost.
5. We believe that a man must be called of God, by "prophecy, and by the laying on of hands," by those who are in authority, to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.
6. We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church—namely, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers, Evangelists, etc.
7. We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc.
8. We believe the Bible to be the word of God, as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God.
9. We believe all that God has revealed, all that He does now reveal, and we believe that He will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the Kingdom of God.
10. We believe in the literal gathering of Israel and in the restoration of the Ten Tribes; that Zion will be built upon this (the American) continent; that Christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.
11. We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.
12. We believe in being subject to kings, presidents, rulers, and magistrates; in obeying, honoring and sustaining the law.
13. We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "We believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things.—JOSEPH SMITH.

WAITING, WATCHING, WORKING.

These three words—Waiting, Watching, Working—are intended to suggest to the mind of the reader a few abbreviated thoughts so often expressed by our Lord during His sojourn here on earth, either in parables or direct and pointed declaration. These words are very significant, as being indicative of the life-time teachings of Christ to His chosen people. Indeed, it readily appears to be the burden of His parting counsel to His Disciples to admonish them to wait upon the Lord, earnestly watch for His coming, and assiduously work for the honor and glory of His name! The lessons inculcated in these words are calculated to make one reliant upon the tender mercies of Jesus Christ, dependent upon the gift of His goodness, that they might obtain strength to labor for the truth, and flaunt the banner of salvation to the world. Upon one occasion He addressed His Apostles thus: "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord. * * * Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching." (Luke 12:35, 36.) This teaches plainly that the Lord's Disciples should be found at all times in readiness to meet their Redeemer, for He cometh at an hour when we are not aware, and if we have not made due preparation, how then can we go forth to meet Him? We should be found waiting for His coming, anxiously expecting His triumphant advent to the earth; not idly waiting, or carelessly watching, but with vigilance, faith and hope, looking with a steadfast faith, yea, moreover, working with a cheerful heart, utilizing the gifts and powers we possess for our own salvation and the betterment of others. Some there are who suppose that so long as they sing "Glory to His name," "I am washed in the blood of the Lamb," etc., that they are true to the Lord, and are faithful to Christ, and consequently are waiting for His coming. To all such we have only one plea, "Be not deceived." To wait for the coming of the Lord means something more tangible and solid than the melodious notes of praise issuing from the lips, for it requires a simultaneous exercise of the head, the heart, the hands, and the feet; that by patient, faithful service, we may joyfully engage all our faculties for the upbuilding of His Church, the progression of His work, either by ministering to others, testifying of His goodness and love, sacrificing our own pleasure for the happiness of a brother or sister, in short, giving all that we possess, whatever we have, and whatever we can for the spead of righteousness and the welfare of godliness.

About seven hundred years before His first advent, in the book of Isaiah, we find these words written: "The Lord is a God of judgment; blessed are all they that wait for Him." (Isa. 30:18.) Is not this a rich and glorious benediction? "Blessed are all they that wait for Him." He came in fulfillment of the written word, and He has told us that He will come again. When He ascended from the slopes of Olivet into the clouds of heaven, and His receding form vanished from view, two heavenly messengers said to the wondering Disciples, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen Him go into heaven." (Acts 1:11.) We are to wait for His coming, even Jesus, the Prince of Peace, our Elder Brother, Savior, Redeemer, Lord and King. His own word, and the words of His inspired witnesses, and the testimony of the Spirit most emphatically declare that He will surely come again. That His coming shall be in glory, honor, majesty and power. Wait with a living faith, a real faith, a true profitable faith in what His accredited witnesses have said concerning His return.

Now we are not only to wait for the Lord, or to use the words of the Psalmist, "Wait on the Lord," but we are also commanded to watch for His coming. While these two words, Wait and Watch, may be considered in a simple sense as synonomous expressions, still in their more complex application, there is a vast difference. One may be waiting for a friend and not watching for him; therefore watching is the stronger of the two terms, being more intense than waiting. Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, says, "Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober." (Thess. 5:6.) Many other passages of Scripture may be cited, such as (Rev. 3:3, 16:15), and it would be well to state that our blessed Master did constantly urge His Disciples to watch, for no less than seven times does the word occur in His discourse about the last things. We are sojourners, pilgrims, wanderers, strangers in a strange land; there are enemies on every hand, pitfalls, evils, and various dangers. Worldliness, carnality, formalism, love of ease and wealth, proneness to be slack in our duties, to run down, neglectful, careless, idle, cold as to spiritual life, and wavering as to faith in Christ, are all extant, and have more or less effect upon, save we look unto Christ with a glorious hope of exaltation and redemption when He shall reappear in the clouds of heaven. We need not be puffed up bigots, or indulge in fanaticism, religious egotism, and fetishism; but look forward with faith unshaken, watch at every season, pray and labor for the bright millennial dawn. Perhaps the last labor or work is the best incentive to, and aid in watching, earnestly and faithfully for the coming of the Master.

Waiting, Watching, Working! The last is by no means the least, for it comes as the climax, the crowning cap-stone for the pillars—Wait and Watch. Says the great Apostle to the Gentiles, "Glory, and honor and peace to every man that worketh good." (Rom. 2:12.) Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." (II Tim. 2:15.) These are ringing, significant words, and, like trumpet calls, they sound a warning note to all. There is a pressing need, for good, unselfish, disinterested Christian work. On every side, in every land, there is opportunity and material for an earnest, goodly work. Valiant souls are in demand, souls who will wait, watch and work for the establishment of righteousness, the propagation of truth, and the preparation of our Lord's majestic advent. It has been demonstrated in innumerable ways that where there is great faith, there is also a great work accomplished; true faith, a true, lasting, eternal work performed. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." Defer not hope, but let this ray of confidence divine enlighten your path, and give you courage for the conflict, that whether it be weal or woe, you may stand the test and gain the prize. "Wherefore gird up the lions of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end," that when Christ shall be revealed in glory, He may find you Waiting, Watching and Working.

NEW BOOKS.

We wish to announce to our many patrons that it is our intention to publish for sale, at a nominal sum, all the articles written in the Star by Apostle M. F. Cowley. These articles will constitute two books, which will be of great worth to the Saints, friends and investigators of righteousness. Everybody should avail themselves with these two books, and become fortified with doctrinal facts, enlightened on biographical data, and informed in Church history generally.

Rather than upbraid God for ills that have befallen thee, thank Him for those that have not befallen thee.—Ivan Panim.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF APOSTLE JOHN HENRY SMITH.

BY APOSTLE MATHIAS F. COWLEY.

This son of the late President George Albert Smith and his wife, Sarah Ann Libby, was born at Carbunce, Pottawatamie county, Iowa, Sept. 18th, 1848. When asked in later years by an acquaintance where he was born, he answered, "In the garden spot of the world." So great was his admiration for the rich lands of his native place that he esteemed it worthy of the title, "Garden spot of the world."

The time of his birth was that period of trial incident to the exile from Nauvoo and the pilgrimage of the Saints from Illinois to the valley of the Great Salt Lake. His father had gone to the valley with President Brigham Young in the pioneer band of one hundred and forty-three, and shortly thereafter had returned to Winter Quarters on the Missouri river to assist in gathering the Saints and to remove his family to Salt Lake Valley. In the summer of 1849 George A. Smith started across the plains with his family. When they reached their destination the subject of this sketch was one year old. In less than two years from the time of their arrival his mother died, leaving John Henry as their only child. He was immediately taken by his aunt, Hannah M. Libby Smith, also a wife of his father, and under her kind watch and care was reared to manhood with all the tenderness bestowed upon her own son. She also had a son, Charles Warren, but a few months the junior of John Henry. The two were reared together, and as they grew in years so they became more and more endeared to each other, becoming as the years rolled by to each other as David and Jonathan. Although in later years conditions have thrown them apart, the attachment of early youth remains bright and untarnished. The family of George A. Smith, being called to colonize different places, became very much scattered, some in Salt Lake City, some in Provo, and others in Parowan, and his many public duties rendered it impossible to devote much personal attention to his family. For this reason Brother John Henry feels that much of his success in life is due to the careful training afforded him by his devoted aunt and stepmother. In 1852 his aunt removed to Provo, and in that city he spent his early boyhood days. In expressing his heartfelt sentiments of respect for the noble mother who reared him he but corroborates the heartfelt testimony of thousands whose noble attainments in life are largely due to the example and teachings of a loving and devoted mother. Like many other pioneer boys of Utah, his occupation consisted of herding the stock. This he did on the Provo bench and along the shores of the Utah lakes. He was of large stature, full of life and merriment, always esteemed by his associates as the very embodiment of good nature. During the Indian troubles which occurred in Utah county in its early history, John Henry, though very young, participated, and on one occasion was shot at, but escaped unharmed. On another occasion, when but 14 years of age, he came nearly drowning in the Provo river, but the eye of the Lord was upon him. His mission was to live and labor for man's salvation. He was saved in a most marvelous manner. In company with Thomas and Geo. M. Brown, he attempted to cross the river in a small boat. This was June 8th, 1862, when the water was high and the current swift. The boat was capsized, and while the other boys made safely to shore, John Henry became entangled in some drift wood and disappeared below the surface of the stream. He was under water so long that his comrades on the bank lost hope of his being saved from drowning, when all of a sudden, with no apparent cause, he was lifted to the bank of the stream and rescued. Soon after this occurrence it was learned that his father, who was at the time in Salt Lake City, felt impressed by the Spirit of the Lord that his son, John Henry, was in peril of his life. He therefore, in prayer and supplication, sought the Lord to save his life, and his prayer was immediately answered in the manner described above.

APOSTLE JOHN HENRY SMITH.

The facilities for education in those days were meager compared with the present, but the best that could be had was placed within the reach of Brother John Henry, and he improved his time as opportunity would permit. Among the numerous incidents of boyhood days which strongly impressed the young man with a strong earnest desire to live a righteous life and be useful was a patriarchal blessing given him by his grandfather, John Smith, then Patriarch to the Church. In this prophetic blessing his future life was foretold. It pointed out to him glorious attainments on conditions, as all blessings are, of his devotion to the truth and his industry in keeping the commandments of God. This blessing was ever before him, an anchor to his soul in time of trouble, and a motive power of action under every condition of life. While still a young man he called upon that distinguished man, and ever constant friend of the Latter-day Saints, Col. Thomas L. Kane. Col. Kane, who knew the early leaders of the Church, and who understood the sufferings through which the Saints had passed for pure principle, looked John Henry square in the face and said in a most impressive way, "Young man, I trust that you will ever remember that the best blood of the nineteenth century flows in your veins." This was too impressive to be forgotten, an appeal to patriotism, not only to his own kin, but the nobility which is born in love and unswerving integrity to the truth, so thoroughly characterized all the faithful founders of God's work and the commonwealth of Utah that their descendants forever should be patriotic to their names and memory and to the great cause for which they lived and died.

John Henry Smith was married at the early age of 18, receiving in marriage an estimable daughter, Sarah, of Elder Lorin Farr, of Ogden City, Utah, who has proven to be a true and devoted wife in every sense of the word.

Brother Smith made his home in Provo, being employed as a telegraph operator, and ecclesiastically occupied the place of Counsellor to Brother W. A. Follett, of the Fourth Ward, Provo. Near the completion of the Union and Central Pacific railway he left Provo and engaged with Messrs. Benson, Farr and West in grading about two miles of the Central Pacific railway. Subsequently Gov. Leland Stanford, of California, offered him a lucrative position in Sacramento. This he declined to accept, his father desiring his return to labor with him in Salt Lake City and elsewhere. During his early manhood days John Henry accompanied his father, with President Brigham Young and party, in their visits to the several settlements of the Saints. This brought to him the society of the noblest and grandest men on earth. He studied their characters, observed them closely, and sought to discover the secret of the grand qualities which adorned them. His own nobility and magnanimity of heart and mind proves that the example of his father and other noble men were not placed before him in vain. He profited greatly by these opportunities.

In 1872 he was assistant clerk in the House of Representatives in the Utah Legislature, and held the same position in the Constitutional convention held in 1872. In May, 1874, he was called to fill his first mission in Europe, and was set apart for that purpose by President

John Taylor. He started June 29th, reached New York July 4th, but before sailing for Europe he visited his mother's brother in New Hampshire. He reached Liverpool July 26th, and was soon assigned his field of labor in the Birmingham Conference, under the Presidency of Elder R. V. Morris. His kinsman, President Joseph F. Smith, presided over the Mission, and with him, Elder F. M. Lyman and other Elders, made a tour of the mission, visiting most of the British Conferences, as well as Denmark, Germany, Switzerland and France. Owing to his father's sickness Elder Smith was called home one year after his arrival in England, reaching the bedside of his noble father fifteen days before his decease, which occurred Sept. 1st, 1875. The improvement attained by Elder Smith in the important matter of preaching the Gospel during this short mission was so pronounced that younger men looked upon him with wonder and admiration, feeling that only God could so inspire humble and unlettered men to speak with the power and inspiration which accompanied the remarks and testimonies of Elder John Henry Smith. Nov. 22d, 1875, he was called by President Young and ordained Bishop of the Seventeenth Ward, Salt Lake City. This position he filled with marked ability, possessing the love and confidence of all the Saints in the Ward. While acting as Bishop he worked for a livelihood in the freight department of the Utah Central Railway, keeping accounts and handling funds, which he did with accuracy and honesty of the strictest type. At the October Conference of 1880 Bishop John Henry Smith, with President Lyman, of the Tooele Stake, was called to fill vacancies in the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. In 1839 his father and President Wilford Woodruff were ordained to the Apostleship at Far West, Missouri. They two being associated together, the desire entered Brother Smith's heart to have President Woodruff, then President of the Twelve, ordain him. Silently he offered a prayer that such might be the case, and he would take it as a testimony that his call was from the Lord. Elders Lyman and Smith were ordained to the Apostleship Oct. 27th, 1880. President Taylor ordained Elder Lyman and then called on President Woodruff to ordain Elder Smith. No one but Brother John Henry Smith knew his heart's desire, and yet it was answered by the Lord in prompting President John Taylor, the Prophet of the Lord, to so arrange it. This was all the more remarkable because of the usual practice that when one is ordained to the Apostleship the President of the Church officiates, and when two or more his First Counsellor next, and then his Second Counsellor, not that this is a law, but the usual practice. In this instance, however, it was varied from in answer to a silent prayer. Since his call to the Apostleship his labors therein have been incessant, preaching at home and abroad, and performing other labors, always in the interests of the Church and humanity at large. Three successive times he has been to Washington, D. C., to assist in allaying prejudice, staving off inimical legislation which is inspired by false report and misrepresentation, also in urging Statehood for Utah. The first time he went in company with Apostle Moses Thatcher, and subsequently with other brethren. In October, 1882, he was called to preside over the European Mission. He was absent twenty-nine months, looking with deep and impartial interest to all Conferences and departments of the Mission. His genial, loving interest in all the Elders and Saints won for him their utmost love, confidence and respect. In the meantime prosecutions under the nefarious Edmunds-Tucker act were being vigorously urged. Upon his return he was arrested for the prevailing charge—but discharged for lack of evidence. In 1876 he was elected City Councilman of Salt Lake City and served with credit to the people for six successive years. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Utah Legislature, and when the State Constitutional Convention convened which framed the Constitution upon which Utah was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State, Apostle John Henry Smith presided over that important assembly. He takes an active interest in the Civil Government of his State and country as truly patriotic and a full-fledged American, not in letter only, but in the deepest sincerity of spirit. His progenitors on both sides of the house have been native born Americans for many generations, and all the patriotic qualities which distinguished them are reflected with honor in Apostle John Henry Smith. In the spring of 1899 he, accompanied by Elder Matthias F. Cowley, attended a conference of the President and Conference Presidents of the Southern States Mission, held in Chattanooga, Tenn., May, 1899. While there they preached in the Opera House and were favorably reported by Mr. Adler in the Chattanooga Times. They visited the old Chickamauga battle grounds, the National Cemetery, and from the summit of Lookout Mountain beheld the battlefields where thousands of human beings laid down their lives in sanguinary strife. Several times he has been a delegate from Utah to the Trans-Mississippi Congress. From the last one which he attended, held in Houston, Tex., with President George Q. Cannon he paid a visit to the City of Mexico. He was much impressed with what he witnessed in the Republic of Mexico. Among the many events of Providence which have favored the life of Apostle Smith and enabled his mission of salvation to be the more complete to the living and the dead, is a well prepared genealogy of his mother's kin, the Libby family, containing on his mother's side the names of thousands of their progenitors who have lived and died, and many who now live, but who have not heard and embraced the Gospel. His relative who prepared this important record said to him in substance one day, "John, while preparing that work I could not rest day nor night, I was so intensely interested, searching the musty town records of the past, the names and tombstones, anything and everything to get light on the subject. Now it is done, I have no particular interest in it, the dry facts of births, marriages, deaths and places, of what value are they, and especially none to anyone outside the family?" The author of the book knew not that God inspired him to the work, but his humble Apostle, John Henry Smith, knew what it all meant, and thanks the Father for this volume of names so sacred to himself and family. Apostle Smith is now in his 52d year, hale and hearty, ever active in his ministry, and interested in his country. He is loving and genial to all around him. Frank and open in his character, easy to understand, a worthy example for all to follow. To know him is to love him. His disposition is a happy one. His character and record without blemish. Generous in his feelings for others, not jealous nor envious, but quick to recognize and appreciate the good qualities and talents of others, broad-minded in his ideas, just, merciful and kind in all his administrations. May he live yet many years to benefit and bless mankind, especially the Saints of God.

History of the Southern States Mission.

NOVEMBER, 1900.—During the early part of this month the weather was extremely cold in this otherwise sunny Dixie land, and as a consequence thereof the Elders worked along quietly. No mob violence was encountered, although in some parts of South Carolina, threats of this nature were afloat upon the wings of gossip; however, trouble was avoided and the work glided along. The reports show a goodly number of baptisms, while meetings held and books sold fall a trifle below the average.

It is just two years since we began to publish in print the History of the Southern States Mission, and in looking backward to recapitulate, we have beheld many wonderful and marvelous manifestations of God's power and goodness. During the twenty-five years of its existence, from 1875 until the present time, it has been blessed with six worthy presidents, including the present head, whose picture we herewith present.

The first presiding officer in this Mission was Elder Henry G. Boyle, a man faithful and true to the Gospel, humble and obedient to the will of God, earnest and diligent in the pursuit of duty. His simple, plain homely way made him at once an interesting guest, and his humility and Christian love won for him the esteem and regard of the honest in heart. Following in his steps came the sturdy, valiant, plucky John Morgan, a veritable Lion of the Lord, and a trusted Soldier of the Cross. In his little grip-sack might be found tracts of his own composition, aided by the Spirit of Truth. He laid a solid and a sure foundation, hewed out the stones with his own hands, and set them in their adapted places. His course was one of honor and fidelity, fealty to God and His holy laws being the paramount and vital issue with John Morgan. His name is known far and wide, and the good influence attending his presence, has been felt many times by the Elders, and returned to bless them in the hour of need. After ten years of faithful, energetic service, he was succeeded by Elder Wm. Spry, whose kind, amiable congeniality won for him many friends, to whom he preached in convincing tones the Gospel of Salvation. In the upper part of Georgia, where the writer has labored, he is known as the "Singing and Preaching Man," so from this we know he was a successful laborer—"singing and preaching" being one of the greatest incentives to this end. Elder Morgan did not sing, but preached, and let his congregation tune their sweet voices in hymns of praise. Elder Spry was both a singer and a renowned preacher, and after laboring incessantly for four years as president, he was released, and Elder J. Golden Kimball appointed to fill the vacancy. To those acquainted with the name of Kimball in connection with the history of the Church it is needless to repeat the sterling qualities and striking characteristics of this man, for J. Golden was a literal "chip of the old block," and what more noble spirit has ever tabernacled in the flesh in these last days than that of Heber C. Kimball, the father of J. Golden? True as steel, strong as iron bands, was the faith and integrity of this noble man. He had no fear, only that which all God's children feel when they realize the power and might of the Creator. He was a successful worker, and built an excellent superstructure upon the broad foundation laid by his predecessors. Unflinching in defense of truth, disinterested in his love for his brethren, yet firm, commanding and stern, not overbearing, officious or despotic, but a desire to have the Elders push their work, and make good use of their valuable time. When the time came for Elder J. Golden Kimball to return to his home and loved ones, the Mission stood in need of another just like he, and his worthy brother, Elias S., was chosen for the position. In him the Elders found a wise leader, conservative in his manner, dignified in his bearing, a gentleman in every sense of the word, yea, more, a man of God; and this constitutes the best, truest gentleman. The writer calls to mind the time when he first came to Chattanooga and met President Kimball, who was then (March, 1898) presiding over the Mission. His counsel was choice, his admonition timely, and his instruction invaluable. Like his brother, J. Golden, he was a "pusher," to the full extent of the letter, and the times, conditions and favorable opportunities required just such a man as he, at the helm. He was untiring in his ambition to have the Elders work energetically and zealously for the spread of truth. "Be neat, brethren, earnest and true," was the general trend of his wise counsel.

In June 1898, after a successful term of some four years' duration, Elder Elias S. Kimball bade farewell to the Elders and Saints of the sunny south, and also to the many warm-hearted, true friends he had made during his successful career, and was succeeded by Elder Ben E. Rich, whose picture, for the first time, appears in the Star. Each of the Mission Presidents have had their cuts in the Star, together with a memoir of their lives and labors, and the editor deemed it best to introduce at the close of this volume a brief sketch of him who now pilots the affairs of this Mission with a keen, watchful, cautious eye.

Elder Ben. E. Rich was born in Salt Lake City, Utah, Nov. 7, 1855. In the early part of 1880 he responded to a Mission call, and crossed the Atlantic to the shores of England. Here he labored diligently for some twenty-six months, during which time he traversed the whole of the United Kingdom—England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, preaching in each of the British Isles. When released he scanned the records at Islington, Liverpool, England, and to his joy discovered that he was the last of his company to return. Soon after his return, now almost eighteen years ago, he engaged in public discussion with one Rev. Hartley, in the Ogden Tabernacle, Ogden City, Utah. About 20,000 of these public discussion pamphlets have been circulated throughout the land.

It was while canvassing in behalf of one of the Church magazines that Bro. Rich was inspired to write some simple, concise treatise on the Gospel, for the edification and enlightenment of the young people of Zion. "Mr. Durant, of Salt Lake, That Mormon," is the outgrowth of that inspiration, and it is perfectly safe to say that upwards of 35,000 of these books have been placed in the hands of the people of the south (this does not include the first edition of 10,000). The book itself is the best recommendation and witness of the simplicity and earnestness of its author. While it is simple, it is comprehensive of those fundamental principles of induction into the Church and Kingdom of God, and its style being conversational and in a measure novelistic, at once interests the reader, and at the same time enlightens the mind to the convincing of the heart.

Many years ago, one of Bro. Rich's tracts—"A Dialogue: True vs. False Religion"—was used in this Mission with marked success, while the "Friendly Discussion" tract, abridged from Mr. Durant, has been widely circulated, in almost every land and clime, whither the humble Elder has journeyed. Fully 3,000,000 of these tracts have been published during the last eight years. Last year the number amounted to 700,000 in the American Missions and this year will loom up with equally as great a showing. This little tract, "Friendly Discussion," has been translated into the German and Scandinavian languages, is used extensively in all parts of Europe and our own Columbia, as well as in the islands of the Pacific. The same is also true of the book—"Mr. Durant."

BEN. E. RICH, PRESIDENT SOUTHERN STATES MISSION.

The writings of Bro. Rich have found appreciative readers in almost every part of the known globe, and his labors in the Mission have endeared him in ties of loving affection to all his co-laborers and associates. Since being in the south he saw the need of another tract, as a re-canvassing pamphlet, and he set himself to work to bring about the same. He sought and obtained an interview which was published in the Atlanta Constitution, a paper with the largest circulation of any journal in the southern states. This interview is now published in tract form, and fills a place in the Mission field. About 219,000 have been printed and the demand for this tract does not lessen by any means.

About one year ago, a reverend gentleman of Chattanooga attacked the Mormon faith as an imposture built upon a tissue of lies. President Rich replied in two vigorous open letters published in the Chattanooga News. The demand for these letters being so great, 10,000 of them have been published in pamphlet form, and they have been the means of doing much good by way of allaying prejudice and opening the way for earnest investigation.

We can see the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophetic word, when he spoke of the last days and the inauguration of "a marvelous work and a wonder." Surely it has come to pass even here in the southern states. Noble, worthy, upright, honest, industrious leaders have ever been placed at the head; men who dard to do the right, fear God, denounce evil and make no compromise with sin. Bro. Rich has traveled in three-fourths of the states of the union. From the rice fields of Florida to the balmy breezes of Maine, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. During the last two years he has traveled about 70,000 miles, visited all the Elders several times, counseled, instructed and admonished them in the ways of the Lord. He is beloved by all who know him, affectionate, kind, fatherly and benevolent. The work will continue to grow, for the Lord blesses its interests with valiant, energetic leaders, who labor for the advancement of truth.

This issue will, in all probability, complete the publication of the Star, and so we now have the history of the mission up to date of this number. It has had a wonderful record thus far, and we trust that the good work will continue in its beneficent labor of saving souls, and preaching the Gospel of Salvation.

A SHINING LIGHT.

[Editorial]

In speaking of the divine mission of John, surnamed in the Holy Scriptures, the Baptist, Jesus gave vent to this beautiful expression: "He was a burning and a shining light; and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light." (John 5:35.) Yes! it was true that John was a "burning and a shining light," and that for a time the Jews rejoiced in his light; but they soon dwindled away and refused to be his Disciples, since he bore testimony of Jesus, as, "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." John laid the axe at the root of all their traditions, foolish opinions, and absurd superstitions. He called them a "generation of vipers," and warned them to flee from the wrath to come. The shining light which led him on, and attended this humble Prophet, was only a faint glimmer of that glorious sunlight which burst forth when Jesus trod the way of life, and raised His voice in defense of His Father's will. The mission and work of John was one of preparation. He was a "shining light," sent of God to make straight a highway in the desert, and cry, "Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand!" He filled his mission with honor, and gave his life for the truth! Faithful even unto death was this "shining light," and of him the Savior said, "Among them that are born of woman there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist."

Those who walked in that "shining light" were prepared to receive Jesus as the Christ to the glory of God the Father; but the haughty, stubborn willers who rejected John's testimony, and failed to receive his message, also persecuted and reviled the immaculate Son of God. The shining light was sent as a blessing and a guide to all, but only those who were willing to walk in the light were made the choice partakers of it, and the disobedient, wilful, perverse sinner remained in the dark as though the light had never shed its benignant ray. It did not profit the wayward, no matter how great or glorious the light might be, unless he humbled himself and in obedience strove to walk as it pointed out the way. Whenever a gift is presented unto man, or a privilege granted him, it becomes absolutely necessary for him to reach out, grasp and obtain, otherwise it will benefit him nothing. Now the words of Jesus as pertains to John, might well be supplemented by His holy words to the Greeks, "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness, knoweth not whither he goeth. While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of the light." (John 12:35, 36.) If we will walk in the light that we have, according to the wisdom we possess, and the knowledge we have received, then as more light is given, so shall we be prepared to accept it. The Lord will increase our faith, as our ability to perform present duty is adequate, and as our understanding enlargens, to comprehend line upon line and precept upon precept the wonderful works of God.

The Lord does not require impossibilities at the hands of His children; He simply beseeches us to receive the light which He freely grants, and walk by faith according to its divine ray. The condemnation of the present generation is that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil. All God's servants are shining lights unto the people to whom they are sent. The children of men may choose to grope in darkness, and wallow in error, but still the light will shine, and whosoever will may be led by its irradiating gleam. It matters not how few accept, or how many reject, the light will shine on, and the few shall know whither they are journeying. Blessed are they who walk in the light, for, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (I John 1:6.) The light is divine, its source is an eternal blaze, it will last forever. None can check its illuminous rays, for light is greater than darkness, and where light pervades darkness flees away, for the light will prevail. No matter how gross or pitchy the darkness, procure a light, and keep it aglow, then will the mist and gloom vanish, while your path or course is made plain and clear before you. Jesus, the light of the world, will overthrow all the powers of darkness, and reign triumphant over every foe. Remember the words of the God of Jacob, "But unto you that fear my name shall the sun of righteousness arise with healing in His wings."

A glorious day is dawning;
A day of peace and rest—
That bright Millennial morning,
When with the true and blest
The faithful shall assemble
With heavenly songs of mirth,
The wicked fear and tremble
When Christ returns to earth!

NOTIFICATION.

THE STAR WILL CLOSE.

It is with feelings of profound regret that we are herewith compelled to announce to our many kind patrons that this issue will not only mark the close of Vol. 2, but also witness the termination and demise of our Southern weekly. We have labored incessantly for its continuance as a Missionary, but existing conditions at the present time, and Church affairs generally, warrant us in concluding it best to cease its publication. We know, by the success that has attended our feeble efforts, that our little paper has supplied a long-felt need, and that its release from the journalistic arena, and the homes of the Saints and friends in the South, after a prosperous existence of over two years' duration, will cause much sorrow and regret; but still we are unable to continue its maintenance, and the intent and purpose of this notice is to inform all our subscribers that this issue will wind up the Star, and that the farewell requiem is even now being chanted upon the breezes of Time!

When the Star was first published in the latter part of November, 1898, there were about five hundred Elders in the Southern States Mission; whereas at the present time there are only about three hundred. Each Elder in the Mission was a subscriber to the Star, as also his folk at home. Now to cut down the force two hundred (approximately figuring) simply meant something like a decrease of four hundred subscribers, and this number comprises almost one-fifth of our entire mailing list. The number of Elders in this Mission will not increase, but gradually diminish, and therefore we are forced to conclude, while we can do so with justice and honor to all concerned. Wisdom asserts the vital importance of this conclusion, and we heed her warning voice, for if the Star must die, and her end is inevitable, why let us see to it that she goes not to her resting place, a poor, famished, impoverished, indebted skeleton, but in robustness, vivacity and honor, free from debt, that she may justly merit a righteous and glorious resurrection. The divine truths she has conveyed will never die, and the memory of this Star will live forever in the minds of those who have chanced to read its inspired pages.

We desire that our subscribers who are in arrears will kindly liquidate their indebtedness at the earliest possible moment, and if those who have paid for papers after the close of this volume wish a refund of the amount due them we will gladly return the same upon application within sixty days. Bound volumes of the Star will be on hand for sale after the first of the year, and we will be pleased to furnish all with the same in a neat, substantial binding, ornamental to any library in the land, and worthy a place in every home. All communications should be addressed to Box 103, Chattanooga, Tenn.

We trust that all will understand why it becomes necessary to close the Star, and see, as we do, the wisdom and justice of the same. Many homes have been brightened, and many hearts gladdened by the presence of this weekly messenger of truth and righteousness. Its irradiating gleam will still shed a ray of light divine, and the holy principles of the everlasting Gospel for which it has vigorously contended, will yet prevail in every land and clime, when the earth shall be filled with the glory of God, and every knee bow before Christ the Lord.
